the beginning "literalistic" interpretation of this Divine Spiritual Wisdom by an emerging branch of the Christian movement which was recognized by the Spiritual Masters that if left unchecked it could seriously distort or wipe out the ancient understanding of the Soul in mankind. It was reintegrated eclectically around Alexandria by such syncretists as Maximius of Tyre, Ammonias Saccas and Philo Judaeus, powerfully influencing the character of primitive Christianity. It was carried most directly into Christian documentation by St. Paul, whom many scholars claim on evidence to have been himself a Gnostic and an Initiate in the Greek Mysteries (as were Clement and Origen in the Egyptian), and also by St. John, whose Bible writings are decidedly more Platonic than distinctively Christian. The visible thread of its transmission runs on to Plutarch, after whom it became more difficult to trace, being propagated by Hermeticists, Therapeutae, Rosicrucians, Platonists, Mystics, Illuminati, Alchemists, Brothers of various designations and secret fraternities in Europe, out of sight of the jealous eye of the all-powerful emerging Gentile Roman Church-State. At the period of its lowest ebb in Europe it avoided total extinction by incorporation into the religious teachings of Arabian and Moorish scholars and Jewish students in Spain. The teaching was preserved and handed on by such associations in Medieval Europe as the Cathedral Builders, the Platonic Academy of Florence, the Alchemists, the "Fire Philosophers," the Troubadours and Minnesingers, by secret printers, among them Aldus Minutius of Venice, who reprinted the classic Greek literature that ushered in the Italian Renaissance. Sporadically, now in one region, now in another, it took form in outward movements in groups of mystic and pietistic tendency of many names. One place where it could not be found however was in Christianity from the 2nd century onward! Coming to the surface again in recent years it is being revived by Rosicrucians, Theosophists, Kabbalists, Esotericists, Mystics, Spiritual and Psychic Scientists and Parapsychologists in large numbers, and is perhaps the most vital movement in the thought life of today.

Answer for yourself: Why the resurgence in this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom? This renewal of an influence so long buried was opened during the last century by the studies in Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology exhaustively pursued by many scholars. I suppose the time was right and through such efforts there came a unity of thought from such studies whereby the vast majority of such scholars began to detect a unity, amounting virtually to identity, underlying all the old religious systems of mankind, which expressed so clearly the characteristic features of what appeared to have been a universal primal world religion, with the solar myth as its corner-stone. Such extensive examinations into Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology showed that every great historical religion was readily seen to have been, at its start, a pure expression of the basic elements of this outline, and equally readily seen to have had their pristine purity of teachings badly corrupted by the later influence of Roman Christianity. A gross transgressor in this respect is seen to be Christianity, which carried original spiritual meaning further from its intended meaning than perhaps any other. It is most beneficial to trace the causes and progress of this corruption of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Roman Christianity.

This bold assertion that the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the ancients, from the beginning to time down until the 2nd century, was darkly obscured under Christian influences is a challenging statement and must be given the room to vindicate itself. This website will serve as a substantiation of that claim. This point can be prover beyond any doubt only by an ample reproduction of the substance of the archaic World Religion, so that the clear outlines of the great pristine doctrines of theology as they were apprehended in the arcane schools, may by contrast reveal the darkness and emptiness of its present interpretation by Orthodox Christianity. Only in the light of this restored radiant wisdom of the past will the glaring corruption of current interpretation become discernible.

The stream of degradation of originally pure teaching flowed in through the channels of literalism. The simple but nearly incredible truth of the matter is that existing elaborate outlines of Spiritual ideography, which were devised with poetic genius and analogical skill, were mistaken for literal objective fact by Roman Orthodoxy from the early 2nd century onward. It needs stating that the ancient theologians had sought to portray the essence of deep truth by means of fanciful constructions of many kinds. We must understand this if we ever hope of coming to terms with this Ancient Spiritual Truths which was carried down through history as Divine allegory and myth. The whole of early Egyptian and Greek religious literature was a construction commonly termed mythology. What now looms as the most catastrophic stupidity of the centuries was the slanderous transmutation of Spiritual Allegory into alleged history by Roman Orthodoxy. This has been perpetrated in spite of the obvious impossibility of explaining how a people that produced Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, Pericles, Heraclitus, Homer, Pindar and Demosthenes could gull itself into taking poetic fiction for objective occurrence on a grand scale. Our explanation of the mythology of the Greeks commits us to accrediting such sages with the minds of children. Contrary to what you might have thought or been taught religious myths to the ancients were the vehicles whereby one might come to comprehend ancient Spiritual and Metaphysical Truth. Only to the crudely ignorant were these mythical representations not transparent and not understood correctly. But, oddly enough, blind misapprehension carried the day, and the transparency of the myths was darkened and believed by increasing numbers under the influence of the Fathers of Orthodox Christianity to be supposed "literal-historical" narratives.

Now we must pay close attention. Christianity started out as a system closely kindred with the cults with similar dogmas and doctrines, and boasting of conformity with them. But that was to change with Rome's "reinterpretation" of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom whereby they created a "literal-historical" Jesus.

One of the biggest problems for me in Seminary is the fact that I learned that no one alive when Jesus lived ever mentioned him. I would come to learn that there is no contemporary record that a "literal-historical" Jesus existed outside of this one Roman Bible given to the world. None. There is no Christian record. There is no non-Christian record. I am not making this up. It's part of mainstream modern scholarship. Problematic for me is the fact that no non-Christian alive when Jesus lived ever mentions seeing Jesus or hearing Jesus -- or even hearing about Jesus!

- They don't mention the star that heralded His birth.
- They don't mention Herod's slaughter of boy babies.
- They don't mention crowds gathered to hear Him preach.
- They don't mention His trial.
- They don't mention His crucifixion.
- They don't mention His resurrection.
- They never mention anything He said, or anywhere He went, or anything He thought, or anything He said, or anything He did.

No non-Christian alive when Jesus lived ever mentions Him at all. Not once.

Answer for yourself: What about the Christian record made by people who knew Jesus? There isn't any! The second part of the New Testament -- Acts and letters by Paul and other apostles was of course written after Jesus supposedly died, by people who didn't know Him. They say so themselves.

As to the "first" part of the New Testament, the Gospels, partly because Mark mentions the Jewish-Roman war of the 70s AD, and because Matthew and Luke quote Mark, the consensus of mainstream modern scholarship is that the gospels were written decades after Jesus' death -- by people who never met Him! Some scholars guess the gospels were written late in the first century, maybe forty or fifty years after Jesus died. But that's just a guess -- a low ball guess. The gospels are not mentioned in any other Christian writings -- Origen, Tertullian, Justin Martyr, for example -- until about 150 AD. Many scholars guess they existed before 150 AD -- but a scholarly guess is still just a guess. For starters, the guys who wrote the gospels are not the guys with their names on the cover. Mark did not write Mark. Matthew did not write Matthew. Ditto John and Luke. There are lots of reasons behind this, including the fact the earliest papyrus gospel manuscripts (the earliest ones date to about 200 AD) don't give the names of the authors, and we know the authors' names were actually first stuck on the gospels by a Catholic priest generations later. And of the four gospelers, the priest said only Matthew ever met Jesus -- yet Matthew copies extensively from Mark, who never met Jesus. What's more no early Christian writers quote or even mention the gospels until the middle of the second century AD. There is no evidence they existed before then! This should wake you up from the dead!

There is no contemporary record that Jesus existed. None. That's not a guess, that's a fact.

Answer for yourself: Don't the early Christian writings prove Christianity is unique?

No, they don't. This is what most Christians today don't know. The early Christians did not think Jesus was unique. Today the Internet can bring you "key" important quotes by Early Church Fathers that are alarming when the impact of their honesty hits home. We can today read what the earliest Christians --Tertullian, Justin Martyr, Origen --wrote about Jesus and the Pagan Gods. They said that Jesus was similar to the Pagan Gods.

Answer for yourself: Why? Because the "Jesus Story" is the SAME "story" as these prior Divine Personified Spiritual Allegories or "gods". The early Church Father, Justin Martyr in particular, is at pains to protest that Christianity in no wise differs from pagan usages.

Justin Martyr states:

""When we say that the Word, who is the first-birth of God, was produced without sexual union, and that He, Jesus Christ, our Teacher, was crucified and died, and rose again, and ascended into heaven, we propound nothing different from what you believe regarding those whom you esteem sons of Jupiter." [Justin Martyr, First Apology, 21]

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

It should teach you that directly from the pens of the first Christians themselves, that in the second century, at the foundation of the faith, even before the Gospels were available, Christians worried about the similarities between Jesus and the Pagan Gods, worried about the fact the Pagan Gods came first, and explained the similarity as "demonic imitation" -- copying by the Pagans backwards in time! This is plain stupid to blame it on the "Devil". These corrupters of the Divine Ancient Spiritual Wisdom were cornered, they were caught in their web of lies and misinterpretations and they had to come up with something. So they blamed it on the Devil!

What the New Testament and other early Christian writings prove is that after the time allotted for the death of Jesus, Christians eventually came to believe He was the uniquely true God.

In response to these admissions of history and Early Church Fathers Christians continually point to Josephus and a "quote" about Jesus to verify his historical existence. The Jewish historian Flavius Josephus is considered by many Christian scholars, but not all of them by any means, to be the most important non-Christian source on Christ's existence. Written around C.E. 95, this paragraph appears in The Antiquities of the Jews:

"Now, there was about this time, Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works--a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews, and many of the Gentiles. He was [the] Christ; and when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men amongst us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at the first did not forsake him, for he appeared to them alive again the third day, as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him; and the tribe of Christians, so named form him are not extinct at this day."

If this is the strongest and earliest extra-Biblical evidence for the historical Jesus, then the scholarship is on the shakiest grounds. That passage from Josephus has been shown conclusively to be a forgery, and even conservative scholars admit that it has been tampered with. But even were it historical, it dates from more than six decades after the supposed death of Jesus.

The passage, although widely quoted by believers today, did not show up in the writings of Josephus until centuries after his death, at the beginning of the fourth century. Thoroughly dishonest church historian Eusebius is credited as the real author. The passage is grossly out of context, a clear hint that it was inserted at a later time.

All scholars agree that Josephus, a Jew who never converted to Christianity, would not have called Jesus "the Christ" or "the truth," so the passage must have been doctored by a later Christian--evidence, by the way, that some early believers were in the habit of altering texts to the advantage of their theological agenda. The phrase "to this day" that appears in the interpolation, reveals it was written at a later time. Everyone agrees there was no "tribe of Christians" during the time of Josephus--Christianity did not get off the ground until the second century.

If Jesus were truly important to history, then Josephus should have told us something about him. Yet he is completely silent about the supposed miracles and deeds of Jesus. He does not quote Jesus. He adds nothing to the Gospel narratives and tells us nothing that would not have been known by Christians in either the first or fourth centuries. In all of Josephus' voluminous writings, there is nothing about Jesus or Christianity anywhere outside of the tiny paragraph.

The Josephus paragraph mentions that Jesus was foretold by the divine prophets, but he does not tell us who those prophets were or what they said. This is religious propaganda, not history. If Jesus had truly been the fulfillment of Jewish prophecy, then Josephus would have been the exact person to confirm it.

Answer for yourself: So why is this Josephus passage so important? It is the best "historical evidence" for Jesus that exits in Christianity today.

There exists another phrase from Josephus that concerns James, the so-called brother of Jesus, and is likewise flimsy. It says that a man named James was stoned to death, which is not mentioned in the bible. Many scholars believe the "brother of Jesus" phrase is a later interpolation, and that Josephus was referring to a different James, possibly the same James that Paul mentions in Acts, who led a sect in Jerusalem. Contradicting Josephus, Hegesippus wrote a history of Christianity in C.E. 170 saying that James, the brother of Jesus, was killed in a riot, not by sentence of a court.

Often Christians have cited Pliny the Younger, who, in the early second century (112 C.E.), reported that "Christians were singing a hymn to Christ as to a god." Notice how late this reference is. And notice the absence of the name "Jesus." The passage, if accurate, could have referred to any of the other self-proclaimed "Christs" (messiahs) followed by Jews who thought they had found their anointed one. Pliny's account is not history, since he is only relaying what other people believed. No one doubts that Christianity was in existence by this time. This is of no proof at all for the existence of a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus.

Taticus, another second-century Roman writer who alleged that Christ had been executed by sentence of Pontius Pilate, is likewise cited by Christians. Written some time after C.E. 117, Tacitus' claim is more of the same late, second-hand "history." There is no mention of the name "Jesus," only "the sect known as Christians" living in Rome being persecuted, and "their founder, one Christus." Tacitus claims no first-hand knowledge of Christianity. No historical evidence exists that Nero persecuted Christians--Nero did persecute Jews, so perhaps Tacitus was confused. There was certainly not a "great crowd" of Christians in Rome around C.E. 60, as Tacitus put it, and most damning, the term "Christian" was not even in use in the first century. No one in the second century ever quoted this passage of Tacitus. In fact, it appears almost word-for-word in the fourth-century writings of Sulpicius Severus, where it is mixed with other obvious myths. Citing Tacitus, therefore, is highly suspect and adds virtually nothing to the evidence for a historical Jesus.

Historians have no evidence of a historic Jesus dating from the time Jesus supposedly lived, even though many contemporary writers documented the era in great detail. Philo of Alexandria, for example, wrote in depth about early first-century Palestine, naming other self-proclaimed messiahs, yet never once mentioning a man named Jesus. Many other contemporary writers covered that era, yet there is not a single mention of any existence, deeds, or words of a man named Jesus.

Timothy Freke and Peter Gandy, in their book The Jesus Mysteries, explain how the myth and legend of Jesus could easily have arisen without a historical founder. The Jesus story was pressed from the same template as other mythical savior-gods who were killed and resurrected, such as Osiris, Dionysus, Mithra, and Attis. This is not surprising for all these "Christs" were but personifications of the Divine Soul in mankind as interpreted correctly in the Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom; none were ever believed to be "literal-historical" personages as we are taught about Jesus who is the "same" quoting again Justin Martyr who lived a lot closer to the time of this Spiritual Wisdom than we today.

Early Christians agreed that Christianity offered "nothing different" from paganism. Arguing with pagans around C.E. 150, Justin Martyr said at another time:

"When we say that the Word, who is the first born of God, was produced without sexual union, and that he, Jesus Christ, our teacher, was crucified and died, and rose again, and ascended into heaven; we propound nothing different from what you believe regarding those whom you esteem sons of Jupiter (Zeus)."

Fourth-century Christian scholar Fermicus, in attempting to establish the uniqueness of Christianity, met at every turn by pagan precedents to the story of Jesus, and in exasperation concluded: "The Devil has his Christs!"

The Gospels are not history; they are religious propaganda, contradictory, exaggerated, and mythical. The earliest Christian writings, the letters of Paul, are silent about the man Jesus: Paul, who never met Jesus, fails to mention a single deed or saying of Jesus (except for the ritualistic Last Supper formula), and sometimes contradicts what Jesus supposedly said. To Paul, Jesus was a heavenly disembodied Christ figure, not a man of flesh and blood.

There is serious doubt that Jesus ever existed. It is impossible to prove he was a historical figure. It is much more plausible to consider the Jesus character to be the result of myth-making, a human process that is indeed historically documented, or at best nothing more than a later Roman "reinterpretation" of pervious Divine Spiritual Allegories know to humanity since the beginning of time.

I want you to notice the date of this next quote:

The men of latter times accepted this..., not only calling them the births and deaths of the gods, but even believing that they are so. [Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 379]

We should see that by 379 A.D. that the general populace had lost even more "keys" to correctly interpreting this ancient Spiritual Wisdom and were now believing these Pagan godmen to be "literal" and "historical" beings. Close to this date is the Canonization of the New Testament in 380 C.E. (one year difference) and when you put the two together no wonder Christianity has come down to us believing in a "literal-historical" Jesus Christ.

Answer for yourself: Was Jesus new? Was Jesus unique? Justin Martyr sure did not think so. In order to answer that we have to know something about the Pagan godmen.

This conjures up memories of the crucified "Jesus" but the problem is that the inscription reads "Orpheus Bakkus" which is another way of saying "Dionysus" who was likewise crucified on an old rugged cross. Understand that this image predated the time of the supposed crucified Jesus by over two hundred years.

Answer for yourself: Was Jesus a xerox copy of one particular Pagan God? Was He Mithras renamed? Or Dionysus? The answer is both "Yes" and "No". Jesus was a "new" edition of the same old idea. It was after all the changing of the Age and the Age of Pisces was dawning and the Age of Aries was ending and with it mankind needed a new understanding of God and Salvation. This new "reinterpretation" of the old religious motif served quite well. Jesus was the "new version" of an "old Spiritual idea" to which a "literal-historical" interpretation was given unlike before.

Jesus was the Son of God who suffered, died, and was reborn. But He wasn't the first Son of God who suffered, died, and was reborn. He brought salvation; but He wasn't the God first to do that either. His mother was a virgin; He wasn't the first God there either. It's the same with miracles, disciples, ascending to heaven -- the list goes on and on. Believing scholars like to bring up differences between Jesus and the earlier Pagan godmen in order to try to make the case that Jesus is "unique and different". They say that, for instance, Mithras was born of a rock, not a virgin, so Jesus can't be Mithras. Attis died under a pine tree, not on a cross, so Jesus can't be Attis. Believing scholars are right, Jesus wasn't Mithras, and He wasn't Attis. Jesus was a "new" God, but at the core his is but a "new" version of God, built from old ideas.

All of the nations "Godmen" were the "Word made flesh". A God shaped like a man, walking, talking, eating, but still having magic God powers -- you can't get more Pagan than that. Ancient Gods had human bodies, that's how Paganism worked. Jesus was no different. Gods like Attis, Dionysus, Osiris, Mithras, and others weren't just Gods in human form, they were God-men -- subordinate Gods, son's of the great universal God, miraculously conceived, living for a while on Earth rather than in Heaven.

Answer for yourself: Sound familiar? Sure it does. That's because Jesus is a Pagan godman. But when we take into consideration that this is but the use of personification and anthropomorphic language whereby human characteristics are given to Divine Ideas then we see the genius of the Ancient Spiritual Allegories and Myths. The Metaphysical Spiritual realm of God was described in such a way that the common man could identify and understand such Divine and lofty Spiritual Concepts like the incarnation of God within himself and the "resurrection" from the "dead" (Spiritually) while he yet lives in this fleshly body. In dealing with the dying, resurrected godmen, we don't know exactly when the myths of the resurrected godmen began -- they date back thousands of years, basically fading into prehistory. We do know the myths began in Ancient Egypt and migrate to the eastern Mediterranean (the Levant, the Middle East, Mesopotamia, Persia-Assyria-Syria), where farming cultures developed religions that celebrated the yearly return of crop fertility. You probably won't be surprised to hear Mother Earth religions had Gods who personified the cycle-of-nature by dying in the autumn, actual death and rebirth at the Winter Solstice, and the full celebration of being reborn in the spring when the Earth testifies to this Divine Truth.

- In Athens the women fast...and the Boeotians...name that festival the Festival of Sorrow, since Demeter is in sorrow because of her daughter's decent into Pluto's realm. This month, in the season of the Pleiades, is the month of seeding....
- The Phrygians, believing that the god is asleep in the winter and awake in the summer, sing lullabies for him in the winter and in the summer chants to arouse him, after the manner of Bacchic [aka Dionysus'] worshipers.
- The Paphlagonians assert that in the winter he is bound fast and imprisoned, but that in the spring he bestirs himself and sets himself free again. [Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 378]

As you see, the myths' details differed, but at their core they are the same.

Answer for yourself: Can we be sure these pre-Christian people really believed their gods died and came back to life?

The men of latter times accepted this..., not only calling them the births and deaths of the gods, but even believing that they are so. [Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 379]

The ancient Greeks and Romans inherited and adapted Gods from Ancient Egypt and the archaic Middle East, carrying their myths past the cycle-of-nature stage.

Answer for yourself: And what were some of their names? Adonis, Dionysus, Cybele and Attis, Isis and Osiris. And others. You should understand, there's a lot of stuff about the godmen we don't know -- after Constantine's conversion in 312 AD, pagan religions were suppressed, their temples destroyed or converted, their priests murdered, their sacred texts burned. We do know the names of their Gods, and some of their rituals. And we can trace their ideas to Greece and Rome -- and on to the church in your neighborhood this weekend.

So we see that our "Jesus Story" is not new. The "Jesus Story" is not unique. He wasn't the first Son born to the supreme God and a mortal woman. He wasn't the first godman to heal the sick, raise the dead, turn water into wine. He wasn't the first godman to die and be reborn and ascend into heaven. The stories about Jesus -- his myths -- were not new. Everything we read and interpret as if "literal-historical" in our "Jesus Story" has its truest meaning in Metaphysical Realities dealing with our Souls and their incarnation in our bodies and it intended Spiritual Growth. The stories about Jesus -- his myths -- are not unique but are critically important for us only when interpreted correctly once again.

Having said all of this the fact of the matter is that you, the reader, cannot be sure that I am 100% right in what I have said and taught unless you possess some knowledge concerning other ancient religions. When you do the studies you see for certain that Christianity was not new like Justin Martyr said, Christianity was not unique, Christianity was not discontinuous with ancient Paganism but a gross "reinterpretation" of the Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom that robs man of his rightful Spiritual inheritance.

Hundreds of years before Christianity Pagans had:

- personal Gods who care about people and help or punish them
- A single supreme God who made and controls the Universe
- Gods who ascend and descend from their home up in heaven
- A soul that survives death
- Eternal life after death, with torment for sinners; reward for the worthy
- The Logos, which early Christians explicitly identify as the Holy Spirit
- Gods who are Sons of the supreme God, often born of a mortal woman
- Prophecy -- made and fulfilled
- Miracles -- stuff like raising the dead, healing the sick, restoring sight to the blind, turning water into wine
- Worshiped Gods who died and came back to life
- Were personal religions entered into voluntarily via initiation ceremonies that involved purification by water baptism that reenacted the God's death and rebirth
- Taught that initiation gave believers rebirth and salvation
- Celebrated with ceremonies of food and drink that reenacted a holy meal established by the God
- Had teachings that brought the faithful closer to God
- Worshiped Gods with the miraculous power to heal illness

Christianity had all these things, but Paganism had all of them first. In all these things, Christianity was not new, Christianity was not unique, Christianity was not discontinuous with mainstream Paganism. Christianity was a "reinterpretation" of the above Divine Spiritual Wisdom; a sad gross mischaracterization of Spiritual Truth that so desperately needs to be restored to its correct interpretation today. Only in this way can the Bible be restored to the Divine Truth that it was intended to convey.

The first Christians knew all about pagan myths. The early writings of Christianity prove the first Christians knew Jesus' story is not unique.

If you're like me, you grew up thinking the bible stories about Jesus were historical. He really did have magical powers. He really did come back from the dead. Jesus was a new, independent -- who brought a radical new concept of God, a radical new concept of people's personal relationship with God, a radical new assurance of eternal life. What we've discovered is that nothing about Jesus was new or different, except the "literal-historical" aspect added to this Divine Allegory by Rome.. The miracle stories were old Pagan stories. Monotheism was old Pagan philosophy. Baptism was old Pagan ritual. Resurrection was old Pagan myth. Salvation was an old Pagan promise. Jesus wasn't sudden or new or independent. The Christ myth looks exactly like the old Pagan myths popular at the time. Most folks see that Christianity looks like it is in continuity with ancient Paganism because it is in continuity with ancient Paganism. The first Christians built their new religion out of the ideas, rituals, and myths that defined the Pagan culture they grew up in. Christianity is an ancient Pagan religion. The salvation and resurrection you'll hear about in Church this Sunday are four thousand year old Pagan myths. They only problem is that you hear it without its original Divine intended interpretation thanks to Rome and their anti-Semitism and antinomianism.

Answer for yourself: How did this happen? It is complicated so I will summarize.

When, in the 2nd through the 5th century, the head-ship of the early Church passed out of the hands of the academicians of Athens and Alexandria, of Antioch, Tarsus and Ephesus, and fell into those of the less studied Romans, the trend to literalism had gained such momentum that there swept into the movement a spirit of vindictiveness against the dominant systems of esoteric secrecy that accompanied this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom which was reserved for "initiates" and those desiring such knowledge and showing themselves worthy of it. When the conception of the purely spiritual Christos could no longer successfully be imparted to the ignorant masses, who were crying out for a political savior, it was found necessary, or expedient, to substitute the more concrete idea of a personal and "literal" savior or Messiah. The swell of this tide of force carried the Church Fathers to the limit of recasting the entire Gospel in the terms of a human biography. So what had been originally in the Ancient Mysteries and the sacred scripts a combined astrological and mythical dramatization of man's total Spiritual experience, the Descent of the Soul into humankind, was now turned into the story of one character to which everyone's salvation depended.

The outcome has been that the theology handed down to us by the early reinterpretation of this Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom is the crudest, least rational and intellectually most confusing interpretation of the ancient revelation anywhere extant. Philo, Origen, Clement and Josephus had expressly declared that scripture shielded beneath the literal narrative a secret profundity of meaning, which was its true message. Philo specified four distinct levels in which the sense of scripture was to be apprehended, the purely literal, or physical, the moral or emotional, the allegorical or mental and the lofty spiritual. The later Church discarded or disregarded the two or three more secret ones and held only to the lowest and the basest. The drive to convert the highly concentrated "meat" of spiritual truth into "milk" for the babes gave to Christianity zeal that it needed to capture the minds of the ignorance among the lower ranks of subjects and shortly enabled it to turn the tide against its chief rival, Mithraism. The masses will always, as they did in Luther's Reformation, seize upon a sweeping current of ideological hope and attempt to utilize it as a means of escape from their lowly economic lot. The hopes of the rabble interwove the dream of political liberation with the religious message, adding an the pressure to translate allegory into a tale of history. Thus Christianity lost its Gnosis; and all Christendom has since had to suffer this tragic erroneous "reinterpretation" given this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome.

Let us end with a reflection on how easy it was to obscure this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom among the early centuries and the ignorant masses that flocked to a Christian hope for both political and religious deliverance from the tyranny of Rome. The cultured Celsus, writing about 200 A.D., cannot refrain from commenting on the social complexion of the Christians of his day. He wrote: "It is only the simpletons, the ignoble, the senseless--slaves and womenfolk and children--whom they wish to persuade . . . wool-dressers and cobblers and fullers, the most uneducated and vulgar persons . . . whosoever is a sinner, or unintelligent, or a fool, in a word, whoever is god-forsaken (kakodaimon), him the kingdom of God will receive" (Bouck White, The Call of the Carpenter).

Christianity's failure is that it denied the Gnosis to the intelligent--or to any. Its Roman revolt against the spiritual esotericism constituted its betrayal of the innermost heart of all religion. Christianity is responsible for this lost message of the Gnosis of the Ancient Soul Science through its tragic "literal reinterpretation" of such Divine Wisdom. And the murder of the learned Hypatia and the burning of the priceless books of the Alexandrian library are sufficient attestation of the great lengths of purging of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom to which Rome would go to conceal this horrible "reinterpretation" of Spiritual genius.

But this darkness and mind-control will no longer work in an age of enlightenment and information. Christianity now lives to witness a world of more general intelligence, after repression by fiend-like persecution for fifteen centuries. That Christianity presented to the world a complete new system of higher Spiritual truth unknown before its time is shown to be a boldface lie and at best a tragic denigration of the Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom and a gross egregious "mistranslation" of it.

The legitimacy of such a dogmatic assertion can become evident only in the light of the entire study here undertaken on this website as well as others since such a lengthy scrutiny is required to demonstrate that in dogma after dogma, rite after rite, and parable after parable, Christianity substituted a mean and valueless literal sense for the original lofty Spiritual Message of Ancient Egypt.

The truth of the matter is that Christianity devised nothing new and retained the outward form and dress of prior pagan systems. Even with this radical "reinterpretation" Christianity has ever been hard put to explain the undeniable similarity between preceding religions and its own faith and practice. Intelligent churchmen have seen the futility of denying the fact and have readily admitted the pagan sources of Christianity. But in the third century it was a matter of critical importance to maintain the novel and superior character of the new religion.

Answer for yourself: And how did Christianity answer such a charge of plagiarism and "reinterpretation"?

The device resorted to by numbers of the Fathers in answering historical charges of religious plagiarism and "reinterpretation" of the Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom is indisputable testimony to the desperateness of their dilemma. Church membership and many Christian authors are not even aware of these historical admissions by these Church Fathers and even when informed of such attempts to answer such charges they are reluctant to credit the reliability of the evidence that exists on this matter. Once you see this then it is almost unbelievable that this was recorded in history and lost to the minds of Christianity down through the ages. But yet it was said in defence of the Christian "reinterpretation" of the Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom when they were cornered in debates with men like Celsus and others. Church Fathers, confronted from time to time with amazing evidences of unbelievable parallels between the "Jesus Story" and the prior sungods had no recourse but to defy logic and blame it on the "Devil". It should be alarming for you to know and our Christian pride should recoil in horror at the dishonesty of this "literalistic" Christianity and its earliest founders when confronted down through history by others "possessing this knowledge" and extent of their plagiarism of the existing Ancient Spiritual Wisdom from Egypt and later periods of world history.

Now let me tell you of an excellent book that ever Christian should read. A classic "must read" is Edward Carpenter's Pagan and Christian Creeds. In this excellent work, Pagan and Christian Creeds, Edward Carpenter comments at length on the subterfuge, as follows:

"The similarity of these ancient pagan legends and beliefs with Christian traditions was indeed so great that it excited the attention and the undisguised wrath of the early Christian Fathers. They felt no doubt about the similarity, but not knowing how to explain it, fell back upon the innocent theory that the Devil--in order to confound the Christians--had centuries before, caused the pagans to adopt certain beliefs and practices! (Very crafty, we may say, of the Devil, but very innocent of the Fathers to believe it!) Justin Martyr, for instance, describes the institution of the Lord's supper as narrated in the Gospels, and then goes on to say: 'Which the wicked devils have imitated in the Mysteries of Mithra, commanding the same thing to be done. For that bread and a cup of water are placed with certain incantations in the mystic rites of one who is being initiated you either know or can learn" (p. 25).

Tertullian also says (De Praescriptione Hereticorum, C. 30; De Bapt., C. 3; De Corona, C. 15) that "the devil by the mysteries of his idols imitates even the main part of the divine mysteries. . . . He baptizes his worshippers in water and makes them believe that this purifies them from their crimes! . . . Mithra sets his mark on the forehead of his soldiers; he celebrates the oblation of bread; he offers an image of the resurrection and presents at once the crown and the sword; he limits his chief priests to a single marriage; he even has his virgins and ascetics."

Cortez, if you are not aware, complained that the Devil had positively taught to the Mexicans the same things which God had taught to Christendom. This was in response of finding the new world a "crucified man" on a Cross before they brought Catholic dogma and their version of a "crucified savior" to the new world. You should read how these Priests and Cortez were utterly astounded at what they discovered already existed in the new world. With a little knowledge of astronomy then this becomes evident and this knowledge of the Cosmos was worldwide in Ancient times contrary to what we are taught today. This again shows you the influence of Ancient Egypt who taught the incarnation of the Divine Mind into matter over the whole world (crossing of the Divine and Matter shaped and depicted as intersecting planes making a "cross". This was what lied at the center of the Descent of the Soul, the Deific Mind, into mankind (Spirit in matter). This was symbolized as the events associated with the Vernal Equinox which became symbolic of this Metaphysical reality. This become evident the more you study and lies behind much of what we are finding today in current archeological studies. To which may be added the astonishing statement of a modern Catholic priest, quoted by Carpenter (p. 68): "And the Tartary Father Grüber thus testifies: 'This only do I affirm, that the Devil so mimics the Catholic Church there, that although no European or Christian has ever been there, still in all essential things they agree so completely with the Roman Church as even to celebrate the Host with bread and wine; with my own eyes I have seen it!'" (Edward Carpenter, Pagan and Christian Creeds, p. 68).

There are many accusations against "the Devil" for this diabolical mimicry that we find in the same manner from Christian apologists throughout the 2nd through the 5th century. Not only were the spiritual dogmas and doctrines and practice of the new Christian religion identical in most respects with those of previous Ancient Spiritual religions but what is striking for us to realize is that they were "reinterpreted" and their original meanings lost. Its own central thesis, the divinity of the Savior, had been anticipated by some hundreds of years in other cults. But there is one big, big difference. These earlier ancient religions NEVER "literalized" this Spiritual Allegory of the Descent of the Soul into mankind and limited it to but one supposed "literal" person; they understood it referred to and applied to the whole of mankind. If we look close the result emerges with great clearness, that the figure of the Redeemer, as such, did not wait for Christianity to force its way into the religion of Gnosis, but was already present in these ancient Spiritual Religions under various forms (Prof. Bousset, Pagan and Christian Creeds, p. 206). But again all of these "Redeemers" were allegorical in the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and in so doing expressed the "awakening in mankind of his divinity", as his Soul or "Krst/Karest/Christ" within his body. This was the "resurrection of Christ" from the dead (dwelling in bodies of matter considered as if "dead" by the ancients). We got it just backwards today!

Discussing the doctrine of a Savior, Carpenter writes: "Probably the wide range of this doctrine would have been far better and more generally known, had not the Christian Church, all through, made the greatest of efforts and taken the greatest of precautions to extinguish and snuff out all evidence of the pagan claims on the subject. There is much to show that the early Church took this line with regard to pre-Christian Saviors" (Edward Carpenter, p. 130). Carpenter makes it clear that the coming of a Savior-God was in no sense a belief distinctive of Christianity. He explains that the Messianic prophecies of the Jews and the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, once again misinterpreted, infected Christian teaching to some degree with Judaic influence. The Hebrew word Messiah, meaning "The Anointed One," occurs some forty times in the Old Testament; and each time in the Septuagint, written as early as the third century before our era, it is translated Christos, which also means "Anointed." It is thus seen, says Carpenter, that the word "the Christ" was in vogue in Alexandria as far back as 280 B.C. In the Book of Enoch, written not later than B.C. 170, the Christ is spoken of as already existing in heaven, about to come to earth, and is called "The Son of Man." The Book of Revelation is full of passages from Enoch, likewise the Epistles of Paul and the Gospels.

These statements are but a suggestion of the full truth in this direction. The Christians were not content to let the matter rest with the explanation that Satan had teased them with some anticipatory resemblances. These earliest Christians responded to this insane "blame it on the Devil defense" by the most violent measures to blot out all links between their body of doctrine and former Ancient Spiritual Wisdom. This is a black, black page in the history of Christianity and a measure of evil policy not easily condoned. They destroyed as far as possible the entire body of pagan record to obliterate, as Carpenter says, "the evidence of their own dishonesty." Porphyry tells of their destruction of elaborate treatises on Mithraism. And his own work on Christianity fell a prey likewise. Their vandal work is matter of record. The whole matter may be tersely summed up in the world of Sir Gilbert Murray: "The polemic literature of Christianity is loud and triumphant; the books of the pagans have been destroyed."

Christianity has lost a lot from its earliest expression of religion belief and its repeated attempts to mask the truth about its origins is laid open before concerned readers and truth seekers today. Radical fanaticism, fundamentalism, and the destruction of literature are always the resort of a rotten cause, revealing a absence of truth by those wanting and perpetrating such destruction of evidences to contrary positions they hold. The unlimited Christian zeal to wipe out all the testimony of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom during the 2nd through the 5th century testifies to the erroneous interpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom given by Rome and to which we have fallen prey yet today. It may be said, in partial extenuation of the Fathers' conduct in the second through the fifth centuries, that their discovery now and again of the startling similarities between their religion and earlier paganism may have come with genuine astonishment to the eyes of those not familiar with these parallels as it does to new students today. It is mistakenly believed by most that the Greeks and Romans of the early Christian days stood far closer to the great Egyptian and Chaldean cultures than we do today. That is not true. The Egyptian papyri, monuments, tablets, and hieroglyphics were a sealed book to the vast majority of early Christian Fathers, and remained so until Champollion worked out the key to the hieroglyphics from the Rosetta Stone in the early nineteenth century. Only then were we able to read and decipher the Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom of Egypt and see the unbelievable parallels to our "Jesus Story". Only when we get back to the early Church Fathers in Alexandria, Egypt, do we find some commonality of thought with the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of Egypt but we should not be surprised as Alexandria is in Egypt in the first place. The connection between the Christian cult and its antecedents in India, Chaldea and Egypt was not seen then as it can be today since aided by the Rosetta Stone and other archeological discoveries. We can in a some small way begin to understand the indignant surprise of the propagators of this new "reinterpreted" Christian faith on finding that their alleged novel and "unique" truth had been copied ahead of them by those they were taught to define as both "heathen" and "pagan". It is time to rethink that!

The crux of present interest in the matter is the consideration that the Christianity of our time is imperiling its own standing and reputation by perpetuating a mistake made at its historical inception. Continuance in denial of such plagiarism or "reinterpretation" of existing Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom by Christianity is pointless in this information age which such things become open to critical investigation and exposed to the light of day. Such stances of denial by Christian preachers and Christian writers show only their disingenuousness and lack of concern for "truth". As I see it Christianity's only salvation from this onslaught of incriminating evidence and knowledge is outright admission of the purposeful erroneous interpretation of the Ancient Sacred Texts and a repentance which culminates in a frank admission of its outgrowth from pagan antecedents, along with a willingness to reconstruct a whole new "re-interpretation" of its theology in relation to the intended interpretation of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom as given by those who handed in down the corridors of history.

This won't be easy for a religion that has defined itself as "infallible and inerrant". It will be hard for Christians to turn back and embrace what it had been so long taught to despise. But it must be done, or all pretense at regard for the truth will be abandoned. The grand body of ancient teaching should never have been brought into contempt as it was by the early Church Fathers. Convicted of its great error the Church must go the whole way in making the correction. No course but that of sincere honesty will now suffice. Further concealment, denial, and theological runaround will only prove the lack of sincerity and the love of truth by those who do so in the fact of such overwhelming evidence that negates and corrects most Christian theological positions. In the coming years with this culminating witness to the erroneous interpretation of Christianity of its own Bible how Ecclesiastical and fundamentalist Christianity meets this issue will determine its fate. Life and death is actually in its own hand. If it confronts it with honest humility it may rise again in power, respect, and esteem. For there is power in the Ancient Spiritual Soul Science to transfigure Christian nations with the glow of righteousness at it was originally intended when the "Jesus Story" was to be the "pattern" for all mankind but was tragically grasped away from them by Rome's hidden religious agendas of power and greed. The Dark Ages are not yet past, and that treasure which slipped away through the fingers of early Christianity has not yet been restored. I pray these articles help in this regard in some small way.

GERALD MASSEY AND RESTORING PROPER INTERPRETATION OF ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM

We have devoted a good bit of time revealing to the reader that the reason why we have remained so blind to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom hidden in our Bibles is because we are visionless to the very method of its presentation and preservation. We have lost the power to grasp the postulations of this ancient Spiritual knowledge laid down by the ancient Spiritual Masters of old because we are simply untrained to see a different methodology for interpreting these Bible stories than from our own inherited "literal-historical" interpretation. This restoration of original truth and intended understanding of these ancient Spiritual Texts which find their way into our Bibles today will only be regained if we come to understand "key" theological dogmas in Christianity in their original understanding as they were taught in the beginning of time.

We have made mention that the ancients used a strategy of concealment of deep Spiritual Truths and presented and preserved them in the mode of religious myth and allegory. This subtle disguise ensured their survival. Such divine truth in ancient days was not made available to the public at large unless individuals showed interest in obtaining this Spiritual Knowledge. It was the secret of the Priests. Such divine truth had to be safeguarded from the undisciplined who would misuse it; thus the need to keep it secret. But more than than it had to be preserved. To this end it had to be hidden in myths, legends, allegories, folk-tales, and parables in order to become "unforgettable" memories through the power of tradition. But even more it had to be expressed in a language that would be universally comprehensible--a language of living symbols. Therefore the ancients Spiritual truth was dramatized and symbolized. The figures in these ancient Spiritual dramas were the elements of divine and human nature; and the symbols vehicles to conceal divine truth. These symbolic constructions carried to the mind of the hearer and reader their message of invisible truths because they were those invisible truths themselves which could be known by recognition of man's visible world. Words are themselves but symbols. Objects of living nature are more definite speech to a discerning mind than a formal language. And the ancients understood that the Universal Mind of this Cosmos, this God, did cast His archetypal ideas onto and into all forms of matter, where mortal man may look at them in their appearance that is not false or corruptible by mankind.

Most likely the readers of Bet Emet are like me, Christian or "ex" traditional Christian, that are truth-seekers at their very core. Given Bibles to which we were devoid of the proper "keys" for its interpretation we were rendered unable to decipher the archaic language used in them along with the "symbols" and thereby have made a jumbled mess of its true and intended meaning and never knew it. The grandest of structures for truth-telling, the Sacred Scriptures of old, have been made into the grossest of fabrications due to an incorrect hermeneutic and interpretation. And the gross perversion and loss of its intended sense have come solely through our unfamiliarity with the special and involved techniques employed in writing of the ancient sacred books. This tragic condition would have been avoided had our Pastors and teachers been equipped with the knowledge to teach us that the ancient scribes of these Sacred texts were, first of all, esotericists and wrote esoterically. We were never taught that all spiritual wisdom of antiquity was held in secret brotherhoods and rigorously safeguarded from common dissemination. There existed a spiritual aristocracy quite difficult for us to conceive of today because of the public dissemination of knowledge and publicity today of which we are so conditioned. There were intellectual and spiritual castes, and the lower orders of mental capacity were not regarded as fitted to receive such high spiritual information. This hidden "Gnosis" behind the parables and folk-takes were kept from these. Sheer pious faith could not alone gain one admission into the Mystery Schools. Actual discipline of body and mind were held as prerequisites for the grasp of this deeper Spiritual truth. Initiation was to some real extent dependent upon the purity of one's life. Esotericism arose primarily from the necessity of safeguarding the use of this dynamic Spiritual knowledge. Religion, for the ancients, aimed at liberating the powerful forces hidden in the depths of man's psyche which they understood as part of mankind's evolution. Within this spiritual process mankind's dynamic energies had to be controlled and intelligently trained. What I say next might anger and confuse many but just listen. What we have derided as "magic" in the religion of old was just the control of subtle powers which we mostly permit to slumber in dormancy beneath the surface of our superficial life. Let us not forget that man is made "in the image of an all powerful God". I have found in my studies that religion touched man so deeply in antiquity, like in ancient Egypt, that it awakened the potencies of his godlike endowment, an enterprise which seems so remote to us in our darkened Spiritual conditions of today. Let us not forget that the depiction of "the Christ" was portrayed for us capable of changing the laws of nature often in this New Testament and this "Christ" lives within each child of God. The same things we find in similar stories of the ancient Sungods. This power of God in mankind slumbers in us today but its potential is real and the fulfillment of such passages as below lay unfulfilled in our lives:

John 14:12 12 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. (KJV)

Great writers of antiquity, writes like Plato, Porphyry, Apuleius, Herodotus, Plotinus, Proclus, Iamblichus, Euripides and Cicero speak of this Spiritual Wisdom that is "hidden in a mystery". It defies understanding under the traditional depiction of these ancient Mysteries by the pens of critical Christians and early Church Fathers. Contrary to the early Christian depiction of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom men like Cicero could say:

"There is nothing better than those Mysteries by which, from a rough and fierce life, we are polished to gentleness and softened. And Initia, as they are called, we have thus known as the beginnings of life in truth; not only have we received from them the doctrine of living with happiness, but even of dying with a better hope" (quoted in Preface to Lectures On Ancient Philosophy, by Manley P. Hall).

Added to this is Plato's statement:

"But it was then lawful to survey the most splendid beauty, when we obtained, together with that blessed choir, this happy vision and contemplation. And we indeed enjoyed this blessed spectacle in conjunction with Jupiter . . . at the same time being initiated in those Mysteries which it is lawful to call the most blessed of all Mysteries. . . . Likewise in consequence of this divine initiation, we became spectators of entire, simple, immovable and blessed visions in the pure light. . . ." (Phaedrus, p. 64).

Religious books have been written since the time of old in cryptic form, with truth heavily veiled under the garb of cipher and symbol. Figures and glyphs had to be devised that would convey meaning to the initiated, but conceal it from the uninstructed. To interpret archaic literature one must learn to discern the intent of truth under the disguise of deliberate deceptiveness in the telling of these folk-tales and myths. To this effect I would find upon my studies that there exists mountains of evidence proving this beyond any doubt. The demands of an esoteric methodology for both hiding and protecting this ancient Spiritual Wisdom is the reason why the ancients used what we term "myths" today. Here we encounter the real reason why this ancient procedure of using myth has bred the prevalent wide confusion with respect to past religious myth embodying a truer representation of "reality" than a supposed "literal-historical" rendering. We find the solution of our bewilderment and ineptitude in face of this ancient mythology which Christianity has characterized for us as but "rubbish". Myths were the vehicle for carrying Divine Metaphysical Reality and Truth; the highest Spiritual Truth than mankind was ever given and can hope to ever understand while living in these bodies of flesh.

It was through the use of such symbolism and myth that the whole cycle of the unfolding of "divinity in humanity" was dramatized for the stage enactment in the annual round of Mystery festivals. And, more importantly for us to realize is the fact that portions of this Spiritual drama have filtered down into the ritualism of practically every religion in the world. The epic of the human Soul in earthly embodiment was the theme of every ancient poet and dramatist, and each strove to portray this Spiritual struggle in a new allegorical garb, with a new hero, whether it was Achilles, Hercules, Horus, Theseus, Aeneas, Orpheus, Jason, Dionysus, Buddha, Ulysses or Jesus. At the center of each of these "stories" and "myths" is the central metaphysical reality of the divine presence in mankind conquering the animal nature within himself. This is the classic battle between Set and Horus, or as seen in Judaism the Yetzer Ha Ra (the evil nature) vs the Yetzer Ha Tov (the good nature). The writers of antiquity dealt basically with one theme, that of the pilgrimage of the Soul through the gamut of the elements or creation. Behind these religious myths lie the common theme of the immortal Spirit's immersion into this sea of matter. In all of the mythological combats with dragons, wrestling with serpents, temptations by devils, harassments by beastly creatures, enchantments by Temptresses, plottings of coconspirators, imprisonment in dungeons and struggling through to an ultimate return to the original home of tranquility, we find the plight of the Soul and its quest to struggle with and conquer the animal nature within mankind and eventually to return to Heaven from which it came. In one type of adventure after another we see played out before us the same story; namely, the evolutionary progress of the Divine Soul and its goal of graduating "Earth" and its return to the skies of Heaven which were repeatedly allegorically portrayed in one form after another.

What is equally clear now is that, in the hands of ignorance, an exoteric rendering has taken the place of the esoteric, depriving the mind of its grasp on the essential truth intended in the shadow of such religious myths that we find in our Bibles. The danger of such a confusion was seen by Philo, the learned Jew, who when speaking of the Mosaic writings told his countrymen that "the literal statement is a fabulous one, and it is in the mythical that we shall find the true" (quoted by Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, The Light of the World, p. 543).

Our Christianized supposed "literal-historical" interpretation of Jesus has caused most Christian writers and Pastors to be reluctant to admit this "allegorical" and "mystical" interpretation of the "Jesus Story" as the correct interpretation intended by originators of these ancient Sungod stories (portraying the Descent of the Soul into matter). But amazing at it might appear there have been men who valued truth more than "acceptance by the religious establishment" and have spoken clearly on this misunderstanding of ancient religious myth such as Kingsland, Massey, Churchward, Higgins, and others.

The broad modern assumption has been that the mythos was in toto a lot of mummery and that the rituals were a lot of hollow ceremonialism based on superstition. That they shadowed the greatest of spiritual truths has not yet entered the mind of the ranks of orthodox scholarship. Yet they have been told, and by no one more courageously and vehemently than Gerald Massey, a scholar of surpassing ability whose sterling work has not yet won for him the place of eminence which he deserves. The destruction of the mythos and its rightful interpretation by ignorant literalism stirred Massey to bitter resentment against the perpetrators of this tragedy. His own words will speak best for him, while they support our own contentions:

"The aborigines did not mistake the facts of nature as we have mistaken the primitive method of representing them. It is we, not they, who are the most deluded victims of false belief. Christian capacity for believing the impossible is unparalleled in any time past amongst the race of men. Christian readers denounce the primitive realities of the mythical representations as puerile indeed, and yet their own realities alleged to be eternal, from the fall of Adam to the redemption by means of a crucified Jew, are little or nothing more than the shadows of these primitive simplicities of an earlier time. It will yet be seen that the culmination of credulity, the meanest emasculation of mental manhood, the densest obscuration of the inward light of nature, the completest imbecility of shut-eye belief, the nearest approach to a total and eternal eclipse of common sense, has been attained beyond all chance of competition by the victims of the Christian creeds. The genesis of delusive superstition is late, not early. It is not the direct work of nature herself. Nature was not the mother who began her work of development by nursing her child in all sorts of illusions concerning things in general. . . . Primitive man was not a metaphysician, but a man of common sense. . . . The realities without and around him were too pressing for the senses to allow him to play the fool with delusive idealities. . . . Modern ignorance of the mythical mode of representation has led to the ascribing of innumerable false beliefs not only to primitive men and present-day savages, but also to the most learned and highly civilized people of antiquity, the Egyptians" (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, The Light Of The World, p. 33).

Gerald Massey studied the Egyptian hieroglyphics for forty years and had a force of transcribers employed in his later years of investigation to assemble the material from the monuments, tombs and papyri. His interpretation of Egyptian writings has been all too largely ignored by scholars, yet he has the merit of having approached the task with a mind free from scholastic, theological or conventional biases, which have so utterly blinded the discernment and vitiated the conclusions of orthodox authorities. Too often results are obtained or accepted because they validate exiting Judeo-Christian or Islamic positions. Massey would have none of that. Massey and only a handful of others today are the only scholars in whose hands the recondite Egyptian material begins to take on rational significance. All the others leave it resembling unintelligible nonsense.

Massey asserts again that the Egyptians "knew, more or less, that their own legends were mythical, whereas the Christians were vouching for their Mythos being historical." Concerning symbolism and mythical representation he emphasizes that "the insanity lies in mistaking it for human history". Mythology, he avers, is the repository of man's most ancient science, and "(mythology) when truly interpreted once more, it is destined to be the death of those false theologies to which it has unwittingly given birth." Holding that all mythologizing originated in Egypt, he fights the conclusion of some scholars that hat "neither Hebrews nor Greeks borrowed any of their ideas from Egypt." The eminent scholar could not have known of Herodotus' statement that it was Melampus, the son of Amytheon, who introduced into Greece the name of Dionysus (Bacchus) and the ceremonial of his worship, having become acquainted with these and other practices in Egypt. Herodotus concludes: "For I can by no means allow that it is by mere coincidence that the Bacchic ceremonies in Greece are so nearly the same as the Egyptian" (Lecture on Luniolatry, p 2. by Gerald Massey). Elsewhere (II, 81) he repeats: ". . . the rites called Orphic or Bacchic are in reality Egyptian and Pythagorean." Massey claims that modern misinterpretation of ancient typology has made a terrible tyranny in the mental domain, much of our folklore and most of our popular beliefs being fossilized symbolism. "Misinterpreted mythology has so profoundly infected religion, poetry, art and criticism that it has created a cult of the unreal." He asserts that "a great deal of what has been imposed upon us as God's direct, true and sole revelation to man is a mass of inverted myths."

We must understand that these ancient Spiritual Myths were not the product of "primitive" mind, but on the contrary were devised by the highest genius of man's Spiritual evolution of that time. They were the secret of the sages which Paul mentions; namely, that the inner world of ideality is understood by those things which are made visible by the Creator to mankind:

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

These ancient sages traced as astonishing series of parallels, correspondences, analogies between things seen and things unseen, the better to illustrate the latter. They knew that physical nature typed spiritual reality, and used the outlines of the former to pictorialize the latter through symbols.

Answer for yourself: What is an example? The sacred scarab beetle of Ancient Egypt is a perfect example.

The particular species of beetle represented in the numerous ancient Egyptian amulets and works of art was commonly the large sacred scarab (Scarabaeus sacer). This beetle was famous for his habit of rolling balls of dung along the ground and depositing them in its burrows. The female would lay her eggs in the ball of dung. When they hatched, the larvae would use the ball for food. When the dung was consumed the young beetles would emerge from the hole. It seemed to the ancient Egyptians that the young scarab beetles emerged spontaneously from the burrow were they were born. To the Egyptians and other ancient civilizations, dung beetles symbolized immortality. They saw the beetles disappear in the earth, and later to come back out as if resurrected, or reborn. Therefore they were symbolized as representative of "Khepera", which means "he was came forth." This creative aspect of the scarab was associated with the creator god Atum. As you can imagine the scarab beetle came into being spontaneously from balls of dung and they associated this with their religious ideology of self-creation and resurrection. Small jars and coffins containing dried (mummified) scarabs were often placed in Egyptian tombs as part of their ancient funeral rites to ensure eternal resurrection.

Answer for yourself: What is another example? They took the hawk as the symbol of the risen Soul because they saw the bird soar into the airy heights. They found in the mole a fit symbol of the soul immersed in the dark underworld of flesh, because the analogy was evident and under their eye.

Nature supplied the suggestive identity, and they used it to teach subjective truths. Primitive man may well known the simple processes of nature from first-hand contact; but he will not know that they bespeak a spiritual counterpart of themselves in the interior life of man unless the sages so inform him.

Whole generations of civilized folks have gazed upon the phenomena of nature and failed to be instructed spiritually by the spectacle. One must ask himself if primitive fancy could construct allegories so profoundly elaborated that the united intelligence of the world for centuries has been unable to fathom their hidden significance. Millions of intelligent persons today have looked upon the sun and moon throughout the whole of their lives and have never yet discerned in their movements and phases an iota of the astonishing spiritual drama which the two heavenly bodies enact each month, a drama disclosed to our own astonished comprehension only by the books of ancient Egypt. Hundreds of celebrities in the field of Egyptology have mulled over the same material and have not yet lifted as much as a corner of the veil of Isis. Primitive simplicity could not have concocted what the age-long study of an intelligent world could not fathom. Not primitive minds, but exalted Spiritual and intellectual acumen, formulated the myths. Reflection of the realities of a higher world in the phenomena of a lower world could not be detected when only the one world, the lower, was known. You can not see that nature reflects spiritual truth unless you know the form of spiritual truth. And such knowledge would be an a priori requirement to making the comparison at all!

Massey states that the Christian Fathers, with the exception perhaps of Clement of Alexandria, "had scarcely enough knowledge of the ancient symbolism to put any perceptible boundary to their ignorance"(Gerald Massey, The Natural Genesis, p. 431). These early Church Fathers did not know that their Gospels were old Egyptian myths ignorantly literalized. Massey notes that Celsus "asked concerning the Christian legends, made false to fact by the ignorant literalization of the Gnosis,--'What nurse would not be ashamed to tell such fables to a child?'" One might paraphrase Celsus' question today by asking: "What age would not be ashamed to confess that it could not tell the difference between myths and actual history?"

Years of study convinced Massey that all the folk-tales were the wreckage of old Egyptian wisdom-structures. He avers: "We must go back to the Proto-Aryan beginnings which are Egyptian and Kamite. In Africa we find those things next to Nature where we can go no further back in search of origins. Egypt alone goes back far enough to touch Nature in these beginnings, and . . . Egypt alone has faithfully and intelligently kept the record" (G. Massey, Ancient Egypt:The Light Of The World, p. 30).

Now we must pay attention. It served partisan ecclesiastical purposes in early times to weave some history into the texture of the allegory or to use certain bold historical events as the frame for the allegorical depiction. And this mixture has made the determination difficult in places. It is not an overstatement of truth to affirm that the systems of mythology have served little better purpose in the Christian era than to detail the entire train of meaning. They have proved to be insoluble puzzles and enigmas. Our inability to make sense of them has totally distorted our estimate of Greek, Egyptian, Hindu and Chinese mentality, causing us to belittle their product most egregiously.

It must be said in closing that the sagacity of the Egyptians refrained from doing the very thing of which Christianity has mistakenly done; namely, portraying deities as persons. Not the Egyptians but the Christians did this, in the person of Jesus. Personal gods were precisely the kind they did not have. What they had was representations of the gods, which is a whole kingdom's length away from the other conception. Their "gods" were in reality the actual energies of nature, of matter and of mind in the universe, graded in a wonderful hierarchy of emanation from the Absolute Source of all. These are intangible powers, and what can puny man do other than represent them by one or another type of image? The Egyptians had quite unaccountable knowledge of these more elevated forces, with some of which, as the ethers and the rays, modern science is now slowly becoming acquainted, and they poetically imaged them under deific names, as Thoth, Anup, Kheper, Khnum, Osiris, Horus, Ptah, Set, Isis, Nephthys and Ra. But gods in human flesh (except by personation) they expressly did not have. The time has come to cry out against such incompetent muddling and to bend ourselves with what capacity we have to unravel the golden threads of supernal wisdom running their magnificent design through the old books of Egypt.

The apex of fairness is reached in Budge's statement in the Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, Vol. I, p. 198:

"From first to last there is no evidence whatever that the Egyptians worshipped a figure or symbol, whether made of metal or wood, stone, porcelain or any other substance". Again, these were but symbolic representations of higher Spiritual realities. Christianity cannot say that with their "historical-literal" Jesus Christ.

THE DESCENT OF THE SOUL #1

Most would hopefully agree that the Bible exercises a totally unbelievable mental power over the common Western mind which is often underestimated. This of course comes through the subtle power of inherited tradition and childhood indoctrination. The force and power of this subtle acceptance of these inherited traditions surrounding the Bible along with its interpretation, which I might add is "accepted without question or personal study of this Bible, is not dreamed of by the person who has not become consciously emancipated from it and can view the Bible objectively from the fruits of his or her own personal study of this Bible. Don't get me wrong; I don't have a problem with that at all as long as we understand "correctly" what this Bible is actually saying. But there in lies the problem that few ever recognize.

Few people have been able to dissociate themselves sufficiently from their indoctrinated suppositions regarding the Bible in this regard to critically look at and examine the Bible as a receptacle of Divine Truth and dig deep enough to recover the correct "hermeneutic" or "interpretation" of these ancient Sacred Scriptures contained within it. Only a trained and emancipated mind can stand out from under the influence of one's own inherited customs of "thought" and traditional interpretation of these inherited Biblical texts which have been tragically exposed to a radical "reinterpretation" down through history to find the true "intended understanding" of this ancient Sacred Scripture as was intended by its ancient writers and even the oral Spiritual traditions that preceded this written script. This is the function of the staunch "truth-seeker" who is objective in his approach to the Bible. There is far too few of these gifted people today. This whole scenario takes time, believe me. I consider myself such a "truth-seeker" and after almost a good twenty years of exhaustive study can stand and see, without a doubt, what these ancients mystical passages truly meant before their radical reinterpretation by Rome in the 2nd through the 5th century. What a gift but what a price I paid for this understanding. For the most part, people accept as authoritative the mass conceptions and their denomination's current interpretations of the Bible which are advocated by their Priest or Pastor or "denomination" as they grow up since they possess little knowledge of the ancient understanding of these "divine stories" and "texts" that long predate this later "radical reinterpretation" of these "same texts" which confused their true meanings. Simply said, we simply take for granted today that what we from our Spiritual authorities, which they have heard, from others who "heard", and in so doing we basically "assume" what we are hearing and are told to "believe" must be the truth. After all, that is all we have and all our parents have. This is the limit of our experience and knowledge. Well, it is not and it does not have to be in today's "information age". Today with the great achievements of modern scholarship and the great finds of archeology over these last two hundred years in the world the Bible and these Sacred Scriptures can be restored to their original intended meanings. Let me tell you right now as Christians that we don't have this "original truth" or "original intended meaning" behind these religious stories, myths, and allegories that line the pages of our Bibles and our live are less for it. This need no longer continue.

The Bible has been accepted for millennia. In began first an an oral tradition which was later later recorded by many over great periods of time. It came to be recognized in time as a great unique work of Divine authority, and, has today a force of sanctified devotion back of it for generations. That being so it now wields a unrealized power over the common mind. The same can be said for its "literal interpretation" as well which is a legacy bequeathed down through history to us from the 2nd through the 5th century and only reinforced with the reformation. Even those who have outwardly rejected this "Bible and its interpretation" down through history are unwittingly influenced by it in ways they little dream of; for society has been cunningly impregnated with the nuclei of its thousand concepts, springing from the vast number of phrases, texts and incidents which have taken unshakable root in the mass consciousness of humanity and there being influenced by it. In the area of Christendom the book is still regarded as the supreme moral and spiritual guide of the race. And from time to time one reads or hears the oft-broadcast declaration from various "Spiritual authorities" that what the world needs most of all as a unction for its ills, is more consecrated study of the Bible.

I agree that more study of Spiritual things is decidedly a need of our time; really of any time. But we face a bizarre situation here, which does not seem to have been discerned by the advocates of those crying out for "more Bible study". Before we embark on "more study of the Bible" it would behoove us all to study "how the ancients wrote" these Sacred Scriptures and their "intended interpretation of them". If we approach these ancient Sacred Scriptures equipped with a mind-set and a pre-set methodology of interpretation other than that of those who both wrote them and taught them in antiquity and preserved them from a previous even older tradition, for example a supposed "literal-historical" interpretation of the texts when they intended they be understood as "allegorical" or "symbolic", then we are guaranteed of not getting the intended meaning that the Creator desired for us from the original revelation which were anciently recorded in these earlier texts.

Answer for yourself: What is the fruit of such a misunderstanding of these ancient Spiritual texts?

The sad result is that we end up receiving an erroneous interpretation of them of which we are not aware and this affects not only our "religious beliefs" but our "behavior" and "conduct" as well. Our own Bible often defines many of these "behaviors" and "conducts" as SIN. Few today know what this Bible "really is saying" and many have said that perhaps no one now living knows thoroughly what is hidden in its pages. What our modern age needs with regard to the Bible is not more study but more comprehension and understanding of the true meaning of its passages. In summary, what is needed by all Bible readers is a knowledge of the background out of which it grew, and the "keys" of its original interpretation in order that it can be comprehended correctly by the average reader.

THE WRITERS OF THE SACRED BOOKS NEVER WROTE "LITERALLY"...THEY WERE ALLEGORISTS

It is the business of enlightened mystical insight into the nature of God and the Soul (called Theosophy) to recover these lost ancient truths concerning the nature of the Soul and in so doing to lift this weight of this vulgar literal dogmatism from off the modern imagination and conscience of mankind at whatever cost. The human Soul is itself bound by this false interpretation of these ancient Sacred Scriptures, many of which are only repeated in our Bible, and will remain unconscious of its intended incarnation purpose and Spiritual goal so long as these crude notions and misinterpretation of these ancient Spiritual Texts dominate the conscious and subconscious thought of modern man. The light of the true Spiritual Gnosis of olden times must be recovered and restored to the minds of modern Spiritual thinking. Only in this way can the Bible be saved from ridicule in the face of so much evidence today that exposes the absurdness and foolishness of its literal interpretation. It is my firm belief which is based upon years of the most diligent research, that it is impossible to understand the Spiritual allegories of the Bible without a knowledge of ancient methods of sacred writing, and of the ancient philosophies. We will devote the rest of this article to making plain for the reader the ancient methods of Sacred writing employed in the writing of the Sacred Scriptures of old as well as our Bible.

Failure of modern effort to read the deep message of the Bible is due to the fact that modern Christian scholars stubbornly refuse to see that ancient Scriptural writing was esoteric or hidden as to its meaning, and allegorical and symbolical as to its method. The ancients did not use what we have come to expect in our day and age such as the newspaper or television directness of our "information age". On the contrary they put up their secret wisdom, bestowed to them by the great Sages of old, in the form of allegories and myths, which were to be taken as fiction in their outward expression, but as the projector of profound Spiritual truth and knowledge in the inward sense. By a combination of symbols, symbolisms from nature and a host of allegories, often woven into a background of the real history of each nation possessing this ancient Spiritual Knowledge, they sought to portray the deepest types of Spiritual experiences of the Soul and its incarnational experience. The Bible has been crudely taken for literal truth about living personages on the stage of mortal history when nothing often could be further from the truth. Only through dedicated study can one separate the "allegory" from "history". This Bible has been rendered literally and historically in many places where it never should have been. Again, only through study, I have found that one came come to the place whereby he can competently separate the "literal" from the "allegory" and "metaphor". This failure to discern when reading the Bible what is "allegory" and what is "history", what is "literal" from what is "metaphoric", is the most egregious blunder and the most ambitious error in all of human history; this mistaking of Spiritual allegorism for literal human narrative. Today we live in an age of abundant knowledge much of which is religious and that being so we are in position to make the unqualified declaration for the first time in the modern age that there is not one iota of history, in the ordinary meaning of that term as we understand it today, in the Bible from beginning to end. Yet at the same time understand that some portions of Jewish history are interwoven and utilized in this Bible as the base and frame that supports the Jewish adaptation of an earlier Egyptian Spiritual insight and these same Egyptian Spiritual allegories and religious myths. In other words this ancient Spiritual Wisdom, as far as we are concerned in Judeo-Christianity and our Bible, is filtered down through the emerging Jewish nation and woven into its Spiritual and historical development. It is our job to separate this "Spiritual allegory" from the history of a developing nation. The same could be said for Egypt or Mesopotamia and even for Roman Christianity.

The earliest and greatest of the framers of Christian theology, Philo, Clement and Origen, expressly declared it was impossible and unrighteousness by virtue of lacking respect for God to assert that the logos of God could take the flesh of a human personality. New research makes it positively clear that the Old Testament narratives are in their entirety rewritings of old Egyptian material, distorted and obscured as it passed through later Hebrew and Roman hands. And Egyptian Scripture was never historical and was never interpreted as if "literal" or "historical"; they were "allegorical" to their very core.! Egyptian Spiritual concepts were dramatized through Spiritual symbology and over time the most eerie phenomenon of history transpired when later ignorance took this Egyptian Spiritual allegory and symbolism and converted them into absurd literal narratives. This is our problem today; we read of these same Egyptian Spiritual allegories but are mistakenly told that for us they are "literal" and "historical" events when in fact the evidence mounts today that they are not! We miss their intended meanings because we approach them with the wrong hermeneutic and method of "interpretation". And the thinking of the whole world of the civilized West has thus been based on history that never occurred, and the Christian Church has been founded on a set of miracles that were never "literally" performed by one solitary person. The only miracle envisaged in ancient theology was the transformation of human nature by the indwelling "god", and this Spiritual miracle was expressed through poetry, folk-tales, myths, legends, metaphors, and dramatized and allegorized in hundred of forms of outward representation, all of which was absurdly taken for the personal history of one supposed person later by later emerging Roman Christianity. We find it beginning with Ignatius and it goes on from there. Oral tradition, devoid of the proper "keys" for its interpretation, is taken for "literal-historical" narrative.

This conversion of Spiritual allegory into supposed biographical history has made Christianity the instrument of the grossest downgrading of this exalted ancient truth concerning the Descent of the Soul and its intended Spiritual evolution in animal bodies to which it has ever been subject. Once you do the studies and verify what I am saying is true then you can easily come to see, as I have, that all Christian doctrines present the ancient wisdom in a more literal and hence cruder form of meaning than had ever been done before in the religions of other nations. We stumble blindly today with a Bible to which we have lost the "keys" to its own interpretation. In the nailing of a personal Jesus on a wooden cross Christianity reduced the glorious drama of the Spiritual life of the Soul to its grossest and most repulsive form and continues to do so in an unbroken succession of illiteracy.

The writers of the ancient Spiritual Books and "Bibles" were not "literalists" and did not write literally. They never taught me that in Seminary; I would find that out on my own. Seminary never taught me that my "Jesus Story" has been told verbatim as far back as 10,000 B.C.E.; I would find that out on my own. They never taught me that my Bible is a "retelling" of this same Divine allegory of the Descent of the Soul pictured through personification and anthropomorphic language expressed through a depiction of a "righteous Jew" who is the example of others of humankind who had likewise "come to life" and was no more than a teaching tool and "example" for one's Soulish evolution. They never told me in Seminary that these nations' ancient religious myths and allegories of the Sungods contain the same things that my Jesus both "did" and "said" which made up his supposed "literal-historical" life. After years of study in Comparative Religions and Comparative Mythology it was very clear; my "Jesus Story" was a retelling of this ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom to which a most egregious supposed and assumed "literal-historical" interpretation has been given. They never told me in Seminary that my "Jesus Story" is but another depiction of the Descent and Incarnation of the Soul into mankind and its intended Spiritual Evolution in this plane of matter we call fleshly bodies. I would have to find this out on my own through years of study and the reading of hundreds of books looking to solve the problems inherent in my Christianized "Jesus Story" which I inherited as a child.

I would come to find that the writers of the ancient Spiritual Books and "Bibles" were in the line of generations of scholars, savants, wise men, and seers who had developed the art of Spiritual representation to a point of the utmost ingenuity and complexity, completely enveloping the intended real meaning under veils of allegory, figuration and symbolism, which has utterly misled modern scholars who could not pierce the outer veil or possess the "keys" necessary to read the truth hidden underneath our "godman stories". Hence the worlds Spiritual works can not be read without the "keys to the myths" and reference to the symbols used within them. I came to find out that my Bible is no different. The ancients themselves testify plentifully that the Sacred Scriptures of nations are allegories. Now get this. Origen, and early Church Father, regarded the whole Bible as a set of allegories. Here is the basics of what Origin had to say:

- If it ever appears to be in error then we have obviously missed its deeper meaning (Joseph W. Trigg, Origen. (London: SCM Press, 1983), 120; Bethune-Baker, 54).
- Origen wrote that the "literalists" of his day that "they attack allegorical interpretation and want to teach that divine Scripture has nothing deeper than the text allows" (Origen, Matthew, Sermon 15).
- "Literalists," he complained, "believe such things about [God] as would not be believed of the most savage and unjust of men" (Origen, Principles 4.1.8 [ANF, Vol. 4, 357]).
- These 'Literalists' misunderstood the meaning of poetry, metaphors, parables and figures of speech and had no concept of the need to understand what the original author of the text was seeking to express to his audience (Leslie W. Barnard, "To Allegorize or not to Allegorize?" Studia Theologica 36 (1982): 1-2).
- For Origen the universal application - what the text teaches about Christ and how the reader can become like Him - was the original meaning of the text (Karen Jo Torjesen, Hermeneutical Procedure and Theological Method in Origen's Exegesis. (Berlin, New York: Walter De Gruyter, 1986), p. 125-126).
- There are several specific reasons that we can deduce from Origen's writings that led him to the conclusion that the straightforward historical meaning of many passages of Scripture were simply not true (Maurice Wiles, "Origen As A Biblical Scholar," Cambridge History of the Bible, Vol. 1. (Cambridge: CUP, 1970), p. 470).

But the most astonishing declaration to this effect is St. Paul's own statement in Galatians that the whole story of Abraham and Sarah and Hagar is "an allegory."

Gal 4:22-24 22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. 23 But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. 24 Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: So was Abraham and Sarah real people? Or were they allegories to teach a deeper Spiritual lesson? Did Abraham exist? Did he have 2 sons? Is Hagar a real person? Is Sarah? Is this all nothing more than personification?

Unlike our day, in which we are schooled with a "literalistic Roman" mindset this was not the way of the ancients who composed these ancient Sacred Writings. The crafters of the ancient Scriptures were poets, allegorists, dramatists and mythicists. They never wrote of this Divine Celestial-Terrestrial drama literally. Therefore these ancient Sacred Books of Scriptures and "Bibles" can not be read without the "keys" to the myths and reference to the symbols used within them.

It is time for a little excursion to further prove the point of this article. The public has been confused for centuries concerning the Bible and its various stories. Today the Genesis story, for example, seems implausible from a scientific perspective. Yet, I suggest (along with others) that the stories in the Old Testament should not be taken literally, but are best understood as allegory. The ancients (for example, the Babylonians, Assyrians, Egyptians, the Americas and others) knew the allegories very well and embedded their esoteric knowledge into narratives for safekeeping. The written language had yet to be systematized, thus a narrative was an excellent way to communicate to the culture at large the beliefs of the shamans or the priests. Lets look at one of them.

The beginning verses of Genesis are familiar to most people in the United States and the West. As history, the story seems implausible; as allegory, on the other hand, the story becomes a potentially powerful tool for "Spiritual awareness" as it was intended by its writers. We are accustomed to read less than 60 Scriptures in Genesis detailing this Descent of the Soul but when we get to ancient Egypt we find volumes and volumes describing this glorious event to which we get just a "hint" in the Hebrew Scriptures. I quickly recognized that if I wanted the "full edition" I would have to master the Egyptian Religion as I had my birth faith, Judeo-Christianity. Since we are not familiar with the prior Egyptian accounts we will limit our study here to the Genesis account to which most will be familiar. The Egyptian Creation narratives are on this website at other places.

In the beginning, when God created the heavens and the earth, 2 2 the earth was a formless wasteland, and darkness covered the abyss, while a mighty wind swept over the waters

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the ancient cultures, including Egyptian, Babylonian and Assyrian, and the Pre-Columbus American cultures, all had similar genesis allegories long before the Hebrews had adapted their own for their own emerging nation? They all read a little different but at their core they are saying the same things.

The beginning words of Genesis tell of the Unity of God being split into two parts, heavens (or Spirit/Mind) and earth (or Matter). The ancients considered Spirit/Mind to be the masculine aspect of the split deity, the Earth the feminine. The beginning Principle of the Cosmos, the "All", "The One", had to first split Itself into two parts, Unity into Duality, both male and female (figuratively), and that is what is really beings said by;

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth".

A separation just occurred; a division. Once this initial split occurred, the male aspect (Mind) could influence the female aspect, represented in the above verse by the void and water (Matter). So, allegorically speaking, the above verse could read: And the earth ("Matter", or "Mother") was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep (the feminine "mater" or "water"...think womb).

The strange thing about the Bible's creation story is that at first glance, there appears to be no feminine aspect. Most genesis stories don't mask this fact so well as the Bible's account. But in fact She is there and in plain view. She is represented by the words "the void" and "the deep". The idea that God is both male and female is wonderfully represented in the East by the Yin and Yang, which is the fundamental symbolism of Taoism. The female is often symbolized in other cultures as the Sea, the Moon, or even Mary. The male, on the other hand, was portrayed as the Sun, the Wind or the Seed. His energy and warmth was active; not passive and receptive like the female. We find the same "idea" and "archetype" expressed in the creation of the sexes. This is but a picture of God; the Unity, the "many in the One". Because God did not create from nothing, but had to first split into Duality, called "male" and "female", he basically counterbalanced Divine Energies. A Harmony between these "two Living Energies" exists. Thus we have both the male and female represented in the Genesis allegory. In other words within this Unity of One consists a Duality! Today we teach of the Christ (male) without his counterpart the Sophia (female) but it was not always like this.

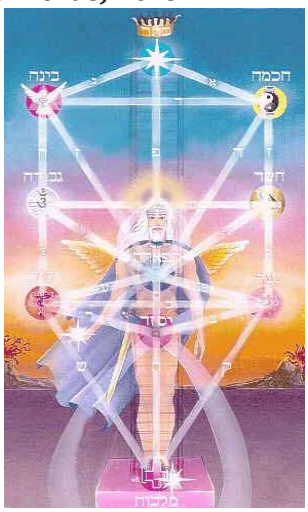
There was a problem with this arrangement that later philosophers grappled with.



Answer for yourself: And what was this? How could the Father, who was supposedly Unchangeable and Eternal and therefore beyond time and space, make anything happen and yet remain Unchangeable and Eternal?

The ancients decided that the male aspect had to send his Seed or Breath or Spirit or "Energy" to affect the female aspect. This, in theological terms, will be the incarnation, the impregnation of the Cosmos.

Therefore, in the beginning there was first a split, and then an attraction (a love affair) between the male and the female Principles (balanced opposite Living Energies), and the result was our Universe. Now this is important. In later renderings of this metaphysical event expressed as an allegory, the Father sends his Son (seed) into the Material world, or Mary, the Virgin Mother. Now you get the picture!

Answer for yourself: Sound familiar? What is going on here?

This is the Descent of God, the Descent of the Deific Mind of God into matter, or as it called today mistakenly as found in our Bibles the "fall". In reality it is called the Law of Incubation. We will deal with the Law of Incubation in more detail later. But for right now this Law of Incubation is in reality the Descent of the Soul into matter which was the same story told in ancient Egypt as the "Descent of the Soul" as Horus, "the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ". We are originally speaking of the "fall of mankind" or the "Soul/Mind/Krst/Karest/Christ" into matter; the fall of God into matter. This is the incarnation of Cosmic Mind into all matter. Thus we have the incarnation of God or this "Mind of God" tragically misrepresented today as some supposed "literal fall of man into sin". Without the "keys" to interpret this ancient Spiritual Wisdom as it was meant to be by the ancients we read the shadows of these same religious myths in our Bibles and give them tragic mischaracterizations and misunderstandings; often mentally enslaving mankind in the process. As depicted in the Kabbalah diagram on the right, the ancient sages from ancient Egypt on down through time, even Israel, understood this Divine Metaphysical concept of the Descent of God, this Deific Mind, into matter in stages of Emanations. This is the "ladder to Heaven" which these "Living Energies" both "ascend" and "descend". This is the "Jacob's Ladder". This "fall" has nothing to do with original sin; that is why we do not find such tragic mischaracterizations of ancient Spiritual Wisdom in ancient Egypt and Judaism as the dogma of "original sin" as we do in Christianity. We, in Christianity, simply misunderstood this ancient Spiritual Wisdom and gave it a completely different interpretation and never knew it.

Therefore, in the New Testament we read that Mary ("matter") is found to be with child of the Holy Spirit (that is holy breath...seed). This New Testament rendering of the allegory is nearly identical to the Genesis allegory, but with one big difference; unlike before when portraying concepts NOW supposed "literal" human beings are now the characters in the drama.

These ancient writers, from nation to nation, used personification and anthropomorphic language (attribution of human motivation, characteristics, or behavior to inanimate objects, animals, or natural phenomena) to tell the same story. In fact, the exact story is represented in Egyptian mythology when Isis conceives her son, Horus. The allegories show up in almost every culture of every time period and we never know this from just going to Church. These are but "pictures" never intended to be mistaken by readers or hearers that the subject of such instruction were "literal-historical" persons.

God creates man:

Gen 2:7 7 And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. (KJV)

In this section of the allegory we see God (in his male form) scooping up some soil from the Earth (God in her female form) and forming a clay figurine; then he blows His breath or Spirit (Living Conscious Energy) into its nostrils (sends His seed, or likeness into the world), and the clay figurine becomes a Living Soul.

Answer for yourself: What is going on here?

The Divine realm has intersected the realm of matter. Get ready for a very big revelation. This "intersection of Divine Mind with Matter" was described by the ancients by a "cross" which depicted these intersecting planes of "Living Conscious Energy" and "Spirit" (male) and "Matter" (female). This intersecting of these two Living Energies, Spirit/Living Conscious Energy and Matter (call it impregnation or incarnation), was depicted by the ancients in the form of a "cross" or a "crossing". We are speaking of the fertilizing of the Divine Mind (male) with Mary/Matter (the incarnation). In all honesty the "cross" is a symbol of the "incarnation" of God and matter; the Descent of the Soul, the Deific Mind, into physical existence.

Answer for yourself: What is happening here?

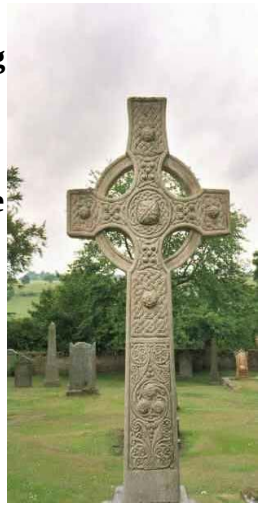
This activity creates a being who is half material (matter, mother) and half Spirit (father). This is the Son, who is actually neither male nor female, but is both (Christ/Sophia); the result of both Cosmic Mind and material (matter). This is why this "Emanation" from this Living Energy of Cosmic Mind was called by a masculine name, "the Christ", as well as a feminine name, "the Sophia". Patriarchal Christianity, a male driven Christianity, will suppress this Divine Feminine Sophia yet we read about it in Proverbs and other places in our Bibles.

Prov 1:20-23 20 Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets: 21 She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying, 22 How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge? 23 Turn you at my reproof: behold, I will pour out my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you. (KJV)

This Sophia has something to say that complements the revelation of God to mankind and we never hear it in Patriarchal Christianity. "The Christ" without "the Sophia" is an incomplete picture and message from God. Rome did not see it that way.

Now for another big revelation. This Unity from this Duality which we mentioned above, between the male aspect and the female aspect of God, is called Adam in the Bible.

Answer for yourself: So who is this Adam?



Adam is created first as a sexual duality, of which seems to have existed from the beginning of the process. This indicates that the first human being was bi-sexual, i.e., a hermaphrodite, possessing two sexes within himself. We should know this since men have "breasts" but serve no purpose. These combined balanced "Living Energies" (male/female) in Adam will be separated later in the creation account with the "rib" story, just as Heaven and Earth was separated before. God is spreading and growing and beginning to experiencing His creation in all facets.

The Hebrew for Adam in Strong's Concordance: #119

- 119 'adam (aw-dam'); to show blood (in the face), i.e. flush or turn rosy: KJV-- be (dyed, made) red (ruddy).

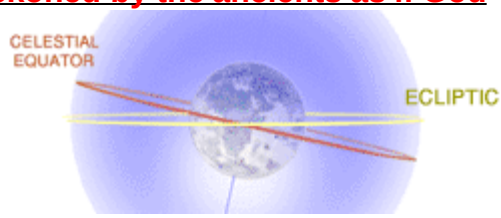
Adam means Red-Earth and the "red" comes from the idea that the Divine Force could only effect the material world by "bleeding" and mixing some of its "life" with the material ("matter). Man had by this time in his development come to understand that this "red" liquid within him, when lost in sufficient quantities, produced the absence of "life". Thus, it was a short hop to making the parallel between "life" and "blood" and man quickly came to realize that in his own creation that God was given humanity life through Him by giving His own "life-blood" (again an allegory but you get the point). Thus it was understood that God was pouring out His Life for mankind that he might live. This same story was told as if God gave His "blood" for mankind, his Divine Energy, than man might live. This Living Energy was everywhere in Nature and even symbolized by the Sun which the ancients came to understand is but a "Symbol" for the Invisible Living Energy of the Cosmos.



Now notice if you will the solar disk behind this "cross" on the right. Notice that the intersection of the two planes of this "cross" has behind it the solar disk or "circle" representing and symbolic of the Sun or this Living Energy of the Cosmos which pours out His life through the intersecting of these two planes of existence; matter and Divine Mind/Living Energy. The Sun, a symbol for this Living Cosmic Energy, this Deific Living Intelligent Energy we call God, had come to live in matter as His Cosmic Mind/Krst/Karest/Christ. This circle we see behind crosses today, in whatever shape you find it, is a symbol of the Living Divine Intelligent Energy of the Cosmos whom we call God who has impregnated matter in the "fall" of the Deific Mind/Soul/Christ into matter. This is why the ancient Scriptures say:

Ps 139:14 14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well. (KJV)

Absent from such declarations, which could be expounded without number, is the idea that man is but a "worm", a "sinner saved by grace" as a consequence of "falling" into original sin by his birth. God has a completely different idea that existed long before the loss of the "keys" to interpret correctly these ancient religious myths which we so erroneously teach today.

This "celestial-terrestrial" event of incarnation (Deific Mind into matter and the Descent of the Soul/Krst/Karest/Christ) was likened to and dramatized by the Sun dying (giving of its Living Energy for mankind that he might have life and life abundantly) in its daily course in the Sky (sunrise, sunset), but even more this same idea was expressed at the Spring Equinox every year, where the Sun, a symbol of this Cosmic Living Energy, gives its life, its Living Energy, which was likened to "blood" which is easily symbolized for the ancients in a "red sky at sunset". This same Sun rises from the dead (depicted in a red Sky at sunset) at the Winter Solstice that man received this "Divine Life" and that Earth mankind might live again. Renewed from this allegorical death of God for mankind and God's rebirth-resurrection was the food chain, photosynthesis, and material life (animal and man) at this very important time of year at, the Spring Equinox, when the Earth was "alive again" and showed it everywhere you turned since Spring and Earth was in bloom. This was reckoned by the ancients as if God had died in His descending into matter (Descent of the Soul/Christ) in order that man could live and coincidentally at this time this symbolic Sun had moved celestially in the Heavens "across" the intersection of the Earth's celestial equator and the ecliptical orbit of the Earth around the Sun. This intersection of these celestial planes was again a "cross". God, according to the "Pattern", was believed to have died on this "cross" in the Heavens in giving "of His life" (Energy) to creation (the Descent of God/Soul into matter, the "fall"). We see this "cross" involved in the impregnation of matter metaphysically by God and we see this "cross" again involved in the awaking of Nature physically as the Sun "rose from the dead" at the Winter Solstice and rose to new life at the Spring Equinox. From this mankind deduced that this God who changes not was going to save them after their deaths as well. When you personify the Sun and get "Son" then the "Son of God" was risen at the Spring Equinox, which for those who don't know is Easter. As the Sun was on "the Cross" (intersection of celestial equator and ecliptic at the Spring Equinox) this personification would later come to mean that "the Son of God was on the Cross". Many nations taught this long before the time of the radical reinterpretation of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: Sound familiar?

Man was being "saved" by God, later in the form of the "Son of God", dying on this "Cross" in the Heavens for him (figuratively). This momentous time every year is the Spring Equinox. This was imaged by the ancients as if "God" was dying on the Cross for mankind! Mankind was "saved" by such an event as this symbolic Sun moved from the Southern Hemisphere into the Northern Hemisphere and with it came the salvation of God. This celestial event later became personified in all the later solargod stories and crucifixions of the Sungods; even in our Jesus story. As you can now see there sure is a lot of "theology" here when it never was a "literal-historical" reality to begin with. More "keys" lost here as you can see.

We read this Spiritual Mystery in our New Testament as well all the while mistaking it as a supposed "literal-historical" event which it was never intended to convey:

Phil 2:5-8 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Do you now know of which "cross" we speak? Are you aware it was the 6th century before Rome ever imaged a "man on a cross"? It would take 6 centuries before Rome will put a man on a literal cross. I cannot help but wonder if before then they knew the truth.

As your studies advance, either on your own or with our articles, we will come to see that the ancients considered this "Descent of the Soul" (letting this mind of Christ being in us) like a "death" because the Spirit-Energy of God was confined to matter which had the capability to influence this Divine Mind not for good. Thus the goal of incarnation is the mastery of the animal nature by the Soul. The battle of Set and Horus is the dramatization of this struggle between the Deific Mind in mankind and the animal nature of mankind.

In Genesis there is the slightest reference to this shedding of blood in the name Adam (Red-Earth). The point is clear: something of the divine male aspect had to be mixed with the receptive, female aspect. It took two to make humankind, the divine male and the divine female. And the result is the Son (Mind in matter), the physical manifestation of mother and father (that means you and me). We are to cultivate this "mind of Christ" in us throughout our lives thereby mastering the animal nature within us all.

Phil 2:5-8 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:

Great idea. That is our job. Now we find that God creates woman:

Gen 2:21 21 And the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; (KJV)

The word "rib" can just as easily be translated "side" because the Hebrew word can mean either rib or side. The ancient cultures believed in a lot of cutting up; so the first human was neither male nor female, but was a being containing both male and female attributes, both material (matter/mother) and breath (father). This unified being was then sliced in two, from head to toe, for it says that Adam could not find an appropriate mate among the animals that were in the Garden and was very pleased to discover the woman after his slumber:

Gen 2:23 23 And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man. (KJV)

Consequently, Genesis announces:

Gen 2:24 24 Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh. (KJV)

This cleaving is our natural desire to become united again with "the other side" so to speak. This desire for reuniting was called "remembrance". We will address this elsewhere as the Law of Reminiscence soon but here is just a short introduction. The divine self was split into male and female at the beginning. Each side is therefore eternally searching for its "better half" through this passion play we call human life. This is all implicit in the allegory. In addition, this attraction goes far beyond humanity: it can be seen in everything from the attraction of positive and negative magnetic poles, in electricity, in bees being attracted to the flowers, and the attraction of the galaxies to one another. Just in case you don't know it the Andromeda galaxy and our galaxy are on a collision course and that will spell the end of mankind one day; but that is a long way off. There is a cosmic love-affair, a desire for reunification, taking place all around us if we but look and have "eyes to see" and "ears to hear".

Well, I hope you get the point. What we mistakenly read as if supposed "literal-historical" events are in reality expressions through personifications and anthropomorphic symbolisms of metaphysical realities. These descriptions we find in the Genesis Creation Accounts are allegorical and did not necessarily happen in the historical sense. The same can be said, and it should be, when dealing with the "Horus Story" or the "Jesus Story" in the New Testament. Nevertheless, this shortened Genesis Account does talk of humanity's unique place in creation and our desire for unification with our Source, namely the Father (we have the mother constantly in the material world, yet the Father is the illusive one, the one we have an inkling for).

This is but one example where a "literal interpretation" of the ancient Divine Wisdom has clouded almost beyond recognition the intended meanings of the ancient Spiritual Texts we read in our Bible. We will continue in this vein of thought in the second article in this series.

Continuing from the pervious article, let us look at some more stories in the Bible that we mistakenly approach as if "literal-historical" and see what actually lies behind them.

A literal reading of the Bible might give the reader, as we addressed in the previous article, the idea that God died for us and in this "death" was subsequently "broken" for us. This "breaking of God" into smaller "parts" and His dissemination into matter or "mankind" is called the Law of Dismemberment. We will deal with this Law of Dismemberment later in more detail in a separate articles. But more to the point we saw in the previous articles that the ancients believed that there was a male and female aspect of the divinity. As I described in the above article, the female was know as the Void, Mother, Matter or Mary and was seen as the Earth or Cosmos. It was believed that the male part of the divinity could not interact directly with the female because the male was thought to be Eternal and Unchangeable. Thus, many ancient myths, describe the god as "sending his seed". Other myths talk about the male aspect of the divinity being fragmented and cut up, in effect, planted like a seed into the Material, feminine world. This is the expression of the Law of Dismemberment just mentioned above. This is why we see that the Sungods were either "cut up" or torn in pieces and distributed among mankind. This is why in our "Jesus Story" the multitudes were fed the bread of Christ. Let us not forget that in the New Testament Jesus says:

1 Cor 11:24 24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. (KJV)

For reasons that will not be fully explained here the ancients believed that the male divine force was broken into twelve major fragments (or legions). Yet there was an inherent problem with this breaking up of the male potential into 12 major fragments (or legions). These fragments were taught to have became forgetful in their material manifestation. This is called the Law of Reminiscence. We will deal with this Law of Reminiscence later as well in the next articles. The male divine force, this Living Intelligent Energy did not, however, become broken and scattered into the material world for no purpose, but for the purpose of manifesting something of Itself in the material realm, and ultimately, some believe, to experience the human condition (God/Christ in man, the hope of glory).

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Notice if you will that this "Christ in you" is not a well known teaching even in Paul's day:

Col 1:25-26 25 Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God; 26 Even the mystery which hath been* hid from ages *and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: (KJV)

Therefore, humans became forgetful of their divine inheritance and their "true identity". This divine inheritance was the Divine Fire of God, this Divine Spark that made us human, the blood or the breath (Mind) sent from the Father and mixed with the Mother (matter/fleshy bodies).

Answer for yourself: What is this "matter"? What is this Void, Mother, Matter or Mary that is the "feminine"? In the Bible is it symbolized by Egypt and Egypt is a representation for this "physical body"? Yes it is.

The ancients called our very own human body, which contained a fragment or spark of the divine, EGYPT. Egypt was the metaphor for human life as an incarnate being in an material body. Our bodies contained something Divine, planted in effect, in a material vessel.

2 Cor 4:7 7 But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. (KJV)

Therefore, allegorically speaking, Egypt, as a picture of the Soul trapped in a body of lusts and animalistic natures and desires, became the land of bitterness and slavery for our Soul (Egypt was equated with the mortal body), the land of forgetfulness. Speaking of the Soul and not supposed whipped slaves that supposedly :

[The Egyptians] made their lives bitter with hard labor in brick and mortar and with all kinds of work in the fields; in all their hard labor the Egyptians used them ruthlessly. Exodus 1:14

Who Built the Pyramids? Not slaves. Archeologist Mark Lehner, digging deeper, discovers a city of privileged workers. by Jonathan Shaw The pyramids and the Great Sphinx rise inexplicably from the desert at Giza, relics of a vanished culture. They dwarf the approaching sprawl of modern Cairo, a city of 16 million. The largest pyramid, built for the Pharaoh Khufu around 2530 B.C. and intended to last an eternity, was until early in the twentieth century the biggest building on the planet. To raise it, laborers moved into position six and a half million tons of stone—some in blocks as large as nine tons—with nothing but wood and rope. During the last 4,500 years, the pyramids have drawn every kind of admiration and interest, ranging in ancient times from religious worship to grave robbery, and, in the modern era, from New-Age claims for healing "pyramid power" to pseudoscientific searches by "fantastic archaeologists" seeking hidden chambers or signs of alien visitations to Earth. As feats of engineering or testaments to the decades-long labor of tens of thousands, they have awed even the most sober observers. The question of who labored to build them, and why, has long been part of their fascination. Rooted firmly in the popular imagination is the idea that the pyramids were built by slaves serving a merciless pharaoh. This notion of a vast slave class in Egypt originated in Judeo-Christian tradition and has been popularized by Hollywood productions like Cecil B. De Mille's The Ten Commandments, in which a captive people labor in the scorching sun beneath the whips of pharaoh's overseers. But graffiti from inside the Giza monuments themselves have long suggested something very different. Until recently, however, the fabulous art and gold treasures of pharaohs like Tutankhamen have overshadowed the efforts of scientific archaeologists to understand how human forces—perhaps all levels of Egyptian society—were mobilized to enable the construction of the pyramids. Now, drawing on diverse strands of evidence, from geological history to analysis of living arrangements, bread-making technology, and animal remains, Egyptologist Mark Lehner, an associate of Harvard's Semitic Museum, is beginning to fashion an answer. He has found the city of the pyramid builders. They were not slaves as we might think and this of course brings the interpretation of the Bible texts into great question.

Lehner's research into the Giza plateau has proved that not slaves or common laborers, but skilled workers, were the artisans of these gigantic pyramids. Archeological finds have found the existences of cities that once stood in the shadows of the pyramids along with discovery that pyramid workers were fed like royalty and not slaves. Other evidences are showing us today that the builders of these pyramids were not slaves at all, at least in the modern sense of the word. Harvard's George Reisner found workers' graffiti early in the twentieth century that revealed that the pyramid builders were organized into labor units with names like "Friends of Khufu" and other evidences are showing us that pyramids were also built by a rotating labor force in a modular, team-based kind of organization. Lehner currently thinks Egyptian society was organized somewhat like a feudal system, in which almost everyone owed service to a lord. The Egyptians called this "bak." Everybody owed bak of some kind to people above them in the social hierarchy. "But it doesn't really work as a word for slavery," he says. "Even the highest officials owed bak."

Lehner's work along with that of others archeologist today teaches us that to work on the Pyramids was a divine calling and a Spiritual commitment of one's lifetime. The exactness in Sacred Geometry and measurement that aligns to the physical Cosmos along with its exactness as we find today which not only deifies our understanding today and such magnificent ingenuity in the Pyramids and Temples of Egypt is not the work of beaten ignorant slaves. Again, we misunderstand what we read. The pyramids on the Giza Plateau detail the life and return of the Soul to Heaven. Space does not allow for this here but when you get to the uranography studies this will be made plain to the reader.

Egypt was all about "Soul Science". The ancients speak of how our Souls, these Divine Sparks were embedded into the female (matter/flesh/incarnation) yet lost their memory of their true source. The result of the deity being "torn asunder" is what Buddhist call Forgetfulness, or Ignorance.

Answer for yourself: Who will awaken the forgetful, slumbering Divine Sparks of the divine male-force that has been hidden in the female? For the Israelites it was Moses. For other nations God has raised up "anointeds" and "avatars" sanctified for such a task all the way down through history. We just don't know of them being basically exposed only to Judeo-Christianity. For the Christian is is the personified "indwelling Christ" named Jesus.

Thus we see how the name Egypt became a "glyph" or "metaphor" for the divine sparks living in an animal body, that is, in the human breast. Humans needed to be reminded, so the allegory states, of their original home. That home was symbolized as the Promised Land or Jerusalem. In this land there is rest, a land flowing with milk and honey. This name Jerusalem is in the original in a dual form, and means "possession of peace," or "foundation of peace." The dual form probably refers to the two mountains on which it was built, viz., Zion and Moriah; or, as some suppose, to the two parts of the city, the "upper" and the "lower city."

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Egypt is divided into an "upper" and "lower" portion as well? Have you studied long enough to see that this "division" was symbolic in the uranography for the two natures in mankind; an "upper" Spiritual Nature and a "lower" animal nature? Here the same idea is developed in the name for Jerusalem which, by the way, we find existing in ancient Egypt long before the city was ever later colonized and given is present name. We see from the uranography that these later names in Israel had Egyptian origins for many of them because they came from "the stars".

These descriptions of Egypt and mistreatment of slaves are allegorical and did not necessarily happen in the historical sense. You will see this completely when you read our articles on the Uranograph and how so much of what later became names for historical cities and sites in Israel had their origin in the stars and in ancient Egypt long before there ever was an Israelite nation. Nevertheless, they do talk of humanity's unique place in creation and our desire for unification with our Source, namely the Father as "sparks of the Divine Essence" a long way from home desiring to return to the Father as we see in the parable of the Prodigal Son. The ancients understood that we have the mother constantly in the material world, yet the Father is the illusive one, the one we have an insatisfiable desire for.

So Moses is "sent" by the Father to gather the 12 lost fragments together. Moses is sent to remind the 12 tribes of Israel of their true identity. Moses does rescue these 12 fragments of the Father and brings them to the Mount of God, that Primordial Hill. There the Israelites receive the instructions of the male aspect of deity and receive specific instructions on how to get back to the Promised Land.

Answer for yourself: What is this promised land?

This promise land is the Souls' origin, Heaven. The Promised Land is not necessarily a literal place, but an allegorical one which we can touch anytime. Our Souls are literally on vacation in this carnal existence; sent here for a purpose and when completed we are, as Living Energies/Souls, to return to Heaven from which we have come. Thus, according to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, these "12" tribes of Israel (12 legions of descending Souls/Angels) represent the 12 initial pieces of the Divine that were torn asunder and entered the world as fragments. These 12 tribes have become forgetful and now were being reminded and delivered from Egypt (remember, Egypt is a metaphor for the human condition).

The Egyptians had an identical myth to that of the Israelites, more or less, and the later "Jesus Story". Egypt's prototype for later sungod stories of other nations and our "Jesus Story" was their great savior was called Horus. Horus had twelve disciples who he teaches, and Horus was sent from the Father, which the Egyptians called Osiris. The similarities between Jesus and Horus are as breathtaking they should be since it is the "same story". Earlier, Osiris had been chopped into 14 pieces (the Law of Dismemberment) and planted into the earth (Divine Sparks living in matter, humanity). Later, in the New Testament, Jesus plays an identical role in that allegory. In Jesus' case the people had become forgetful once again and needed to be reminded who they were.

Jesus, as the personified Christ, said this "Divine Body of God" is "broken for you" and represents activities in a Spiritual plane of existence and is not necessarily an historical event. Let us not forget that the god came to earth not in His entirety, not in His single deific unity, but torn into hosts of fragments, grouped in twelve principal divisions.

Answer for yourself: How could this solitary god, in all of His power and fullness, ever hope to enter every mortal life, to tabernacle in every breast, if He only came as one unit to "be formed in us", as Paul says, if He is a supposed "literal-historical" person who is limited by space and time (just one person)? Impossible.

This is the mistake that Christian doctrine makes by limiting "the Christ" to but one person. It is a matter of simple logic and beyond any doubt when you obtain the "keys" to interpreting Comparative Mythology and Comparative Religion and see the unbelievable parallels to our "Jesus Story". To be the divine guest in every human life this God had to suffer fragmentation into as many portions as there were to be mortal children for Him to father, in order that each might possess a share of His nature and in so doing be responsible for bringing this "gestating Christ/god" to full Spiritual maturity in one's Earthly existence and experience. The Biblical allegory describes our life as a journey. It is the journey of our Soul who is sojourning in a strange land. As stated above, this land was symbolized as Egypt. The Promised Land (remembrance and peace) was the goal of human existence. The allegory of the Bible says, in essence, that we are incarnate pieces of the divine, sown in flesh in hope of a promise, yet we live in the realm of the material world, i.e., Egypt. Now you are beginning to see it. That is why Egypt plays so prominent a role in Scripture and is both a mixture of "beauty" and "barbarianism", why by the way historical records don't concur. We are missing something and that is the "keys" to this Divine Allegory of the Descent of the Soul/Christ into Egypt, our mortal bodies. That is why in the Christian story the baby Soul, as Jesus, had to go down "into Egypt". Obtaining the "keys" this story begins to make perfect sense.

The New Testament is an allegory as well. Honestly, it tells the same story of our Soul as does the Old Testament. Jesus, as the Divine Christ within us, becomes a type of Moses. Both Moses and Jesus were "called from Egypt", out from this carnal existence and animal nature into a Spiritual existence. Both Moses and Jesus were "lawgivers" to their people; let us not forget God, in giving His Laws to His people, revealed to them "Whom He is, what He does, and what He does not do" and then calls His people to be "holy" and "be like Him". Jesus gathers 12 disciples (the descended ones) to remind them of who they already are. Moses gathers millions as well. Jesus goes up on the Mount to teach the 12 disciples; Moses taught the Law from the Mount as well. Thus Moses and "the Christ", and their "same Spiritual message" are our examples of conduct by which our Soul is trained in this earthly existence for its return home at the death of our body. We could spend a whole lot of time on the parallels between Moses and Jesus but time and space demand we move on but I hope you get the idea.

As "the Christ", this personified Christ called "Jesus" is sent to remind those slumbering in the world of their true nature. Our nature is already divine, yet asleep, according to the allegory.

Eph 5:14-17 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead (notice he is speaking to people already alive but considered "dead"), and Christ shall give thee light (this is the purpose of enlightenment). 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, 16 Redeeming the time, because the days are evil. 17 Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is. (KJV)

There is nothing for us to do to reclaim our divine nature, except to remember our Spiritual home and true Spiritual identity in this realm of matter (fleshly bodies) and respond accordingly. That is why the Gnostic said: "Know whom you are, know from where you have come, and know to where you go when you die". I would add this knowledge serves one purpose; it serves as the great motivator to make mankind act like who he really is! We have been given the Torahs of the world to lead our Soul on the right path while on this Earthly journey; a training manual if you wish. Egypt had the 42 negative confessions and Israel the Torah of Moses. This whole story of "incubation, dissemination, and remembrance", in a nutshell, is the basic allegory of the entire Bible and the other sacred books of the world's major religions.

According to the allegory, the Christ is the Word of God. Unfortunately the term "Word" has been mistranslated. The original Greek word used in the text is Logos. This mistranslation has been the cause of much confusion and erroneous speculation for the modern mind. In our English translation the term "Word" implies some sort of preaching, as in the phrase "give him the word". The Greek term is "Logos", and means Divine Pattern. Here we find this "Pattern" which I so often mention. It really is everywhere when your "eyes" are opened to see it. Our way as sojourning Souls lie right before our eyes; if we could only see it. This "Divine Pattern" refers to the "template" or "Deific Mind" laid upon the feminine Void. It gives the Void a "pattern" that we can recognize as the created Cosmos and God's intent and will for us. This "Divine Pattern" is the "seed" and lies behind all "sacred geometry" in religious around the world; it is symbolically "the Christ in us". The Logos is the seed sent into the receptive female, material world. So the Cosmos is made up of both mother ("matter") and father ("Pattern"). This is so important, so important to grasp that everything reproduces according to this "pattern" or comes into existence according to a "Pattern". Plato speaks about this in his Cave Allegory. The Giza Plateau was build according to this Heavenly Pattern seen in the Sky and Heavens above. The uranograph studies will make this very plain. So Above, So Below. The star of David speaks also of "So Above, So Below". The ancients knew this and it is we today who have forgotten this "key" to Divine Revelation.

Now with a proper understanding of the term "Word" we read in the Gospel of John:

In the beginning was the Logos [Divine Pattern...of thought] (formally rendered as "Word"), and the Logos [Divine Pattern...of thought] was with God, and the Logos [Divine Pattern...of thought] was God. He [Divine Pattern...of thought] was with God in the beginning. Through him (the Logos) [Divine Pattern...of thought] all things were made; without him (the Logos) [Divine Pattern...of thought] nothing was made that has been made. In him (the Logos) [Divine Pattern...of thought] was life, and that life was the light of men. The light shines in the darkness [Divine Pattern...of thought], but the darkness has not understood it [Divine Pattern...of thought]. John 1: 1-5 (parenthesis added).

That should give you cause to "think", and "think some more". That is why Bet Emet Ministries teaches so much on this "Pattern" as it is designed to "gestate and form the Christ" in us whereby we become Sons and Daughters of God in our Earthly existence. This "Logos" teaching is really the same teaching as found in the Genesis story, yet rendered for a Greek audience and from a Greek perspective many thousands of years after the Genesis rendering. The term Logos means "Pattern" or "Seed that was sent" into the world, into the feminine, receptive earth "matter". This is what we have been saying since the beginning of this article. God sent us a "Pattern" to follow in our Earthly existence. As your studies advance you will see how both ancient Egypt both recognized this "Divine Pattern" but devoted their lives to it, and built it into their "religion", their "theologies", their "architecture" and in their "hearts". We, as we study, will come to see how even Israel, so influenced by ancient Egypt, will do the same. This "Divine Pattern" of Celestial Order and Harmony was first discerned in the Heavens and Sky, then seen to paralleled in Nature and finally in mankind. This "Divine Pattern of Ordered Existence" was seen to operate by the immutable Laws of God not only in the Sky/Heavens "above" but in Nature "below". These Laws expressing Divine Order and Harmony, seen operative in Heaven and in the Earth, was the "template" for mankind; thus the nation's Laws of God which maintain this Divine Harmony. This is the core of Egyptian Religion and Judaism as well. They were "living representatives" and expressions of this "Divine Pattern" and man could incorporate them into his life and the life of the community. Heaven would come to Earth; this at least is the Divine Idea if everyone gets on board:

Matt 22:36-37 36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law? 37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. (KJV)

This "Pattern" is the archetype of the real that exists in Heaven from which we have come. Plato teaches this in his "cave allegory". Man is to reproduce this "Pattern" on Earth. This underscores the importance for the uranograph for ancient Egypt; the sky chart that brought this "Pattern" down to Earth which represented this sojourn of our Souls in our fleshly bodies. The seed was the "pattern" of the Father, because, as stated earlier, the Father was thought to be Unchangeable and beyond time (Eternal) and couldn't effect the world directly. The Logos gives rise to the flowers, gives rise to the clouds, gives rise to the trees, gives rise to the birds, and gives rise to you and me. In Eastern thought the Logos might be considered the Tao. Jesus, for Christians, therefore, becomes the "great awakener" sent from the realm of light. Moses is the same "great awakener" for the Jewish Nation. Mohammed is the same for the Muslims. God has always had symbolic representations of His Cosmic Mind sent to mankind below at our point of need and cultural indoctrination. These are but "avatars". The Sanskrit word Avatara means "the descent of God" or simply "incarnation." We must make a very important distinction. According to the definition of "avatar" the divine forms of God do not "become flesh" or "take on a material body." An ordinary Soul may take on a gross material body, but in the case of God, His 'Soul' and His 'body' refer to the same Spiritual essence; in other words it is a "special Soul" who has become ordinary flesh. Although the Avatars appear in different forms at different times, places and circumstances, they are the Selfsame Supreme Lord and their purpose is one: to reveal the Absolute Truth in this world and remind its inhabitants of their eternal lives of blissful service to God in their original homeland, the Spiritual world (the Law of Remembrance).

This divine purpose is eloquently expressed by Lord Krsna in the world-famous Bhagavad-gita (4.7-8):

Whenever there is a decline in religious practice and a predominant rise of irreligion--at that time I descend Myself. To deliver the pious and to annihilate the miscreants, as well as to establish the principles of religion, I Myself appear, millennium after millennium.

The ultimate mission of incarnations is to arouse love of God everywhere.

Like the Buddha (which means "he who woke up") Jesus came to awake those who have "fallen asleep". This is what Paul says as well. This is allegorical and is not necessarily based in history; but the truth is a Cosmic Universal Principle for the whole of mankind.

Even Jesus, the personified Christ/Soul, had to be delivered from the forgetfulness of Egypt (the human condition), too. For the allegory says:

When they had gone, an angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream. "Get up," he said, "take the child and his mother and escape to Egypt. Stay there until I tell you, for Herod is going to search for the child to kill him." So he got up, took the child and his mother during the night and left for Egypt, where he stayed until the death of Herod. And so was fulfilled what the Lord had said through the prophet: "Out of Egypt (carnality) I called my son (the Deific Mind of God, as the Christ-Soul)" Matthew 2 13-15

The mother, Mary, is the informed feminine Void who we first met in Genesis, chapter one. She hides her incarnate gift until the right time of remembrance when the seed can become manifest in the material world.

Paul of Tarsus is believed to be the true founder of Christianity, or at least its primary advocate. Paul is believed by modern scholarship today to have been a Gnostic Christian who may have never believed in a human Christ, but spoke allegorically, about the latent seed (Divine Pattern), lying slumbering in our breasts.

Paul wrote many letters to the early church and he often scolded them because they had forgotten his teachings about the "Christ consciousness" within. For Paul states:

My dear children, for whom I am again in the pains of childbirth until Christ is formed in you, how I wish I could be with you now and change my tone, because I am perplexed about you! Letter to the Church in Galatia, Chapter 4: 19-20

And as stated earlier, Paul proclaims concerning the allegory: …Christ in you, the hope of glory. Colossians 1:27

How easy it was for the early Christian movement to become lost in the political struggles of those times with Rome and forget about Paul's retelling of this timeless allegory. Again, Paul talks about the allegorical nature of Scripture when he writes:

Tell me, you who want to be under law, do you not listen to the law? For it is written that Abraham had two sons, one by the bondwoman and one by the free woman. But the son by the bondwoman was born according to the flesh, and the son by the free woman through the promise. This is allegorically speaking, for these women are two covenants: one proceeding from Mount Sinai bearing children who are to be slaves; she is Hagar. Now this Hagar is Mount Sinai in Arabia and corresponds to the present Jerusalem, for she is in slavery with her children. Galatians 4: 21-25

Paul was imploring the early Christian community who had first heard the allegory from Paul himself, but had somehow missed the point; kind of like most Christians today. Many Jews of that day did not want to abandon the Law of Moses because they believed that the Law was the way to freedom. But Paul argues that the Law was only a pedagogue, sort of training wheels, until a new understanding of the allegory could be achieved, namely the manifestation of the "Living Law" as "the Christ" in you (that is, the seed in you). This is Gnosticism at its very core; the liberating of the "godman" in you! Paul writes:

You foolish Galatians! Who has bewitched you? Before your very eyes Jesus Christ was clearly portrayed as crucified (broken into fragments, as I have stated above). I would like to learn just one thing from you: Did you receive the Spirit by observing the law, or by believing what you heard? Are you so foolish? After beginning with the Spirit, are you now trying to attain your goal by human effort? Have you suffered so much for nothing--if it really was for nothing? Does God give you his Spirit and work miracles among you because you observe the law, or because you believe what you heard (i.e., the allegory)? Galatians 3: 1-5 (parentheses added)

Paul is obviously very angry at the new church in Galatia. The church had apparently gone back to the "literalistic" Law of Moses and therefore, in Paul's view, had totally missed the allegory of the Divine Spark, or fragment, broken for you, that lives within every human's breast. Paul called this fragment or template of "Pattern" of the Father "The Christ" meaning "The Anointing". All were welcomed to enter this new faith; the "mystery" no longer hidden from mankind and secretly safeguarded among the Priests and sages. It is the dawning of the Age of Pisces, it is time for mankind to take their next Spiritual Step and both realize and manifest "the Christ" in them all. It was time to bring meaning of these ancient Spiritual Allegories to the "non-Jews" of Asia, Minor and the whole world that they might become sons and daughters of God. Slaves, woman and the Outcasts of society were equally welcome. The middle wall of partition was being broken down between the "outer mysteries" and the "inner mysteries". Consequently, Christianity spread like wildfire and many of the early converts to Christianity were Roman slaves..

Again, the allegory appears in the parable of the Sowing of the Seed:

"A farmer went out to sow his seed. As he was scattering the seed, some fell along the path, and the birds came and ate it up. Some fell on rocky places, where it did not have much soil. It sprang up quickly, because the soil was shallow. But when the sun came up, the plants were scorched, and they withered because they had no root. Other seed fell among thorns, which grew up and choked the plants. Still other seed fell on good soil, where it produced a crop--a hundred, sixty or thirty times what was sown. He who has ears, let him hear." Matthew 13 1-9

Again, that which is sown into the material world (Mother, Matter, or Mary) is the Word (Logos in Greek meaning Divine Pattern (archetype)....."Divine Thought" or template). Again, this fragment has fallen into the material world and has become "forgetful". These seeds are latent in everyone, and sometimes we need reminding in order to grow our seed. Nothing seems to choke our growth worse than worries, fear and ignorance. So we find "the Jewish Christ" teaching through Judaism that we are not to worry:

"Therefore I tell you, do not worry about your life, what you will eat or drink; or about your body, what you will wear. Is not life more important than food, and the body more important than clothes? Look at the birds of the air; they do not sow or reap or store away in barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not much more valuable than they? Who of you by worrying can add a single hour to his life?

"And why do you worry about clothes? See how the lilies of the field grow. They do not labor or spin. Even Solomon in all his splendor was not dressed like one of these. If that is how God clothes the grass of the field, which is here today and tomorrow is thrown into the fire, will he not much more clothe you, O you of little faith? So do not worry..." Matthew 6: 25-31

So again, we're admonished to not worry but to look around and see how the Natural world is cared for by God; we, too, are cared for. Perhaps there is nothing we need to do except to allow our seed to grow to maturity. Joseph Campbell was fond of saying "Just follow your bliss". I have said "follow the peace".

Answer for yourself: What should we have learned from this?

As allegory our Bible, both Old and New Testaments, tells the same Spiritual Story in allegories that relate to the God-seeker exactly the same things that the ancients have been telling the world form millenniums: There is a love affair between the male and female aspects of the Divine; the male, therefore sends His seed, or breath, and is fragmented. Later someone is sent to help those fragments to remember their original home with the Father. Egypt (or Babylon or Rome, in other places in the Bible) symbolizes our body or the worlds' often unjust political and economic systems. The Earth is feminine, or receptive. The Father is seen as active. This "receptive feminine" and "active masculine" must "Cross" and has and the Divine Spark of the Creator lies in the bosom of every person awaiting awakening. The body is prone to worry and forgetfulness, hence the Scriptures are written for our encouragement. The Gnostics said it best: "Know whom you are, know from where you have come, and know to where you go when you die". Wow!

The feminine, divine aspect of the divinity has nearly been eradicated from the Old Testament, for reasons, I believe, to be mostly political, but that is another story. This is a tragic mischaracterization of this Divine love affair and we are right in the middle of it as humanity.

My goal in writing this article is to show that Allegory can not only be a beautiful way to approach the Scriptures, but it is the correct way since we are reading retellings of the same divine ancient accounts and not know it! In allegory:

- YOU become the "fragment of the divine spark" fallen into forgetfulness;
- YOU become a main character in your own personal narrative and salvation,
- YOU become the one who must remember who you truly are.

All scriptures, from Buddhism to Judaism to Christianity, and many others, say AWAKE! and remember who you already are. There is nothing you need to do to become worthy of what has already been planted inside your heart. Our task is to recognize our Divine Nature and cultivate it while we experience Earth, the training ground for our Souls.

Now as we conclude this article let us finish explaining how the ancient both wrote and expected their Spiritual Writings to be understood in other ways besides "allegory".

THE WRITERS OF THE SACRED BOOKS WERE ESOTERICISTS

The ancients were also esotericists, writing only of the inner life and for initiated pupils. They wrote of inner things under an outer veil. They wrote of the Greater Mysteries, like what was discussed above, which were never given out to the multitude, but taught in secret to disciplined students. Spiritual truth was not published in modern fashion as we experience and mistakenly think is the way it was always done. Whatever was written, was veiled under glyph and symbol. Mostly it was taught by oral tradition. That is what makes the following passage so radical:

Col 1:26-27 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Mystery schools once existed throughout the ancient World - Egypt, Greece, India, China, South America. These Spiritual centres provided a place where students could receive a mystical education by progressing through a series of Spiritual trials and initiations. The goal was to provide seekers with the highest levels of Spiritual realization - to understand the deep truths of existence, the cosmos and human life. Initiates of the Mysteries were credited with wisdom, as well as great magical and occult powers. The main method of teaching the Mysteries was through myths - stories with deep mystical and psychological symbolism; for example, the Egyptian, Greek and Roman Myths. In reality, these stories possessed two different levels.

- On the mundane level, the myths could be seen as simple entertaining tales with light moral undertones. For most people, this is how they would be received. These were the Outer Mysteries. However, for those with eyes to see and ears to hear, there existed the Inner Mysteries.
- Students of the Outer Mysteries would be carefully observed. Some would show signs of recognition - a clear ability to see beyond the superficial level of the stories to the more profound meaning. These few would then be selected for further initiation into the Inner Mysteries. They would serve under the tutorship of the Master (Hierophants) of the Mystery School and be taken to ever deeper levels of Spiritual unfoldment.

The teachings were hard. The initiation ceremonies were dramatic and frightening - seemingly life and death situations where the student was exposed to his deepest fears and temptations. Perhaps the mythological stories would be enacted in the depths of a dark cave to the sound of loud gongs and frightening flashes of light. Frankly, nobody really knows. Initiates were sworn to strictest secrecy, even unto death, and these matters were never written down.

Grasp if you can this major change in direction for humanity. Now man can not only come to know his true identity but cultivate his Spiritual Nature by eating the bread from Heaven given to him by the indwelling Christ. This is a personal choice. Understand not all desire the things of God; they have "religion" and the tragic history of the persecution of the Gnostics at the hands of a "literalistic" Roman Christianity testify to the truth of what I said. The movement and its literature were essentially wiped out by the end of the 5th century C.E. by heresy hunters from mainline Christianity.

THE WRITERS OF THE SACRED BOOKS WERE URANOGRAPHERS

The the ancients and Spiritual Masters of old were were "uranographers." The "uranograph" was a chart of heaven. By this is meant a map outlined by the early sages charting the Spiritual constitution and physiology of man, the psychic centers, areas of Spiritual force, and all "after the pattern of things in the heavens." Man, the microcosm, is a replica of the heavenly man and the universe. From the history of man written thus in the constellation of the skies, the early religious formulators transferred the record to earth and distributed the various phenomena and localities over the national maps in accordance with the heavenly chart! All nations tried to frame their own history and geography after the pattern of things in the heavenly mount. Mainly the Egyptians and after them the Jews made this transfer almost completely. According to this chart each nation was given an upper and lower section, had a river flowing from the upper down to the lower, had a lake or sea, a central city representing the Holy City, and a score of parallel features found in every case. There was first a division into seven districts, later into twelve. Each nation thus strove to have its history interpreted as a fulfillment of the sacred allegory; and its national history, thus diverted into the form of the celestial myth, was made into the national epic. And finally came the claim on the part of several, notably the Jews, that since their history fulfilled the outlines of the sacred story, they were proven to be the "chosen people" of God. There is not a scrap of evidence anywhere to identify the Israelites as the historical Hebrews or Jews. The latter simply appropriated the distinction to themselves and fitted their history into the sacred scheme. As proof of this it is offered that a monument in Egypt contained hundreds of Palestinian place names, afterward localized in the Holy Land of Judea, before the "historical" Exodus from Egypt. Hence the modern discovery of a town in Palestine bearing the name of a place mentioned in the Bible does not offer a single whit of proof that the Bible is history. It only proves that the religious formulators of the national epic had given to a certain place a name already found on the uranograph or Spiritual chart, much as European explorers gave sacred names such as Salem, Providence, New Haven, Canaan, Newark, Corpus Christi and Santa Fe to new towns when they came to America. Jerusalem, Egypt, Sodom and others are therefore only Spiritual names transferred to the map from the celestial chart.

THE WRITERS OF THE SACRED BOOKS WERE CONCERNED WITH ONE THING ONLY: THE INCARNATION OF MAN AND THE DESCENT AND RESURRECTION OF THE SOUL

When one does the studies in the above 3 areas then he is convinced beyond any doubt that all religious writings deal with but one central fact, the incarnation of man, or the descent and resurrection of the Soul (Incubation, Dismemberment, and Remembrance). It is graphically outlined in the Prodigal Son allegory. The incarnation of God in mankind as the Descent of the Soul and its resurrection at the death of the body is the whole story of religion. The ancient Spiritual books and monument of antiquity deal with nothing beyond this story and its involvements. Knowledge that the Sacred Books of the world are concerned only about this Descent of the Soul and its return to Heaven is the key to unlocking all the secrets of philosophy and religion. All meanings proceed from this one fact and return to this one concern. In the light of this one fact all complicated meanings that come from misunderstanding of ancient Divine Allegory which is mistakenly thought to be "historical-literal" today can be reduced to clear understanding. It unravels the infinite complexities of the symbology that have confounded the learned scholars and theologians. That man is a god dwelling in an animal form is the central and cardinal fact of all religion.

It is because that we have forgotten these 4 important points concerning how the ancients wrote their Sacred Books that we have sadly misinterpreted the Bible we have inherited which are in reality a collection of ancient works that embody in veiled figures the fundamentals of the genuine old wisdom of the initiates and hierophants. Knowing this then it is not wrong to view the Bible as a storehouse of the great Mystery teachings of early times. In fact it is an assemblage of material comprising the substance of Hermeticism, Gnosticism, Kabalism, Chaldean astrology, Greek Orphism and Hindu Wisdom, which themselves were drawn mostly from ancient Egypt where this Divine Revelation of God and the Soul began. Plato summed up most of the elements of these systems in his Republic and Phaedo. This revelation of the Descent of the Deific Mind into matter was truly "of the gods," and perhaps the most brilliant presentation of Spiritual knowledge ever to be handed down to the human intellect. Fortunate is Christianity that its Bible is heavily charged with the elements of the great Divine Wisdom of past ages. If only we could see and recognize it beneath this veneer of a supposed "literal-historical" interpretation.

In the articles that follow we will delve deeper into this mystical truth hidden behind a supposed "literal-historical" interpretation of our Bibles and in so doing come to further understand the hidden teachings in the Bible concerning the Law of Incubation, the Law of Dismemberment, and the Doctrine of Reminiscence which is clouded today by a false hermeneutic.

We will pick up with the next study in the next article.

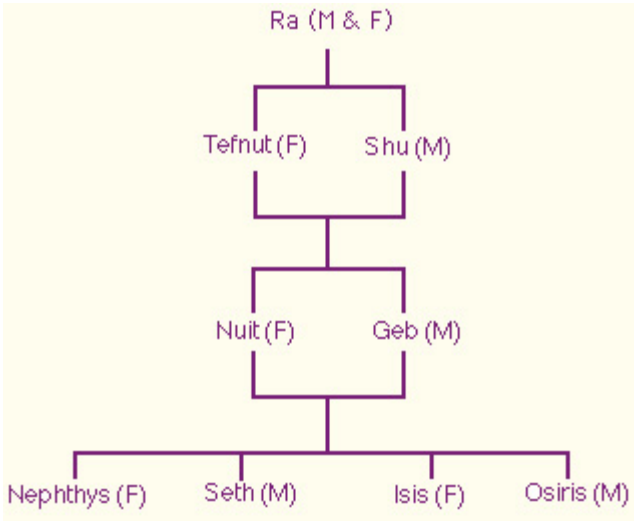
THE DESCENT OF THE SOUL & THE LAW OF INCUBATION

It is impossible to accurately investigate or teach on the Descent of the Soul without delving into the ancient Egyptian Religion and later Platonic thought which expressed this same idea in easier to understand terms. At the heart of both of these understandings of the Descent of the Soul is the Emanation of living streams of "being" and "intelligence" from the first fount of all things; the "First Cause" of all. For simplicity sake let us call this "First Cause" the "Absolute", "The One", or "Ain Soph" by the familiar term "God".



There is a "Pattern" to be found when you study Emanationism which is easily detectable when doing studies in Comparative Religion. Common to all is the idea of a "stairway" or "corridor" or "ladder to Heaven" that connects the Spiritual realm with the physical-material realm. At the top of this "ladder to Heaven" is a condition of "non-being". In the Kabbalah this condition of non-being is called Ain Soph, literally "without limit". In the Egyptian Religion this condition of "non-being" was termed "Nun", and translates as "the deep". We see this concept in Genesis chapter one verse 2.

Gen 1:2 2 And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep (the Egyptian "Nun). And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. (KJV)

This concept of "non-being" appears in modern physics as the quantum vacuum, a ground state that is pregnant with every possible state of manifest being. The condition of "Being" is emanated from "non-Being", usually in a number of steps or "levels". This is in reality nothing "new" as we read about this 10,000 years B.C.E. in ancient Egypt and in the religious philosophy of Plato and Plotinus.

Our study is about the Soul so some background information is in order before we really "dig in".

Both Egypt and Plato represented this "Living Energy" from "The One" as unfolding from within Itself at the beginning of a new period of manifestation, and proceeding outward or downward from a summit of pure Spirit-Energy into ever-denser forms of creation and material existence (matter). Egypt went to far as to diagram this Ennead. This descent of the Divine Essence in this Ennead is described as the Law of Incubation.

In the above diagram we see a "flow" or "succession" of Divine Living Energies, as described by Egypt, that can be seen as sort of a "ladder" from Heaven. These "Living Energies" are contained within "The One" and Egypt described this as the "All in the One". These were the "neteru". The central unifying theme of Egyptian Religion is the understanding that the phenomenal world and the human Soul, or the world that can be experienced through the 5 senses of mankind's Soul, are products of a process of Emanation within the Divine. This has as its goal practical techniques designed to retrace the path of Emanation in reverse, literally an ascent, or return back to the original condition of "being". These mystical beliefs and practices were prevalent in the ancient world and continued to play an important (sometimes underground) role in the European culture until 1600 C.E. when they began to be obscured by materialistic beliefs. The above understanding of Emanation from "The One Divine" can be found to be the major religious belief of all mankind in unbroken succession for thousands of years and is the basic religious dogma expressed in all the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of mankind from the beginning of recorded time until basically the reformation of Roman Christianity. This process of Emanation was understood by the ancients to be the "Tree of Life". Each nation had its own unique understanding of it and we find it expressed likewise in the Jewish mysticism and the Kabbalah. The re-telling and exegesis of an older stratum of mystical texts within the context of medieval European culture led to a prolific exploration in new directions - theosophy, cosmogony, the nature of evil, the human Soul, reincarnation, the commandments in daily life, prophecy, and magic (mastering the Laws of the Cosmos).

The re-discovery of Greek culture that stimulated the Italian Renaissance led to a far-reaching exploration of ideas, particularly in religion. The works of Plato, lost to the West for many centuries, were translated into Latin. The Corpus Hermeticum, a collection of theosophical documents that were believed to be the wisdom of ancient Egypt, were discovered and translated. The realization that Judaism contained esoteric traditions and practices relating to the Bible was of intense interest to intellectuals all over Europe, particularly the philosophy of Plato, the theosophy of the Corpus Hermeticum, and Jewish Kabbalah were seen to connect and overlap at many places, to the extent that they all appeared to have derived from a common source. That source, of course, was ancient Egypt.

Interest in the Kabbalah increased and this is important for Christianity since Christianity is essentially a Hellenistic "reinterpretation" ("literal-historical") of esoteric aspects of Judaism. You could go so far to say that Christianity is a "literalized" and "historicized" version of the Metaphysical religion of Egypt.

At the very core of this Divine Emanation is the idea that the cosmos is thought to be hierarchical, with God at the highest level, and various hierarchies of angelic ("neteru") powers, with the material world and the infernal religions at the outer limit of reality. Emanation is an ancient way of explaining how a world that contains a chaotic diversity can have an underlying order and a connection with a single, unified source of all being. One of the most important developments of the concept of emanation as a theory to explain the nature of existence comes from the ancient Greek philosopher Plato and his followers, particularly Plotinus (200 C.E.). Emanation bridges the distance between "the One God" and the diversity of existence by postulating intermediate levels of being. As Emanation begins with a pure being and concludes with the real world, it usually postulates a hierarchy of being, with those beings closer to the source considered increasingly pure and undefiled by the world. These beings are considered to be real, referred to as daemons, archons, spirits, angels, neteru, etc. There is much elaboration of roles, processes and relationships between these various levels of being, as these beings are considered to communicate and regulate the influence of the Divine. Emanation was the dominant model of the cosmos throughout Europe and the Middle East from the time of Ancient Egypt until the end of the 17th century. One of the earliest forms of Emanation described is expressed in the Great Ennead of Heliopolis in ancient Egypt. This is a hierarch of Divine "god-goddess pairs" which are Emanated from a single source of Being (Nun). It was Plato that introduced this same idea of Emanation to the Greek-speaking world, and his ideas were developed continuously over the 1000 year duration of the Platonic Academy in Athens. At the core of this Emanation is basically Gnosticism, secret Divine Wisdom not known by the common man and which is reserved for initiates and hierophants.

Emanationism in the Kabbalah owes a great deal to Gnosticism and Neoplatonism. Emanationism in Kabbalah is expressed primarily through two metaphors:

- Four Worlds (of Plato).....
 - The One/The Good...the ultimate Source of all "being"
 - The Living Intelligence (Nous)...the Divine prefiguration of all that is (archetypes)
 - Soul...that part of humanity that is capable of apprehending the Divine Intelligence and Uniting with "The One"
 - Matter...the substance in which "all forms" of existence become manifest
- Ten Sephiroth

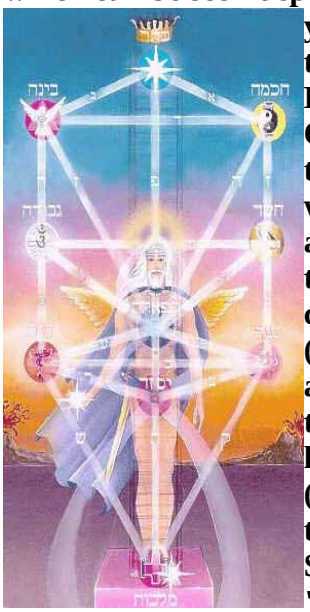
These two schemes can be overlaid to produce an identical picture. The expression in terms of "ten" numbers or stages in the Kabbalah has correspondences with Pythagoreanism. The expression in terms of 4 worlds is from Platonism. Many Jewish Kabbalists thought that Plato must have learned his wisdom from a Hebrew source like the prophet Jeremiah. Others believed that Pythagoras had learned his wisdom from the same common source as the ancients masters of the Kabbalah. Pythagoras was know to have traveled widely in Egypt and lived there a long time. It is believed that Plato inherited the Pythagorean wisdom tradition which was the same source for the later Jewish Kabbalah.

Answer for yourself: And what was this source again? Ancient Egypt and the wisdom of Moses, himself a Pharaoh.

That was our introduction. Now you see why the study of Egyptian Religion is so important for understanding our Bibles and interpreting them correctly; all world religions have come one way or the other from ancient Egypt. It is imperative when reading of the religious concepts in these ancient Scriptures that make up our Bibles today that we carry over in our reading "the original understanding" of them as understood by the ancient original writes and not fall prey to a radical and highly erroneous "reinterpretation" of them which is the tragic condition that we find in current Christianity today.

Answer for yourself: What does all of this have to do with "the Soul"?



The Divine part of the Human Soul is seen as having descended through spheres of increasing materiality, so that it is beguiled by the senses and emotions into losing sight of its Divine connection and nature.

Answer for yourself: Does the Old Testament describe this Emanation as does this ancient Spiritual Wisdom of Egypt and Greece? Yes it does but we don't recognize it. We encounter this in not only the Genesis summary creation accounts but in Jacob's Ladder. The often familiar term "Jacob's Ladder" is ladder that Jacob saw in a dream. After he had obtained his brother Esau's birthright and received his father's blessing, he had a vision of the angels of God ascending and descending a ladder that extended from Earth to Heaven. God, who stood at the top of the ladder, promised to bless Jacob and his offspring and to bring his descendants into the Promised Land. This idea of a "ladder to Heaven" began with ancient Egypt. Shu was believed to be the god of the wind. Shu's position as the one who holds up the sky. He was called to "lift up" the spirits of the dead so that they might rise up to the heavens, known as the "light land", reached by means of a giant "ladder" that Shu was thought to hold up. It was this "ladder" that allowed for the Descent and Ascent of the Soul.

Egypt described this celestial event, this Descent of the Soul into matter (mankind) as the Law of Incubation, which can be seen depicted in the idea of a "ladder" as well in the above diagram of the "The Ennead". What you are looking at is tantamount to the Jewish Kabbalah and the Tree of Life. Each of these "Emanations" from "The One" were successive Emanations of "Divine Living Energies" from "The One Absolute" God. This Ennead were composed the nine great Osirian gods, Living Energies, or as they were sometimes called the "neteru". Really there were ten steps as we find in the Kabbalah as Egypt had their own "invisible God" as well, the Amen. The term "Ennead" is also used to describe the great council of the gods as well as a collective term for all the gods (neteru). There were multiple understanding of the Ennead in Ancient Egypt. The most important of the Egyptian Enneads was the so-called Great Ennead, also called the Heliopolis Ennead. The group consisted of Atum (Ra), the first god, his children Shu, Tefnut, and their children Geb, Nuit, Osiris, Isis, Set, and Nephthys. From the primeval waters represented by Nun, a mound appeared. Upon the mound sat Atum who had begotten himself. Bored and alone, he brought forth from himself air (Shu), and moisture (Tefnut). Shu and Tefnut in turn gave birth to the earth (Geb) and the sky (Nut), who initially were engaged in eternal copulation. Shu separated them, lifting Nut into her place in the sky. The children of Nut and Geb were Osiris, Isis, Set, and Nepthys. These are all "Living Energies" that comprise "The One" or "Absolute" of the Cosmos whom we call God. It is from this that all creation would come.

You might not be aware of this but the Jewish Kabbalah expresses this very same Spiritual Idea.

From this One through a process of Emanation from "The One" life pours forth its power and essence in streams, called "rivers of vivification", "from on high as far as to the last of things," bringing all forms of life into existence and enSouling all forms with more or less of its own mighty being. At each step of the way out, or down what appears to be a ladder from Heaven, this life takes embodiment in coarser forms of cosmic matter, thus giving birth to the greater and lesser gods and "living Energies" of various descending ranks. For the gods and these "living Energies" are embodiments of the several grades and forms of nature's life, power and intelligence. The whole creation forms a chain of beings reaching from the lowest mineral crystals to the highest God and Deific Mind of the Universe. Somewhere in this chain stands man, and Platonic Philosophy tells us exactly where man is grouped in this whole schematization. Humanity occupies a place of great strategic importance in the hierarchy, standing precisely at the point of meeting between the highest animal and the truly human kingdom. Man is the creature that is fashioned to bridge the gap between the animal and the divine order.

Answer for yourself: What does this say to us?

This ancient Spiritual Wisdom of antiquity teaches that mankind's nature is compounded of the two elements, the animal and the divine (godlike), in one organism, making it possible for the higher dimension in mankind to "lift up" or humanize or "divinize" the lower "animal nature" within mankind. This again is portrayed in the battle between Set and Hours whereby it ends peaceably between the two oppositions and factions at war with themselves. This is why I love Judaism and Egyptian Religion so much since both religions teach that there is not a difference or distinction between the "secular" and the "sacred". Both teach that man is to sanctify this animal nature and bring it into submission to the will of God and not "kill it" or "deprive it" of necessities of demanded by its existence. 1 Cor 6:12 12 states: All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. (KJV) It all depends on how man fulfills the animal and Spiritual needs during his physical existence whether they are acceptable to God or not. There is no place for asceticism which is the foundation for much of Christian theology and has been during the Dark Ages up to now. How we grow in this area of sanctification of our Soulish existence determines our Spiritual evolution and later "resurrection" or "ascension".

In his Timaeus Plato gives us the remarkable speech of the Demiurgus (Creative Logos) to the "junior gods," who were the divine beings commissioned by the Lords of Karma to come to earth and be the gods ("Living Energies") embodied in an animal race that had no chance of reaching the next level of evolution without such training. In it the Demiurgus (Creative Logos) enjoins the deities to come to earth and "unite mortal with immortal natures," promising them that they would "never be dissolved," if they held fast to their oath of purity and the covenant which they made with their Overlord. This idea of "unity" between these two natures and the subjection of the animal nature in mankind and harmony with the Soul was depicted in ancient Egypt by the peace between finally achieved between Set and Horus following this long battle of Soul vs flesh. In the depiction on the right we see that they "bound together" and the war was over and harmony was restored between the Soul and flesh of mankind.

Answer for yourself: What is this covenant that is mentioned above?

This is the covenant in the Old Testament which the Lord tells the Children of Israel (who were these junior gods [Souls] incarnated in fleshly bodies) that they have broken times without number. For the gods, these "Living Energies", once incarnated, fell under the cloud of oblivion, lost their divine memory and went "the way of all flesh" into carnality and beastliness. This was characterized and called by the ancients in many ways. It was called by the ancients the "drinking of the waters of Lethe" (the water of forgetfulness). This Covenant, by the way, is called the Covenant of Moses and the Covenant of Noah, Covenants containing the Laws and Commandments of God which, when obeyed, restored the Divine Harmony between God and man, and man and his fellow man. These Covenants, consisting of 613 Laws for the Jewish Nation, and 66 Law for the non-Jew, served not only as Divine Instruction (the Torah) but were given to condition and train the Soul in righteousness and holiness while incarnated in these animal bodies. This Covenant, which is normally connected with Israel, is to be found pre-existing in Ancient Egypt and even earlier in Sumer. It appears that mankind has always been aware of their responsibility as "incarnated Souls" to live out in their lives these Divine Laws of God which restore and maintain harmony and order in the Earth and Cosmos and which enable our Soul to reach its Spiritual evolutionary goal of ascension "home".

This ancient Spiritual Wisdom teaches that mankind, once incarnated, had forgotten the Covenant made between these incarnated Souls and the God of Heaven before the Descent of the Soul into matter.

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom teaches that after rebellion these Souls finally came to earth, incarnated in mortal bodies of flesh and thus linked a divine principle of intelligence with a body and a sensual animal nature. And this fact is the basis of all religion. Man is a "god" [small "g"] and a animal in one organism; he is a god tabernacling and coming into "being" in the flesh of an animal. Daniel, chapters 3 and 5, tells us this plainly. The King, who represents symbolically the divine Soul, is told by Daniel that he shall come to live with the animals and be given the mind of an animal. A hundred texts from the old books confirm this statement of the linking of the two diverse natures in one organism. And this great basic fact is the heart of the mystical insight into the nature of God and the Soul.

We have, then, in Greek philosophy the "Descent of the Soul" or the "Advent of the gods". This is equated in the old Christian tradition by the legend of "the fall of the angels," the fall of Lucifer. This misinterpretation and designation of the Descent of the Soul into matter is most unfortunate. This "Descent of the Soul" is outlined in full by the Prodigal Son allegory, and hinted at in many other places. We have already seen that the Gnostic Paul states that the Abraham story is an "allegory" in Galatians. That being so then the story of Abraham is a glyph of it as well, for he, like the Prodigal Son, left his home and kindred, left his native land, and journeyed to a far country that God promised to show him, where he would dwell among savage beasts and eat of the grass of the earth. Paul says in Phil 3:20:

"For our conversation (citizenship) is in Heaven" (KJV).

We, as "Descended Souls", are these junior gods, who are symbolically Paul's second Adam, who, Paul says, "is the Lord from Heaven," following the animal man who, he says, "is of the earth, earthy."

1 Cor 15:47 47 The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. (KJV)

The ancients taught that there were twelve legions of these angel hosts, and this, indicated clearly by Plato. According to the interpreters of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom this is illustrated in the New Testament, where at the feeding of the five thousand there were gathered up "twelve baskets of fragments"; and again in the scene in the Garden of Gethsemane, where, when Jesus is seized by the deputation of soldiers sent out to arrest him, he says to them, in effect: "Don't you know that I could call upon my father and he would sent to my aid instantly twelve legions of angels?" These are the mysterious "ten lost tribes of Israel" (two having failed in their effort to incarnate), who in two divisions of five legions each, called the Suras or "willing (obedient) ones" and the Asuras or "unwilling ones," undertook the commission of the higher Lords and projected their powers in the direction of earth. These two groups are symbolic unquestionably for the two groups of virgins; five wise and the five foolish virgins (one of their Sanskrit names, Kumaras, means "virgin youths") of the Biblical allegory; also they are the elder and the younger brother of the Prodigal Son myth. The Suras made the attempt, but, we are told, did not descend far enough, and their effort proved abortive. The Asuras, seeing this miscarriage, became recalcitrant, rebelled and refused, until at last they were forced to incarnate. The Suras obeyed but failed; the Asuras refused but finally complied, and took lodgment in our bodies, uniting the two natures.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever heard of Prometheus giving "fire" to mankind?

The Greeks have all this mystical understanding of the "Descent of the Soul into matter" depicted in their great fable of Prometheus stealing the heavenly fire from the gods and bringing it to man for his benefit. This "fire" is the "Divine sparks" of which you read and hear which is symbolic for the divine intelligence and Deific Mind of God and not the physical flame we cook our food with! This is a later veiled reference to the "Descent of the Soul"; the exact reference made in the Egyptian Ennead we mentioned earlier and which we also see in the Jewish Kabbalah. We, then, are "living Energies" descended from Heaven, and higher than the angels we shall be. For in two passages, this is affirmed:

1 Cor 6:3 3 Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life? (KJV)

Heb 2:7 7 Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands: (KJV)

Another ancient scripture says that "angels from their seats envy him" (man). For his experience in incarnation will advance his station beyond that of those spirits who have not been tried in the fires of earth and refined to purest gold".

The Nicene creed of the Church itself, describing the Second Logos of the Trinity, asserts that it "came down from heaven, was incarnate . . . and was made man," for us and for our salvation. John declares:

John 3:13 13 And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven. (KJV)

Jesus said he "beheld Satan (the light-bringer) as lightning fall from heaven."

Answer for yourself: Who is this Satan? He has many names. Satan is called Lucifer, the "light bearer" or the one who "brings light".

Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

1966 heylel- Lucifer="light-bearer";

- 1) the shining one, the morningstar, Lucifer; used of the king of Babylon and Satan (figuratively)
- 2) Theological Wordbook of the Old Testament: `Helel,' describing the king of Babylon

This is saying that as one of many neteru, as a "Living Energy", this "light-bearer" came down into humanity in the character of the bright and morning star, Lucifer, the bright effluence of deity. Time does not allow for a comprehensive study of "evil" or "Satan" and his role in the maturation of our Soul but one day we need to do this. The Chinese have a great saying that the "stars ceased shining in heaven and fell on earth where they became men." This explains why when the Pharaohs died they hoped to "go to Heaven" and become a "star" (return to God as "Living Energies" that had incarnated temporarily in matter/flesh). This simply meant he was returning to Heaven as a "living energy/Soul" from which he had come in the beginning. This is pure Soul Science.

The Neo-Platonic philosopher, Plotinus, has a extraordinary passage in which he makes it clear why the Soul or "god" in man was under the necessity of taking incarnation in an animal body. Many regard this passage as the clearest statement of the philosophy of incarnation ever given, therefore we quote it in its entirety:

"Thus although the Soul have a divine nature, though she originate in the intelligible world, she enters into a body. Being of the lower divine, she descends here below by a voluntary inclination, for the purpose of developing her power and to adorn what is below her. If she flee promptly from here below, she does not need to regret having become acquainted with evil and knowing the nature of vice, nor having had the opportunity of manifesting her faculties. . . . Indeed the faculties of the Soul would be useless if they slumbered continuously in incorporeal being without ever becoming actualized. The Soul herself would be ignorant of what she possesses if her faculties did not manifest by procession, for everywhere it is the actualization that manifests the potentiality. Otherwise the latter would be completely hidden and obscured; or rather it would not really exist, and would not possess any reality. It is the variety of sense-effects which illustrates the greatness of the intelligible principle, whose nature publishes itself by the beauty of its works."

We are on earth, then, as "incarnated Souls" to come to self-consciousness as divinities, but to do it by working through and with an animal body and animal nature to which we bring into "unity" with the will of God. We are here on Earth to instruct, educate, refine, humanize, discipline, train and finally divinize, an animal! We are in bodies, which properly are not ours, but those of the animal Soul, who is our instinctual lower self. We are assigned the duty of "taming" this creature and conforming it to ways of the Divine Intelligence and fostering a brotherhood among all descended Souls like ourself (a Soulish brotherhood). We must teach this animal in which we live the better way of curbing its savage instincts, its lusts and greed inherited from its wild experience in the animal orders, and must lead it upward to a final assimilation into the nature of the angel, or "neteru", its tutor. Little wonder that the ancients said that such a grand task could not be done in a single incarnation but is accomplished over a series of "incarnations".

Answer for yourself: Now the big question. How was the "god" to link his higher nature with the body of the animal so far below his stature?

The very fundamentals of all major world religions are intertwined with the answer to this difficulty. For religions grew out of this relation between the "god" and his animal host. Contrary to popular opinion religions were not originally forms of mere cult sentimentalism and devotion. Religions developed along with their rituals and ethical practices and were so designed by Spiritual Masters to keep mankind in memory of his divine estate while estranged from it in his "incarnation state", and to hold him to the obligations of his covenant that was made before his descent into incarnation. These are intended to raise up the lower self, while keeping himself "unspotted from the world."

Answer for yourself: What is an example? I suppose there is no better example than the Biblical Festivals. Yes, they are adapted and interpreted in the Bible through the Jewish Nation and find expression through the development of a Jewish people and their cultural distinctiveness. But at the very heart of the Biblical Festivals is a message of the Soul's Salvation; all of which is taught in the Heavens to all mankind through the Equinoxes and Solstices of God. Long before the rise of the Jewish Nation these "Divine Appointments with God", what were to be come later recognized in the Bible as the Jewish Feasts and Festivals, were recognized by the Gentile nations for thousands of years as "celestial teaching events" concerning the salvation of the Soul.

This incarnation of the Soul is philosophically described under the terms of the great Law of Incubation. We read of this over and over again in our Bibles but fail to recognize it because we have been indoctrinated to approach the Bible with a preformed "literal-historical" perspective first. But seeing now, maybe for the first time in your life, the the ancient authors of the Sacred Texts never wrote with such a methodology, then we have hope of looking now at these texts differently and seeking out their true "Spiritual Meaning".

This Law of Incubation is announced in the Bible in John's verse:

John 12:24 24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. (KJV)

If you have any knowledge of Botany then you know that a seed is "not dead" but is itself a "living organisms" awaiting renewal when the conditions are ripe for its development. When you plant seeds you don't plant "dead seeds" because if you did then nothing would grow. This should be a tip-off that something other than a "literal-historical" interpretation is intended here. Once you come to see and understand that the ancients interpreted this animal nature and body as the Soul's vessel for its Earthy training as a "living death" then this passage blossoms with the fullness of the truth intended. This "Soulish incarnation" in bodies of flesh was likened to a death in the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom. When the Soul incarnated it "died" and was in need of "rebirth" and "awakening" while the body yet lives.

For in ancient times the proper signification of the terms "death" and "the dead" was the gauge by which the meaning of all Scriptural writing could be measured. The terms "death" and "the dead" carried in their ancient usage a hidden or esoteric connotation, which was at once a clue to the primary meaning of the entire structure of theology and a key to the rational consideration of our mortal life. The sagacious and shrewd ancients were content to let a secondary implication of the terms, more readily apparent on the surface, prevail in the exoteric understanding of the common man, while imparting to the Mystery Initiates an occult signification which bore the real intent of Scripture, infinitely more informing and dynamic. We are "dead" while we yet "live".

We are trustworthily informed that the sages of old employed mythical and mystic devices at once to reveal, but at the same time conceal, a profounder meaning in their sacred writings, using at times "blinds" to suggest to the untutored a shallow rendering, while conveying to those versed in symbolical methodology a far profounder message. The most startling of these devices was their use of "death" in the ancient Scriptures. Teaching for the living was put out under the guise of instruction for "the dead". Great moral and Spiritual systems were cloaked under the mask of "Books of the Dead," as in Egypt and Tibet. This being so, the restoration of the word "death" and "the dead" to its ancient Spiritual meaning will radically transform the meaning of every single doctrine of the Christian faith. For the key to the correct interpretation of all Scripture is just this ancient theological connotation of the word "death".

Concerning the ancient Spiritual Wisdom Thomas Taylor says:

"They believed that human Souls were confined in the body as in a prison, a condition which they denominated genesis or generation, from which Dionysus (the Greek Christ) would liberate them. This generation, which linked the Soul to body, was supposed to be a kind of death to the higher form of life. Evil is inherent to this condition, the Soul dwelling in the body as in a prison or a grave. . . . The earthly life is a dream rather than a reality . . . the Soul is purified and separated from the evils of this condition by knowledge"--or what they called "philosophy".

Plato is himself found saying that "men are placed in the body as in a prison" and that he considered "the body as the sepulchre of the Soul". Taylor in discussing an opinion of Macrobius ascribed to him the conception that "the Soul in the present life may be said to die, as far as it is possible for a Soul to die; occultly intimating that the death of the Soul was nothing more than a profound union with the ruinous bonds of the body."

One noted that the incarnation or entry of the Soul into the body was often alluded to as a burial! Then Pythagoras had written that "whatever we see when awake is death".

Likewise the great Plotinus had given hints such as the following: "Death to the Soul is to descend into matter and be entirely subjected to it. This is what is meant by falling asleep in Hades (Hell)."

Answer for yourself: Have we got the understanding of "Hell" wrong? Does it refer to this human existence in these "bodies of death" as Paul calls them? Is Hell now? This is just another radical reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom gone awry by Rome? Yes it is.

Virgil, the Roman poet, had shown that he was imbued with this same Greek philosophy when he wrote: "Souls are deadened by earthly forms and members subject to death."

Plato had compared our Soul and its incarnation to the situation of an oyster in its shell. And Socrates, in a long passage on the subject of death, asked Cebes if it might not after all be true that we had come hither from a far more radiant life elsewhere, and that we should properly regard the present life as in reality a death. "May it not be true that we are really dead?" he asks, intimating, like Wordsworth, that we seem at times to have faint glimpses of a more vivid existence from which we have fallen into this dullness of mortal life. Let us not forget to take note of Milton's expression of Adam's astonishment in the Paradise Lost, when on being driven from the garden under condemnation of death, our first father found his sentence taking the form of a lingering existence, not a destruction of his life, as he had expected. He discovered that his "death" meant not his extinction, but a less vivid type of life. He found himself condemned to a "living" death. He was made to live and "suffer death", not to be annihilated.

When we consider Milton's Paradise Lost we are reading the remnants of the ancient philosophical tradition, which we find so concisely expressed again in the Gorgias of Plato: "But indeed, as you say also, life is a grievous thing. For I should not wonder if Euripides spoke the truth when he says: 'Who knows whether to live is not to die, and to die is not to live?' And we perhaps are in reality dead. For I have heard from one of the wise that we are now dead; and that the body is our sepulchre; but that the part of the Soul in which the desires are contained is of such a nature that it can be persuaded and hurled upward and downwards" (think of Jacob's Ladder...ascending/descending).

We look again to Thomas Taylor who gives a portion of the comment of Olympiodorus on this passage, as follows: "For the Soul, coming hither, as she imparts life to the body, so she partakes through this of a certain privation of life; but this is an evil. When separated, therefore, from the body, she lives in reality; for she (the Soul) dies here, through participating of privation of life, because the body becomes the source of evils. And hence it is necessary to subdue the body."

The idea here hinted at is one of the basic themes of the Egyptian religion and Greek philosophy. For the Greek mind, with conceptions derived from the Orphic wisdom and ancient Egypt even before that, considered that all life resulted from streams of "Living Energy" flowing forth from God, or the One, the infinite fount of all things, sweeping on, to manifestation. These streams of force sprang outward from the heights of Spiritual Energy and suffered diminishing of their power as they proceeded farther and farther from the Primal Source, until at last they came to a pause in the inert arms of matter. Their living quality was countered and finally stifled in the entanglement of matter, where motion and vibration came to a "dead" halt or suffered an allegorical "death". The "dying away" of living vibration or other sound, or of the ripple made by casting a stone in the pond, is allegorical of the type of "death" here signified. Life comes out from its first Cause and meets its death in the heart of matter. But again we are required to distinguish between the "death" of a power and its absolute annihilation or extinction. Life was merely held dormant in the grip of an element able to silence its activities. It had not ceased to be. Its powers had only gone into dormancy. They would emerge again through religious rituals that reminded him of his "home" and awaken his "desire to return to Heaven".

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

We need to stop for a second and consider the mighty implication before us. For in the strict sense of the term, we must realize that such a thing as "death" in the sense of total annihilation either of being or matter is an unthinkable and impossible thing. That which "is" cannot cease to "be". The only thing that can happen to it is a change of state or transmutation of form. It can only come into manifestation and go out again, yet never is not. In the shadow of which considerations we must cause our minds to contemplate what is called death anywhere as the passing from a more to a less vivid and active state of manifestation. "Death" is therefore accurately defined as the less heightened, less vibrant, condition of any form of being or life. And this gives solid philosophical base for the re-establishment of the ancient meaning of "death".

I could go on but you get the point. As my studies advanced with overwhelming certainty I had come the perception that when the ancient writers of sacred books of religion spoke of "death" they referred to our present life on earth in these bodies of flesh! And when they spoke of "the dead", they again referred to us, here and now, alive as we seem to be as incarnated Souls in fleshly bodies but living a "death" in an allegorical "hell". Absent from such an understanding is "fear" as the great motivator of all man-make religions and Christianity tops the list by using fear of damnation for over 1,500 years to control people and their "minds". And when we encounter such terms as the "grave", "tomb", "coffin", "sepulchre", out of which our Souls would be resurrected, they only meant these living bodies of ours! In their theology, to die was to incarnate in bodies on earth. No wonder Paul will say:

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light (Spiritual enlightenment) (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did not notice the word "light"? What is the relationship to the "light-bringer" Lucifer? Well, I will let you figure that out on your own. They play the same role; they only approach it from different perspectives. One is "Set" and one is "Horus".

As mentioned above I found that the two words "womb" and "tomb" are from the same stem and convey the same connotation. He who enters life by way of the womb has entered the tomb of living death. In their eyes, death was to live the kind of life we are living here. In reality, for the Soul there is no such thing as death, in the sense of total destruction, for the Soul is indestructible. If you think about it then in reality we are "Divine Souls" on assignment in this material world then our life here deservedly is represented by the designation of death because this fleshly existence cohabiting with this animal nature is the most Spiritual repressive and restricted sphere of existence in which our Souls were ever called upon to become embodied and imprisoned. The ancients believed that this type of life was the profoundest "death" the Soul was ever subjected to, as an individual entity! It could go no lower, be restricted no more completely, than it was here. It should come like a lightening bolt to you that we could never be any more "dead" than we are now in our mortal habitat. We are truly in the very jaws of "death", in the "valley of the shadow of death", and we are therefore the "dead" of all the ancient philosophical books. Religion had been designed as instruction and guidance for "those in their graves" of earth-life, and its sacred books were meant to be a light for us, "the dead", in the dark underworld of Hades, Sheol, Amenta!

Answer for yourself: Is this why the Egyptian Bible, is entitled "The Book of the Dead"? Is it instruction for tabernacling Souls in this animal body in preparation for their return home to Heaven one day? It sure is! This book by the way teaches the path of the Soul through life in preparation of its return to the Father at the death of the body and in so doing the living of the Laws of God is fundamental as seen taught by the 42 Negative Confessions which is tantamount to the Egyptian Torah.

But long ago the knowledge that such instruction was for us and understanding of such terms as "death" and "hell" was lost to us. Lost was the Divine Truth that we were "the dead" for whom all religious systems were devised, and for whose resurrection out of the tomb of the physical body the whole end and aim of religion was conceived.

Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us?

The first consequence of the true meaning of "death" from this basic conception was the knowledge that the resurrection could not mean the mere raising of decaying physical bodies from out a earthen rocky hillside grave or tomb! This "resurrection" referred to the re-arising of the buried Soul from out its physical prison, its earthly body. The "resurrection" in reality refers to the Soul bursting free of the restraints of a body of death, which was the only grave, sepulchre, tomb or sarcophagus that the wise ancients ever had in view in the proclamation of their great "resurrection message"! The whole framework, therefore, of the religious temple was seen to be constructed of Spiritual, not of historical elements. The Gospel narrative was, then, should be seen in light of such knowledge a series of Spiritual allegories, designed to depict the nature of our own personal Soul-life, the history of Everyman's experience in the world of flesh and matter, or in the "realm of the dead". I hope you are beginning to see that this "Jesus Story" is to be "our story"; not the story of another!

A key passage for us next is Rev 11:8

Rev 11:8 8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which Spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. (KJV)

Here we have Revelation declaring in words as clear as can be found, that our Lord was crucified, not in historical Jerusalem, but in a Spiritual city, a city, furthermore, with two names, one of which is not even a city name, but that of a country, Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Have we already seen that Egypt is symbolic for the fleshy body? Yes. So, by default then our Lord was crucified in matter, a body. No wonder Paul will say "Christ in you"! This truly is the mystery hidden from mankind.

Col 1:26-27 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

Understand that Rev. 11:8, in saying that "the Lord was Spiritually crucified" in Egypt, negates the whole literal and historical interpretation of the Gospel narrative, but it adds its own certainty to the new rendering of the meaning of "death". For the place where the dead bodies of the two witnesses, the two segments of our dual life as Soul and body, shall lie, as well as where the Christ in us is crucified, is thus marked as the place of "death", which, as the new truth reveals, is this Earth and our life upon it. And it is further significant that Revelation gives as one of its (many) names, Egypt. No one can long study Hebrew, Greek and Egyptian religious literature without being assured that this term, Egypt, is used, never in the sense of the geographical unit on the map, but as the chief designation for the place, country or habitat of the Earthly incarnation of our Souls. It is therefore a figurative term for life on earth, or Earth as the scene of incarnate life. To "go down into Egypt" is a certain cryptogram for the "descent into incarnation", or being born on Earth. "Egypt" is therefore equivalent to the Soul's life in the body. And indeed the name does often connote directly the body itself. And here we have an interesting side-light on the meaning of a term often used, and of course used erroneously,--"the flesh-pots of Egypt". In our ignorance of ancient symbolism we have taken it to mean cooking pots full of edible flesh. But in the light of the corrected view, it is at once seen to denote nothing more than these physical bodies of ours. For they are indeed the vessels (pots) of flesh in which our Souls have taken abode for the period of their life-cycles on earth. The "flesh-pots of Egypt" are only our bodies.

So this brings us once again to the Law of Incubation and the Descent of the Soul into matter, these fleshly bodies "of death" from which our Souls long for "resurrection from the dead". Also this Law of Incubation it is hinted at in Paul's description of the resurrection in 1st Corinthians, 15:

1 Cor 15:34-36 34 Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame. 35 But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? 36 Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die (incarnated for the purpose of training our Souls in righteouss...to which we are to awaken in our Earthly existence): (KJV)

Here we are admonished to "awake" again to our true Spiritual identities. Such "awakening" is tantamount to a "resurrection from the dead"; our bodies of Spiritual slumber. These texts proclaim the great truth of the Soul's evolution, missed by scientific eyes, that each kingdom of nature is linked and associated to the kingdom below it for the nourishment of its life. This "descent from angelic abodes" or "Heaven" into matter by our Souls was thus likened as a "death" by the ancients. The Soul had taken root in the animal kingdom of "matter". It is in the embrace of matter. Follow if you will the logic. The vegetable kingdom is rooted in mineral soil because plants grow in the soil. The animal is sustained on vegetable matter and are herbivores. The human is built up physically of animal and vegetable elements, and in like manner and in their turn the lower divine beings (Souls/Living Energies) must take rootage in the human bodies (matter). As a seed can not develop its potentialities unless it descend and be buried in the dark damp soil of the mineral kingdom, so the angels or "Living Energies" of God, our Souls, can not evolve to higher perfection of their divinity unless they undergo a purposeful experience in human bodies. One level of existence must impregnate the other; the higher level of existence must be the father to the lower feminine plane of existence. This is the simple law which is the philosophical basis of the incarnation. The ancient Scriptures portrays this as a "descent into matter" where this Soul, often personified as the "son of man" is seen to descend into the bowels of the earth for three "days" (aeons).

Answer for yourself: Why 3 days? Could this be a long lost "key" that refers to incarnation of this "Living Energy" into the mineral kingdom, then next into the vegetable and next into the animal kingdom? Could all of this be but preparation before this "Living Energy" rises out of matter again as a god in the perfection of his Spiritual nature to be culminated in the human kingdom? Is God, in this way, experiencing all facets of His Creation and mankind is the next step in God coming into Consciousness of Himself? That might be a little too much for now.

It is important to know that in the old Scripture the advent of the god always occurs about "the fourth watch of the night," which is symbolic of the human kingdom, as it is fourth in a progressive order (mineral, next the plant, next the animal, and next the human kingdom). We see this clearly in the texts which we read this Divine Principle and "Pattern" to us:

"As Jonas was three days in the belly of the whale, so must the son of man be three days in the bowels of the earth,"

This speaks of a "descent into" the lower kingdoms of evolution, not in a literal rocky tomb or in a literal belly of a large fish! This understanding comes only when you obtain the correct "keys" that unlock for your the correct interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which we are reading in our Bibles. We shall only come to understand the passages and message of our Bibles as a repository of ancient Scriptures when we both learn the "keys" to and follow the forms of the old ancient religious symbolism. Our task is to both "unlearn" the erroneous interpretations we have inherited and "learn" the correct interpretations of this same Spiritual Wisdom and and "recognize" then in the ancient Spiritual texts we read. Until we do the Bible will remain an "closed book" to you.

The coming of the god to inhabit the body of an animal is in all respects as taught by the ancients equivalent to His death and burial, analogous to the death of the old seed in the ground, and is necessary if God is to birth Himself anew as the risen son of the slain father. This is the intent of the great Phillipians 2 passage called the "Kenosis" by Biblical scholars. Kenosis is a Greek word for emptiness, which is used as a theological term. In Christian theology, Kenosis is the concept of the "self-emptying" of God. It is used both as an explanation of the incarnation, and an indication of the nature of God's activity and condescension. This agrees with the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. A natural dilemma arises when Christian theology postulates a God outside of time and space, who enters into time and space to become human incarnate. The doctrine of Kenosis attempts to explain what God chose to give up in terms of His Divine attributes in order to assume human nature. Since the incarnate Jesus, the personified incarnated Soul of the New Testament, is simultaneously fully human and fully divine, Kenosis holds that these changes were temporarily assumed by God in His incarnation, and, according to this "Pattern", that when Jesus, as the personified incarnated Soul ascended back into heaven following the Soul's resurrection at the death of this physical body of matter, the ascended Divine Soul fully reassumed all of his original attributes.

Specifically it refers to attributes of God that would be incompatible with becoming fully human. For example, God's omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience as well as His not being bound by time. Theologians who support this doctrine often appeal to a reading of Philippians 2:5-8.

Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, who, being in the form of God, did not consider it robbery to be equal with God, but made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a bondservant, and coming in the likeness of men. And being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself and became obedient to the point of death, even the death of the cross.

Answer for yourself: What is this "cross"? We saw earlier it refers to this intersection of "Living Energy" and "Matter". Literally it is the "incarnation" of God into matter. Like all "Living Energies", this "Christ" dies when incarnated and it is our job to resuscitate Him to help us master the animal "below". If this is new for you and you have not yet become familiar with the "Cross in Heaven" then follow the link. We dealt with this "cross" in a previous article so we should all know what this means when discussing the intersection of "matter" and "Energy".

This ancient Spiritual Wisdom of Egypt and Plato taught that when the Soul steps into the lower body, he loses all the freedom of his glorious life as a Spirit, and comes "under the law" that rules on the plane of physical matter.

Answer for yourself: Get ready for a big revelation. What is this Law?

Yes, we are incarnated to live out and Spiritually mature as Souls by living the Laws of God but the "Law" here referred to is the Law of Incubation. He, the incarnated Soul, is subject to all the manifestations of natural laws that affect his bodily needs and the hardships of imprisonment in a body of flesh. In brief, he is in "hell", and the "grave" or "tomb" they speak of is nothing more than his physical body. This is another great mystery of ancient theology, lost since the third century, and now restored through hermetic discovery of the inner meaning of the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The ignorant literalists of the 2nd through the 5th century have so corrupted the Gnostic Christian Scriptures and the Spiritual Gnosis, one can barely find any outright corroborations of this ancient Spiritual thesis in the Bible itself. Yet with insight we find enough to see through a glass "not so darkly" anymore. We find for instance that the words "tomb" and "womb" are of the same origin and have the same significance. To be born from the womb of a mortal mother is to enter the tomb of mortal life. Many passages from Greek philosophy and great writers like Plato and Plotinus will confirm this interpretation beyond any doubt.

Spirit, this "Living Energy" then, must be buried and die in matter, to reproduce its new Spiritual evolution. Now we are beginning to see why in reality this "incarnation" of the Soul is likened to "death" and "corruption". The divine son and daughter of God must come to birth in the womb of Maria (the sea of matter). "Matter is the mother of the gods (Living Energies)," said an ancient sage; as spirit is their father. The seminal seed of divinity must be sown in the body of flesh. It is sown to die, or as Paul says, "in corruption; it must rise in incorruption."

1 Cor 15:40-42 40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. 41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. 42 So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: (KJV)

It must be sown a mortal body, and be raised a Spiritual body in the next stage of our Soul's evolution. Paul, who was an Orphic Mystery initiate, a Gnostic, was simply giving one of the old symbols of the descent and resurrection of the god in mortal life. That is why all these Solargods were known to be "dying" and "rising" gods.

But the god, this Soul, this Krst/Karest/Christ incarnated in humankind did not come as an adult.

Answer for yourself: What life cycle starts at maturity? He came as a god in potentiality only, a god in embryo, a seedling god, in fact a baby god. That is why "the Christ" is pictured as a baby as was Horus, the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ. The Christmas or advent festival celebrates the birth of an infant Christ in each child of God that coincides with his human birth. He is the Christ-child, the child Horus of ancient Egypt. The greatest truth that we humans can be ever be told is not about a supposed "literal-historical Jesus" that is the fruit of tragic misunderstanding and misinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom we read in our Bibles, but that the Christ principle is born in us as a fetus in the womb of our physical bodies, struggling to be delivered! Paul speaks of this as being "Christ being formed in us". The physical body of each person is the womb of the Christ. "I groan and travail with you in pain," says Paul, "till Christ be formed within you." Nature, says John, groaneth and travaileth in pain until now, when it is to give birth to the god or Christ in mankind. And Paul says again:

2 Cor 5:2 2 For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: (KJV)

Paul speaks of the Spiritual body of our resurrection, the house not built with hands, but in consciousness and character for when the fetal god is delivered from its imprisonment in the physical body. For this to happen it must have fashioned for itself a temple or sanctuary, of imperishable elements, "eternal in the heavens," as its future abode. This is the temple we are masonically building out of the materials of our incarnational experience.

Answer for yourself: And how do we build this? Thought, word and deed, day by day and life by life. This is why the Egyptian and Jewish Torah which lay out mankind's responsibilities to God in Laws and Commandants is so precious. We have been given the training manual for our Souls whereby we can make our election and salvation "certain".

Answer for yourself: Could this be the mystic temple that Jesus says he could build up, if destroyed, in three "days" or aeons of natural evolution (mineral, plant, animal)? More "keys" are being restored and the story is not only making sense but it is cohesive from beginning to end. The whole of the "Horus Story" is the same as the "Jesus Story". They are both "Soul Stories"; the plan-o-gram for our Soul's ascent once again on the Ladder to Heaven. Both stories, the "Horus Story" and the "Jesus Story" are allegories of the Descent and Spiritual Maturation of the incarnated Soul. It is the glorious house we fashion for the Soul out of the Spiritual essence of human life. Every moral lesson learned, every item of character developed, has contributed to its heightened power to build this body of indestructible light.

In comparison with it the physical body is named "the garment of shame" and "the body of this death." Paul asks "who will deliver me from this body of death"?

Rom 7:24-25 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin. (KJV)

Notice if you will Paul' answer is that he is delivered from this "body of death" by the Laws of God enlightened to him by the indwelling Christ of whom he teaches. Paul is awakened to Spiritual awareness and his true identify as an "incarnated Divine Soul", who has come from Heaven, and will return to Heaven when the Soul's Spiritual House is completed. For the god, this "Living Energy" we call the Soul, it is a matter of dishonor and degradation to be housed in the carnal body and subject to its animal impulses. In the body as "Living Energies" from God our Souls are nailed to the cross of matter, and the worst of this painful sacrifice of which we read in Philippians 2 and the Kenosis, is his humbling himself is his subjection to the carnal appetites of the animal. As a "Living Energy", this incarnated Soul, we must wage a valiant warfare (the battle between Set and Horus) to avoid falling under the complete domination of these massive impulses, until we finally brings this "Living Energy", our Soul, to Spiritual adulthood. In so doing we prepare this new subtle garment of light to be the eternal home of our Soul after its resurrection. No wonder immediately after the Son of God is "anointed" the battle of Spiritual Consciousness begins in the wilderness temptation in the Gospels. There is a war going on.

Having seen that the first great law of human life is the Law of Incubation, we are prepared now to see the operation of the other great law of nature and principle of Platonic philosophy, the Law of Dismemberment. I hope you were blessed by this insight into the proper interpretation of these ancient Spiritual Scriptures we read in our Bibles today.

We now move to the Law of Dismemberment.

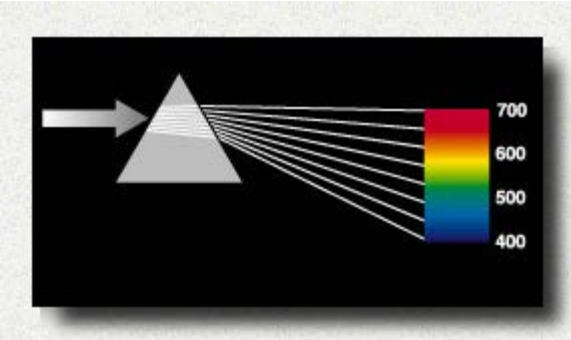
THE DESCENT OF THE SOUL & THE LAW OF DISMEMBERMENT

We now move to a second great teaching concerning the Descent of the Soul in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. By that I mean we will discuss the Law of Dismemberment. When one sees how extensively it was featured in the Egyptian Book of the Dead and other books of ancient Spiritual wisdom, it becomes next to unfathomable how it fell into total disuse in Christian theology from the 2nd century onward. The Law of Dismemberment is the key to the divinity of man and the humanity of the god. It is the basic principle beneath our understanding of all Christology. It gives us the entire rationale for the incarnation.



When discussing ancient myths about the death and dismemberment of the god, from the Greek myths about Ouranos and Orpheus to the Egyptian myths about Isis and Osiris, there seems to be a consistent pattern whereby the creative, life-giving, good god is overcome by his evil antagonist, who represents death, chaos, and destruction. The evil force kills the god, then cuts up his body into little pieces and scatters them all about in the hope that he will remain dead and be utterly destroyed. But instead of this having the desired effect, to the surprise and frustration of the evil one, everyone and everything in the places where the pieces of the god are placed become godlike themselves: everyone and everything takes on his life-giving and life-affirming essence. Then the god himself is gathered back into a complete whole--in the case of Osiris with the help of his eternal companion the goddess Isis--and resurrected, whereupon he then gathers his myriad sons and daughters, who have sprung up from each bit of his body, into his eternal presence. These myths seem similar to our belief in the sacrament, in which the bread representing the body of God is ritualistically broken up, scattered out, and literally planted within members of the kingdom, whereupon they take upon themselves his essence and renew the covenant by which they have become his sons and daughters. Eventually, students mention that these myths also seem similar to our belief in a literal resurrection of the broken body of Christ and in the gathering of all those who have become his sons and daughters, all of which thwart the plans of the evil one: rather than destroying goodness, evil has inadvertently helped multiply it.

Answer for yourself: How come these ancient people believed things that are so similar to what we believe as Christians with a supposed "unique" and "literal-historical Jesus?" The unstated concern seems to be that these ancient beliefs come from texts not contained in our authorized canon, so how can they contain so much truth? How can they be so similar? In light that the ancient Spiritual Myths were basically the same then why did not these ancient people believe that their "rising" and "dying" gods were "literal-historical" as we have been taught?

The breakthrough seems to come when we begin to realize that the texts we are dealing with--though unthinkably far removed from us in time, space, culture, language, and theological labeling--nevertheless shed real new light on our own Christian belief system and profoundly deepen our understanding of the "Jesus Story". This ancient Spiritual Wisdom and its ancient intended interpretation can help us illuminate these similar texts we read in our Bibles today.

Briefly the Law of Dismemberment teaches that there is a division or partition of Unity of the Divine nature

(God) or essence whereby it is separated into multiple fragments, the breaking up of the Oneness of God into many portions, gods, or "Living Energies". As the principle back of the incarnation, it is the breaking of the unified life of "The One God" on His own high plane into fragments for the sake of taking lodgment in multiple manifestations of matter and multiple human bodies. Plato informs us that as the one life flows forth or descends into manifestation, the farther it proceeds from its source in homogeneity, the weaker is its power and the more numerous is its fragmentation. We saw this principle in the Egyptian Ennead and the Jewish Kabbalah in a previous article. At each step of the descent it must suffer a reduction of its total force, which can only be brought about by "partition" into fragments. It has been described as if "The Great Light" is broken up into lesser lights, the Great Fire into lesser sparks. A perfect example is as if this "The Great Light" is broken by the resistance of matter pictures in the form of this prism that hinders it movement and vibration. This "Unity" is fragments into multiple "manifestations" of "lesser light". This opposition of matter to this "Living Energy" causes this Deity to break up into fragments as it descends, and according to the New Testament miracle there were twelve groups of these "fragments."

Answer for yourself: How could the total power and enormous energy of this "One God" god be embodied in the brain and nervous system of a single human body? It would "blow out the main transformer" of any man to be suddenly subjected to the full dynamic power of such an Energy as that represented by a God. One does not feed a child a whole loaf of bread, but gives it only smaller pieces. In like fashion we are, as Living Souls, to be fed on the broken bread of life.

Answer for yourself: How again could the Deific nature and power be made universally accessible to all men, or distributed amongst them, without dividing itself into fragments, so that a portion might be given to each individual? We see this principle in the feeding of 5000 and 4000 in the New Testament. God breaks up Himself to feed all others all that they can withstand. It is supremely simple; yet this simple principle underlying all theology has been lost out of Christian doctrines. And the world has been rent with bitter warfare, and much of the most sordid inhumanity to man ever known has been perpetrated, because this basic understanding was lost out of theology. The full power of Divinity is way much for mankind his his crude material existence to sustain; it would destroy our very lives. So we receive, each one of us, a reduced portion--all we can contain. This God breaks his Oneness into fragments, and drops a seed, or infant Krst/Karest/Christ, into each human breast. This "Horus/Jesus" comes to lodge in humanity as a baby intent on Spiritually maturing. This is what is being said in Ephesians:

Eph 4:13 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: (KJV)

The myths of the ancient gods in many cases convey this deep meaning of the Law of Dismemberment in the form of the (symbolic) cutting of the body of the god in pieces, which are scattered over the earth, later to be reassembled by the Son, who restores the deity whole. Even with these fables of Osiris, Dionysus, Tammuz, Mithra and many others hinting at the plain truth, Christianity has turned a blind eye to this basic meaning of its own Eucharist.

Answer for yourself: How is this principle expressed in the Law of Dismemberment connected to the term the Lord of Hosts? As each Lord divides into a host of fragments, it is a simple matter to see God in His divided totality as a Lord of a Host. Plato is recorded as saying:

"Each superior god becomes the leader of a multitude, engendered from himself," His split fragments.

But the most astonishing corroboration of this Platonic Theosophy is found in the Bible itself at the very heart of the Lord's own ordination of the Eucharist.

In I Corinthians Paul discretely states the proclamation to him by the Lord himself (in Spiritual vision) of the festival of the Eucharist:

1 Cor 11:23-24 23 For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread: 24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. (KJV)

Here is the bread of Divine life offered to man, and the Lord first broke it! If the Christian Church had all along known what "the broken body of our Lord" meant in terms of Platonic philosophy (the dismemberment of God in the incarnation of Divine Souls into matter/humanity), the whole course of western history might could have been altered mightily. Instead it quarreled over the Greek word rendered "broken" in futile negation of its true meaning, and missed the true gleam of the light of the world.

The Eucharistic symbolism of eating the Lord's body has likewise been missed.

Answer for yourself: What can "eating the Lords' body" mean other than partaking Spiritually of His Spiritual nature?

"God is a spirit" and he can be assimilated only Spiritually. To convey this idea to dull mortal comprehension of the common man the ancient sages devised the outward rite, actually eating symbolic bread and drinking symbolic wine. Instead of simple symbolism teaching a higher Spiritual goal Christian literalists have argued (and fought) for centuries over the question whether the actual life of deity was or was not in the elements themselves! Transubstantiation is the change of the substance of bread and wine into that of the "literal" body and blood of Christ, the change that according to the belief of the Roman Catholic Church occurs in the Eucharist. According to Roman Catholic teaching the bread is changed in the Eucharist into Jesus' body, but, because Jesus, risen from the dead, is living, not only his body is present, but Jesus as a whole, body and blood, Soul and divinity. The same holds for the wine changed into his blood. This is gross blindness if there ever was.

Answer for yourself: In the light of such tragic misunderstanding of these ancient Sacred texts which we wrestle with to our own destruction, and this same tragic misunderstanding and misinterpretation of many other Biblical texts can be duplicated in scores of other doctrines, how can any one fail to see the world's need of the Ancient Wisdom, and the restoration of the radiant Egyptian Religion and Platonic Theosophy along with its proper interpretation?

The Gospel of John, itself a Gnostic work, has told us over and over again about:

John 6:51 51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever:(KJV) John 6:58 58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever. (KJV)

John 6:35 35 And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst. (KJV)

John 6:54 54 Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. (KJV)

Since learning the true meaning of "death" then this one who will be raised up at this last day is not our corruptible body but our Soul.

It is impossible to realize except by long study and reflection to what extent the literalization of the Bible and the Gospel narrative has deprived the human mind of the intellectual nourishment on which it was expected to feed. None but one who has examined these ancient allegories and seen point by point how they have been turned into futile and meaningless miracles and earthly incidents, can appreciate the enormity of the miscarriage of ancient truth in its symbolic transmission to modern "human intelligence." It is, when fully seen, from you own study that you the "truth-seeker" will see what has happened to this ancient Spiritual Wisdom at the hands of Rome for what it really is; namely, the most tremendous wonder of ignorance and superstition perhaps in human history. The ancients used outward nature and human actions to typify and symbolize Spiritual truth. We have converted their Divine Spiritual allegories into the most ineffectual and lame false representation of supposed truth that mankind has ever witnessed. This could not have happened to the degree that it did had not Christianity, in its earliest years, crated a replacement religion based upon purposeful mischaracterization and misinterpretation of the existing ancient Spiritual Wisdom intended to be disseminated upon primarily the ignorant of society.

We now move on the Law of Reminiscence.

THE DESCENT OF THE SOUL & THE LAW OF REMINISCENCE

We return to the Eucharist to begin this article. A phrase in the Lord's ordination of the Eucharist gives us the text for the final principle of Plato's system that has to do with Christian theology. "Do this in remembrance of me," he said.

1 Cor 11:24 24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. (KJV)

Here again we find the ignorance of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and its proper interpretation which has obscured a great truth and a great light in Christianity today. For here we have an announcement by the Lord himself of Plato's other great doctrine which is the Doctrine of Reminiscence. Not familiar with this ancient Spiritual Wisdom, Egyptian Religion, or Platonic Philosophy, we read over our Bibles and never see the hoary ancient intended meanings of these texts.

Paul, himself a Gnostic Christian, was expressing a grand truth of Platonic wisdom, when he wrote of the light which came to him in this spiritual vision. After all my years of study I have come to see religion as being designed primarily for no other motivation than as a means of putting into practice this phase of Platonic philosophy of "remembrance". Religion was not originally merely a "system of worship" but has a far deeper foundation. It was instituted to save the hosts of fragmented gods (Souls/Living Energies) in mortal bodies from the dire fate of losing their Divinity. The very fundamentals of all major world religions are intertwined with the answer to this difficulty. For religions grew out of this relation between the "god" and his animal host. Contrary to popular opinion religions were not originally forms of mere cult sentimentalism and devotion. Religions developed along with their rituals and ethical practices and were so designed by Spiritual Masters to keep mankind in memory of his divine estate while estranged from it in his "incarnation state", and to hold him to the obligations of his covenant that was made before his descent into incarnation. These are intended to raise up the lower self, while keeping himself "unspotted from the world."

Answer for yourself: What is an example? I suppose there is no better example than the Biblical Festivals. Yes, they are adapted and interpreted in the Bible through the Jewish Nation and find expression through the development of a Jewish people and their cultural distinctiveness. But at the very heart of the Biblical Festivals is a message of the Soul's Salvation; all of which is taught in the Heavens to all mankind through the Equinoxes and Solstices of God. Long before the rise of the Jewish Nation these "Divine Appointments with God", what were to be come later recognized in the Bible as the Jewish Feasts and Festivals, were recognized by the Gentile nations for thousands of years as "celestial teaching events" concerning the salvation of the Soul.

These "incarnated Souls" were threatened with total forgetfulness of their real nature once incarnated into this dense matter called the human body. That is why Gnosticism says: "Know thyself". In fact it says "Know who thou art, know from where you have come, and know where you go when you die".

Religion. along with its dogmas and ritual was designed to be a set of psychological exercises which would subtly revive and stimulate the memory of these incarnated "Souls" of their former celestial state. It is said that one of the Nine Muses was Mnemosyne, the goddess of Memory, and Mercury had the function of awakening dead memories. Horus in Egypt came to awaken the memory of his father Osiris in the grave. Paul admonishes his followers to "awaken" from their Spiritual slumber as well. He calls them to awaken unto righteousness while incarnated in these "dead bodies" of matter which can influence our Souls so negatively with sinful slumber.

Rom 13:11 11 And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. (KJV)

1 Cor 15:34 34 Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame. (KJV)

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

From these connotations we are enabled to discern a totally new force of meaning in our word "awake" and "remember." If the gods on coming to save humanity were "dismembered" or fragmented into individuals, then the resurrection or return to their primal unity in their glorification at the end of the aeon would naturally be a "re-membering" of the divided parts.

The ancients taught that the brotherhood of humanity consists simply in this reassembling in a common spirit of unity the individualized fragments of the twelve Lords of Hosts, the twelve tribes of Israel. Horus is said to have come to reconstitute his dismembered father.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

Translated from allegory to spiritual meaning this can signify only that the Christ spark in us is to grow and expand until it "leavens the whole lump" of humanity and animates the whole of the human race. Paul told us we are all members of one body, of which Christ is the head; but habits of literal thought have prevented us from sensing this in an intellectual or spiritual way. Our minds and hearts are to be fused in one great spirit of love and harmony, as we, as individual fragmented members of a larger Spiritual Unity, remember our true Spiritual natures and identity and become motivated to enhance the glory of the god shining within us ever more brightly unto the day of the perfection not only of ourselves but the whole of humanity. As we separated in our descent into these "bodies of death", so we merge again into a mighty unity as we ascend back to the father of lights as "one body of Krst/Karest/Christ". This is the reconstitution of the dismembered suffering god, broken upon the cross of matter, in order that we lower men might ascend into the kingdom of Divine Intelligence (Nous) and return to our Father in Heaven as the "prodigal sons" of incarnated experience. The reconstitution is indeed the re-membering our broken divinity, the re-collection of the scattered fragments of the broken body of the Divine Lord when incarnated into matter. Only by the study of ancient origins in Egyptian Religion and Platonic philosophy can we see the grand spiritual sense back of these figures and terms that are tragically misunderstood in Christianity today and in our Bibles. All symbols had their origin in simple ideas, in natural symbolism, which, however, were the expressions of the loftiest Spiritual truths of early Spiritual wisdom.

This reassembling of the scattered fragments is the basis and genius of our human brotherhood. The individuals of the race, being of one identical essence, are kindred in nature. This must be "remembered". There is no room for sexism or racism or bigotry; for we all are "one in The One". This must be "remembered". But being attached to animal bodies, the "god" in us is subject to the separative selfish tendencies of the lower man, until he educates this animal nature in us of the the higher motivations of altruism and community of interest with others. As an animal he wars with his fellows, is possessive and self-seeking, under the evolutionary impulse of self-preservation brought up from former experience of previous experiences and incarnations in the animal kingdom. But as a "god" he revives the memory of his kinship with his celestial brothers and Soul travelers, and in the glow of that warm recognition that his brother is himself (remembrance), he learns to look upon his fellow-man with that love which is described as the Spiritual expression of this whole cosmos.

We conclude our study on the Descent of the Soul with this final article.

We have made mention in earlier articles in this series that there exists what is called in theology "the descent of the gods." What make this all the more confusing is that this "Descent of the Soul" into matter, this "Descent of Living Energies", this "Descent of the Deific Mind of God" into physical matter and manifestation is called by many names down through history. We find in various theologies this Cosmic Event called everything from the "expulsion of the angels," "the fall of Lucifer and his hosts," "the fall from heaven," and the more philosophical "descent of the Soul." These many descriptions relate to the first step in the series of pre-historical episodes which climaxed in the establishment of humanity on earth and the creation of human nature that contains both a natural and a supernatural element.

The common denominator in most religions is that man is an animal and a "god" in union. The ancient religions all attest a common belief that there were animals on earth and angels in heaven; and the counsels of cosmic intelligence decreed that the angels, or the "gods" should join forces with the animals and be their "gods". What is amazing is that this ancient wisdom records for us that this experience of "incarnation" was intended to be an education to both involved parties, both the "living energies of Heaven" and the "living material beings" on Earth. It was believed that the effort to overcome matter's inertia and resistance to the "Descent of the gods" and the sensual urges of the flesh would develop more dynamic spiritual initiative for the gods. The "incarnation" was believed to force these "Descending gods" to develop more of their potential and Divine power to gain mastery over the elementary forces of the physical and animal world. Well, this sound simply but it is not as your and my life testifies.

Here is where it gets ever interesting. In the ancient Spiritual Wisdom there exists hints that imply and show that the Soul's obligation to leave their home of blissful rest in Heaven, in some dreamy sub-consciousness in the ethereal spheres and suffer the hardships of earth life in gross animal bodies was in some part at least a measure of karmic retribution for some past failure or oversight elsewhere. This is amazing to read in these ancient spiritual accounts. Pride, impertinence and insolence are ascribed to these "descended Souls" by Greek theology. Thus we see that this ancient Spiritual wisdom ascribe to the Soul that its "incarnation" is due, at least in part, to past sins or neglect of duty. In so we are led to believe that these Souls sank into the depths of sensualism and animalism. Thus the "incarnation" is portrayed as a type of "karmic retribution" that was imposed upon these Souls for their "evolution of Spirituality"; the incarnation was both a "penalty" and an "opportunity" to complete "what is lacking".

This "descent of the Soul" to Earth is retold in the expulsion of Satan and his hosts from heaven in Paradise Lost and in the Book of Revelation. So presented, this descent of the Soul is viewed by many people as either as a mythical unreality or an impenetrable chapter in celestial history. So being it is discarded from serious consideration in religious matters by many. In spite of all of this, this Descent of the Soul in its various "disguises" and "presentations in masquerade" is, however, the central situation of all Sacred Books and religions and must be restored to its pivotal place of importance if we ever hope of correctly interpreting our Bibles and other Sacred Books as I have maintained before. The doctrine of the "descent" of the Soul is crucial for the interpretation not only of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom but the stories in our Bible as well. It is this event, and this even only, as you will come to see as our studies advance, is what the Scriptures of the world are building their narratives upon.

This same ancient Spiritual Wisdom teaches that there existed an original twelve legions of deities. Of these "twelve", ten "fell" into the river of incarnation and are now passing through the experiences of what we call "life". This ancient Spiritual Wisdom goes on to state that at the conclusion of this "celestial-terrestrial" adventure and pilgrimage, after many incarnations for each individual member, they are to return to their celestial abodes, transfigured and further divinized. In our Bibles we have this grand design right before our eyes but we don't recognize it. As we add the "keys" for recognizing this grand epic of created existence then our Bibles burst open before eyes pregnant with meaning we never saw before.

Answer for yourself: What is but a common example?

We read this in the "Prodigal Son" allegory but never quite see it. The allegory of the Prodigal Son is a short symbolic depiction and representation of this evolutionary Descent of the Soul and return to "the Father" of all. There are few religious books of any ancient nation that does not deal more or less directly with that same "fall" of the Soul into matter in its various disguises and stories. To see the "descent" as an integral function of cosmic process and not as a heartbreaking "fall," it is quite necessary to expound in the articles that follow both Egyptian religion as well as a portion of the Orphic-Platonic cosmogony. It is here that we discover the "keys" to interpreting correctly our later Bibles. Life is all about "descents and ascents". Beginning from the descent of the Soul into this material world, we will go though many more descents. Some are an absence of light, some a darkness of substance. Yet, every descent has a corresponding ascent. Indeed, the purpose of the descent is to reach a place higher than the one that preceded the descent. In reality we are climbing "Jacob's Ladder"; the ladder back to Heaven.

John 3:13 13 And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, ... (KJV)

So, having laid a through foundation, let us begin with the origin of creation itself as understood by the ancient Spiritual Masters. After years of study and research I have found that it is impossible to understand the allegories of the Bible without a knowledge of ancient methods of sacred writing, and of the ancient philosophies.

All things were believed to have proceeded from what was is ultimately "the One Life". When we delve back into this ancient Spiritual Wisdom we find that the name for the Supreme Power was commonly "The One". All things ultimately resolve into the primordial One, since they emanate from that One in the beginning. Birth, life, death, and rebirth is the "Pattern" of "The One". Before manifestation takes place from "The One", all "existence" and "being" is homogeneous, undifferentiated, and undifferentiated. A uniform similitude and similarity exists and there is not yet levels of differentiation and complexity. All things are "the same" existing in a "celestial potentiality". It is all One Essence, alike in every part, if parts exist they are best described as existing only in "Mind/Thought" only. This is the "Word" of which we read about in John chapter 1 in the New Testament. On this website I deal in several articles about this "Logos/Mind" and they are very enlightening.

But in such state and condition of unmanifestation, this "Mind" is yet "unconscious, asleep, inactive". The Hindu faith has a term for this "pre-creation" condition called "Pralaya". And out of this "inactivity" and "slumber" this "Logos/Mind" must awake, for it sleeps only in alternate turns with waking activity, as do all its creatures made in its likeness. If you look around in Nature we see this same principle.

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

This "Logos/Mind" passes, in cycles of "activity" and "inactivity" which is similar to our thinking of movement from "death to life and back again", in eternity which has no beginning and no end.

To awake and come into "being" it must by force of logic perform an operation upon its own self, is own nature which is the first ground of manifestation. That is why the Egyptian Religion said that God "brought forth" from himself due to some causative action done "to Himself". This "Logos/Mind" cannot create a universe in which to live and provide the avenue for His own "Conscious experience" without breaking His Unity apart into duality. For it must become Consciousness on the one side, in order to know what and how to create, and Matter on the other, if it is to have material substance with which to create! So it must split its primal Oneness into a dualism which however is still comprehended under this Unity. It becomes "two in one" or the One in two. The One has not become Two, but a "twoness" in Unity.

This Deific Mind, this Cosmic Mind/Logos cannot create without throwing Itself into the condition of being at a tension between two aspects of Itself, on the strength of which tension it can exert its shapeless Living Energies (Egypt called these "Neteru"). These "Neteru" are the Living Energies of this Unity that will bring "The One" in Conscious Existence of Itself in Matter. As the ancient Spiritual Wisdom explains it "The One" must therefore manifest Itself as the two ends of a polarity, positive and negative. It must become polarized in relation to Itself; and so it takes on the double-aspect characterizations of:

- Spirit/Energy and Matter,
- male and female,
- consciousness and the vehicle for its expression
- attraction and repulsion,
- visible and invisible,
- real and actual.

This "differentiated One" must be the central balance for such "Duality" and in so doing It must become, out of itself, subject, knowing, and object, to be known. Now, that is deep. This Cosmic Deific Mind/Logos, or "Living Though/Energy" has for Its entire purpose to arise out of an unconscious slumber and become ever more awake and more concretely conscious of Itself and does so by "experiencing" all manner of existences which came from this "Unity fragmenting into Duality". Since there is nothing of which it can be conscious save Itself, it was necessary for "The One" to be the sum of all parts of "everything". In so doing the aim of Life for this "Cosmic Mind/Logos" is thus ever to become more Self-conscious of Itself and does so though experiencing all facets of this Creative process and its manifestations on descending planes of existences and matter. "Down the line" we encounter the physical plane of existence with its mineral kingdom, the plant kingdom, and the animal kingdom, and the human kingdom. "This One" resides in all and as Quantum Physics teaches us today that all these "physical existences and kingdoms" are found to have "levels of living consciousness" within them at the sub-atomic levels and that all are "interconnected" with this "One". Therefore It must, as this ancient Spiritual Wisdom attests, "This One", now a duality no longer "asleep", set Itself as object over against Itself as subject, and down the ages and the cycles ever thus contemplate Itself, experience Itself, and come into Consciousness of Itself. It is both the seeing eye and the thing seen, as all profound esoteric philosophy asserts. This ancient Egypt depicted as the eye of Horus which embodies this concept.

Now we did not grow up in the ancient Religion of Egypt but we did receive a "summary statement" in the Book of Genesis from the Hebrews who were instructed in these matters while living in Egypt. As Genesis puts it, God effected His creation, gazed upon it with gratification and pronounced it "good". To see His creation He had to materialize His thoughts, the radiations of His subjective aspect. For "This One" creates by thoughts. He must see His ideas form like concrete before Himself, take on various manifestations of matter and materiality in various forms and come to visible manifestation for Himself and His creatures.

So "The One's" expression proceeds from Unity to Duality, and from Duality it runs further onward to infinite Multiplicity. We see this again in Genesis as there is a division, or multiplication if you will, with every day of creation and things get much more complex with each passing thought from "This One". Multiple manifestation is achieved by the operation of a principle which is easily comprehended. The Kabbalah explains this perfectly as it should again having its origin in ancient Egypt. This Kabbalah is basically a "ladder from Heaven" whereby this "Logos/Deific Mind" manifests Himself in descending wave of matter and materialization of Himself. This is why I love the Egyptian Creation Accounts as they expounded this over and over again so that mankind might know and understand his true origin and created goal. As life has split into Spirit and Matter, the one moving and "alive", the other inert, the Unity of the mobile is broken up into multitudes as it moves against the immobile as its "descends".

The lighter essence, Spirit/Energy/Light, is broken and divided as it moves outward against the resistance of matter. We can grasp this idea perfectly as we look at how light is shined through a prism, itself the material resistance to Energy, and in so doing we see this fragmentation and separation of Light/Energy but on a much smaller scale. This is a Universal Law. Outward bound from is Source, it divides and divides and on its return it reunites! Life descends, "falls," from the summit of its primal unity down into the arms of matter, dividing as it goes.

Answer for yourself: Are you thinking? Did you notice I used the word "fall"? Here comes a big question. Could it just be, just be, that since Biblical Judaism and Egyptian Religion taught no "original sin" that we have completely misunderstood the ancient Spiritual Tradition of the "fall of mankind"? Could this ancient Spiritual Tradition have nothing to do with sin but was all about the Descent of the Soul or the "Falling" into Matter (creation of mankind) of this Deific Mind/Logos? Sure, man, matter, is capable of sin but this is not the focus of this "Fall". I truly believe having studies these topics in detail over the years that mankind, somewhere along the way, lost the true meaning to "the Fall". Space does not allow for this study right now but we do address this on our "Astrotheology" website.

Any so-called "fall" is that of the Divine Soul "falling" into matter. This is not meant to be a negative event but a necessary stage in cosmic evolution of this Divine Consciousness. Just as electricity needs a physical machine to realize its potential, the Divine Soul needs the human body as a vehicle for its realization on its Spiritual potential on earth. The Divine Soul had to leave its "Garden of Eden" or paradisiacal realm of existence in order to come to the earth to "grow up". When you do the studies you will come to see as I and many others have that the "fall" of Adam and Eve is a crude patriarchal mythos created by a male priesthood, intended to justify sexism and repression. It has succeeded beyond even their wildest expectations down through recorded history and flourishes in the world yet today. Again this just typifies the tragic consequences of the loss of the "keys" for the correct interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which we completely misunderstand when reading our Bibles today.

Division is a logical necessity if God is to multiply Himself, because Unity can not Multiply out of Itself without first dividing Itself. And it can not divide Itself unless it "falls" or "descends" against resistance. The importance of this understanding for clear grasp of basic theology can not be overstressed. This means that the "Neteru", called "Angels" in Judaism and Christianity, these "Living Energies", "fall" by Divine ordinance, and not by literal folly of rebellion against deity. We got it wrong a long time ago. Call it what you will but evolutionary force from "Divine Thought" brings them down from Heaven to Earth.

I am sure you have noticed but the wind does not commonly blow a steady clip, but comes in rhythmic puffs and gusts. Wind is often symbolic of Spirit in Scripture as it "breath" (wind) in Scripture. This is a Spiritual Archetype to teach us some things. This should teach us that creative impulses act similarly, they "ebb" and "flow". The ancients recognized this with every changing of the Age and the Precession of the Equinox and the evolutionary step-wise Spiritual Maturation of mankind. Every successive age brought with it an evolutionary Spiritual advance for the Souls of mankind. This is why Moses was adamant about the "new interpretation" and "message of God" that caused the Exodus when he wished to change the religious symbolism of the bull of Taurus to the lamb/ram of Aries and was met with such staunch resistance by the Priests of Atum-Ra. Today mankind lives in the waning days of the Age of Pisces awaiting God's new message for the Souls of mankind at the beginning of the Age of Aquarius. We truly live at an exciting time.

The ancients taught that every cycle of energization of the Universe finishes its work in seven waves or impulses, and the sub-cycles have also seven waves. In these "7 waves" Divine Life projects its formative Living Energies outward, or matterward from Itself, in surge after surge. Each one carries the impulse as far as it will go under its original force, or until the wave is brought to a dead standstill by the inertia of matter, the resisting medium of created existence (remember the prisms). Each "falling" of this "Living Energy" or power comes to a stop, locked in the embracing arms of material manifestation. In this clasp of matter the capacities of the two poles of "being" interplay, and in symbolic language they "impregnate" each other, and in so doing they generate a growth of new life, and build up what is termed a plane or level or kingdom of nature, with creatures embodying the type of life there engendered suitable for that plane of "existence".

1 Cor 15:39-44 39 All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds. 40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. 41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. 42 So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption (matter); it is raised in incorruption (Living Energy/Soul): 43 It is sown in dishonour (matter); it is raised in glory (Living Energy/Soul): it is sown in weakness (matter); it is raised in power (Living Energy/Soul): 44 It is sown a natural body (matter); it is raised a spiritual body (Living Energy/Soul). There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. (KJV)

Thus there are terrestrial and celestial worlds (as Paul says), worlds of "physical materialization experienced through sensation" and worlds of "thought", physical and ethereal planes, material and spiritual bodies, heavens, underworlds, etc. And these beings, these "Neteru", these "Living Energies" that have Emanated from "The One" that subsist on these planes of existence range from high divinity down to man are the "gods" and "Living Energies" possessing various levels of "being" in this Tree of Life seen in ancient mythology.

The capacities of life on each level are expressed and given opportunity for Consciousness by the organic beings built up upon each level of "descent" of the Deific Mind/Logos. Thus each kingdom has its own specific nature and determinations. But life is not stagnant or unmoving; it is reproductive, forward-moving, progressive and divides into multiplicity. It creates anew, in its turn, on each level of "being", and passes the stream of creative force on down the line of this Tree of Life. Thus the succession of waves of projection of "Living Energies" actually "falls" down this ladder or sorts, each one carrying the formative force one surge farther outward for its Source. On and on it goes, establishing the kingdoms of nature and the living subjects on them. The contiguous planes form a link of connection from top to bottom of the series, and this is the Tree of Life. Important for us to note each level of "existence" bears a definite relation to its neighbor on either side of its own plane. This "link" to adjoining planes of existence, one "above" and one "below", is a Universal Law. This is the basis for all evolution and evolvement of life in manifested diversity. This explains why, in the constitution of mankind, a Soul and a body are linked together. It may be called the great Law of Incubation. We saw this before.

Each plane of "being" is mother to the life on the plane above it (the womb) and father to that of the plane below it. This plane of "being", this womb of "Motherhood", receives from above the seed of higher life and anchors them in the womb of its soil, or matter, gestates them and eventually gives them their new birth. This is the function of motherhood. And matter (Latin "mater", or "mother") is the universal mother. This matter, this "mother", having received from above, also gives the impulse to the order below; and as giver it is

is no longer "passive" but "active" and becomes now the "father" function. This plane of "being" is feminine to life above, masculine to life beneath. This is the ridge between two worlds of "being" and "existence". But it is important to note that at each step of transmission or "fall" or "descent" this "Living Energy" suffers a diminishing of its power and a weakening of its force, and accordingly a further and further fragmentation and division. The "matter" of each plane on the downward or involutionary track become more dense in atomic structure than that of the ones above it. The living bodies it provides as houses for this "Descending Living Energy" cannot contain the power of this undivided Unity, therefore this "Power" of God must be stepped down if it is to be incorporated properly in the bodies of a lower kingdom. To effect this reduction in dynamic power of the Divine "incarnated" into these successive manifestations must be lessened for the planes beneath and is done so in successive manner. Hence the unit charge received from the plane above by each life structure on any plane must, in "falling" one step further downward in the created order, be again broken up into a large number of fragments (Law of Dismemberment), each of which will become the energizing Soul of a lower body. The Greek philosophers have a saying for this. They said that "the gods distribute divinity," scattering its higher units abroad from plane to plane, the units multiplying in number, but diminishing in power, as the stream flows on. This is what ancient theology expresses by "the river of life." The Orphic system calls this phenomena "rivers of vivification," which, they also say, "proceed from on high as far as to the last of things," or to the lowest stratum of the mineral kingdom. And as these "Living Energies" or "gods" distribute divinity, the secondary ranks in each case are said to "participate according to their capacity."

Now here is where it gets very interesting. The ancients said and wrote that these "Living Energies" or "gods" pour out their life for the vivifying of all lower beings and are a partaker of their grace. But more than that they called this "Descent of Living Energy" by another term. They said these "Living Energies" or "god" had "Shed His Blood" (life) and gave "their blood for the life of the worlds". It would be when reading this ancient Spiritual Wisdom that I would come to see that the ancient theologies, that long predated Christianity, spoke of God "shedding His blood" for mankind but this was but an allegory for the Descent of the Logos into matter and never has a "literal-historical" connotation. I would come to see that all old ancient theologies of the nations assert that the blood of the gods, or of God, mixed with the clay of earth, makes the "red earth". If you have guessed this "red earth" is the etymological signification of "Adam" in Hebrew, i.e., man. Mankind is compounded of the red life-blood of deity (using natural symbolism for Living Energy) and the dust of the ground (matter), which in Hebrew is "Adamah". "Adamah" is the the feminine or material aspect of Adam, Spirit, itself. Here we have the same story we detailed above; one plane of existence "giving" of itself to the plane below to that "life" might manifest. This Living Energy of the Cosmos, in its descent, continually fertilized the lower levels of matter to gestate new forms of being for His self-awareness and Consciousness of Himself. The ancients were telling the same story over and over; namely, that Deity mixed together Spirit/Living Energy with "matter" to make man.

It bears restating that if life is to be produced in eternal renewal, in multiplied individualization, it becomes necessary for any living creature on each plane to produce a multiple progeny of the seeds of its own life and "plant" or bury them in the soil of the kingdom immediately below it. This "planting of life in these lower kingdoms of matter" were called "death". In incarnation of life in successive lower kingdoms they were said by the ancient Spiritual Wisdom to go first to their "death," after which they are reborn or resurrected in the sprouting of the seeds and their growth back to maturity. Each generation lives anew in its regeneration, but multiplied by as many times itself as the number of seeds it produced and successfully germinated in the plane below.

Let me illustrate this. The danelion buries its seeds in the soil of the kingdom beneath it, the mineral. The animal's life is embodied in a structure built up of vegetable material taken in each day as food. The human is rooted in an animal body who eats the animal. Now comes the overriding fact in theology. The lowest ranks of "gods", these "Living Energies", in their position just above humanity, must, by the Law of Incubation, send down their seeds, plant (incarnate) them in the bodies of humans, in order to merit their next cyclical generation of Divine life in that ground! Centuries of incoherent theologies have not told the millions of hungry sheep this plain truth as to why man nurtures a winged spirit of intelligence--a Soul--in his physical body. The Soul of man is in his body as a seed of Divinity planted, buried, and which has gone to its "death" in the soil of the human kingdom. The greatest truth that can be told as human beings is that our bodies are each the gestating womb of a "god". As said St. Paul, the Christ, this Deific Mind, this Logos is being "formed within" each mortal body. The only "literal-historical" Christ is YOU.

Man has a Soul because his physical human self is the breeding ground of the seeds of Divinity. And man's Divinity is, or begins as, a seed. His duty is to cultivate the growth of that Deific embryo. This is why the Egyptian Christ, Horus, was depicted as:

- a child....Harpokrates (The infant Horus) As a child he represented the new born sun (symbolic for this Cosmic Living Energy) and was often pictured being suckled by Isis. He was usually represented as a seated child, sucking his thumb, his head was shaved except for the sidelock of youth.
- Horus Behudety... In the form of Horus of Edfu, he represented the midday sun. As symbolic of this "maturing Living Energy" in mankind Horus of Edfu fights a great battle against Seth (darkness...flesh) and an army of conspirators. He is pictured as a winged sun-disk or as a hawk headed lion.

Socrates said this "Deific embryo" is gestating in the womb of his physical body, and he must become a philosophic "midwife" and aid in its birth. Plato reports the Demiurgus in the notable speech to the legions of devas in the Timaeus as saying that "whatever is immortal and Divine" in the human makeup, "of that I will furnish the seed and the beginning. It is your business to do the rest; to weave together mortal and immortal natures." Thus we should by now see that the upper plane furnishes the seeds of "Divinity" and "godhood" and the lower plane furnishes the soil or garden or womb for its development. Divinity, this Soul of Divine Mind is planted in "the garden of the world" and is destined to germinate and blossom to the "fullness of the stature of Christ" in humanity.

A germinal unit of Spirit must be incubated as the "god" in a body of material structure. This Divine economy gives every creature its "Soul", which is its "god". This is Emanuel, God with us, the hope of our glory. God is everywhere, within and without; but His son, the Christos, is only within. If he is not sought there, he will not be found. Man's deity is not a personage in a distant land and time as Rome would have us believe, but within us all. Deprivation of this knowledge and the ancient interpretation of the Sacred Wisdom, much of which is in our Bibles today, has crippled mankind's efforts to arouse "Christ from the dead" and He is in need of resurrection in mankind hearts today.

That every living thing is a union of Spirit/Living Energy and matter, Soul and body, was preserved in Egyptian Religion by the ancient Egyptians. This great cosmic truth was symbolized by the oldest and most meaningful of signs. The great symbol carried in the hands of the gods was the Ankh, or crux ansata (ansated cross), a "T" topped with the circle. The circle is symbolic for the "womb" and is the female symbol, the boundless infinite matter, the mother of all things in endless round. The vertical line is the male symbol which is symbolic for a ray of intelligence, the Soul, this Living Energy, that goes out from the heart of the universe to impregnate the worlds of manifestation. The horizontal line is the line of division between the two, at the point where they are joined and are in "association". It is the cross-line between them. The Cross explains the Law of Incubation. This is the true meaning of the Cross where God was crucified in matter as the ancients once said; not on some old wooden tree. Egypt came to understand this first in the Sky and Heavens and then in Nature itself and applied the "Pattern" to mankind. The great doctrine of the "descent" or "fall" can now be clearly realized. Deity, in the form of its seed potency, must descend from its own plane into the soil of the plane below it and be incubated there. Like the Prodigal Son allegory, it must leave its own home, its Father's house, and go out into another country (matter), where it will be an exile and a stranger. And like the youth going out from home into a rough world to make a fight of it under temptation and gross influences, he must undergo a long toilsome trial and testing and crucifixion (incarnation into matter to overcome the animal nature and perfect the Soul's holiness) to become an eventual victor and return with honor to our Father's house.

The Jewish Christ has said: "I came forth from the Father and am come into the world." Behind this passage lays the true meaning of the "Trinity" which is so badly misunderstood in Christianity today. The proper understanding of this "Trinity" is the heart of the mystery of life and the foundation for all theology. Plotinus (204/5 -- 270 C.E.), is generally regarded as the founder of Neoplatonism. He is one of the most influential philosophers in antiquity after Plato and Aristotle. Plotinus, the Neo-Platonist of the third century, imparted the doctrine of the "Trinity" to Christianity through Augustine. Plotinus has bequeathed to the world an analogy with a natural phenomenon by which it is possible, with the additional link of a findings of modern science, to see the simple meaning of a doctrine that has frustrated comprehension for sixteen centuries. He said that we can understand how one deity can have three aspects if we think of the Sun, its light and its active energy. The Sun in Heaven (the Sky) is comparable to the Father of the Trinity. It is a glowing globe of fire. The fire of the sun does not go forth into the ends of space, but abides at home. Like a lighter that you "click" in dark room, the fire stays contained to the lighter and does not leave the lighter. The fire stays but it generates, Emanates, and sends forth its "son", as the "light". This is the second aspect or "person." Understand that this "light" is of the same essence with the Father, yet not the same. And the Psalmist has said:

Ps 43:3 3 O send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles. (KJV)

This ray of light "Emanated" from the fire (God) is impotent, inactive, passive, quiet, noncreative and can generate no life until, and here is the "key", until it "falls" upon a surface of a material body. If the analogy is the Sun then there is no life upon Earth until this "ray of light/Energy" penetrates and impregnates "Mother Earth". The ancients disguised such "Science" by says this latent "potential" was asleep and stressed the need for its awaking "in matter". Only by association with and interaction upon its opposite pole, matter, can the light of Spirit, this "Living Energy" (the Son) from the "fire" (Father) come to its creative function. There is required the interaction of its rays with a resistant surface to bring out its own powers from latency to potency. Now we have already seen that "matter", from which we get the word "Mary", is the "mother" of life, while Spirit/Living Energy (God) is its Father. And, as everywhere, Father Spirit can not become creative until He unites with and impregnates, or "incarnates" mother matter! His ray of power, His "Living Energy, as His Son, is in a sense the phallic Emanation of His seed, and the seed must become coactive with the unfertilized egg of life in matter's bosom to bring a new birth to "being". This light, this "Living Energy" of God would remain uncreative unless it entered the body or womb of mother life and aroused the slumbering potentialities of the plane therein. And herein is the solution of a riddle of mythology which has baffled and horrified Christian moralists since day one. We find in the myths of the gods and solar saviors that this "Son" of deity comes to "create" with his own mother. Morally, and not possessing the "keys" for this proper understanding millions have read this and turn away in horror not comprehending what they read since taking this Divine Law and Divine Truth as if "historical-literal". It was never intended to be interpreted this way. Horus is called "the Bull of his Mother"--Isis. The sons of God marry their own mothers! "Horrible! Detestable!" shouted the offended Church Fathers who possessed few if any keys to this ancient Spiritual Mystery of the Incarnated Soul. Yet the Son of present life marries and impregnates His own mother every time an kernel of wheat falls into the ground and germinates! The implications of this determination are tremendous, for if Spirit, this "Living Energy", cannot give birth to its archetypal conceptions without the implementation of matter in actual creation, neither can it function apart from matter in philosophy! God therefore "wakes" and "sleeps" as we said before and creation comes in "waves". This is the "Pattern".

Let us look at the Trinity once again and the Greek elaborators of the Orphic wisdom in delineating the aspects of Divine activity. Of the Father they assert that he "abides." A Hindu script has the passage in which Lord Krishna says: "Having impregnated the universe with a portion of myself, I yet remain." He remains on his own plane. He is the unmoved Mover and the uncaused Cause. He is without experience himself, delegating the function of acquiring it to his Son. He is unaffected, undivided, unchanging and undiminished. Of the Son they say that He "proceeds" or "Emanates" in order to impregnate matter with the "Divine Idea/Thought" and thus "convert it" into the will of God. He bears the Father's potentialities out into all the universe. He is the radiating arm of His Father's power. He goes out to do the will of His parent and become His ambassador in the worlds that are coming into "being" due to his "incarnation" within them. He becomes God's spoken Word "actualized". He conveys the Logoic ideas of this Deific Mind out upon the bosom of His Father's Emanations to imprint them upon latent matter. And proceeding from the bosom of the Father, He goes forth into every condition which is precisely the opposite of that of the Father. He will become subject to "experience" and "suffer" all things, while the Father abides unmoved. He will be affected, divided, changed and be sadly diminished (as he "falls" down the ladder of Emanation", suffering the loss of all that He enjoyed with the Father. He will endure all experiences in every kingdom (incubation), will be fragmented into "partial natures" (dismemberment), will enter a moving stream of endless change, and will be reduced to a minimum of His glory on the cross of suffering (the incarnation into matter as the ancient Wisdom attests). Of the Holy Spirit they say that it "converts" matter to its own likeness; "is converted" by matter to its next higher estate; and finally "returns." This is where "remembrance" comes in.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever read this before in your Bibles? Sure you have. It is the great "Kenosis" of Philippians 2 once again.

Phil 2:6-8 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

Here we find this "crossings" of planes of existence, this "cross of matter" in which God's Son, as the Logos, comes to rest against the resistance of matter. This again, if you have forgotten, was likened to a crucifixion by the ancient sages. It is the same Metaphysical reality expressed as allegory which sadly is mistaken for some "literal-historical" even of another when in fact this is your story; my story.

Answer for yourself: Then who or what is the Holy Spirit, the Third Person? It is the first Ray of Divine life, undergoing its final conversion into active creative agency. It is latent power of God's mind, this Logos, transformed into working potency. It is static Divinity who has now "awakened from its sleep" and become energized and "moving". Plato said that anything that moves is "alive"; both visible and invisible. It is God's Logos, or Word, carrying the command of His creative Voice, now converted into manifestations of "Living Energy" that moves upon matter and builds a hosts of worlds and planes of existence. It is, finally, God's Spirit, His Living Energy at work; no longer static, no longer "asleep", or merely slumbering potential, but now released upon matter in moving force. It is the working of this "Divine Creative Mind" imprinting God's Deific Mind upon matter. It is this "Christ in us, being formed in us (matter), the hope of our glory"!

All "history" takes place at the point where the light, or latent radiation of Divine Living Energy or force, comes in contact with or impregnates matter, earth, the mother. For our purpose this is mankind. For in mankind (matter) this Descent of Living Incarnational Energy is halted and Spirit/Living Energy has been implanted (incarnated) in the heart of matter and in so doing this resistance awakens its slumbering potential. This begins a process of new growth, new life, which is set off by the union of the Divine Intellect with the latent energy of matter. Active Energy impregnates latent Energy and "life" occurs. And this new growth begins the evolutionary stage, which is called by the ancients the "return unto the Father". The cycle of "Descent" is completed with the "return"; but after an eon of rest life gets ready to make its next rhythmic movement outward to unite again with the Mother. And God grows in awareness of Himself through this continued experience of "incarnational" growth.

Thus, in these 3 articles on the Descent of the Soul and the articles on the Laws of incubation, dismemberment, and remembrance we have laid out for the reader what lies behind our "Jesus Story" which is a Metaphysical reality which has been crudely mistaken as a "literal-historical" even of another, when the truth of the "matter", excuse the pun, is that it is the most glorious story ever imaginable, it is your story, and my story. Glory be to God for His kindness in opening our minds to these truths.

THE DESCENT OF THE SOUL #4

We continue our study into the "Descent of the Soul" by looking at Milton's Paradise Lost (1667) is an epic poem by the 17th century English poet John Milton. It was originally published in 1667 in ten books. A second edition followed in 1674, redivided into twelve books (mimicking the division of Virgil's Aeneid) with minor revisions throughout and a note on the versification.

Answer for yourself: Do you recall from an earlier article the subject of Virgil's Aeneid? It was an allegory of the Metaphysical Descent of the Soul into matter. We should make the connection that this later work by Milton is but a "retelling" of the same story.

Milton's Paradise Lost concerns the Christian story of the "Fall" of the Angels and Man. Satan has been cast down into an abyss (Hell) within Chaos, a place of utter darkness, far from God. Satan next awakens the millions of "fallen" angels and speaks encouragingly and seemingly courageously, conveying hope to them. Satan and others decide to research man and his weaknesses and try to seduce him to their cause. Satan approaches and breaches the gates of hell in his trip to Earth, taking with him Sin and Death. Satan's arrives on earth and God prophesies man's disobedience. Satan views Adam and Eve and tempts her in a dream. Raphael, an Angel from God, comes to warn them and tells of the war in Heaven and tells them of the victory of "the Son". Raphael tells him or them of the creation of the world and man and the plan of creation. Adam wants to know of their own origins. Raphael is willing to tell some, but warns of the limits to their knowledge, which they must not go beyond--God has left some things unrevealed and incomprehensible to them and too much knowledge can be dangerous. Raphael does tell this Adam and Eve that man will attain the way to Heaven through merit. In spite of all this Satan succeeds in tempting Eve, and she corrupts Adam. The Son confronts Adam and Eve hiding in the "garden" where upon we see Adam's remorse and reconciliation "with stipulations". Michael appears to them, says their prayers have been heard, and says they are to be expelled from the garden. Eve laments, and Michael counsels resignation and recognition that her place is beside her husband. Adam wonders if they will no longer be seen by God. Michael offers consolation-- God is everywhere to be found and will always be with them. Michael puts Eve to sleep, then takes Adam to a mountain and shows him visions of the future: of exotic cities and civilizations; the effects of their sin: the murder by Cain of Abel, sickness and suffering, aging, and death (for which Michael counsels temperance in life, living life well, and acceptance of the many forms of death), Seth's pious descendants, Giants of mighty bone, Enoch, the effects of ill-mated marriages, war, rape, luxury, adultery, Noah and the ark and flood, a new covenant with Noah's descendants, the rainbow. Adam recognizes that future men would not want to know what will befall them or their descendents. The luxuriously wealthy are devoid of virtue. All will turn degenerate and depraved, until a son of light [the Messiah] shall admonish them and show them the path to righteousness like another Noah with an ark. He will show them a new covenant, pledging never to destroy the world again with flood, but fire will "purge all things new, Both heaven and earth, wherein the just shall dwell [in the Millennium]. Adam is consoled and feels greatly instructed to know all this foreknowledge, and vows to obey and love with fear the only God. Michael tells him that he has attained sufficient wisdom and should hope no higher. Adam should emphasize faith, virtue, patience, temperance, and love and charity--by these, he shall carry Paradise within himself. They descend from the mountain and waken Eve, who is ready and accepting (having heard God's intentions through propitious dreams in her sleep), consoled that by her the Promised Seed shall restore and bring deliverance. Michael takes each by the hand, and leads them out the eastern gate of Paradise to the plains of Eden, past the Cherubim who will guard Paradise--Michael then disappears.

Well, there you have it. You just read, in summary form, Paradise Lost.

What we need to focus upon is that man (the Soul) was cast out of Heaven and thrown into a prison, a dark cavernous underground where suffering was intensified by fire. This "fire", as a just reward for mankind's sins, was almost universal in the background of theological belief over a long period. Lost in Milton's epic is the "keys" of the ancient Divine Wisdom which taught that under the symbolic disguise of fallen angels, the rebel hosts, the armies of Satan-Lucifer were, collectively, mankind themselves. Lost along with these "keys" for proper interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom is that this "Hell," this "fiery lake" into which they were hurled was just our "material Earth", our "bodies of death".

This, that our Earthy incarnation into fleshly bodies, was considered "Hell" and "death" by the ancients, sounds, to the common man and the normal Christian for example, improbable and impossible with a life conditioned since childhood that God is in a battle with a "fallen Satan" for the Souls of mankind. But again this condition exists only because today we don't possess the the "keys" so necessary to understanding correctly the ancient Spiritual Traditions and ancient Spiritual Wisdom which embodies not only Milton's Paradise Lost but our Bibles as well. This tradition, which is misunderstood by Milton in his Paradise Lost, is in reality the retelling of the the same ancient Mysteries, in which the entire drama of Soul's Spiritual evolution (birth, life, spiritual growth, death, rebirth) was enacted at the great annual Mystery Religious festivals in the ancient world.

The Greco-Roman world in which the early Christian church developed was one of various religions. The conditions of that era made it possible for these religions to sweep like a whirlwind over the ancient world. The people of that age were eager and zealous in their search for religious experience and these ancient "Mysteries" provided that for them. It was a "Spiritual awakening" of the highest order. The existence of this atmosphere was vitally important in the development and eventual triumph of Christianity. These many religions, known as Mystery-Religions, were not alike in every respect. To think that they were would lead to an erroneous supposition. They covered an enormous range, however, and manifested a great diversity in character and outlook, "from Orphism to Gnosticism, from the orgies of the Cabira to the fervors of the Hermetic contemplative" (Angus, The Mystery Religions and Christianity, p. vii.). However it is to be noticed that these Mysteries possessed many fundamental likenesses and parallels between the solar gods:

- All held that the initiate shared in symbolic (sacramental) fashion the experiences of the god (the Law of Incubation and the Law of Dismemberment)
- All had secret rites for the initiated (the Law of Remembrance)
- All offered mystical cleansing from sins of the Soul while incarnated into human bodies of "death"
- All promised a happy future life for the faithful, a return home to God (the Prodigal Son allegory). (Footnote: Enslin, Christian Beginnings, pp. 187, 188).

It is not at all surprising in view of the wide and growing influence of these Mystery Religions that there were striking similarities and parallels between the events in the life of these solar gods and their "sayings" with those of the Christian Jesus. Amazingly these "unbelievable parallels" were not denied by the Early Church Fathers. In reality Christianity is nothing more than another Mystery Religion to which the "keys" of its interpretation of this same "ancient Spiritual Wisdom" and knowledge has been lost or "reinterpreted" between the 2nd through the 5th century. Even Christian apologists had to admit that fact.

- Eusebius says the *"the names of Jesus and Christ were both known and honored by the ancients" (Hist. Eccl. lib. i. ch. iv). Eusebius, the great champion of Christianity, admits in his book: "that which is called the Christian religion is neither new nor strange, but-if it be lawful to testify the truth-was known to the ancients" (Hist. Eccl. lib. 2, ch. v.).
- Eusebius, in his Church History, tells us that Justin, in his Dialogue with Trypho, says *"there exists not a people, civilized or semi-civilized, who have not offered up prayers in the name of a crucified Savior to the Father and Creator of all things" (Hist. Eccl. lib i. ch. iv).

- Augustine is quoted as saying: "That in our time is the Christian Religion, which to know and follow is the most sure and certain health, called according to that name, but not according to the thing itself, of which is the name; for the thing itself which is now called the Christian Religion really was known to the ancients, nor was wanting at any time from the beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, from whence the true religion, which had previously existed, began to be called "Christian;" and this in our days is the Christian religion, not as having been wanting in former times, but as having in later times received this name" (Opera Augustini, vol. i. p. 12; quoted in Taylor's Diegesis, p. 42).
- Early Church Father Tertullian (160-220 C.E.), an "ex-Pagan" and Bishop of Carthage, ironically admits the true origins of the Christ story and of all other such god-men by stating in refutation of his critics, "You say we worship the sun; so do you" (Wheless, Forgery in Christianity, p. 147).
- Ammonius Saccus, a Greek philosopher, founder of the Neoplatonic school, taught that "Christianity and Paganism when rightly understood, differ in no essential points, but had a common origin, and are really one and the same religion" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 329).
- Celsus, the Epicurean philosopher, wrote that "the Christian religion contains nothing but what Christians hold in common with heathen; nothing new" (Justin, Apol 2.).
- Mythicist Albert Churchward stated a century ago: "The canonical gospels can be shown to be a collection of sayings from the Egyptian Mythos and Eschatology"(The Origin and Evolution of Religion).
- The assertion that Jesus Christ is a myth [a radical "literal-historical" reinterpretation of ancient allegorical Pagan Sun-Myths] can be proved not only through the works of dissenters and "pagans" who knew the truth - and who were viciously refuted or murdered for their battle against the Christian priests and "Church Fathers" who were fooling the masses with their fictions - but also through the very statements of the Christians themselves, who continuously disclose that they knew that the Church's depiction of a "literal-historical" Jesus Christ was a myth founded upon more ancient deities and their Spiritual Allegories located throughout the known ancient world. In fact, Pope Leo X, privy to the truth because of his high rank, made this curious declaration, "What profit has not that fable of Christ brought us!" (The Woman's Encyclopedia of Myths and Secrets, by Barbara Walker, p. 471). Rev. Taylor, in The Diegesis, reports a slightly different version of Leo X's admission: "It was well known how profitable this fable of Christ has been to us." (footnote, p. 35.)
- Edward Gibbon says: "It must be confessed that the ministers of the Catholic Church imitated the profane model which they were impatient to destroy. The most respectable bishops had persuaded themselves that the ignorant rustics would more cheerfully renounce the superstitions of Paganism if they found some resemblance, some compensation, in the bosom of Christianity..." (Gibbon, The Rise And Fall Of The Roman Empire, vol. iii. p. 163). There are not all by any stretch of the imagination but you get the point. Christianity is a "copy-cat" religion to which we lost the instructions over 1,800 years ago.

Answer for yourself: What do all of these above quotations tell us?

They tell us that our "Jesus Story", or our "Horus Story", has existed since the foundation of the human race whereby man was acquainted with the Metaphysical reality of his Divine Origin and the Descent of his Soul into matter. This Metaphysical reality was captured and told repeatedly through symbolism and allegory to which it later fell into tragic "literal-historical" misinterpretation during the 2nd through the 5th centuries of Roman Christianity.

These quotes tell a very amazing but yet alarming story. It is inevitable when a new religion comes to exist side by side with a group of religions, from which it is continually detaching members, introducing them into its own midst with the practices of their original religions impressed upon their minds, that this new religion should tend to assimilate with the assimilation of their members, some of the elements of these existing religions. "The more crusading a religion is, the more it absorbs." Certainly Christianity has been a crusading religion from the beginning. It is because of this crusading spirit and its superb power of adaptability that Christianity has been able to survive. It is at this point that we are able to see why knowledge of the Mystery religions and their proper interpretation is important for any serious study of the history of Christianity and its religious dogmas. It is well-nigh impossible to grasp Christianity and restore the correct hermeneutic to its Scriptures and its Bible without knowledge of these mystery cults and their "message" and the later "radical" reinterpretation of their ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Roman Christianity.

We mentioned earlier that Plato was heavily influenced by the ancient Egyptian Religion and its religious ideas. Plutatch, in the second century A.D., as did other late biographers, claims that Plato himself studied in Egypt. Plato seems to operate from a worldview pervaded by the presence of Egypt and the Platonic worldview was modeled after the Pharaonic worldview of ancient Egypt. Platonic cosmology (or cosmogony) exemplified in The Timaeus has its roots in the pyramid texts of 2600 B.C. What is called Greek is in fact Egyptian philosophy, plagiarized from Egyptian sources by Greeks who studied in Egypt with Egyptian priests and who learned from them the philosophy and science of the Egyptian Mystery System. This means that when you read Plato, Plotinus, Proclus, and many other later Greek philosophers you are reading the same religious ideas of ancient Egypt filtered through the Greek culture and nation. The same can be said about Israel who digested and regurgitated these same "earliest religious beliefs" of mankind through the Jewish religion.

Central to Egyptian Religion was this Descent of the Soul and its incarnation.

- Thomas Taylor, unknown to most, is most likely the most gifted of all of Plato's interpreters. That being so he said: "I now proceed to prove that the dramatic spectacles of the Lesser Mysteries were designed by the ancient theologists, their founders, to signify occultly the condition of the unpurified Soul invested with the earthly body, and enveloped in a material and physical nature: . . ." (Thomas Taylor, Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. 4).
- Cocker in his Greek Philosophy says that Plato in the Phaedrus, under the allegory of the chariot and the winged steeds, represents the lower or inferior part of man's nature as dragging the Soul down to earth and subjecting it to a slavery under corporeal conditions.
- Taylor again said that "the descent of the superior intellect into the realms of generated existence becomes, indeed, the greatest benefit and ornament which a material nature is capable of receiving; for without this participation of intellect in the lowest department of corporeal life, nothing but the irrational Soul and a brutal life would subsist in the dark and fluctuating abode of the body" (Thomas Taylor, Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. 120).

Answer for yourself: What is this "superior intellect" that Thomas Taylor makes reference? This "superior intellect" is a reference to these "Living Energies" incarnated into mankind (Neteru/Angels). It is the "god" within mankind. Heraclitus said that "man's genius is a god". Speaking of man Plato affirms: "Through body it is an animal; through intellect it is a god." This of course is the "Logos, the Christ in us".

Answer for yourself: According to Plato what is the purpose of these Mystery Religions? Plato says that these Mystery Religions were designed to "to lead us back to the perfection from which, as our beginning, we first made our descent". At the very heart of these Mystery Religions, their dogmas and rituals we find the Law of Remembrance in operation of which we studied before. That is why Religion was developed; to provide mankind with teaching and rituals to stir within him the memory of his true identity, the origin of his true home, and the goal set before him while incarnated. That goal of course, is to return home (Heaven). This same idea was incorporated in many myths of the ancient world.

- The Greeks allegorized the Descent of the Soul again in the myth of Ceres and Proserpine. Ceres is the higher intellect, Proserpina being her daughter, the Soul. Edward Carpenter says "that there were ritual dramas or passion plays [in the Mysteries], of which an important one dealt with the descent of Kore or Proserpine into the underworld, as in the Eleusinian representations, and her redemption and restoration to the upper world in spring".

- This same thought was expressed in the Greek myth of Eros and Psyche. Love descends into the mortal sphere to redeem the human Soul, or Psyche, from suffering in its animal habitat by marrying her. In the Mystery celebrations lasting nine days, Taylor tells us that on the eighth day the "fall of the Soul into the lunar orb" (beneath the moon, or Earthly) was commemorated, "because the Soul in this situation is about to bid adieu to everything of a celestial nature; to sink (Law of Incubation) into a perfect oblivion (Law of forgetfulness, Law of Reminiscence) of her Divine origin and pristine felicity; and to rush profoundly into the region of dissimilitude, ignorance and error (dense matter). And lastly, on the ninth day, when the Soul falls into the sublunary (earthly) world and becomes united with a terrestrial body (incarnation), a libation was performed such as is usual in the sacred rites".
- Proclus, was a great Neo-Platonist of the fourth century. He explained and interpreted Plato's theology. He says that it is the peculiar function of "heroic Souls" (an order above daemons) to express "magnitude of operation, elevation and magnificence," but that this order "descends (incarnation) indeed for the benefit of the life of man, as partaking of a destiny inclining downwards (incarnation)" (The Six Books of Proclus on the Theology of Plato, II, p. 275).
- Iamblichus corroborates Plato as to these grades of the hierarchy of Descending "Living Energies": "Angles (Egypt called these the 'Neteru') above dissolve the bonds of generation. Daemons (deity) draw Souls down into nature; but heroes lead them to a providential attention to sensible works" (Iamblichus, Mysteries of the Egyptian, Chaldeans, and Assyrians, p. 93).
- Iamblichus goes on to make an unequivocal statement concerning the Descent of the Soul when he says: "But from the first, divinity sent Souls hither in order that they might again return to him" (Ibid., p. 312).
- He reiterates the idea when speaking of the gods but elaborates upon the purpose of the incarnation: "These (Souls), therefore, descend with invariable sameness for the salvation of the universe, and connectedly contain the whole of generation after the same manner" (Ibid., p. 68).

That means mankind, this incarnated "Deity", is the "savior" or should I say the "awakened Christ" within us all! I ask that you think long and hard about this "salvation" of the universe that is connected to the incarnation of our Souls which in reality is humanity who does the "saving".

Answer for yourself: Are you becoming increasingly aware that Greek philosophy embodies various traditions of the Descent of the Soul into matter (incarnation) and its re-ascent just the same way ancient Egypt did in the beginning? Are you beginning to see that all other subsequent successive nations which were taught by ancient Egypt, like Mesopotamia and India, taught this same idea of Emanation of the Divine into matter and the impregnation of Mother Nature by this Divine Deific Mind and its archetypes? We find this same Metaphysical idea told, from nation to nation as told over and over and over again in multiple varieties of symbolisms, allegories, metaphors, folk-tales, legends, glyphs, etc.

- In the cycle of the twelve mystic Labors of Hercules, the hero is ordered to descend down into Hades, which is symbolic for the material world of incarnation (Earth), and bring up the three-headed Cerberus. Hercules' struggles and trials to which he is to master made Hercules the perfect embodiment of an idea the Greeks called "pathos", the experience of virtuous struggle and suffering which would lead to fame and, in Hercules' case, immortality. This fabled, symbolic, and mythical journey of Hercules is just another symbolic tracing of the experiences undergone by the incarnated Soul on Earth and not in some mysterious "underworld" below it.

- Orpheus descends to the underworld (Earth) to recover his lost Eurydice, again a symbol of the Soul.
- In Virgil's epic Aeneas finds the gate to Avernus (the realm of the dead) and descends for the inspection of the Tartarian regions (again a symbol for the Earth). We need to comment on Virgil's Aeneas for just a minute. The etymology of this word "Avernus" refers is in the Greek the word "ornos" or a bird. The word is the also in the alpha-private, meaning "un-" or "not" or "-less." The "v" is thrown in for euphony between the two vowels, and the "o" is shortened to "e." It would therefore read "not birds" or "no birds," with the implication of "not a good place for birds." When it is known that in all mysterious religious systems the bird was the universal symbol for the Soul, the meaning comes clear that this earth was regarded as the place where Souls were poisoned by the noxious fumes arising from the carnal life, since the birds were lethalized by the vapor rising from the mouth of the pit of Avernus, became stupefied and fell into the underworld. The allegory of Virgil's Aeneas tells the story of the Soul's Descent into matter (humanity) as do these other literary epics.
- Dante wrote the famous Inferno. Dante's tour of Purgatory and the deeper Inferno is a treatment of the old myth, with political and other connotations.
- Ulysses' visit to the cave of Polyphemus is again a form of the representation, and Theseus and his labyrinthine adventure underground is another rendering of it.
- From Herodotus we have an account (II, 122) of the descent into Hades of King Rhampsinitus, in whose honor the priests of Egypt instituted a rebirth festival.
- The Rig Veda parallels this same story of the Descent of the Soul with an account of the boy Nachiketas, who descended into the realm of Yama, the deity of the earthly underworld, in Yama-Loka, the kingdom of the dead, and then returned to the world of life.

Needless to say, neither Egyptians, Greeks, nor Hindus ever took their theological myths of the Descent of the Soul or the birth of their Sungods for "literal history"; my birth faith of Christianity cannot say that!

A number of utterances in the Chaldean Oracles (ancient Semitic people who ruled in Babylonia) point to a complete harmony with Orphic Platonism and Neo-Platonism. These Chaldean Oracles have come down to us through Greek translations and were held in the greatest esteem throughout antiquity, a sentiment which was shared alike by the early Christian Fathers and the later Platonists alike. The Oracles agree with Greek doctrine that higher Deific Energies "Emanated" outward from a spiritual focus into the material worlds. One of them runs: "For all things thence begin to extend their admirable rays downwards." The life of the gods descents or "Emanates' outward into corporeal beings and becomes the animating principle or Soul of living things. What I say next is critical. We are seeing in these many articles this same idea repeated over and over again since ancient Egypt and will find it again repeated over and over up until the 17th century although Rome subjected it to a radical reinterpretation in the 2nd through the 5th century. In spite of this tragic "reinterpretation" this ancient Religious Belief lived submerged in various "underground streams" and various "religious movements" down through history; many of which were labeled "heresies" by the ruling Roman Orthodoxy.

A passage from the Tibetan Book of the Dead (p. 130) warns devotees to "be not attracted towards the dull blue light of the brute world," under penalty of falling into that kingdom of nature. It asserts (p. 125) that the predilection of our immortal nature toward animal grossness will cause it to "stray downwards." The text represents the human Soul as beseeching the "Knowledge-Holding Deities" not to let it drift further down, but to lead it to the holy paradise. The Soul delights that "These Knowledge-Holding Deities, the Heroes and the Dakinis have come from the holy paradise realms to receive me." The text traces the descent of these divinities who, false to their oaths, fall from lower to still lower stages of the Bardo, or world of dark embodiment. A cuneiform tablet in the British Museum holds a legend of the rebellious angels who broke into the Lord's song with impious shouts, destroying the harmony, and who, for punishment, were cast down out of Heaven. They are referred to in the Book of Jude (Ch. 6) in the line: "They kept not their own habitations." These in the Book of Enoch are the seven stars which "transgressed the commandment of God and came not in their proper season" (Enoch 18, 21, 22). It is said in the cuneiform text, "May the God of Divine speech expel from his five thousand those who in the midst of his heavenly song shouted evil blasphemies." Of tremendous importance for our study is the fact that that early Christian doctrine was intimately allied with and influenced by the prevalent esoteric wisdom of surrounding religious cults, is a fragment called the Naasene Hymn, preserved by Hippolytus (Haer. V. 5). After describing the woes and sufferings of the human Soul during its wanderings on earth, the hymn continues: "But Jesus said: Father, Behold A war of evils has arisen upon earth; It comes from thy breath and ever works; Man strives to shun this bitter chaos, But knows not how he may pass (safely) through it; Therefore, do thou, O Father, send me; Bearing thy seals I will descend (to earth); Throughout the ages I will pass; All mysteries I will unfold, All forms of Godhead I will unveil, All secrets of thy holy path Styled Gnosis (knowledge) I will impart (to man)".

Answer for yourself: Who is this "Jesus" mentioned here?

The Jesus character alluded to here is the Gnostic Jesus, or "Ieou", whom we have already seen can be traced to ancient Egyptian some 10,000 years B.C.E.

The name Naasene, of apparently Ophite connection, seems to have etymological relation to both the names of Essene and Nazarene. If an Essene production it could readily be given a B.C. placing without violent improbability. There is evidence that cults of Nazarenes (Nazaraioi) teaching Egypto-Gnostic Christolatry predated the coming of the later "literal-historical" interpretation of the "Jesus Story", which in reality was the "Horus Story". The Ophites (serpent-symbolizers, not serpent-worshipers) were a Gnostic sect of early Christianity, later persecuted as heretics, who believed in a spiritual Christ-Aeon that descended into the material chaos to assist Sophia (Wisdom) in her efforts to emancipate the Soul from the bondage of the flesh.

If one was to spend the time in serious study of the ancient Egyptian Religion one would find the descent of the Soul, as Horus which can be identified unmistakably in a thousand references or more. I have done such a thing. The conception is so permeating that all three persons of the Egyptian Trinity, Isis, Osiris and Horus, are represented as descending to the lower inferior Earth. Osiris, the Father God, descends (the Law of Incubation), is cut to pieces (Law of Dismemberment) by Set (Satan) and the fragments of his body scattered over the earth. Isis, the Mother, descends to Earth to search for the fragments. Horus, the Son, comes down in the identical character as the Christian Jesus in the advent at Christmas as the bringer of peace. As Jesus descends into hell (symbolizing a material Earth), as stated in the Apostles' Creed), so Horus came from Heaven into the realm of darkness (incarnated into a material Earth) as the light (savior) of the world. It is said that Horus (symbolized in our Jesus) descends into the funeral land, the abode of darkness and of death. This is the Earth, or more correctly, the fleshy matter of humanity as the abode for the "indwelling Horus/Christ". The Speaker in the Egyptian Ritual at it is called, which more correctly is the Egyptian Book of the Dead, is the human Soul. This human Soul says: "I have come upon this earth, and I take possession of it with my two feet." It is said that Osiris goes down, or "descends" into Tattu (another name for Amenta, the realm of the 'dead' and dark matter which is the home for the incarnated Soul). It is there Osiris finds the Soul of the Sun, and is united thereto. The Manes (again the human Soul) says: "I am he that cometh forth by day . . . I descend upon earth and mine eye maketh me to walk thereon." It is said of him: "Thou enterest in to the place where thy Father is, where Keb [Seb, the god of earth] is." Again: "Thou descendest under protection. Ra ferries thee to Amenta." In the Ritual, otherwise called The Egyptian Book of the Dead, it is said: "This is he who in his resurrection says, 'I am the Lord on high and I descend to the earth of Seb that I may put a stop to evil.'" He we see again the purpose of the incarnation which is to grow the Soul "up" and allow the Soul to experience his latent Spiritual potentiality in this incarnated existence and he does so by subduing this animal nature which dwells in these bodies of "death".

Such references to the advent of Divinity in the writings of Egypt could be magnified without end, both in papyrus and monuments. Likewise the religious lore of scores of ancient indigenous tribes in all continents hold voluminous corroboration of the fact and confirm the Descent of the Soul into matter is the basic "theology" of all religious exegesis. This mind you is a "literal" occurrence but was expressed through allegory, metaphor, simile, symbolism, and the accompanying stories of this "Descent" were never taken to be "literal-historical" in their narrative. Throughout the world we find hundreds of legends and folk-tales which begin with the coming of some hero from Heaven to Earth, or with the flinging down of some object which is symbolic of Divinity into the Earth, or the Underworld as it is called. That is right, this Earthly "incarnation" is the "Underworld" we read about in this ancient literature. The variety of symbols used is almost without limit, and to one lacking the "keys of interpretation", these stories range between absolutely "befuddling" to "bewildering". I know from experience until continued study on my part finally "cracked the code". Without these "keys" to these stories then one is hard pressed to see that they are "all" stating the same Metaphysical Fact; namely, that the Deific Mind, this Logos, has become incarnated into dense and darkened matter (a type of death of the god where he gives his life, or blood, for mankind) full of latent potential. It hardly goes without saying that in all such legends the idea of the "Descent" is central to each of these stories and literary epics.

But few if any Christians ever study the ancient Egyptian Religion to see let alone comprehend correctly this Descent of the Soul in the "gods" of Egypt. Few if any Christians spend time reading Plato, Plotinus, Proclus, Iamblichus and understand the Divine Spiritual Allegory behind what they wrote. Few if any have ever read Milton's Paradise Lost or Dante's Inferno. And if we do we are preconditioned to interpret everything we read as if it were "literal". We have spent considerable time educating the reader that this is not the mind-set nor the methodology of how the ancients wrote thousands of years ago. If we step back and look at the Christian Bible behind what we mistakenly have been taught are "historical" or "literal" stories we find this exact same Divine Myth of the Descent of the Soul portrayed in both the Old and New Testaments. Bible students are not generally aware of the the descent of the "gods", these "Living Energies" to earth, which are told symbolically through the vast majority of our Biblical narratives.

We see this Celestial Drama in the well-known declaration of God himself (distorted so often into a reference of a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus) that He sent his only-begotten Son (Logos) into the world that all believers might have everlasting life. Then there is the remarkable pronouncement in the Gospel of John, in the third chapter:

"No man ascendeth into heaven but he that cometh down from heaven."

Then there is Jesus' direct statement to his disciples:

"Ye are from beneath; I am from above."

The Lord's affirmation that he laid down his life for his sheep surely means not that he was sacrificed on a wooden cross, but that he resigned his celestial life to endure the burden of the cross where this Deific Mind of God, this Logos, was crucified on a cross of "matter" (the intersection of flesh and matter). Again we encounter in this passage the exact message we read about in Philippians chapter 2, the great Kenosis passage. Jesus declares that he came from the Father into the earth.

Phil 2:6-8 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

This very same idea is echoed in Rev 21:1:

Rev 21:3 3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. (KJV)

What we just read is the "Descent of the Soul", or as it is said at other times the "Descent of the Christos" into the bosom of mankind. We now move to the next article in this series to pick up this continuing idea.

THE DESCENT OF THE SOUL #5

We continue our study into the "Descent of the Soul" as we continually restore the "keys" whereby we can correctly interpret our Bibles and the ancient Sacred Wisdom hidden within them.

There are many words misunderstood in the New Testament. I suppose among some of the most important are the words "Logos" and "Christ" or "Christos". I wish to deal with the word "Christos" as we begin this article. Christianity has made the tragic mistake of personifying the word and limiting it to the single body of a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus instead of the intended meaning of the Descent of the "Christos" or "gods" as incarnated and distributed among all mankind. Even with this tragic "reinterpretation" that destroys the original and ancient understanding of this "Christ" it is possible to discern allusions to the descent of these "Living Energies" all through the Bible. There are hints of this "Descent of the Christ" into matter scattered all through the "Jesus Story". We will look at many examples at the end of this article.

I remember my studies years ago where I found out that the New Testament that we have today originally contained no "genealogies" of Jesus. They were totally absent and after repeated debates with the Gnostic Chrestians over the first two centuries of the current era who never believed in a historical Jesus then miraculously 2 genealogies appeared, both of them which just happen to not agree and contradict each other. They would appear with Irenaeus and his "Second New Testament" in 180 C.E. Well important for us to note is that the original Gnostic New Testament of Marcion, the original New Testament, which was later "worked over" by Orthodox Christianity, basically began with chapter 4 in Luke.

In Marcion's Gospel, there was nothing corresponding to the first three chapters of Luke. They are simply not there. Absent from Marcion's First New Testament and gospel are:

- The introduction of Luke found in verses chapter 1 verses 1-4
 - The birth of John the Baptist is foretold in verses 5-25
 - The angelic announcement to Mary that she shall conceive a son named Jesus in verses 26-38
 - Mary's visit to Elizabeth to announce her pregnancy in verses 39-45
 - The Magnificat praising God for her impregnation in verses 46-56
 - The birth of John the Baptist in verses 57-66
 - Zachariah's prophecy in verses 67-80
- The birth of Jesus in chapter 2 verses 1-7
 - The shepherds and the angels who attend the birth of Jesus in verses 8-20
 - The presentation of the baby Jesus in the temple in verses 21-24
 - Simeon and Anna give praise for the baby Christ in verses 25-40
 - The boy Jesus in the temple in verses 41-52
- The preaching of John the Baptist in chapter 3 verses 1-20
 - John's physical baptism of Jesus in verses 21-22
 - The genealogy of Jesus in verses 23-38

Answer for yourself: What is the overriding common theme in the above passages that were not in the New Testament until after 180 C.E.? They involve the supposed later reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which would deviate from the "Pattern" and mistakenly teach a "literal-historical" birth of the baby Christ as Jesus to human parents. We are led to believe in reading these that "the Christ" assumed literal flesh as man when archeology today has revealed the earliest Christians were Gnostics which understood "the Christ" as a spiritual concept and not a "literal-historical" concept which was limited to but one person.

Answer for yourself: What possible reason could there by for these passages not being present in Marcion's First New Testament? Simply the earliest Christians were Gnostics which did not hold to a "literal" fleshly and human Christ embodied in only one person; they understood as Paul would write: "To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory:" Col 1:27 27 (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Why is this important to note? Because Marion begins his New Testament with the "Descent of the Christ" and not a supposed literal incarnation of a single baby child in a manger on a cold Jerusalem night surrounded shepherds and wise men.

Omitting chapters I and 2, and most of 3 and 4 [the nativity, the baptism and temptation, with the genealogy, and all reference to Bethlehem and Nazareth], Marcion's gospel begins with 3: 1,

In the fifteenth year of Tiberius Caesar, and 4: 31, God descended into Capernaum, a city of Galilee.

Answer for yourself: Where is the name "Jesus" mentioned above? I cannot find it!

Irenaeus will "rework" Marcion's first New Testament and out comes the "golden calf" in 180 C.E.; some 30 years later Rome has their response to Marcion's Gnostic Christ and the wholesale destruction of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom has begun and by the 5th century it is almost eradicated.

The KJV has rendered this above verse from Marcion's New Testament this way today:

Luke 4:31 31 And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath days. (KJV)

Now the words "came down" are very instructive for us to examine.

Strong's Concordance:

2718 katerchomai (kat-er'-khom-ahee); from 2596 and 2064 (including its alternate); to come (or go) down (literally or figuratively): KJV-- come (down), depart, descend, go down, land.

Important for us to note that this word "came down" can have either a "literal" or "figurative" meaning. So let us go on. It is when we get to Thayer's Lexicon that the light breaks upon my minds.

Thayer's Greek Lexicon:

2718 katerchomai- to come down, to go down

- a) used of one who goes from a higher to a lower locality
- b) used of those who come to a place by a ship

Answer for yourself: Did you see that this supposed Jesus "came from a higher locality to a lower locality" in this "descent"? Why mention this? Could this be a reference to the "Falling" of the Soul/Christ into matter like Marcion intended and Irenaeus and others would try to destroy? Could this be a reference to Emanationism, the Kabbalah and the Egyptian Ennead and the incarnation of God into matter? Notice if you will that Marcion never said that "Jesus" came down to Capernaum but that "God descended into Capernaum"! This is long before the Council of Nicea in 325 A.D. when Rome, with a vote of hands, will "make the Roman interpretation of Jesus equal with God". Nowhere in Marcion's mind, or the other Christian Gnostics, did they ever view a human Jesus as the fleshly limitation of "the Christ". We have lost so much over these 2,000 or more years and the train has definitely "jumped the track". It is only after the "Descent" of "the Christ" into the bosom of mankind that God's message be taught to mankind and God's Christ deliver his "Sermon" to us and within us.

There exists a great Gnostic work highly prized by the earliest "Chrestians", or "Christians" entitled the "Pistis Sophia". In this Gnostic Gospel Pistis Sophia, it is said that Jesus preached his discourse to his disciples "in the midst of Amenta"!

Answer for yourself: What is "Amenta"? If Jesus is said to have preached in Amenta what does this mean? Can you locate a city named "Amenta" on a map of Israel? I'll wait. Give up? It is not there.

We, like it seems always, go to ancient Egypt to get the answer. Amenta or Amentet, was originally the place where the Sun set, or should I say the Western horizon, when it was allegorically said that the Sun "died" at dusk only to be "reborn in the East". This Amenta was the "Duat". If you read our articles on the uranograph then you know completely what this Duat is and how it was understood in ancient Egypt. The Sun set and "died" daily only to be reborn anew every morning. Thus the Western horizon was likened to "death" or the "underworld" where the Sun, a symbol of the Comic Energy, or in our case, Souls (themselves Living Energies) traveled to their death to await "rebirth". You could say that Amenta was region for the path of the Soul at its death which ultimately lead to "rebirth". Amenta meant accordingly "death". So, if we put these ideas together, then Jesus preached in the middle of the realm of death. This needs further elaboration or we need more "keys" to understand what is being said.

Answer for yourself: We have seen that Egypt, that nation, was symbolic in the Bible and the ancient Spiritual Writings for this "body of death", our "fleshly bodies". We have seen that the body has been likened to a "body of death" where the Soul was Descended and "crucified in matter" (the intersecting of two planes of existences; one Spirit/Energy (active/Father) and one latent Energy in matter (passive/Mother). We have seen that this body which contains the Soul was likened to a prison for this descended Soul. Since incarnation of the Soul was a "death" or "grave" then we begin to see that it would appear from the Pistis Sophia that this Jesus is preaching in the realm of "death" or "within the body". THINK!

To the insightful reader then we see the idea that the "incarnated Christ", whom in His descent into matter, brought God's message to descended Souls incarnated in bodies of "death"...the same message mentioned in the Pistis Sophia and in I Peter 3:18.

Because Christ also suffered for (because of) sins once, the righteous for the unrighteous, that he might bring us (Souls) to God; being put to death in the flesh, but made alive in the spirit; in which also he went (into the flesh) and preached unto the spirits in prison (fleshy bodies)„„(KJV).

Answer for yourself: Is this "prison" and this "Amenta" the same thing? Do they both refer to matter and the human body? Is this were the "Christ is being formed" and "resurrected? Was it in our bodies that Christ was crucified? Is this why the Book of Revelation says that "our Lord was crucified in Egypt thereby meaning "the body"?

Rev 11:8 8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is this "dead body" the prison where the "Christ within" preaches to our Soul? Is this the "still small Voice" of which we hear? Is this the "Logos" internalized? Now you get the picture. Along with this revelation comes the vindication of Marcion and the Gnostics and their Gnostic New Testament which is truly preserved by the "blood of the saints" murdered without mercy by the juggernaut of Rome in their world domination of the minds of mankind.

Subsequently the name "Amenta" was applied to the cemeteries and tombs which were usually built or hewn in the stony plateaus and mountains on the western bank of the Nile. Some believe that Amenta was, at first, the name of a small district, without either funereal or mythological signification. The Christian Egyptians or Copts used the word "Amend" to translate the Greek word Hades, to which they attributed all the ideas which their heathen ancestors had associated with the Amenta of the Book of the Dead.

Now we move to an even larger shock and revelation that overturns 1,800 years of ignorance and fear.

Answer for yourself: What is "hades"? Hades is the New Testament is parallel to Sheol. Sheol is the Hebrew word expressing the concept of the "grave". The King James Version uses the word "Hell" in the Old Testament rather than Sheol. Now that is quite interesting and important for our doctrine of "Hell" and the fear that goes along with it.

Fear is a tool used by many religions, but for Christianity, it is something of a specialty. The Bible promises an infinitely long session of torture for those who doubt God. Even the mild-mannered Jesus occasionally reminded his disciples of whom he knew, and what the price was for disobedience (Matthew 10:28). Even the most liberal denomination of Christianity carries the implicit threat of Hell, and in conservative denominations, it is often the focus of the sermon. Skeptical or not, people raised in Christianity have lived under the threat of Hell since childhood.

Answer for yourself: And what is Hell, anyway? According to Wikipedia's Encyclopedia entry on the subject, the Christian concept of Hell or "Gehenna" comes from "Gehinnom," a Hebrew word for landfills containing dead bodies, which were periodically burned. In the NIV of the Bible, the word "Hell" doesn't appear until the New Testament. In the King James Version, Hell appears in the Old Testament numerous times, but as a mistranslation of words such as "Sheol," meaning "the grave" . Although Christianity was an offshoot of Judaism, it emerged during a time that was heavily influenced by Greek mythology. Ancient Greeks believed in the immortality of the soul, and the modern version of Hell seems suspiciously like a combination of Greek beliefs about spiritual immortality plus Hebrew imagery of dead bodies in burning landfills.

It is time for a short "rabbit chase" to give some short information. The concept of the soul's immortality was first taught in ancient Egypt and Babylon. The idea of an "immortal soul" long predates the founding of today's major religions. The ancient Greek historian Herodotus (5th century B.C.) tells us in his History that the ancient Egyptians were the first to teach that the soul of man is separable from the body, and immortal. To the east, the ancient Babylonians also held a belief in a future life of the soul in a "lower world." But Babylonian beliefs were nowhere so elaborate as the Egyptian. The idea of the soul's immortality did not cease with ancient Egyptian civilization. Notice again the testimony of the historian Herodotus: "The Egyptians were the first that asserted that the soul of man is immortal...This opinion some among the Greeks have at different periods of time adopted as their own" (from Euterpe, the second book of Herodotus' History). This Egyptian idea was centuries before Judaism, Hinduism, Buddhism, Christianity and Islam came onto the scene. Immortality of the soul is a cardinal tenet of Islam and is held generally in Judaism, although it is not an essentially Jewish idea. The Greeks got the concept of an immortal soul from the Egyptians! The foremost advocate among the ancient Greeks of the idea of an "immortal soul" was the Athenian philosopher Plato (428-348 B.C.), the pupil of Socrates. Plato was the founder of the Academy, an institute for philosophical and scientific research just outside of Athens. The immortal soul concept, in other words, was a necessary companion doctrine to the doctrine of the terrible torments of parts of Hades or hell. Such fearsome teachings, some philosophers thought, were necessary to scare the masses into being good citizens. Regardless of his motives and personal beliefs, Plato's teachings did have a wide impact. They spread throughout they known world and were accepted as truth by millions. Many of the early theologians and scholars of the professing Christian religion---including such men as Origen, Tertullian and Augustine---were closely associated with Platonism. Tertullian (A.D. 155-220), for example, wrote: "For some things are known even by nature: the immortality of the soul, the instance, is held by many ... I may use, therefore, the opinion of Plato, when he declares: 'Every soul is immortal'" (The Ante-Nicene Fathers, vol. III). Notice, it is the opinion of Plato that is cited who again learned this from ancient Egypt! Augustine of Hippo (A.D. 354-430)---held to be the greatest thinker of Christian antiquity---also taught the immaterial and spiritual nature of the human soul. But notice the source of his teachings once again. The Encyclopedia Britannica states: "He [Augustine] fused the religion of the New Testament with the Platonic tradition of Greek philosophy." And behind this again we find the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Let it be said that Judaism was influenced by Hellenism and Plato and we come full circle with ancient Egypt again being the source for these Divine Ideas.

Now when the KJV Bible translated the "grave" or "Sheol" as "Hell" we make a most tragic mistake which has captured the minds of man and wielded the worst fear imaginable to mankind. Such mistranslation of the concept and the word for "death" and "grave" has imprisoned the minds of mankind with cells of fear to which many never find escape. I spoke to one of my students this week and he mentioned that since childhood he endured the worst guilt and fear of going to Hell that his life was, for all practical purposes, worthless and he sought professional help for this many years. I am sure his story could be recounted way to many times.

Sheol is the English form of the Hebrew word for "grave" and the "dead". The Septuagint, a Greek translation of the Old Testament, substituted the Greek word "Hades" at least one hundred times in the Old Testament for the Hebrew word "Sheol". This means the Hebrew word "Sheol" and the Greek word for "Hades" are interchangeable. "Hades" refers to the "grave" as does "Sheol". If we put all of this together the "grave" is the same as "Hades" which is the same as "Hell".

Now we have in our studies already seen that this body of "matter" was likened as far back as ancient Egypt as Amenta which is "hades"; this means it also meant the "grave", or "Hell". If you followed all of this according to the terminology and the intended interpretation of these terms that long pre-dated the Old Testament and later Christian "reinterpretation" then we find that our "bodies" of matter, our human existence, is likened allegorically to the realm of "the dead", "Hades", "Hell", and the "grave" where "Living Energies" have incarnated and been been humbled to a death, a death on a Cross of intersection Energies between Spirit and Matter. Now set down and let this register with you! There is not "literal Hell", only gross "literal" misinterpretation of what we read!

We speak of the crucifixion of God in matter and the Descent of the Soul as the Descent into Amenta. We will devote a later article to a fuller expose on Amenta. So, allegorically speaking, as were the ancient writers of this Gnosis and ancient Spiritual Wisdom so many thousands of years ago, this incarnation of the Divine Christos (neteru) is a "Descent into Hell" or "matter", the incarnation or impregnation of "matter", our human material bodies, by the Father's active "Living Energy". We must have these "keys" if we ever are to see clearly that our fleshly bodies, which were likened "to be as if dead", and which are capable of the greatest evils at times, is the realm of the "humbling of Christ" in His "Descent into humanity". This Christ has descended into Hell, into each child of God to instruct, preach, and redeem the Soul in its Earthly experiences in preparation for its return to the Father. So simple when you put it together but who does today? Without the knowledge of ancient Egypt and their Spiritual Wisdom or of the great Platonic philosophy we are hopeless of ever interpreting our Bibles correctly today.

I hope you caught your breath as the realization dawns upon you that Christianity, 1800 years ago, set out on a path of radical "reinterpretation" of the ancient Gnosis and Spiritual Wisdom in order to built a religion based upon ignorance, misinterpretation, and fear. And the masses were controlled through this fear of "damnation" and the "fear of a burning Hell" which simply does not exist. It is all allegorical and when understood correctly it is the "good news" (the Gospel) which again is tragically misunderstood today. By the way, Rome succeeded at the point of a sword beyond their wildest expectations.

The New Testament records for us this "Jewish Christ" preaching both from a "mount" and a "plain". We find this Jewish Christ delivering a Sermon on the Mount in Matthew and a Sermon on a level Plane in Luke.

Later comparison of many texts discloses the surprising fact that both the Mount and the Level Plain, whereon the Sermon was delivered in the Gospels, are diverse forms of the same symbolism!

Answer for yourself: And what is that? Both refer to our Earth, under the terms of equinoctial symbolism. The "mount" in the mythos was never in any sense an Earthly elevation. Paul in one passage suggests the logical problem, which should have been given consideration, analogically, by our scientists, how we can envisage the resurrection without the postulation of a previous descent from heaven. He, or another Pauline writer, does so for us Ephesians 4:9:

Eph 4:9 9 (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? (KJV)

The importance of this Scriptural passage for science is staggering since science has studied life as in evolution "outward" without having examined a necessary "internal" evolution within mankind at the same time. Science must someday take note of this Pauline metaphysical statement and Quantum Physics in our day is heading that way and their scientific findings are validating not only Egyptian Religion and their Soul Science but the Gnostic interpretation of "the Christ" and "the Soul" as expressed in Platonic Philosophy. Likewise it is my hope that in the years ahead Christianity and my brothers and fellow teachers will "awake" and restore the doctrine of the descent of "The Christ" and "the Soul" to its correct hermeneutic.

Before our eyes this "Descent" is before us all through the New Testament but we pass over it unaware of what we are reading. Once our "eyes" are opened and our "awareness awakened" within then it becomes as plain as the nose on our face.

Symbolizing the Divine nature as bread for man, John gives Jesus' announcement of this descent of "the Christ" into matter:

John 6:48-51 48 I am that bread of life. 49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. 50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. 51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Do you see the parallel with Philippians chapter 2:7? Again this is the Law of Incubation right before us.

Matthew 13 states:

[3] And he spake many things unto them in parables, saying, Behold, a sower went forth to sow; [4] And when he sowed, some seeds fell by the way side, and the fowls came and devoured them up: [5] Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth: and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth: [6] And when the sun was up, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away. [7] And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up, and choked them: [8] But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, some an hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold.

We need only to look at the allegory of the sower and the seed which is a restatement of the Egyptian Religion and Platonism which both teach the "distribution of divinity" among men. Here again is the "Law of Dismemberment" of the Divine among mankind which we have seen previously. In the parable of the sower we have a depiction of the division and incarnation of the Divine into various natures in humanity and into a variety of mortal bodies. The falling of the seed into various types of soil is a symbolic depiction of the diversified incarnations the descending Souls which might have appointed to them in Heaven before their "Descent". This interpretation elevates the parable to infinite heights of Spiritual meaning devoid in the traditional rendering which is unable to see in the symbolism nothing more than the sowing of the "word" among the world. Ludicrous to those who understand "the Logos" is that we don't even understand what this word for "Word" is! This "Word" is not a "preaching" or a "teaching" as you might expect ushering from a pulpit, Bible, radio, or television but rather the "Logos", or form of "the Divine idea" or archetype, which is so powerfully graven upon the physical universe by the Deific utterance of this Comic Living Intelligence and Deific Mind we call God. No student is in position to grasp the significance of the Logos doctrine or ever come to understand how this "Logos" is connected with the "Jesus Story" until he has mastered the principles of Platonic theology, as outlined by others like Proclus or Plotinus, or the ancient Egyptian Religion before that which is the origin for all later world religions which teach this "Logos" (for better or worse).

Right before in the symbolic book of Revelation these "Living Energies", Angels (neteru), pour out the contents of their censers over the Earth, distributing this solar "Divine Spark" or "solar fire" to each mortal in order to place with him that part of God destined to live within him.

And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast [it] into the earth:

Plato wrote the Timaeus. In the Timaeus Plato presents an elaborately wrought account of the formation of the universe. Plato is deeply impressed with the order and beauty he observes in the universe, and his project in the dialogue is to explain that order and beauty. The universe, he proposes, is the product of rational, purposive, and beneficent agency. It is the handiwork of a divine Craftsman (called the "Demiurge"), who, imitating an unchanging and eternal "pattern", imposes mathematical order on a preexistent chaos to generate the ordered universe (cosmos). The governing explanatory principle of the account is teleological: the universe as a whole as well as its various parts are so arranged as to produce a vast array of good effects. It strikes Plato strongly that this arrangement is not fortuitous, but the outcome of the deliberate intent of Intellect (nous), anthropomorphically represented by the figure of the Craftsman who plans and constructs a world that is as excellent as its nature permits it to be. As Plato tells it, the beautiful orderliness of the universe is not only the manifestation of Intellect; it is also the "Pattern" for rational souls to understand and to emulate. Such understanding and emulation restores those souls to their original state of excellence, a state that was lost in their embodiment. There is, then, an explicit ethical and religious dimension to the discourse. Having said this then understand that in Plato's Timaeus he states that the Deity deity was to furnish the collective seed of what was to be immortal in humanity.

I sure don't want the reader to mistakenly believe that "Descent of the Soul" and the "Descent of the Christ" is limited to ancient Egyptian Religion and later Plato and other Greek philosophers. Far from it. We even find this same idea of "Descent" in Old Testament and New Testament as expressed through allegory as we might expect. We will spend the rest of this article looking at some but not all of them. Let it be said at first that not only in ancient religions was the "Descent of the Soul" a universally popular theme. It is found in the works of the most honored authors in classical literature; for example, Homer, Hesiod, Aristophanes, Vergil, and Lucian; and long after the Mysteries ceased to be a living religious force it continued to attract writers of the quality of Dante, Milton, and George Bernard Shaw. Now lets focus on the New Testament.

- Paul, in speaking about Abraham, states that allegory lies behind the Abraham story. Like the Prodigal Son of the New Testament, which is symbolic on a much deeper level for this "Descent", Abraham was sent out from his home (the Law of Incubation), country and kinsfolk (in the heavenly Eden) to go to a strange land.

Answer for yourself: Where was this land? Well, it was "to the West" just like ancient Egypt taught that Souls descend "in the West" symbolically, which if you recall is likened to a "death". They of course were more sophisticated than that and called this the "Duat" which we might call the "Ladder between Heaven and Earth" for the "ascending and descending" of these "Living Energies". It was here that Abraham's "seed" (Law of Dismemberment) was to multiply until it filled the Earth with his offspring.

Here is where it gets deep. There is a "hidden" meaning behind the name of "Abraham or Abram" that escapes notice by most and it is very important. The word is simply "A-Brahm" which is a Hindu word which means "non-Brahm."

Answer for yourself: What does this mean? We have to look back thousands of years to find the answer lost over the ages.

Abraham is to us, according to a "literal-historical" rendering supposedly the Patriarch of the Bible. But as "A-Brahm" or "non-Brahm" it means the oldest of the Emanations, was not "Brahm", not "the Father", not "The One", not the "First Cause", not "the Absolute", but the first Emanation from Brahm; the first ray of Emanated "Living Energy", the first God, perhaps equivalent to Ishwara of the Hindus. This Abraham, or this "non Brahm", or this first life was not the "Ayn Sof", not "the Absolute", yet came from "the Absolute". He was to go forth into the realms of matter, divide and multiply, and fill the world with his fragmented units (the Law of Dismemberment). To return to Abraham's bosom would be just to complete the cycle of outgoing and return, to rest in the bosom of the highest divinity close to the Absolute.

Key for our understanding of this "Descent" is also the hidden meaning behind the word "Ur", of the Chaldees. Abraham, or "non Braham" came out of Ur, of the Chaldees (or Kasadim), which is another key word, since Ur is the Chaldean word for "fire," the celestial Paradise, the highest reaches of heaven which was believed by the ancients to be a realm of pure fire or light. It was out of this highest Heaven which all Souls, as fiery sparks, are emanated. Chaldees comes from "Kasadim", or "Kasdim", which is further corroboration because it means the the highest celestial spirits who fathered the production of the Divine sparks of the Soul. This is equivalent to "Archangels" and the "neteru".

Answer for yourself: Is this allegory of Abraham just a coincidence that it is Metaphysical to its very core in these 3 areas? To believe such stretches reason and logic beyond limits of sanity.

But we are not done.

Answer for yourself: Where did Abraham, this "non-Braham" go?

Abraham, "non-Brahm" went straight "down into" Egypt (symbolic for incarnation into matter, fleshly bodies) from the land of Canaan, and his descendants were to suffer bondage in that lower country. Shades of the Philippians 2:7 passage once again hits us between the eyes. It is a devastating blow to the supposed "literal-historical" interpretation of not only this Biblical narrative to declare, on evidence that is incontestable, that the "Egypt" of the scriptures is not the country on a map of the middle East but that the New Testament doctrine that we are the "seed" of Abraham, or should I say "non-Brahm", refers to the Law of Incubation and the Law of Dismemberment. Egypt again is the Biblical term used quite often in the Scriptures as a term which is used in the allegories to designate the plane, state or "land" of embodied life, incarnated life on Earth. "Egypt" is just this Earth, or the state or locale of bodily life on it. It even at times signifies the physical body itself, as in "the flesh pots of Egypt." Putting all of this together we see that the descent of Abraham, and later of the twelve sons of Jacob, the 12 Legions of Angels and "Living Energies" that incarnated into "Egypt", all tell the same story and that is, as I have shared according to the restored "keys" to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, the incarnation of the Deific Mind of God into matter (the Law of Incubation, the Law of Dismemberment). All of these "Divine Allegories", fables, legends, and religious myths express symbolically this same idea; namely, the adventure of the Soul in its incarnated experience in fleshly bodies. If the term Egypt is taken as the geographical unit, many passages in which it occurs will be found to read as sheer double-talk. Had theology known that "the strange land" and "the far country" were symbolisms for this Earth of ours, greater saneness would have marked the counsels of ecclesiasticism down the centuries than it appears to have done. But it did not. If the "bondage in Egypt, and the supposed "slavery" of the skilled engineers and artisans which built the Pyramids and devoted their lives in doing so, had been understood to the confinement of the Soul into bodies of "corruption" then mankind would have been better off today than its present state. Many passages from the Old Testament books refer to the Israelites as captives, outcasts, expatriates and exiles.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever studied Akhenaton and the Egyptian records of the 4 "Exodus" and archeological accounts of this supposed Biblical Exodus as recorded in the Bible? If so then you have seen that that the idea that the Hebrews were subjected to enforced slavery in building the Pyramids is a big stretch of "the truth". Yet this idea of the "Exodus from Egypt", when understood in a Metaphysical and allegorical way, matches the Egyptian, the Greek and later Gnostic terminology and "Pattern", and in so doing alludes of course to the expulsion of these "Living Energies" or "angelic hosts" from a celestial Paradise to a funereal Earthly exile. The sons of God had to go to Egypt also in order that fulfillment might be given to the age-old scriptural line from the Mystery drama: "Out of Egypt have I called my Son."

- Let us look at Luke 10:18:

Luke 10:18 18 And he said unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. (KJV)

In Luke 10:18 Jesus says that he "beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." As Satan is identical with Lucifer, the bringer of Deific light, or the god (collectively), and the hosts of angelic Souls (distributively), Jesus' utterance is readily seen as another affirmation of the Descent of the spiritual principle, eternally symboled by "fire" from heaven. Learning that these ancient writers of the Sacred Scriptures wrote in "allegory" and "metaphor" and never intended their sagacious writings to be erroneously interpreted as if "literal" or "historical" then we are hard pressed to maintain a different interpretation of them today when possessing this knowledge. But we do because we never taught how these ancient writers designed their writings and how they planned they be interpreted by the "hearers" and later "readers".

- We also read in Matt. 28:2:

Matt 28:2 2 And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. (KJV)

Now understanding that the later use of the word "Angels" in Christianity is but a different term used to express the Egyptian Spiritual concept of the "neteru" then this takes on new meaning. Again, in the resurrection scene "an angel of the Lord descended from heaven." Once more this is not a fragment of indisputable history, but another brief symbolism and prefigurement of this "Descent of the Divine" into matter. In an Egypto-Gnostic fragment the same ideograph is repeated under the double representation, when "the heavens opened and two men descended thence with great radiance," and both the young men entered the tomb (symbolic again for the earthly habitation of fleshly bodies which were likened unto a "death").

- The seer in Revelation mentions an angel in flight toward the Earth and also sees the holy city of Zion, radiant with the glory of God, descending from the skies.

Rev 21:10-12 10 And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, 11 Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; 12 And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Do you remember the descent of the 12 legions of Angels/neteru/"Living Energies" or Souls we mentioned earlier? Do you remember when we said that often these 12 "legions" were depicted as "tribes"? Well, there is another "key" for you right here that we are allegorically speaking of the "Descent" of God into "matter" and "humanity".

- Jesus is made to say in John 6:49-59 that he, "the Christ", is that bread that has "come down from Heaven".

John 6:49-51 49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. 50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. 51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever:(KJV)

This is a rhemez, or a "retelling" of the ancient story we find in the Old Testament about the "manna" from God. We are all familiar with the Old Testament story where the Lord reminded Israel that He had "opened the doors of heaven" and "rained down manna upon them to eat."

Ps 78:23-25 23 Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven, 24 And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven. 25 Man did eat angels' food: he sent them meat to the full. (KJV)

Notice if you will the notation that this is food for the "neteru" or "angels", these "descending Living Energies", that feed our Souls. This food is "the Christ" within us all that breaks the bread of God for our Spiritual growth, this "Christ hidden from the foundation of the world" now revealed to the Gentiles as Paul states.

Answer for yourself: Could this be but an allegory of the "Bread that comes down from Heaven" which is the Johannine symbol of "Divine nature" on which the mortal race was to feed? Could "manna" in the Old Testament Mosaic accounts be an allegory for the same?

The Hebrew word "manna" is related by derivation from the Sanskrit word "manas," which means the principle of intelligence, which was the gift of Deity to "man" and "Earthly clay". One could say that this "manna" is in reality "Soul food". Its distribution over the ground in a thin layer like frost and glistening white is a symbolism of the Spirit, which comes to us in the radiant form of a distillation over the ground of our Earthly experience from the brooding nature of the Divine super-intelligence. And all Deity is always described as shining with radiance. Keys to these symbols brings the divine intent of the story to us.

- There exits multitudes of allegories that continue throughout this Bible which retells this same "ancient" narrative of this "Descent" in a variety of symbols and metaphors. I suppose there is no greater in the New Testament than the "Descent of Jesus into Hell/Hades".

When Christians recite the Apostles' Creed they affirm their belief that Jesus descended into hell, although most of them probably have little more than a vague idea of what this phrase implies. But Jesus is not alone here. As well as Jesus others who "descended into Hades" include Attis, Dionysus, Enoch, Herakles, Ishtar, Krishna, Orpheus, and Persephone. The ancient Spiritual understanding of such a statement once was known in the world by through the diligent efforts of Rome then this knowledge and "interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom" was snuffed out around 500 A.D. The descent into Hades was one of their secret teachings preserved in the form of ritual among the "mysteries" and ancient religions of the world. In the Greek Mysteries, initiation connoted not a "beginning" as the word in Roman times came to mean (initia), but quite the opposite: a "finishing," a "making perfect," from the Greek telete, a "consummation" (teleo, to complete, accomplish). Therefore to speak of "anyone as having descended into Hades, was equivalent in antiquity to calling him a full Initiate" into the mysteries and along with that the sacred interpretation of the ancient Spiritual texts which taught the same story throughout the world. Those choosing to further their spiritual development through this channel were required to be of high moral caliber and to prepare themselves for it in prescribed ways. Initiation, then, was earned, not bought, as in later periods when the Mysteries became corrupted. Of all the rituals common to various forms of the Mysteries, such as baptism, sacred marriage, and Eucharist, the descent into Hades seems to have had the greatest significance for the participants.

But more to our point Hades, otherwise known as the Underworld, was the abode of the dead or, more accurately, of departed souls. We have elaborated extensively that this "Hades", this "Underworld", this "abode of the dead", this realm of Heavenly departed Souls refers to the "incarnation into bodies of flesh" which was likened to a "death" (the Egyptian Amenti). We also made mention that the KJV mistakenly translated "Sheol", the realm of the dead, as Hell in the Old Testament. So it becomes is necessary to distinguish between Hades the locality and Hades the god of the Underworld, the god of the dead. Hades comes from a Greek root meaning "unseen," "hidden," or "unknown." Relevant comparisons can be found in the Egyptian religion, where the equivalent of Hades is Amenti, meaning "hidden place" or "place of the hidden god," and in the roots of the word hell, which had a sense of "hiding" or "concealing." In mythology Hades was located under the earth, and the god Hades was the principal of the Underworld deities; hence the journey to Hades involved a descent. Symbolically, the downward direction is no doubt significant, but connected with at least some of the Mystery centers there was also an actual physical descent, say into a cave or underground chamber, as part of the ritual.

The early Hebrews designated Sheol as their abode of the dead, a subterranean place with several levels, each designed to dispense a certain degree of punishment or torture. Now when factor in the idea that "incarnation" was considered a penalty of sorts for the Souls whereby they are subjected to the foulish temptations and sin then this "suffering" is understandable and one can see how this truth is lost in "translation" to become what it has today; a realm of fire and brimestone and burning flesh. In one form or another this concept persisted through the ages. The Latin languages adopted words related to "infernus", referring to the world below, where the wicked are punished. In northern regions, words similar to the English hell were derived from Hel, name of the goddess of the Underworld in Scandinavian mythology. Although hell is usually thought of as a hot place and one to be feared, the northern Helheim, abode of Hel, ranged from a very cold world to sunlit meadows and was not necessarily one to frighten mortal hearts. Likewise, Hades in ancient traditions was not just a place where sinful souls were tortured. The Greeks saw it also as a gateway to a heavenlike existence. One road in Hades led to Tartaros where imaginative punishments were administered, the other, the righthand road, led to the Elysian Fields (Heaven like).

Everything known about the religion of ancient Egypt points to the immediate afterdeath state as being pivotal in the spiritual quest. The litanies and rituals described in the Book of the Dead hint at the change in consciousness experienced by the individual at the end of each incarnation; and also by the initiate while still embodied (his descent into hades as a convert to the mysteries). This feature exerted an important influence on the Greek Mysteries. From the ancient Middle and Near East comes a rich collection of descent myths. One is that of Gilgamesh, hero of the Babylonian epic. Another is the colorful story of the goddess Ishtar who descended into Aralu, the Akkadian Hades; a Sumerian version is similar. Variations of the myth can be traced from there to the north and west. In Phoenicia the goddess Astarte and her consort Adonai appear in the principal roles; elsewhere these are identified as Venus and Adonis; in Asia Minor it is Magna Mater, the Great Mother Cybele, associated with her consort Attis; and so forth. The famous Eleusinian Mysteries celebrated not far from Athens were the origin of most of the classical references to a descent into Hades, including Plato's. Their establishment is described in the Homeric Hymn to Demeter, which dates from the seventh century B.C. -- very early for a literary source. In it the story is unfolded how the god of the Underworld, Hades, abducted Persephone, daughter of Demeter. A simple tale yet one that sustained an important religion for two thousand years or more.

Also from classical sources are two examples from Greek mythology that have stood the test of time and are perennially fascinating. The most famous is the story of Orpheus who went to Hades to plead for the release of the soul of his dead wife, Eurydice. His beautiful music captivated the god of the dead, who granted his request on condition that if Orpheus looked back when leaving the Underworld, Eurydice must return to Hades. Orpheus failed to honor this rule of the spiritual path and his journey was in vain. In the Orphic Mysteries to which Orpheus lent his name, the descent theme was prominent. In a later phase of this religion, devotees were buried with small gold tablets on which were etched not only descriptions of the entrance to Hades, but also intimations of the mystic ritual to prepare the departing soul for its afterdeath journey. What originally had been a conscious and meaningful experience had by then become a mere formula; nevertheless these ancient tablets have served to indicate the nature of the Mystery teaching (Guthrie, W. K. C., Orpheus and Greek Religion, p. 171 ff., and Harrison, J. E., Prolegomena to the Study of Greek Religion, ch. XI and Appendix).

But for us a late example of the postmortem journey of the Soul is the assertion in the Christian Apostles' Creed that Jesus Christ "descended to hell, on the third day rose again from the dead." There is no mention of this incident in the gospels, and the few references elsewhere in the New Testament are vague and not necessarily relevant.

Eph 4:8-10 8 Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 9 (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? 10 He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) (KJV)

1 Pet 3:18-19 18 For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: 19 By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; (KJV)

1 Pet 3:22 22 Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: How, then, did the descent into hell find its way into the Creed? Among early influences was The Book of Enoch which describes a visit to hell, though not by Jesus. The most imaginative description of Jesus' descent is found in the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, which is probably the main source for many later versions such as the popular medieval English mystery play, "The Harrowing of Hell."

Early church fathers, Tertullian, Hippolytus, Origen, among others, regarded the descent literally and attempted to weave it into their theology. Probably from the second or third century onwards it was an accepted belief. Perhaps it was even cited as one of the Articles of Faith, but it does not appear to have been written into the Apostles' Creed until about the seventh century. H. P. Blavatsky suggested that the myth of Jesus' descent had been borrowed from the Mysteries (Blavatsky, Collected Writings, 11:89), a view corroborated by the historian F. C. Conybeare, who wrote that "we may safely attribute to the influence of the old Orphic hymns and mysteries this class of Christian myth" (The Origins of Christianity, p. 286). So as you can see this "Descent of the Soul" into "incarnated fleshly existence" was likened to a "death on a cross of matter" and was a frequent expression among the ancients. This "Hades" or "Hell" is that hell is the physical body and the descent into incarnation is the imprisonment or death of the human soul. What a powerful "key" that is so desperately needed to interpret our Bibles correctly.

In modern Christianity, the descent into hell as an actual event is seldom mentioned outside the Apostles' Creed and in at least one recent translation even this statement is camouflaged. Now for the big question.

Answer for yourself: If hell is strictly a place of torment, why did Jesus go there for three days?

This problem must have been a thorny one in the minds of the early church fathers. They came up with the explanation that the purpose was to preach to all therein who had lived and died before that time and so had missed the opportunity for Christian salvation (cf. Clement of Alexandria, Stromateis, vi, ch. 6). This theory derived from other traditions known to some of these writers: that the descent into Hades (the body) involved an obligation to do good works while there. It is a pity that they did not embody in their theology the idea that the descent marks the culmination of a long and arduous spiritual quest, the end of which is Divinity regained by our Prodigal Souls.

So we see that nowhere is the statement of the descent of Soul made more explicitly than in the Nicene Creed of the Christian Church, wherein the second person of the Trinity is described as he "For us and for our salvation he came down from heaven, was incarnate of the Holy Spirit and the Virgin Mary and became truly human". If we think for a second that "matter" was always understood as "Mary" then this Gnosis becomes even more clear. This idea I found in my studies was very common to many early nations and Christianity not only "borrowed" this exiting idea of Emanationism but "radically reinterpreted" it and forced upon it a "literal-historical" exegesis and interpretation which destroyed its true meaning. But you have not see nothing yet which is in store for you in our last article coming up soon.

We take a break to move to the next article in this series.

THE DESCENT OF THE SOUL #6

In the last article we shared many examples, both in the Old Testament and New Testament, of the hidden "Descent of the Soul" and Emanationism that lay hidden behind our various narratives in our Christian Bibles. We hopefully have seen by now that these Metaphysical concepts were captured and retold in a simpler way through the medium of symbolic and anthropomorphic language to the common man in what was human narrative. Although the "outer mysteries" heard these "Divine Allegories" as if a depiction of human lives those initiated into the "inner mysteries" of the Mystery Religions of the world heard these same stories and understood the "inner wisdom" concealed within them.

We are steadily making progress in our study of the "Descent of the Soul" and restoring the "keys" for its proper understanding of our Bibles. We continue to do so in this article by stating that a frequent figure for the descending spirits of light and "Living Energies" in their "downward" plunge into dense matter and materiality is that of a "falling star". This idea that a "star", itself a literal "living solar Energy" in the Cosmos, was used as an emblem of the Divine Soul, itself also a "Living Energy", should not surprise us.

- In the Egyptian Records of the Past (Vol. II, p. 16) the Speaker says: "The place is empty into which the starry ones fall down headlong upon their faces and find nothing by which they can raise themselves up."
- This same thought is expressed in a Chinese proverb which states: "The stars ceased shining in heaven and fell upon Earth, where they became men."
- Gerald Massey, a renown Egyptologist and expert on this ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom, states that "The Elementaries or brute forces of nature may be said to have obtained their Souls in the stars. Hence, as Plutarch says, the Dog-Star (Sirius) is the Soul of Isis, Orion is the Soul of Horus, and the Bear (constellation Ursa Major) is the Soul of Typhon,--Soul and Star being synonymous in the Egyptian word Seb" (Gerald Massey, The Natural Genesis, I, p. 332).
- In one of the addresses to the Pharaoh Pepi it is said to him: "Thy Soul is a living star at the head of his brethren."

Answer for yourself: What does this mean? This terminology at one time was a problem for me for a while in trying to understand why the Pharaohs had a Spiritual belief that when they died that they desired to "become a star" in Heaven. The 4 shafts in the Great Pyramid, 2 pointing from the Queen's and King's chamber, are aligned with 4 stars of the Heavens that were crucial symbols for the heart of Egypt's Religious beliefs in the afterlife. These 4 shafts are called today by many "Soul Shafts". Looking at it literally at this "star symbolism for the Soul" did not make sense to me. But when I discovered that they were only saying "allegorically that in their death that they, as "Living Energies", will become like the stars above, and "ascend" and "return" to the Source of all Living Energy in the Cosmos; namely, the "Father" in Heaven (the Sky) from which they have Emanated and were but "Descended Living Energies" which have incarnated on an Earthly material plane of existence. Then, understanding this, it all make sense. Besides this it must be understood that the Egyptians often used the names of kings for the character of the "Krst" or "Christos", or the "sun-god".

In the texts of Egypt we read of the evil crocodile. The crocodile is symbolic of Paul's "carnal nature" of which we read in the New Testament. This "evil crocodile" is said to "swallow the sinking stars" (Souls...as in incarnation). This is saying no more than that the Souls that fall into the darkness of incarnation are like the internalization of "food" for the destroying crocodile. Celestially speaking, among the ancients the stars that dipped beneath the horizon (seen to rise in the East and set daily in the West) were emblematic of Souls which "descended" into the "death" of the physical incarnation; they were not like the "circumpolar stars" (circumpolar stars were believed to be "eternal" since they never rose above the horizon or sank beneath the horizon but continually circled the pole star...these were "non-incarnating" Deity). Souls in incarnation were dubbed by the Greeks "moist Souls," since they were immersed in the body, which is seven-eighths water by composition. The redeemed Souls rejoiced in the Egyptian Ritual and the Egyptian Book of the Dead, in chapter 44, at being lifted up "among the stars that never set" (symbolic of non-incarnating gods). Those "stars" or "Living Energies", condemned to descend into matter as a punishment and a learning experience, were represented as "falling stars" in danger of being devoured by the open jaws of the predators like the crocodile or, as later symbolized, a {short description of image} dragon. This "dragon" again was but a symbol of the death of the Soul when incarnated into mortal life and fleshly incarnation. We are speaking totally in allegory here. This "dragon" lurked in the "bayou of Amenta" or the bend of the river in Heaven "where the starry procession of stars dipped down below the horizon" (below the horizon meant symbolically as "going to their death"). This "celestial dragon" was believed to have "symbolically swallowed the setting stars." This "dragon" in Heaven was a Spiritual Symbol of the "incarnation" of these "Living Energies" into matter or humanity. There is a saying in Esoteric Astrology: "Saturn falls in Aries". This has a dual meaning; the first of which is important for us. Saturn is the Lord of Karma, the imposer of retribution and the one who demands full payment of all debts and who therefore condemns us to the struggle for existence, both from the form side and from the soul side. Saturn, therefore, "fell" when man fell into generation (incarnation).. He "followed the sons of men down into their low place. "Indeed the entire myth of the "casting down of Saturn and his hosts" was figured under the symbolism of falling stars. The narrative of Satan (Lucifer--the "light bearer") being cast out of Heaven and "falling from Heaven" as seen in Rev 12:7-10 is another example. These allegories might be new to you but if you are a Christian you most likely have heard of the "dragon" that "made war with the woman and drew down into his kingdom many of the stars of heaven." There is recorded for us in the Book of Revelation a passage which few ever ponder:

Rev 11:8 8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. (KJV)

One of the phenomena of this Crucifixion mentioned in Revelation along with the darkness over the Earth, the veiled sun and the blood-stained moon, is that "the stars from the Heavens fell." This was never a "meteor shower" as we might think if interpreting this texts "literally" but a Divine Allegory for the "Descent of the Soul" into matter. Again, the same story is told over and over again just using other symbols and representations to which we have lost the "keys" to its ancient meaning today. If you recall the name "Egypt", as we saw, is used throughout the Old Testament and New Testament as symbolic for our material bodies as the home for incarnating and descending Souls. In the same place we read that "when the message of the third angel was sounded forth, a great star went down from heaven and it fell upon the Earth." Another star fell at the sounding of the trumpet of the firth angel. The various legends, then, of falling stars become invested with unexpected significance as being disguised allusions to the descent of the angelic myriads ("Living Energies") to our shores in order to become our Souls.

All of this star symbolism as connected to the "Descent of the Soul" should not surprise us. We have seen it our whole life and never recognized it. This "Descent of the Soul" lies behind the Star of David. This "Star of David" symbolizes not only the path of "Descent of the Soul" but the path of "Ascent of the Soul" as well. This ascension was likened in the Mystery Religions as a path of Initiation as in a "new birth". This "new birth", being "born again", is part of our ascent!) THINK! Many are familiar with the images of the interconnected triangles and recognize the ensemble as the "Star of David." Actually, the interconnected triangle predate Judaism. This "interconnected triangle" represents the Royal Path beginning with differentiation (birth) in the Celestial realms; its involution (descent) into the material world to gain consciousness; and, its return path to the Celestial where it will "consciously" reunite with "The One" (God). The two interconnected triangles, one point pointing downward for the "incarnation" and one pointing upward for the "ascension", signify the involution and evolution of the Soul through what is called the Cycle of Necessity. The down-pointing triangle, dark in color, indicates the descent of the Soul and its incarnation into material conditions for the purpose of gaining necessary experience and furthering its conscious awareness. The up-pointing triangle, light in color, indicates the ascent, or evolution of the Soul, back to the realm of spirit after gaining experience in matter.

The more you study this "Descent of the Soul" the more you are captivated by what you find. Amazingly we find that this "Descent of the Soul" was considered by the ancients to be in partial degree a karmic punishment for sin, an enforced expiation of evolutionary dereliction in past cycles, as is hinted in Greek philosophy. But yet at the same time it was also pictured by them as a "hiding for safety" in this realm of matter. This "dereliction of duty" is not fully elaborated upon in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Some contact or crisis in celestial affairs, not fully divulged, made it both mandatory and advantageous for the angel hosts to flee Heaven and find on Earth, or in "Egypt" (a symbol for the material body), an escape from danger involved in some evolutionary discretion. This should sound familiar to us because the New Testament tells this same allegory of the baby "Christ's" flight "down into Egypt" to escape the dangers of Herod. Normally one is not conditioned to think of "Hell" as a heaven and respite, but certain implications in the ancient theology require us to have to do just that. This desire to "hide" is found in multiple accounts of the solar gods who had to be hidden from an evil King desiring to take the life of the infant god.

- Adam hid himself when the Eternal walked in the garden.
- Moses as an infant was hidden in the papyrus swamps of "Egypt";
- Later Moses was hidden by the Eternal in a cleft of the rock as the majesty of the Lord swept by.
- Jonah ran and hid from the Eternal when first commanded to execute a mission to the Ninevites.
- The Old Testament Joseph went down to "Egypt" to be saved from danger.
- Jotham preserved his life from his murderous brother Abimelech by hiding.
- Saul was found in hiding among the baggage when he was chosen to be king in Israel.
- In Egypt, Buto, the nurse, concealed Horus, the analogue of Jesus, in Sekhem, "the hidden shrine and shut place,"--our Earth.
- Horus' birth was in a secret place.
- A similar legend is related of the mythical Sargon in the cuneiform tablets.
- The child Jesus had to be hidden away from danger of Herod by descending down in "Egypt"!

Answer for yourself: Do you see a "Pattern" here that was replayed down through antiquity? You should.

The account of Sargon, representative of "the Pattern", says: "My mother, the Princess, conceived me; in a secret place she brought me forth." The supreme Egyptian Sun-God, the mighty spiritual divinity Ra, says to the Earth: "I have hidden you" (The Book of Hades, First Division). Ra says that in the "Egypt" of this lower world that he had prepared a secret and mysterious dwelling for his children. This Divine dwelling created by Ra as the place of protection for the elect, is called "the Retreat" in the Egyptian Religion. Amen, an aspect of Ra, was termed "The Master of the Hidden Spheres"; and Amen itself means "the hidden god." In the Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 22, Osiris cries: "I rise out of the egg in the hidden land." Under another name, Qem-Ur, he addresses the Earth (Aukert, the underworld, the incarnated Souls in bodies) as the land "which hidest thy companion who is in thee." The god again speaks of "hiding himself to cast light upon his hidden place." This is the typical Luciferian symbolism and character of the descending god, the Light-Bringer. He hides himself in order, it is said, to perform there the "mysteries of the underworld" (the incarnated world): "These things shall be done secretly in the underworld" (the Egyptian Book of the Dead). Under the title of Unas he "gathers together his members which are in the hidden place." He says that he has "made Horus enter into the Hidden Shrine to vivify the heart of the god."

It is desirable to search out a little more closely this rationale for this hiding in the secret place of Earth, as the bases of the whole theological situation we are encountering in our study.

Answer for yourself: What are the two causes that have been promoted as the reasons for this "Descent of the Souls"?

- First we have an evolutionary cause...to bring to Spiritual Maturity the Soul and its self-awareness and consciousness of the Divine...called the Cycle of Necessity (the general evolutionary cycle involving the cycles of reembodiments which every Spiritual entity has to undergo, whether on this earth, or elsewhere).
- Second we have the idea of some karmic punishment for error, stubbornness, pride or wrong.

In order for us to take our next step it becomes of importance that we come to understand the 3 foundations upon which all ancient Spiritual Wisdom rests:

- That behind everything in the universe there is the Unknowable, the vast abyss of Space, Reality. Impossible to describe, we call it simply Infinity, without beginning, without end, because it is without attributes or finite qualities. Many names have been given in an attempt to describe the Boundless, but man cannot define the Indefinable. The Old Testament writers spoke of it as "without form and void," and as the "Darkness upon the face of the deep." The Buddhists also called it the Void or Emptiness, because nothing as yet had taken form. In the Icelandic Eddas, the old Norse bards named it the "Yawning Gap"; while in the Zohar the Kabbalists used the term Ayn Soph, meaning "without limits" or the "boundless." From this seeming No-thing-ness -- which was not nothingness at all, but a condition of latent vibrant potentiality full with expectant life, the seed-essences of divinity -- the second basic concept follows:
- That motion, rhythm, or the periodic appearance of a Universe from the Darkness of the Boundless into the Light, is the action of Deity as it bursts through into manifestation -- a word which implies a period of activity as contrasted with the condition of dormancy in which it had been during its period of rest. As an ancient stanza has it: like the ebb and flux of the tides, numberless universes called "sparks of Eternity" come and go, appear and disappear, with all that is contained therein. We are familiar with this law of periodicity, for the rhythm of nature's cycles is seen in the alternation of day and night, birth and death, waking and sleeping, the waxing and waning of the moon, and the cycle of the four seasons. This again is "the Pattern".
- The fundamental identity of all Souls with the Universal Over-Soul," to use Emerson's term. This simply means that every aspect of a universe, from galaxies to man and on down through the lower kingdoms, is identical in essence with God or the Universal Divine Intelligence. We all partake of God and are identical in essence, yes; but not in expression, because we are all individual "god-sparks" of the One Intelligence. When the universe is breathed forth out of its latent condition, out of Darkness, it and all the potential seeds of life within it feel the impelling force to start another cycle of active growth. Therefore each entity, by the very force of the evolutionary urge, has to pass through every phase of experience, including mineral, plant and animal forms, until the human kingdom is reached. From then on, these god-sparks must by their own efforts develop and evolve their essential divinity, so that in time they will have earned the right to become truly self-conscious gods. It is a long pilgrimage, sometimes called the "Cycle of Necessity" because it suggests that the entire process of evolution takes in the necessity to grow, to evolve, to benefit by all that nature throughout her kingdoms has to offer. As "sparks of Eternity" we have had to enrich our store of experience by using mineral, plant and animal bodies -- but only as temporary media of expression. God does not become "literally" the stone or the vegetable, but an aspect of the Divine is the focal center of every stone or plant or animal just as we cannot say that our inner god is a human being, but only uses our human vehicle as its present means of self-expression, so we cannot say that we as human beings were ever minerals, plants or animals. This is a most important distinction to make.

The second cause for this "Descent of the Soul" is less philosophically explained in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and our Bibles but the hints that are given us from the ancient Spiritual Wisdom grew out of a special situation involving the undisciplined behavior of twelve legions of angels, who, in retribution for evolutionary irregularities on their part, were forced into an Earthly incarnation which was so distasteful to them.

- In the ancient Egyptian Religion we find that in the character of King Teta, the personified Osiris is made to say: "This Teta hath detestation of the Earth, and he will not enter into Geb" (god of Earth). There are also references to the anger of the higher gods, enkindled against them.
- Plato in Phaedrus speaks of those Souls who were "subject through the ancient indignation of the Gods in consequence of former guilt" to severe penalties on Earth.
- In the Cratylus Plato agrees with the doctrine of the Orphics that the Soul is punished through its union with body.
- Iamblichus in Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans and Assyrians, p. 133, states that a partial motive in the celebration of the Mysteries of Sabazius was the appeasing of "the ancient Divine anger."
- Clement of Alexandria (Stromata, III) preserves a passage from a celebrated Pythagorean, Philolaus, which runs: *"The ancient theologists and priests also testify that the Soul is united with body as if for the sake of punishment."
- The Book of Enoch points to a motive for this punishment in that the deities "came not in their proper season." It is given that they were ordered to incarnate at an earlier period, when the bodies of the animal race were of a requisite preparedness to receive the principle of intelligence, but that they refused and in consequence were forced to descend much later, when the animal vehicles were farther degenerated and lapsed into a state of degeneracy.
- Proclus in his Hymn to Minerva prays to the goddess: *"Nor let these horrid punishments be mine, Which guilty Souls in Tartarus confine, With fetters fastened to its broken floors, And locked by hell's tremendous iron doors."
- Dante in the Inferno alludes to the Souls in bondage: *"Hither for failure of their vows exiled."

This is quite a thought to ponder but it is prevalent in the ancient writings. When viewed together there is ground for connecting all this allusion to "disobedience" to a type of punishment inflected upon these Souls for some form of unacceptable behavior that resulted in their "incarnation" and our present adventure on Earth. The often mentioned "rebellion of the angels" is our rebellion that culminated in our Earthly pilgrimage into matter whereby we can "work out our salvation" with fear and trembling.

Theological students should be more familiar with Plato's version of the Demiurge's speech to the hosts about to incarnate, the "junior gods," in the Timaeus. The Creator covenants with them to insure their immortality, to support them with his power; and then charge them to come to Earth and "weave together mortal and immortal natures." It is said in the Timaeus that they rebelled, procrastinated and, when finally were forced to descend by virtue of karma, missed their "appointed time for their incarnation due to procrastination" which would have carried them more easily forward past a crucial point in the evolution of matter. As it turned out, their delay brought them to the Earth when the lower race they were to uplift had sunk back into a further beastly degradation, and their punishment to be inflicted upon them, by default of their procrastination, became all the more greater by the enhanced degenerated grossness of the bodies they were to inhabit. They had missed the day of their "visitation". Their proper season had passed, which both Jude and Enoch proclaim.

We find in an old Egyptian inscription called "The Destruction of Mankind" a parallel to this somewhat anomalous situation in Plato's writings. There is a rebellion against Ra, the Sun-God, followed by a great destruction and a deluge. The creator god Ra had reigned over humanity for many years. The people were beginning to complain that he had grown old and frail, and plotted to organize a rebellion against him. When Ra heard of this, he organized a council of the gods to ask their advice. It was suggested that Ra send his eye to earth in the form of the lioness goddess Sekhmet. This was done, and the lioness roamed about earth killing men and women and drinking their blood. When Ra was satisfied that those who plotted against him were destroyed, he asked Sekhmet to end her destruction. The lioness however refused, and continued killing saying she enjoyed her task. Ra now feared mankind would be completely destroyed. He sent for his servants, and asked that they bring him large amounts of pomegranates. These were crushed and placed into several vessels of beer. The vessels were then poured over the fields where Sekhmet could find the liquid. She mistook it for the blood of humans and drank it. She then became too drunk to continue her killing , and mankind was spared. Interesting is what Ra says. He calls the elder gods around him for consultation and says to them: "You ancient gods, behold the beings who are born of myself; they utter words against me. Tell me, what would you do in these circumstances? Behold, I have waited and I have not destroyed them until I should hear what you have to say" (G. Massey, Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 556). The elder gods advise that he permit them to go and smite the enemies who plot evil against Ra, and let none remain alive. The rebels are then destroyed by being cast down for three days.

Answer for yourself: What is being said here? Why 3 days? What does this mean? What if any connection is there to the "gods" dying for 3 days which is found all the way through the ancient Spiritual Wisdom? Is this a "Pattern" and what could it mean? Is this "Pattern" symbolized by the "Living Energy" of our Sun being dead for 3 days at the Winter Solstice? Yes, yes, yes.

Here is the distinct clue to true meaning, for the three days are a symbol for the time spent by evolutionary consciousness in the three lower kingdoms beneath man:

- the mineral,
- vegetable and
- animal.

And "destruction" in this usage can not be taken as equivalent to actual annihilation or extermination. This latter point is an extremely important one, as it saves many a Biblical allegory from utter perversion of its true meaning. After the exaction of the penalty, the "majesty of Ra" declares that he will now protect men on this account. "I raise my hand (in token) that I shall not again destroy men." The similarity of this description to more than a score of such narratives of the almighty anger against "a stiff-necked and rebellious people," their being cast out from celestial court and favor, and the eventual Divine relenting and restoration of them to his providential care, must strike any objective and fair-minded student who has read the Old Testament.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Old Testament contains an account of the "rebellion of the angels" in the guise of alleged Hebrew history?

Again, Divine Allegory has been passed off as if "literal-history" It is the rebellion of the "Sons of Korah," given in the Mosaic books, and recalled to the attention of the Israelites several times by God. It is told that at the rebellion the Lord caused the Earth to open and swallow them up. It should be noticed that they were engulfed by the Earth. It is known that two different groups of Psalms, thirteen to forty-nine, and eighty-four to eighty-eight, are specialized as "Psalms of the Sons of Korah." It is to be remarked as significant also that while swallowed up by Earth, they were not destroyed; just like Adam was told that when his eyes were opened to good and evil he would "die" but actually did not! The rebel hosts, cast out of Heaven, were not annihilated!

Answer for yourself: What is going on? What can this mean but that the term "destruction" is purely a symbol for this enforced descent to Earth?

Here, in Earthly incarnation, these "Descending Living Energies" (Souls) could atone by sojourning in the untoward conditions of animal embodiment. Milton in the Paradise Lost, expresses Adam's surprise to find that his sentence of "death" for disobedience is a long, living death, not extinction. The account of the Korahitic rebellion expressly states that they were swallowed alive. When looking into Comparative Religions we find that both the Chaldean as well as Hindu records reaffirm the correctness of this interpretation, for Massey says: "The Chaldean and Hindu legends know nothing of a human sin as a cause of the deluge. The sin against the gods, however, is described as the cause of the deluge in the so-called 'destruction of men.' . . . But these beings in the case were elemental, not mortal, and the sin was not human."

This is very important for our study. The beings were pre-human and angelic, not elemental in the theological sense. Their rebellion, in short, occurred in Heaven, not on Earth, though it has been prolonged into the Earthly life. They carried their rebellious attitude down with them and exhibit phases of it to the present! An Egyptian text says of the god Anhur that he had seen the malice of these gods who "deserted their allegiance to raise a rebellion," and "he refused to go forth with them." Other texts contain references to "the children of impotent revolt," and tell of their "inroad into the Eastern part of heaven, whereupon there arose a battle in heaven and in all the Earth." And another passage alludes to the "carrying out of the sentence upon those who are to die," and says it is "the withholding of that which is so needful to the Souls of the children of impotent revolt." The meaning here is obviously their expulsion from Heaven and their forced "incarnation" into matter.

Let us catch up with a short summary. It appears from this ancient Spiritual Wisdom that the implications and the moral of these traditions of rebellious and outcast angels are these:

- Our Divine Souls (for we are those rebellious deities) fled under karmic pressure from heaven to Earth, and we have carried the same tendencies down in our human and national history.
- We refused at first to incarnate in the animal forms, and we still are rebellious in our refusal to take full charge and assume complete mastery over the "animal" segment of our composite nature.
- Hence the frequent injunctions in old scriptures to "kill out" the lower elements in us, and such a statement as that in the Egyptian text of Unas to "slay the rebel" in consummating our work of redemption.
- Angels indeed were despatched to this realm, and their presence in the human constitution accounts for the Divine element in all religion.
- In the Epistle to the Hebrews (1:14) it is asked: "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who should be heirs of salvation?"

We move on now to establish beyond any doubt that it is this Earth that the descent was made. This is tremendously vital to true interpretation of the ancient Sacred Wisdom as well as our Bibles.

In Egyptian Sacred Scriptures we find the promise that "if Pepi falleth on to the Earth, Keb [Seb] will lift him up."

Answer for yourself: Who or what is this "Pepi"?

Pepi here is symbolic for the divinity in man, the god that descended to the Earth. To him in another place it is said: "Thou plowest the Earth . . . Thou journeyest on the road whereon the gods journeyed."

Answer for yourself: What is this saying? Is is saying that Earth is the place to which the gods (Living Energies) were sent to travel the road set out for their Spiritual evolution.

Our Bibles how a great clue. One of the most definitive statements of this fact in Christian Scriptures is that noteworthy passage in Revelation (12:7-9), where we have a concise rehearsal of the "war in heaven" and the casting down of the angel hosts in the character of Satan, as the "dragon" or "serpent".

Rev 12:7-9 7 And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, 8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. 9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that this "war in Heaven" is continued on the Earth?

It is of huge importance that we see that this war in Heaven continues today on Earth and its part of our "ascension" preparations.

Rev 12:17 17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, ...(KJV)

We have come full-circle. This confirms the narrative in Genesis, wherein the Lord swore to place enmity between the serpent, or dragon, and the seed of the woman.

Answer for yourself: Did you ever notice that the "end of this story/allegory" in our Bible connects to the "beginning of the allegory" before? It is all the "same story" told over and over again in multiple symbols and metaphors and with a host of variety of personifications and multiple uses of anthropomorphic descriptions of this "Spiritual realm" in which we actually live even though we are temporarily experiencing this "physical dimension".

In the Egyptian Book of the Dead (the Egyptian Bible for those Souls incarnated and living an Earthly life as if the "walking dead" that are in need of Soulish preparation for their later "ascension" at the death of the body), in the "chapter by which one cometh forth by day," the spirit of the descending god pleads:

121 "Let me have possession of all things soever which were offered ritualistically for me in the nether world. Let me have possession of the table of offerings which was heaped up for me on Earth." He asks "that he may feed upon the bread of Seb [the Earth god] or the food of Earth." Proceeding he urges: "Let the Duat be opened for me. Here am I."

Answer for yourself: What is going on?

What we have just read is an announcement of his advent upon Earth, his incarnation, for the Duat is the gate of entrance to Amenta (which we saw earlier is symbolic for the dead who are in reality incarnated Souls). He is coming to this world to feed upon that type of concrete life experience which the incarnational conditions here alone afford, under the name of "the bread of Seb." Later, following his resurrection, he says: "The tunnels of Earth have given me birth." "I rise as a god among men," he exclaims. If there are men elsewhere than on Earth, they are not those referred to in the old scriptures. He is described again as "Thou who givest light to the Earth (Spiritual Illumination from life's experiences" (Rit., Ch. 15). Again he says: "I come that I may overthrow my adversaries upon Earth."

We are reading a prophecy of Galatians chapter 5 and we don't know it; the battle between the "flesh" and the "Spirit" whereby mankind is to learn about Godliness and come to emulate it through life's opportunities which consist of both "failures" and "successes" of our Soul. We are better for both! The goal is the development of "Krst-likeness" or "Christ-likeness" through these incarnational experiences whereby we come to "which keep the commandments of God" and in so doing learn what is intended by our Earthly incarnation in preparation for our "Prodigal return" to our Father.

It is on Earth that his opposition is to be met and where we must come to conquer it. We incarnate as a "Spiritual child" as our undeveloped divinity is given a life-time of opportunity for Spiritual growth that comes only by overcoming the resistance and opposition to our Soul's Spiritual evolution throughout life. We are on our Father's assignment here and we must "awaken" to it in this land of opportunity called Earth. Here, in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, it is said that the Soul, is come to "cause the authority of his father to be recognized in the great dwelling of Seb,"--Earth. Another passage in the Egyptian Book of the Dead (Ch. 64) describes the lower self in man as saying: "I draw near to the god whose words were heard by me in the lower Earth." As the god-Soul descends he says: "My body shall be established and it shall neither fall into decay nor be destroyed upon this Earth." The Soul's mission to Earth is proclaimed as being to "quicken every human being that walketh upon the regions which are upon the Earth." In another place in the Egyptian Book of the Dead we have a combined reference to the Earth both as the "hidden place" and as the globe where the young gods came to progress. So we all have "gone down into Egypt" if you get my point. It is said of Isis that "she suckled the child in solitariness, and none knew where his place was, and he grew in strength and his arm increased in strength in the house of Keb," or the Earth. Egypt, as you can see, when understood correctly, if of immense importance in correct interpretation of our Spiritual allegories of our Bibles. Thus the localization of the place where the gods fell when ejected from heaven in the mythos as being our Earth is very important realization that will alter all religious interpretations of our Bibles drastically.

All of this is new to us but let me stress that for thousands and thousands of years this was not "new" at all but rather it was known. Today, obscured by ignorant handling of the Gnosis in our Bibles and others Sacred Books, this knowledge is lost and only in these last 150 or so years is again crying out from the rocks and ground of Earth to be heard. It is almost unthinkable that it could have met such a fate when the Church had constantly before its eyes this knowledge but "rejected" it". This Law of Incubation and Dismemberment of the Christhood had been buried under the ashes of Rome's commanded burnings of the world's libraries and the unmercifully extermination of millions of adherents of the world's ancients Spiritual Wisdom. Before the eyes of the early Roman Church they beheld this knowledge in the "Christmas story" and rather than expound it they "radically reinterpreted" it and the hoary tradition of the fall of the angels has been wrenched out of all relation to the Nativity at the Winter Solstice every sense.

Rev 22:16 16 I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. (KJV)

Rome would not do it. To comprehend this statement correctly it is a necessary requirement to read the name "Jesus" in the light of its Gnostic meaning as an Aeon, or emanation of Divine spirit, an interpretation that is not at odds with its usage in the Book of Revelation. Scholars and students are continually impressed with the apparent resemblance of the Book of Revelation to Gnostic literature, and one writer has ventured the opinion that it could have been written only by a Platonist versed in Mystery and Magian symbology. It bears quite pointed resemblances to such a Hermetic book as the Enoch. The Jesus referred to in the Book of Revelation obviously has little if any relationship to the "literal-historical" Jesus personalized in the Gospels. His figure in the Book of Revelation is not of a supposed "literal-historical" personage but rather has cosmic proportions and equates with the Logos. His dispatching of his angels to testify unto the churches can mean only that the Demiurgus, or Cosmic Intelligence embodied in an exalted being of the hierarchy, ordered the incarnation of the legionary hosts in the interests of the human evolution on Earth. Let this sink in. The "churches" containing these "Gnostic Chrestian" dare not be compared to the churches of the later Roman centuries or of today which has so stayed from God's design and plan. The "churches" mentioned in the Book of Relation, these Gnostic congregations, were "Spiritually" head and shoulders beyond where we stand in Christianity today. These "churches" in the Apocalypse, were groupings or gradations of Spiritual beings at or near the completed state of human development, if not the "ecclesia" or "assembly" of the divinized mortals. The restoration of this truth and the knowledge that goes with it not only corrects our erroneous interpretation of our "Jesus Story" today but goes a long way in preparing us, as "Living Souls", for true Spiritual Earthly evolution and so doing goes a long way in preparing us for our "ascension" home.

Let us close by saying that this "incarnation" took on the character of a "fall.," Many scholars today will tell you, as does Cocker in his Greek Philosophy, that "The present life is a fall and a punishment." Many passage from the Bible could be presented to show that the incarnation was held to have resulted in a fall or debasement of pristine angelic virtue. The Book of Revelation and its reference to the fallen Babylon, the mighty, whose ancient glory had departed, giving place to the glory of the Beast, is but one of many. We "fall" into this world of incarnation as undivinized "sons of men," as distinct from the "Sons of God," which is our incarnational Spiritual Goal. The tension between the words "Gentiles" and "Israelites" is parallel to this same idea. As a "Gentile", regardless a "non-Jew" or a "Jew", it allegorically means the Soul's unpurified nature that dragged down the gods who incarnated in their bodies and dimmed their glory. The Gentile is the man "from beneath"; the Israelite is "from above," as Jesus affirmed. "The first man is of the Earth, Earthy; the second is the Lord from heaven," says St. Paul. The immersion of the Soul in animal bodies reduced their originally vivid Divine intelligence to such a point of uselessness that they sank by stages under the dominance of the animal and sensual disposition. And here it is we find the origin for the conversion of the evolutionary "descent" into the theological "fall." If you grasp the idea then we see that looking overall at the Bible not in a "literal-historical" way but as a Divine Spiritual allegory then the two terms "Gentiles" and "Israelites" cannot be attached to any historical citizens. Their employment by several nations was at first only an allegorical in purpose. The "Gentiles" were then, according to this allegory, the party of the first part in evolution, who drew down the gods and changed their glory as Paul said:

Rom 1:23 23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things. (KJV)

This first part in Soulish evolution, which drew down the gods and changed their glory, was in spite of "broad oaths fast sealed" and a covenant with deity before their incarnation.

We mentioned long ago about Prometheus and the gift of "Divine fire" to mankind (incarnational Deity). The advent of the Prometheans (Souls) to Earth was likened to a Divine sacrifice, which many have called the sacrifice "for sin." This is truly amazing so watch closely. Sadly the term "sacrifice for sin" is a grossly perverted and misunderstood as a form of the word "sacrifice" that has caused this concept to be taken in the light of a self-privation when this is not intended. Few words of noble meaning have not been touched or reinterpreted, and not for the better, by the disfiguring hand of subnormal human understanding. Sacrifice (Latin: sacra and facio) means "to make sacred," and has no immediate correlation with the denial to oneself of benefits. This seen quite clearly because the angel legions descended to make a lower order of life holy--"to adorn what was below them," as Plotinus and Platonism puts it. Their labor was to the end of "scarifying" a merely natural kingdom of life. It was to sanctify with the gift of Divinity the mortal race, and make it immortal and Divine.

This is not to say in the slightest that such a Divine enterprise did not require hardship. The labor of Soulish evolution, especially when self-consciousness had been awakened and the conscious Self became aware of his failures, and knew that he bore responsibility for his conduct, is not an easy road for anyone. The reason for the emphasis of the denial aspect of the sacrifice is to be found in the fact that the uplifting and divinizing of the lower grade of animal life entailed a long abandonment of the comforts of Heaven by these "Living Energies" and a quenching of their Deific fire by these "Moist Souls" in these bodies of "fleshy-water". The adventure brought loss, agony, torment, affliction, sadness, and woe. It was an Exodus and exile from a home of exalted joy and happiness. It was indeed a "fall" from lively consciousness into partial unconsciousness. It was an deportation from Heaven into a long, hard and unattractive migration into these bodies of "death". Cocker, in his Greek Philosophy, say in reference to Plato's Cave Allegory: "Their sojourn on Earth is . . . a dreary exile from their proper home." Earth life is only a shadow of reality. In Egyptian Scriptures the holy city of Aarru-Hetep (Salem) was to be built up by "the outcasts or the colonists from Egypt."

Answer for yourself: Did you catch that? Two Jerusalems were recognized by Paul, one terrestrial, one celestial. The name of Jerusalem we read as the Aarru-salem or fields of peace, equivalent to Aarru-hetep or Sekhet-hetep, the fields of peace in Egyptian."

Phil 3:20 20 For our conversation (citizenship) is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: (KJV)

This is a clear Biblical intimation that we are exiles from a higher world. Greek philosophy and mythology are abounding with allusions to Souls wandering on Earth as on an Exodus or as exiles from a higher Divine realm or sphere. Most of the semi-Divine heroes had long journeys and crusades assigned to them. And the Prodigal Son allegory is of course the unquestioned representative of the exile's role in Bible lore. From the Greek philosopher Empedocles comes the echo of the sentiment that the Soul has migrated to a foreign country: "For this I weep, for this indulge my woe, That e'er my Soul such novel realms should know."

Moses' son was named Gershom, which means "Stranger," with the parenthetical explanation: "For I have been a stranger in a foreign land."

Now should better understand:

Luke 14:26 26 If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. (KJV)

In the great Gnostic-Christian work, the Pistis Sophia (Bk. 2, p. 341) a text runs to nearly the same effect: "For this cause have I said unto you aforetime, 'he who shall not leave father and mother to follow after me is not worthy of me.' What I said then was, ye shall leave your parents, the rulers, that ye may all be children of the first, everlasting mystery."

This never had a meaning that was extended to "human parents" or other kindred. This is but another of the many illusions and allegories in the Bible concerning the exiling of the angelic orders in their "incarnation". When I first learned this I remember the feeling of loneliness that swept over me; realizing what I had lost and my desire for home arose anew within me and strengthened my desire and resolve to do whatever necessary for my return and that I no longer miss my "day of visitation". I hope that is your desire as well. This breaking of home ties occurred not in my Earthly experience but in my celestial paradise so long ago. If Christianity had kept its original knowledge of our cosmic errand, we could have been saved the continuing perplexity of wondering why the Lord's disciples are commanded to flout the one of the closest of human ties. Now, with our new understanding of the term "Israelites" (as the children of Egypt), the many allusions to the children of Israel as exiles, captives in a foreign land, hostages and outcasts, are made during periods when the historical Hebrews were not in either the Egyptian or the Babylonian or Assyrian captivities. This should speak volumes to us and our Souls. Possessing the truth of ancient Egyptian History regarding the Exodus and others "captivities" then many of these exiles, captivities and wanderings of the children of Israel were not historical. They were symbolic accounts of the Descent of the twelve "tribes" of angelic spirits, "chosen" by the higher Divines in Heaven to come to Earth and Divinize and sanctify mankind and in so doing pay their debt and complete what was lacking in them.

THE ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND THE INCARNATION #1

Let us summarize in the opening of this article what we have uncovered in our previous studies on our investigation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the world concerning "the Soul". Briefly, the ancient idea of mans origins, as found in the Sacred Books of the world religions, as well as our Bible, is that mankind was founded upon the concept of his being the "microcosm of the Macrocosm"; the same idea basically as found in Genesis that "God made man in his own image," although the latter sentence has been mistranslated. The true translation indicates that it was the Demiurge, or hierarchies of Elohim (plural), which the Old Testament refers to as "the Creator" of everything in the objective Universe, on behalf of "the Ever Unknowable God." The word "image" is also a misinterpretation of the original conception, for the Adamic inception was apparently an ethereally spiritual being (that is, a "Soul") that apparently only later evolved the human type (as we know it) as an Emanation of itself over a vast period of time. The impression derived from Genesis and other cosmogonical traditions might thus today be interpreted in terms of the human organism being merely a holographic projection of the Soul's consciousness, only a fraction of the innate god-consciousness being manifested by it. The essence of the concept of the "Soul" as an evolving, potential god (as the ancient Egyptians saw it) was of the "inner Man"—an essentially divine entity—being regarded as having evolved above the animals by virtue of having two subsidiary soul-natures:

- one spiritual (literally derived from astral and stellar substance and having a celestial origin),
- the other terrestrial (in the sense of being bound psychomagnetically to the Earth's biosphere).

These "souls" were themselves organized as ethereal intelligences, having body forms composed entirely of light ("Living Intelligent Energies"). That this was the concept shared by the Egyptians is clear from the Pyramid Texts, where the gods are described as having been derived from "the breath of Ra"

Gen 2:7 7 And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. (KJV)

...while Man (the divine being) was born amidst His "tears," interpreted by some as the "radiant Energy" from "the Eye of Ra," as the luminous expression of his Divine thought (more familiarly thought of as "the Word").

We have in prior articles on the "Descent of the Soul" established the place of the Soul's "fall" or "Descent" as our Earth. Now we progress gathering more "keys" to the proper interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and our Bibles. We next must look at and examine in detail the ancient's teaching as to the character of the Soul's actual experience in the dismal habitat of the animal bodies in which it was to abide. Christianity has written miles of paper over these last 2,000 years on its exposition of the "Doctrine of the Incarnation", but a gargantuan amount of primary knowledge that would enlighten the minds of "truth-seekers" with reference to this pivotal item of "theology" has been lost by the Church's scoffing and denial of the early Chrestian Gnosis (the pre-Christian Gnostics). Consequently this "Doctrine of the Incarnation" has been to ecclesiasticism, since the 2nd century, a baffling enigma; so much so that this "Descent of the Divine into matter" was relegated to the solitary place of the supposed person of the "historical Jesus". Truly, as our studies increase and the evidence for this "radical reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome becomes more evident, then the theory of a carnalized or "literalized" personalized Savior, comprehending in himself every divine attribute, will be seen to be an easy solution for Rome which found itself faced with difficulty of imparting the current Gnostic exegesis to the ignorant masses whom were their primary adherents. Simply, Rome, faced with this huge difficulty, rolled the whole of the "Godhood" into a solitary person of one named Jesus (the word "Jesus" basically means "God's salvation"). All divinity in the Cosmos was limited to but one person, and in so doing, hundreds of difficult and befuddling questions arising from the immersion of Deity with matter and mortal flesh in all of humanity could be more easily dealt with, or should I say "dismissed". Ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Religion, that had been the cornerstone of all world religions since the beginning of recorded time until the 2nd century, taught that the presence of Divinity is tabernacled within every son and daughter of the Earth but Rome saw fit otherwise to limit it to but one supposed "literal-historical" person of their making. Faced with dismaying task of mastering the "inner mysteries" themselves the majority rule of the current Roman ecclesiasticism found this difficulty of imparting such "Divine Mysteries" to their ignorant following, and the righteousness that it demanded, beyond their desire or ability. Let us not forget that this knowledge was available to all but filtered from the "inner mysteries" (reserved for initiates and hierophants) to the common man in simplistic parables and legends contained in what we call the "outer mysteries". Rome saw the expedient solution was to attribute the origin of the gods, these hierarchies of Elohim (plural), to the deification of an assumed single historical hero like the expected Savior of the Jewish world religion. The only problem is that the Jewish Messiah "never showed up" as expected which is testified by Judaism for over 2,000 years at present. That was no problem for Rome; they postponed this "Messianic Expectation" into the future by forging and editing the Gnostic texts and preaching this "forgery" to the whole of mankind and the rest is history today waits for this "descending Christ" from the Sky never fully aware that He has already come and lives within the bosom of mankind. Without the "keys" to unlock these "parables" and "radical reinterpretation" then mankind had no hope of see the "Divine truth that lies under the disguise of a supposed 'literal-historical' Savior". This is tragic. The Incarnation of God into matter, into the whole of humanity, was condensed in a single supposed "historical" and "literal" Jesus; a Jesus by the way that Judaism has rejected since the beginning of Roman Christianity and denies today as its anticipated Messiah. The Jewish sages and people knew their Scriptures and the later Roman forgeries, purposeful misquotations, purposeful mistranslations, and purposeful "invention of Scripture" for them were easily detectable; not so for the ignorant Gentile masses to which Rome catered. Little has changed today as we buy our Bibles and read these verses as if "inerrant" and "infallible" never suspecting that they are not faithful to the Hebrew from which they were "supposedly translated". As if that is not enough we read these verses devoid of the "keys" so necessary to their proper understanding in the first place. All things considered it was useful for Rome to relegate the whole matter of the Incarnation to the distant and sacred person of the carpenter from Galilee. Beside supposedly bearing in his body the sins of the world, he has borne also in his person the unsolved problems of a stone-blind, aberrant, devious, and errant theology! The Jesus of Christianity was an intellectual necessity to a befuddled ecclesiasticism of Rome who not only rejected Judaism, the Torah, the Laws and Commandments of God which produce righteousness in their adherents, but Rome had an invincible military who knew no limits to its cruelty and stopped slaughter, butchery, bloodshed, massacre and carnage for no Laws of God. The god of Rome was "might makes right". By stuffing all the essence of Divinity that came to Earth into the sainted confines of a single body and life, this "literal-historical Jesus", all difficult problems concerning the neglected "Christ in you" and "the Christ being formed in you", intended for the whole of mankind as required for the Soul's Spiritual evolution in this plane of existence, could be overcome by a the simple man of Galilee that was supposedly hung on a cross. This death of the Savior for mankind in Rome's "literal-historical Savior" was crafted in such a way to "forgive" all sin and this perversion of the Jewish Sacrificial System which few if any Christians I have ever met understand how it actually works, allowed Rome to teach their followers to neglect personal accountability with God and the growth of their "personal indwelling God", this "Christ within them" and live their lives never "pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus".. (Phil 3:14. KJV) and "getting away with it". Not aware they they were "Divines in training in this Earthy incarnation" mankind lived and died never knowing the glorious task set before them which was the goal of their very own "incarnation". The God "incubating" within them was stifled and never found His expression through mankind as He intended because "the Christ within them" was negated, invalidated, nullified, and neglected and conveniently relegated and limited to the supposed "literal-historical Jesus" which I have been showing you is a travesty of all travesties. The "Dark Ages" is the term for this time of the rule and reign of such ignorance and mind control of humanity by a Gnostic hating and Jewish rejecting Roman Christianity.

Now that was the easy part. What I will share next will not only be new to the reader but sound impossible but let me caution you that just because we don't understand something that is "indescribable" or "new" does not negate that it might contain truth. Just in our generation Quantum Physics has completely overturned Newtonian Physics and Science is experience a state of enlightenment not known to mankind for thousands of years. Be aware that Egyptian, Hindu, Tibetan, Platonic and other ancient Sacred systems are in agreement to what I will share next, difficult as it appears to us in our ignorance of cosmology and occult science. Having said that then let us listen to what the ancients have to say further about this "incarnation". But before we do we need to know something about Quantum Physics.

Simply put, quantum mechanics is the study of matter and radiation at an atomic level. In the early 20th century some experiments produced results which could not be explained by classical physics (the science developed by Galileo, Isaac Newton, etc.). For instance, it was well known that electrons orbited the nucleus of an atom. However, if they did so in a manner which resembled the planets orbiting the sun, classical physics predicted that the electrons would spiral in and crash into the nucleus within a fraction of a second. Obviously that doesn't happen, or life as we know it would not exist. (Chemistry depends upon the interaction of the electrons in atoms, and life depends upon chemistry). That incorrect prediction, along with some other experiments that classical physics could not explain, showed scientists that something new was needed to explain science at the atomic level. Classical physics is a flawed theory, but it is only dramatically flawed when dealing with the very small (atomic size, where quantum mechanics is used) or the very fast (near the speed of light, where relativity takes over). For everyday things, which are much larger than atoms and much slower than the speed of light, classical physics does an excellent job.

If you look at the spectrum of light emitted by energetic atoms (such as the orange-yellow light from sodium vapor street lights, or the blue-white light from mercury vapor lamps) you will notice that it is composed of individual lines of different colors. These lines represent the discrete energy levels of the electrons in those excited atoms. When an electron in a high energy state jumps down to a lower one, the atom emits a photon of light which corresponds to the exact energy difference of those two levels (conservation of energy). The bigger the energy difference, the more energetic the photon will be, and the closer its color will be to the violet end of the spectrum. If electrons were not restricted to discrete energy levels, the spectrum from an excited atom would be a continuous spread of colors from red to violet with no individual lines. The concept of discrete energy levels can be demonstrated with a 3-way light bulb. A 40/75/115 watt bulb can only shine light at those three wattage's, and when you switch from one setting to the next, the power immediately jumps to the new setting instead of just gradually increasing.

It is the fact that electrons can only exist at discrete energy levels which prevents them from spiraling into the nucleus, as classical physics predicts. And it is this quantization of energy, this act of dividing energy into quanta and different levels of being, along with some other atomic properties that are quantized, which gives quantum mechanics its name.

Answer for yourself: What has this to do with the Soul?

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom has taught this segmentation and departmentalization of "Energy" in the Cosmos since the beginning of time and along with it the "movement" between levels of Energies. We see it in the diagram of the Kabbalah's "Tree of Life" and read about it in the "Descent of the Soul". This concept, involving all facets of Energy, including whom we call God, is at the core of all the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of the world. We are simply speaking of the "Descent of this Living Energy" in "levels" or "steps" from pure light to matter and somewhere in this hierarchy of graduated "Living Energies" we find mankind.

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom since the beginning of time has taught that a fragment of Deity was brought and lodged within the breast of every animal form and evolved to where it experiences the whole of creation and rose from the mineral, plant, and animal kingdoms to take rest on the verge of the human kingdom. You might think of this as a "reverse Kabbalah"; the descent and the reascent to the Ayn Sof. This Ayn Sof is the Kabbalists name of the Divine and may be translated as "infinite" or "no end." Ayn Sof is understood by Kabbalists as the Unending Essence that is Infinite Divinity.... Adherents of the Holy Kabbalah understand that there is no end to the Divine Mystery whose unending "Light/Living Energy" is the wellspring of all that we are. These ancient sages taught that the animal race had awaited the implantation of the "Divine Spark", as their hope of a link with the "Self-Conscious Intelligence" whom they called "Father". Seen on the left is the "Ladder to Heaven" which is the "pattern" found in various descriptions in the majority of world religions. The ancients taught that the animal kingdom stood at a point at which physical evolution could take them no farther toward upward this "Ladder to Heaven" in their return to "the Father/Ayn Sof" and the "Deific Mind" of Heaven. They called this "Deific Mind" of God the "Nous....Divine Intelligence". The ancients taught that without the endowment of a germ, spark, embryo, or seed of potential Deific Mind from the plane above that they had reached the pinnacle of their "reascent" since having "fallen" as "Living Energies" into all manifestations of "matter" previously. They awaited the incubation, or should I say the "incarnation" of Divine Intelligence in their physical forms. At this stage of their "reascent" these "Living Energies" required yet much needed incarnational experiences to complete the perfection of their Divinity, they awaited this incarnation from above.

Now here is where it gets very interesting and many problems in our Christianity and religious understanding perhaps has an sensible answer. The ancients Spiritual Books and sages teach that there was a type of "rebellion" and "delay" in the "descent" of these "Living Energies" in these various "levels" in the very beginning. To make a long story short after this "rebellion, procrastination", and "delay" these "Living Energies" came to fulfill their cosmic destiny of impregnating these "lower levels of manifestation". We today, you and me, are those those "junior gods," those "Souls", those angelic hosts of which we read and misunderstand in the Sacred Texts who "descended". That's right; it is us. We are "Living Energies" of Consciousness, small Divine Sparks of this Deific Mind which are these "descending ones". By our coming and sharing our nature with the lesser creatures (the animal kingdom), they, too, become the heirs of immortality; for the Essence of which our higher nature was Emanated is imperishable "Living Energy/Spirit". As Souls, we are parts of this Deific Mind but on a much limited scale. If the animal could append this "Spiritual Nature" to its very being, he would be immortalized also. That is our task. The ancient sages teach that this Deity, literally "us", finally responded in subjection to the "thought" of the Ayn Soft, Who charged us with the commission to "go far from our Home" and "incarnate" the levels of existence "below". We call this the Law of Incubation, and in so doing at the same time assured us that we "should never be dissolved" (Plato, Timaeus).

So far so good but let us continue. But here is where it gets more difficult. I am only relating what I uncovered in my studies to let us proceed. The ancient Spiritual Wisdom have in common the idea that these "descending Living Energies", these portions of this Deific Mind, had evolved the desired element of "Mind" in former Emanations and incarnational cycles elsewhere, but yet required some additive cycles of incarnate experience to complete the perfection of their Divinity for which they were commanded to "incarnate" into matter. These "descending Living Energies" have two names for two separate classes of "being". These Asuras, as they are called, after rebellion, procrastination, and delay, finally came to fulfill their cosmic destiny and incarnated into matter. it is evident that they did not want this experience. One only has to look at the gross evils that the "flesh" of mankind is capable of to understand their "rebellion". We, as mentioned above, are those "unwilling junior gods" of these those angelic hosts! By our coming and sharing our nature with the lesser creatures, they, too, become the heirs of immortality. The thrust of Plato's writings, as of Paul's 7 authentic Gnostic epistles, is that man is a "being" compounded of a lower perishable and a higher indestructible nature, the two linked by an intermediate principle which may be inclined to a union with either, and which therefore stands at the threshold of the balance in human destiny.

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom teaches that this fleshly form was contributed by physical evolution on earth, but it was molded upon the substance of an emotional body of finer etheric substance supplied by a previous race at the end of their life period on our Planet. Before we go on let us remember that when we speak of "God" we are dealing with metaphysics and that this God is truly unknowable but we attribute "finite" ideas to describe Him yet He is above the best contemplations of the human mind. Having said that the ancients have a tradition in this Sacred Wisdom that speaks of a higher race of "Living Energies" that experienced a series of incarnations upon another planet of our Solar system, and it is from them that "Mind" developed and was intended to become the mental principle, which was to control emotion and sensation. And added to that the highest spiritual level of being was the gift of entities embodying the Soul of the sun. When looking at all 3 of these scenarios we are at a loss at what to make of them but symbolic or not they picture for us the very life and the constitution that lies within mankind. We now can see why in the ancient legends concerning the formulation of mankind, that the various gods and "Living Energies" are said to contribute each a bit of his own nature to compile the final product of the "human being". It is important for us to understand right here that "Mind", this Divine Intelligence, is the intermediary between emotion and spirit. Having said this then understand as well that "Spirit" was to control mind as Mind was to control emotion. With the descending Asuras came "potential Mind" and the spark of undying Spirit into this "animal kingdom" which had awaited their next step in their "designed evolution".

This was a short summary of the "origin" of mankind when seen on a somewhat "deeper metaphysical level" than what we read in Genesis, but we are not through. I mentioned "rebellion" and "delay" and "procrastination" above and this is very important for all "theology". It is imperative that we understand this more correctly than what has been exegeted by our current Christian theology. So let us continue.

I wish to speak to the reader about what is called "the Advent". This "Advent" relates that of the twelve legions of these "Living Energies" which were chosen to undertake the adventure of "incarnation" and "incubation" in a "far country", two groups of these "Living Energies" were lost and had to find their place again in evolution later. Of the remaining ten groups of "Living Energies", one group of five responded willingly to the Law, the "Law of Incubation" and "Incarnation". These "willing ones" were called in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom the "Suras". But there is a problem here.

There is a lot behind these "Suras" or "descending Living Energies". But in their "obedient" effort these Suras did not descend into full incarnation in animal bodies, but remained as if suspended over the Earth in spiritual bodies. Although "obedient" these Suras never reached the flesh, never fully "incarnated" into flesh and because of their "aborted effort" never became the Souls of fleshly creatures. They were obedient, but never fully executed their incarnational command. They were only "partially obedient" to the Law of God to "incarnate". This presented a problem for the Asuras which is the remaining group of five legions. The failed attempt at "incarnation" by the Suras brought hesitancy to the Asuras to attempt the same endeavor, and profiting by their example, this group of five legions of Asuras at first refused to run the risk of the same abortive effort, and were known as "unwilling ones." However, they could not forestall their destiny, and reluctantly obeying, they succeeded in descending into the animal kingdom thereby linking their Divine principle of Intelligence to the mortal forms of the animal-men awaiting them.

Answer for yourself: Have we ever read this account before in our Bibles but not recognized what is being said? We sure have.

- These Suras are the obedient elder brother of the Prodigal Son allegory who stayed home.
- The Asuras are the younger, disobedient, and wayward son who comes to his senses and finally becomes obedient to his Father in the Prodigal Son allegory.

Reluctant yes, procrastinating yes, but these Asuras did finally go out from home into a "far country" of material existence. The elder brother did not. Notice if you will it will be the "wayward and disobedient" son (these Asuras) who is called "worthy" of the fatted calf and the shining robe on their victorious return to "the Father". The elder brother, though partially obedient, had not earned the reward for he did not complete the task as the "Law of Incubation" required. This is the "key" to this very difficult parable and allegory which has plagued the minds of Christian interpreters of the Prodigal Son allegory for hundreds and hundreds of years. The sulkiness and apparent neglect of the obedient son who had remained faithfully at home, has evaded the exegetical efforts of the theologians and will continue to do so until the "keys" to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom is restored in order that we can hear and understand the true message of our Bibles.

Luke 15:11-32

11 ¶ And he said, A certain man had two sons: 12 And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living. 13 And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living. 14 And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. 15 And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine. 16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and no man gave unto him. 17 And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! 18 I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, 19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants. 20 And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. 21 And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. 22 But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: 23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry: 24 For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry.

Answer for yourself: Have we ever read this same idea in other places of our Bibles but not recognized what is being said? We sure have.

We need look no further to the parable of the five foolish and five wise "virgins". The parable of the five wise and five foolish virgins is likewise a allegory of this same cosmic dilemma. If you recall it was only "ten legions" that attempted this "descent" in the first place and these were divided into "two groups" and we again find "two groupings" in the "wish and foolish virgin parable" as we do in the Prodigal Son parable.. But there is more.

Answer for yourself: How can we know for sure that this same "incarnational" message is behind these "five foolish and wise virgins"?

We do our word studies to get this proof. One of the names of the Asuras, the "unwilling ones" was "Kumaras". This word "Kumaras" means "celibate young men," or "spiritual virgins." This means that these Asuras are "spiritual virgins" and likened to the "innocents" in the Gospel Story and the "Hamemmet" Beings of the Egyptian Book of the Dead. Their virginity is by virtue of the fact that they were entities of pure spiritual nature and radiations of basic Spirit who had not yet had full incarnation. In the Bible, as in other Sacred Books, this conjugality of Spirit/Soul and "matter" was likened to a "marriage" of spirit with flesh! They were cosmically unmarried to "matter..."Mary", hence "virgin" young men.

Answer for yourself: What should this tell us? First of all, we have a completely new understanding of the Prodigal Son Allegory and the Foolish-Wise Virgin Parable. But more than that we have a completely new understanding of the "virgin birth" and "immaculate conception." The virginity pertained to both sides, the Spiritual as well as the material (matter...."Mary" is another name used in the Ancient Spiritual Wisdom for "matter" if you remember). If the matter that was to give birth to Spiritual Mind was yet unwedded to Spirit, never impregnated by Spirit, so likewise were the Spiritual units who were sent to be the "Bridegroom" of New Testament narrative to wed these immaculate virgins of the material nature. They were yet "innocent" of copulation with matter. They were the ones chosen to descend to Earth and wed material forms, inoculating virgin matter with the principle of immortal Deific Mind. They were "young men" and "celibate."

We turn to Egypt for even more understanding. Beside "Hamemmet Beings", as the Egyptians termed them, they were called "younglings in the egg" and the "younglings of Shu," the god. And they dramatized them as birds' (Souls') eggs in the nest in the tree of life which found themselves in danger of being devoured by the serpent--of the lower nature! We will look at these "Hamemmet Being" in more detail later as well as this "serpent symbolism" for the lower nature in mankind.

A word is needed here about "parables". The word "parable" comes from the Greek word "parabole" and means "likeness." It is derived from the Greek verb "paraballo" ("para," "beside," and "ballo," "to cast"). A parable is a comparison of two objects for the purpose of teaching. Although the Jewish Christ, as depicted in the New Testament, did not invent speaking in parables, it is significant that it is only in the message of this Jewish Christ that his discourses are the only ones which use parables in the New Testament. At one time it was the only method employed when the Jewish Christ was speaking to the masses. (Mt. 13:34 Mk. 4:33-34).

Although many in the professing Christian world believe that the Jewish Christ spoke in parables and did so in order to make His point more clear, the opposite is actually true. The Jewish Christ said as much. The scriptures reveal that it was asked why the message of God was always spoken in parables (Mt. 13:10). He answered them by revealing that He did so to hide the meaning of His words from some who would hear them.

"Because it is given to you to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but to them it has not been given." (Mt. 13:11-15).

"Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: That seeing they may see, and not perceive and hearing they may hear, and not understand lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them." (Mk. 4:11-12)

As you can see this was the method used in disguising the deeper Spiritual Truths behind the metaphysis of the incarnation. This incarnation into the "animal matter" brought with experiences of both "good" and "bad" since the the animal nature is capable of the greatest horrors and evils; but yet capable of the most genuine love and compassion as well. The task set before this descending "Living Energy", or Soul, is to elevate the animal nature and make it holy to serve the will of the Creator which is "Love". Such is our task. And the above is the "key" to understanding what is being said in this ancient parables and myths. We are not to squander our time in this plane of matter but make ever second count as we ingest the "bread from Heaven" in order to "grow up this Christ" in us for our return to the Father where a welcome awaits us. Such, again is our task and intended purpose for our incarnation.

Answer for yourself: So, in summary what is being taught here?

The Soul principle, embodying Divine Intelligence thus "descended" to Earth to inaugurate a new and "higher" order of life in "the fullness of time". In reality the "Adamic generation" was to be lifted up and elevated in the evolutionary order of all life thus this Adamic life "becoming" or "elevating" into a higher order of manifested Divinity. The Soul thus was sent "into matter" in order provide material and Spiritual evolution its next step in this overall plan of the Deific Mind. This "Descent of the Soul" came to constrain the chaotic rule of the beastly nature in the animal part of this Adamic life. In so doing mankind was to "grow" into the "image of God"; no longer was the animal nature in mankind to be ruled by the passions of life but rather reflect the harmony of the Cosmos. Instead of being ruled by the animal nature this Adamic life was to evolve into a brotherhood instead incessant warfare whereby mankind was ruled by passion and animal instinct. In so doing the Descent of the Soul was to bring the natural forces in the animal nature into a new order and harmony in the universe of man. This Divine Intelligence, the Soul, came to instill the law of love, fulfilling all other laws, into the nature of an animal race that had known only the "survival of the fittest" and was bestial and predatory in its nature from the beginning. So the indwelling Christ announced a new dispensation on the basis of the ordinance "that ye love one another" and this "love" was best defined as exhibited through mankind's adherence to the Laws and Commandments of God. As animals we once were cannibals and ate our own; now we were to love one another. Allegorically speaking, the lion and the lamb that dwell within the bosom of mankind were "lie together. Seen in the Egyptian Religion Set and Hours (in us) were to quell the war that raged between them and live in peace together. The Christly Voice announced: "Behold, I make all things new." And the Gnostic Paul echoes this proclamation when he writes:

2 Cor 5:17 17 Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. (KJV)

The Thayer's Christian Lexicon has something interesting to say about this verse:

The Greek word is Strong's # 2937 ktisis- the act of founding, establishing, building, etc.

- a) the act of creating, creation
- b) creation, that is, a thing created; used of individual things, beings, a creature, a creation
 - 1) anything created
 - 2) after a rabbinical usage (by which a man converted from idolatry to Judaism was called)
 - 3) the sum or aggregate of things created
- c) an institution, an ordinance

Interesting for the Christian is the fact that this word "creatures" carries the original idea of the conversion to Judaism of the "non-Jew" whereby he submits to the Laws and Commandments of God in his life; thus elevating his animal nature and completing the Soul's incarnational task in this plane of existence. As further corroboration of this truth the word "ordinance" carries the idea of "Law" as well. As if that is not enough for us to see this major importance for a "Law rejecting Christianity" the God in the Old Testament had declared:

"For this is the covenant I will make with them; I will put my laws into their hearts and in their minds will I write them."

Mankind has for thousands of years trying to catch the force of this new "motif" of life. But its effort has been largely stultified by its blind ignorance, since the second and early third century, of mankind's evolutionary status of the Divine indwelling Christ within the bosom of mankind. A knowledge of this problem and the vital elements involved within it is indispensable to the proper direction of efforts to avoid the abortive outcome of one's incarnation like the Suras. We must learn by example.

So Porphyry writes: "In the first place, indeed, it is necessary that he who intends to acquire this purification (by religious philosophy) should as the foundation and base of it know himself to be a soul bound in a foreign thing (the body) and in a different essence." The intellectual base of all wisdom is the knowledge that we are Souls, or fragments of God's own fiery life, inhabiting the bodies of Earth's highest animals. This is the starting point of all Spiritual wisdom and truth in all religions and the future hope mankind.

We will continue with the next article in this series.

We pick up with the study of the "incarnation" where we left off in the previous article. A summary of earlier teachings is beneficial at this point. We have discussed and offered several examples showing the reader that today's Christianity is a total miscarriage of ancient literary symbolism. We have maintained that the "Christs" of other nations as well as Christianity, who happens today to have the "same story", was never a living personage of flesh and blood. It comes as a shock to such readers and "truth-seekers" to see the evidence that proves without a doubt that the Gospel accounts in the New Testament of the "Jesus Story" are but Spiritual allegories and the enacted drama of the Human Soul in its incarnate experience. Many scholars today loudly proclaim the mythical nature of the Gospels. Many Pastors who read Bet Emet have now concluded for themselves, upon their own study "outside the box", that the man of Galilee was not a historical person. Having now seen the abundant evidence that the lives of ancient sungods are exact copies of the incidents recorded in the Gospels attributed to a "unique" Jesus it now appears that this "parallel" story is anything but "unique". If Comparative Religion and Comparative Theology were ever taught in high school then this knowledge would no longer be hidden from the light of day or reserved for the small numbers of "truth seekers" who go digging for the truth behind Christianity and accidentally discover it. Today in this information age the truth this above declaration is now safely past the point of ridicule or controversy. Pastors, tied to making a living by preaching, have little recourse and fear to announce the positive non-historicity of the "Jesus of Nazareth". Few, if any, possessing this knowledge, have ever dared to tell the truth about the "Jesus Story". Many don't know what to make of it and blame it "on the Devil". Fear often aborts such a study. I can remember my consternation upon learning that the material contained in the "Gospel narrative" which feature the same incidents and figures, had been existent prior to the year one A.D. for at least some 10,000 years! This only spurred me on to come to a correct understanding at what really lies behind our "Christ Stories" and our "Jesus Stories".

Answer for yourself: What are the odds that suddenly around the time of the first Christian century there appeared a fairly large group of individuals whose life history fell into the "same pattern" and who "literally" and "historically" relived the history of a set of dramatic experiences which had already been recorded from ancient Egypt on down from nation to nation for centuries? Yet we find some that will maintain in spite of the contrary evidence that by some miracle of coincidence or parallelism authentic persons who did live whose lives are an "exact" copy of the incidents recorded in the Gospels. Without considering that the chance of such a total matching of a mass of personal occurrences in the careers of living people with the events of an actually existing Gospel drama would run to one in millions, such an assumption fails utterly to take into account that such events had been depicted in "religious narratives" since the beginning of recorded time. Research into Comparative Religions revealed to me, as it does to others, the startling fact that "the heathen" had long been in possession of "holy books," possessing essentially the same character, and teaching essentially the same doctrines, as the Christian Bible. It would seem to a "thinking believer" that the prior existence of the Gospels as spiritual dramas in nation after nation thousands of years prior to the time period allotted for the birth of the "literal Jesus Christ" should write the decisive blow to end all debates upon this issue. But it is not. Traditional Religious indoctrination dies hard and few arise from this "death of objectivity". When when presented with the conclusive and overwhelming evidence to the contrary which exposes the "literal-historical" interpretation of the "Jesus Story" to be the most egregious error ever made in religious study the purely allegorical and dramatic character of the Gospel narratives will usually be met with the same arrogance and disdain by most religious people, people by the way who have never seriously investigated this subject personally, as it has been done heretofore. Be that as it may, it can be said that hardly no doctrine of Christianity is absent in these ancient "Sacred Books" which were first taught by the "pagan" and "heathen" thousands of years earlier. The problem that I would find in my studies the more I dug this knowledge out from under the ashes of history is the sad fact that most of these later "Christian dogmas" and "doctrines" has been "REINTERPRETED" and possessed "DIFFERENT MEANINGS" since the 2nd century which coincided with the rise of Roman Christianity. The "unbroken tradition" of religious thought in humanity, found expressed in successive nation after nation, since the beginning of the human species, was found to be subjected to a brutalized and radical reinterpretation by Rome during the 2nd through the 5th century.

Answer for yourself: What should all of this teach us?

- Something lies behind all of our "Krst/Karest/Christ Stories" and "Jesus Story" besides some supposed "literal-historical" interpretation which is impossible, not only when such evidence is viewed objectively, but which is recorded for over 10,000 years "unchanged".
- We, as Christians, and Pastors who lead God's flock in traditional Christianity, do not have the correct meaning of many, if not possibly all, of Christianity's religious "beliefs" and "doctrines" since undergoing such a radical reinterpretation during the 2nd through the 5th century.

The only question now in light of the evidence is if you want to "know the truth before you die"!

It it our hope at Bet Emet Ministries that it should.

We now resume with our studies on the "incarnation" as taught in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The cloak of esoteric concealment thrown over the ancient Spiritual Writings by ancient sagacity has proven too hard a "nut to crack" for both medieval and modern discernment in eighteen centuries of Christian teaching and indoctrination. The Bible is yet a sealed book and once one is enlightened by these "keys" to proper interpretation of "the Bible" it is almost beyond belief that Christianity has steered the direction of continents and nations for almost two millennia when itself was guided morally and spiritually by a Book the most elementary message of which it has never been grasped or been able to teach correctly to others. Not until the incidents alleged to have occurred in connection with persons in the remote past which we are taught to interpret in our Bibles always as if "literal" are seen as "literalization of Spiritual Truths, Divine allegories, metaphors, similes, and characterizations of magnificent Cosmic Truthfulness can the extent of Christianity's blindness toward its own Bible be evaluated. Truly there has never been a case of such colossal "blindness" where the Scripture comes to mind:

Matt 15:14 14 ...they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch. (KJV)

The dawn of this new era of "restored Bible truth" is slowly dawning upon us at the same time as humanity begins to enter the new Age of Aquarius. Unknown to most is that with each dawning of a new age humanity has taken "steps" in Spiritual Awareness and this restoration of these long-lost and despised Spiritual Truths by Rome is beginning to dawn upon humanity and awaken them from "their slumber".

We have been teaching on the Descent of the Christ (Soul) into matter, or for our interest "humanity". Let me begin by saying that it would be a grievous mistake on our part if we fail to recognize that the Christ principle did not come to "incarnate" in the animal race in order to exercise its godly powers when this animal race was at the zenith or height of this animal evolution. We mentioned this in the previous article when procrastination of the Asuras were mentioned. Nothing could be further from the case to assume that this "indwelling" of the "Deific Mind" came to a "finished product". That is not the case; in fact the purpose of the incarnation is for "the Christ to "finish mankind".

Rom 8:18-19 18 For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. 19 For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. (KJV)

Phil 2:15 15 That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; (KJV)

"The Christ" came to tabernacle in humanity in its beginning stage of development and came with a purpose. As a whole, humanity is an incomplete work "in progress" to say the least. Another Law of the Cosmos operates here and we must take note of it. Paul reminds us that "Christ is being formed" in his followers and it is a "process". The Bible teaches this principle over and over again and we need look no further for such proof than the Gospel of John's parable of the grain of corn that must fall to the ground and "die" first in order to "regenerate" the species. This parable again points to the fact that it is in this "seed", this "Descending Soulish Kernel of Living Energy", that has "fallen" to a lower level of manifestation from a previous Cosmic Energy level, that the hope and potential for later "development" and "reascent" has its dormant possibility. The substrate of this "lower kingdom" (soil) awaits the "rebirth" from "above". That is why it is said that mankind, this soil, must be "born again" or, as it truly means "born from above".

This is why the Soul, according to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, has been in manifestation before. This will be for many readers a very controversial topic of discussion by my studies over these last twenty years has changed my mind on many topics which I was taught to "believe" a certain way without any personal investigation on my part. I have found that is not the best thing I could have done but knew no better at the time of my instruction by those I trusted to have done "their homework" for me. They didn't. I was wrong. Having done so then I can say that there exits in the Cosmos a "Law" of "reincarnation" and this Law of "reincarnation" of our Souls is right in the middle both the Hebrew Scriptures as well as the Gospel story but we often miss it.

- The "Word" came to Jeremiah, and said "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations" (Jeremiah 1:4–5). This verse has been used by Traditional Christians as evidence that God has foreknowledge of persons and events — that is not limited by time and space. Christians who believe in reincarnation may see this verse as evidence ability to "know" a person throughout a variety of reincarnated lifetimes.

Answer for yourself: Did Elijah become John the Baptist?

- Jewish priests were sent to ask John the Baptist, "Art thou Elijah?" (John, 1:21), which is seen as supporting the conception that Jewish priests believed in the theory of reincarnation. Christ said of John the Baptist "this is Elijah." (Matthew 11:14.) Later on, upon the Mount of Transfiguration, the Christ said, "Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed… Then the disciples understood that He spake unto them of John the Baptist." (Matthew 17:12,13). This idea of reincarnation is perhaps a little different than the commonly viewed notion of what reincarnation means. In the second chapter of II Kings, Elijah does not die, but rather is called up into heaven while yet alive. Mainstream Christian opinion would interpret these passages as referring to the role that John played in the spiritual life of first-century Jews, rather than his personal identity being that of Elijah. But not all agree in such a denial of reincarnation which is evident from the texts.

Answer for yourself: What do we do with Matthew 11:14?

- Jesus is recorded as saying: "And if you are willing to receive and accept it, John (the Baptist) himself is Elijah who was to come". Most traditional Christians prefer to interpret this verse only in a loose fashion to mean that John was only like Elijah. For those Christians who advocate a belief in reincarnation, this verse is interpreted more strictly as meaning exactly what it says, namely that John the Baptist is/was Elijah the prophet himself, which in this strictly interpreted context could only mean that John the Baptist was the reincarnation of Elijah. One related consideration that Christian advocates of reincarnation address concerning the fact that John 1:19–21 appears to contravene Matthew 11:14, denying that John the Baptist is/was Elijah reincarnated, this view ignoring the idea that John the Baptist did not know that he was Elijah. Christian advocates of reincarnation propose that this apparent Biblical contravention in John of what is stated in Matthew may have been a later editorial insertion by doctrinal purists. These types of corrective insertions in John, contravening the first three Gospels, appear to them to have also been added in many other instances within John as well, the gospel of John generally being agreed by Liberals adherent to Higher Criticism to have been written several years after Matthew.
- Next we look at the disciples, in John 9:2-4, who observe a man who was born blind, and inquire of Jesus whether the man himself or his parents sinned that caused him to be born blind. Some interpret this question to imply that the man would have had some opportunity to sin prior to birth, which at least presupposes the pre-existence of the soul in a situation where there was free will and the ability to commit sin. Jesus replies that in this case neither the man nor his parents sinned, but he does not rebuke the disciples in any way for their belief that it would have been possible for the man to sin prior to birth.
- John 9:2 2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind? (KJV).* Jesus replied that it was in order that the works of God may be made manifest in the blind man, that is, that the law of cause and effect might be fulfilled. Or, as St. Paul phrased the thought: we reap what we sow. The blind man could not have sown the seeds of his blindness in his present body, but must have done so in a previous lifetime.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that "being born blind" might possibly be due to the "works" or the "lack there of" from a preceding "Soulish generation" and a previous "incarnation"? It is right here in black and white and all the negative preaching in the world and denial will not make this go away. And this says nothing of the host of materials that exist in other world religions and the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which teaches this same Cosmic Truth. Metempsychosis literally means "transference of souls," and is related to the process of reincarnation. Actually, the idea is found in the oldest traditions of Western civilization, as well as being taught throughout the ancient Near East and Orient. And there is solid evidence that during its first centuries, Christianity did indeed impart what it had learned about the pre-existence of souls and their reembodiment.

- Josephus, the Jewish historian who lived during most of the first century AD, records in his Jewish War (3, 8, 5) and in his Antiquities of the Jews (18, 1, 3) that reincarnation was taught widely in his day.
- Josephus' contemporary in Alexandria, Philo Judaeus, in various of his writings, also refers to reembodiment in one or another form.
- There are passages of the New Testament that can be understood only if seen against the background of pre-existence of souls as a generally held belief. For instance, Matthew (16:13-14) records that when Jesus asked his disciples "Whom do men say that I am?" they replied that some people said he was John the Baptist (who had been executed only a few years before the question was asked). Others thought he was Elijah, or Jeremiah, or another of the prophets.
- The earliest Christians, really called "Chrestians", especially those who were members of one or other of the Gnostic Christian sects, such as the Valentinians, Ophites and Ebionites, included reembodiment among their important teachings. For them it enabled fulfillment of the law -- karma (reap what you sow again)-- as well as providing the means for the soul to purify itself from the muddy qualities resulting from its immersion in matter and the egoism we have developed in the first stages of our journey through earth life.
- After the original generations of Christians, we find the early Church Fathers, such as Justin Martyr (AD 100-l65), St. Clement of Alexandria (AD 150-220), and Origen (AD 185-254) teaching the pre-existence of souls, taking up reincarnation or one or another aspect of reembodiment. Examples are scattered through Origen's works, especially Contra Celsum (1, xxxii), where he asks: "Is it not rational that souls should be introduced into bodies, in accordance with their merits and previous deeds . . . ?" And in De Principiis he says that "the soul has neither beginning nor end."

- St. Jerome (AD 340-420), translator of the Latin version of the Bible known as the Vulgate, in his Letter to Demetrias (a Roman matron), states that some Christian sects in his day taught a form of reincarnation as an esoteric doctrine, imparting it to a few "as a traditional truth which was not to be divulged."
- Synesius (AD 370-480), Bishop of Ptolemais, also taught the concept, and in a prayer that has survived, he says: "Father, grant that my soul may merge into the light, and be no more thrust back into the illusion of earth." Others of his Hymns, such as number III, contain lines clearly stating his views, and also pleas that he may be so purified that rebirth on earth will no longer be necessary. In a thesis on dreams, Synesius writes: "It is possible by labor and time, and a transition into other lives, for the imaginative soul to emerge from this dark abode." This passage reminds us of verses in the Revelation of John (3:12), with its symbolic, initiatory language leading into: "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out."

We do not have now the time to delve deeply in the above study of reincarnation but a few words are in order. Belief in reincarnation is held by many world religions like the Hindus, Buddhists, and Taoists but such beliefs are held by relatively few Christians and Muslims. No mainstream Christian denomination includes reincarnation among their doctrines since the 2nd century and following. The Christian creeds and confession have consistently proclaimed basically after this 300 years time frame a belief in a single judgement of humanity and in the eschatological hope of the resurrection of the dead. Some small sects, such as the Liberal Catholic Church, and esoteric groups, as the Rosicrucian Fellowship, do however include the concept of reincarnation. Judaism's attitude is broad enough to allow Jews to hold various views of the afterlife. Orthodox Judaism supports a belief in reincarnation and it is a central concept of Jewish Mysticism and the Jewish Kabbalah. Judaism as a whole does not emphasize matters of the afterlife the way Christianity does so we should not expect to find it emphasized as such. One of Maimonides' 13 Principles of Faith teaches the importance of the "revival of the dead". As well, Kabbalah supports the belief in gilgul, or transmigration of souls. Several of the Baal Shem Tov's stories recorded by Martin Buber refer directly to past lives of various people, implying that the Buber himself could perceive the previous lives of others. Before the 20th century, reincarnation was almost universally held to be true in Judaism, and Orthodox Judaism today still supports the belief. Some, however, have long questioned or rejected this exclusion, and in modern, western Christendom, a few churches and denominations have first begun to explore this issue - both from a philosophy of inclusion and integration with Eastern philosophy, as well as a struggle to return to alleged teachings of the original, pre-Roman church.

Suffice it to say that according to this ancient Spiritual Wisdom this "Descending" and "Reascending Soul", on this Tree of Life, has built up a long series of previous embodiments, and with each such expression it gained an extension of its potential personality. "You", today, are the current one. This "Living Soulish Intelligence/Energy" has never ceased to oscillate through its cycles, passing from embodiment to embodiment and from expressions of "activity" to "latency" in seed-form and back again. The process proceeds endlessly. But the important matter for us to know is that this embodiment and cyclical process begins each successive cycle anew at the point of its previous departure. Simply, this means that we "begin anew" our Spiritual evolution at the "spiritual level" of the previous one from which we depart. This "Spiritual evolution" starts each round of increasing Spiritual awareness and consciousness from a seed. Nature deposits her Spiritual profits from each period of "incarnation", and though the organic life begins at the bottom each time, the new seed of each round or cyclic opportunity starts with a potentially higher endowment, more quickly recapitulates all its previous stages of development, and arrives at the point where new progress can be made in the next cycle which presents itself. Praise God for His goodness and this much needed "help" for our return home as Prodigal Sons and Daughters. We begin each cycle anew where we left off in our Spiritual development at the end of our previous incarnational cycle. We have a progressive Spiritual development as it appears.

Likewise, as mankind is to grow and "mature" so it is with the Christ that comes to man at the beginning of the human era on earth, not in His adulthood, but as the infant Deity, the baby god, the "infant Christ (nativity) and it is our job to "feed" Him in order that the "fullness of Christ" be manifested in our Earthly existence.

Eph 4:13 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: (KJV)

This "indwelling Christ" is that "fiery spark of God" that has descended "down" the Tree of Life and He is that Divine aspect of the Deific Mind portioned out and "dismembered" for mankind. Many of us sadly live and die and never become aware of the indwelling god within us. This understanding that in the human race is a "developing god" is a major "key" to the comprehension of the whole of world religions and their narratives one way or the other. This "truth" has remained obscured because of the decline of esoteric study since the Roman repression beginning in the second century. It is way past time to reverse this.

This "incarnation of the Divine Soul/Christ" is "key" to two considerable phases of scriptural symbolism never understood correctly by theologians:

- The initial danger in which the Christs or Messiahs were involved at their birth (in the incarnation into fleshly matter)
- Their suffering and crucifixion (again being incarnated and bound in matter....discussed previously in article # 16 and #17)

Any new-born life is in danger from the elements and enemies of every sort that threaten the existence of this "new life" on every side. Its survival is delicately teetering in the balance. We only need to look at Mother Nature to find this Universal Law as well as our own human children who without help in the first years would not survive. So the infant Christ principle is beset with danger from the very moment of its "incarnation" in these fleshly bodies. It begins the new cycle of life as a helpless infant and the allegory of the "Jesus infancy narratives", narratives by the way that was added to the New Testament after 180 A.D. by emerging Orthodox Roman Christianity who was losing the debates with the Gnostic Chrestians over their supposed "literal-historical Jesus", demonstrate this quite dramatically. This is why Deity is present in all the nation's "baby sungods" but even so it laid buried deeply in "matter" and was clouded by the "sensuality" and "senses" of the flesh. Thus the need and Scriptural admonition to "awaken from the slumber" of the flesh in order to awaken "the Christ within". As if that is not enough, this newly born and maturing "Christ nature" in mankind is attacked at once by the powers of evil which threaten its very expression from the moment of its birth and incarnation just the way it is depicted in our "Jesus Story". Sometime around the 2nd year, a toddler will hit the “terrible twos.” They don't call it the "terrible twos" for nothing. Frequently termed appropriately "the terrible twos," this age is punctuated by temper tantrums and aggression, and marked by repetition which are but manifestations of those parts of our elementary animal nature. These "terrible two" are but a picture or symbol of an escalating warfare between Spirit and flesh which we see elsewhere in the Bible which is more recognized as the "wilderness temptation" in our "Jesus Story". Here we see similarly the wilderness temptation of the sungods and our "Jesus Story" replayed over and over again from nation to nation. Whether allegorized by the struggle of the Sun against the Darkness, the Equinoxes and the Solstices, heroes or villains (the original being Set and Horus), the story of this Spiritual Warfare in matter, the flesh of mankind, is told worldwide through a host of metaphors and allegories almost without limit. Hardly a symbol has not been used to depict this Soulish struggle. World religious myths and legends detail this "temptation and warfare" between Spirit and matter (flesh) without end. Let us examine some of them to make our point more succinctly.

The Greeks mythologized this warfare between the newly "incarnated Soul" and "the flesh" in the myth of the two giant serpents that Hercules, half-man and half-god (just what we have been speaking about...that man is a "god" in an animal body"), had to strangle while an infant in his cradle. It is recorded by Theocritis that the infant Hercules (symbolic for the infant Christ) in his cradle strangled the two great snakes that crept up to devour him. Behind this narrative is the "key" that this Soul is threatened from the very movement of its incarnation.

We find the same idea in that Horus, when symbolized by a cat, stand with its feet upon the giant serpent's neck, the cat severing its head with a knife. We see on the left the cat of Heliopolis killing the serpent Apophis under the Persea holy tree. The cat is linked with the sun god Ra.

In Egyptian mythology, the bargue (boat) of the sun god was threatened by the snake daily as it passed through the underworld. This snake is a symbol of chaos that had to be ritually killed.

We encounter this same idea in the New Testament with Herod and the threat against the "infant Christ".

This chaos was likewise understood to be "internal" as well and man's role was to subdue the "storms of life" that arise within him if he ever hoped of becoming "god-like". Again this expressed the internal battle that rages between "Set and Horus (the Egyptian Christ)"

Answer for yourself: What do all of these "threats" to the "infant Christs" or the "infant incarnated Soul" have in common? They all are personifications of the powers of "evil" which can threaten the incarnated Soul which are in reality nothing more than the characteristics and traits of the animal portion of our nature! This animal nature within us is in opposition to the incarnated goal and interests of the Soul, and there is a warfare going on, which, however, this "warfare" between Energy and Matter is to end in a truce and friendliness between Spirit and fleshly matter as seen in the illustration on the right where Set and Horus become "friends" forever. Sometimes the living king was said to embody within himself both Horus, the spirit of light, and Set, the spirit of darkness, reflecting the eternal strife that is always present in the universe. This is why at the end of the battle between Set and Horus a "truce" is called and friendship and respect is restored between these two symbolic natures in mankind. But before this "truce" and the end of this "war within the bosom of mankind" is over the Egyptians speak of them as "the adversaries" and "the enemies of my Father, Osiris," in recounted in the words of Horus, the Egyptian Christ.

Again be it known, these threats to the "infant incarnated Soul", expressed originally with Set and Horus, the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ are portrayed in the Bible under various symbols and disguises:

- The seven nations occupying Canaan. The "ban" (Heb. cherem) refers to God's command to the Israelites to exterminate 7 tribes living in the land of Canaan (Deut. 7:1,2). Whoever committed the sins of the Canaanites fell under the "ban" (Lev. 18:29). Because Israel did not fully remove the Canaanite nations from the land (Josh. 15:63; 16:10; 17:12,13), they became defiled by them as God had warned and had to be removed from the land themselves (Lev. 18:24-28; 20:22; Deut. 7:4,25; Josh. 23:13). So allegorically these "seven" nations referred to the sins of the flesh which the Soul had to overcome and dispossess, naturally, before God could admit his Israelite children into the Holy Land of a heightened Spiritual consciousness.
- The seven plagues of Egypt are symbolic of the seven plagues of the Book of Revelation: *"And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvelous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God." (Rev. 15:1). (Egypt if you recall is symbolic for the fleshly body)

Answer for yourself: What is different about the first three plagues on Egypt?

The Egyptian magicians were able to imitate the first two plagues but not the 3rd: "And the magicians did so [tried to imitate] with their enchantments to bring forth lice, but they could not: so there were lice upon man, and upon beast. Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, This is the finger of God: and Pharaoh's heart (Hebrew for "leb"....inner man or Soul) was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; as the LORD had said." (Ex. 8: 18, 19) In the description of the next plague, we read, "And I will sever [set apart] in that day [that Pharaoh refuses] the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that no swarms of flies shall be there; to the end thou mayest know that I am the LORD in the midst of the earth. And I will put a division between my people and thy people: to morrow shall this sign be." (Ex. 8:22, 23)

Answer for yourself: Could this distinction between "my people" and "thy people" be a paralleled to the Asuras and Suras, the two sons of the prodigal allegory, or the two groups of wise virgins and foolish virgins? Here we have the same allegory and message repeated over and over again.

- The seven wicked spirits of Luke 11:26 26 Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first. (KJV)
- The seven abominations in the heart. Prov 26:25 25 When he speaketh fair, believe him not: for there are seven abominations in his heart. (KJV)
- The seven things the Lord hates: Prov 6:16 16 These six things doth the LORD hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him: (KJV)
- The seven devils that had to be expelled from Mary Magdalene. We will look more intently into this one in the next article.

Answer for yourself: Why are all of these "carnal" threats symbolized in "sevens"?

Answer for yourself: Why is that?

We will continue our study in the next article.

THE ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND THE INCARNATION #3

We need not look any further or deeper into Greek philosophy or religion for such ideas but to ancient Egypt which is the fountain head for all such metaphysical ideas and religious dogmas. Having seen the lustrous presentation of the "death" philosophy in Greek systems so far, we turn to Egypt and Kamite knowledge found in voluminous presentations of such theology which stagger the imagination. The great Egyptian Religion use a variety of symbols, metaphors, and personifications to personate the incarnating god and "Living Energy" into a body of "death".

We may find Osiris, or Ra himself, or Tum, Atum or Horus taking the leading role in relaying this metaphysical truth. Then there are the two characters which we meet most often, the "Speaker" and the Manes, the Spirits of "the dead" in The Egyptian Book of the Dead. These appear to be distinctly the human Soul.

Answer for yourself: Who are these Manes and "Spirits of the dead"? It is "the Soul" incarnated into "dead matter"; the "dead but alive" in the sepulcher of the body. Sometimes this "Soul" is entitled and represented as the "deceased," again we find them called the "Osirified deceased." Besides, the names of four or more Kings are used to stand for these "walking dead" or "Living Energies" in matter. We encounter this Divine Concept under the names Unas, Ani, Pepi and Teta, and frequently with "the" prefixed as in "the Unas", "the Ani", "the Pepi", and "the Teta".

It is of major importance that we understand the Egyptian symbolism or else all hope of elucidating the truth escapes us. Therefore, we begin by stating that the central god figure in Egyptian religion, Osiris, the Father, in distinction from Horus, the Son, is consistently assigned the functions, prerogatives and sovereignty of the "King of the dead." He is hailed in a hundred passages as the Ruler of the Underworld, or as Lord of Amenta (Amenti, Amentiu), the Egyptian Hades, the correct locating of which region in theology is one of the major purposes of these articles. Osiris is paralleled to Greek Pluto, ruler of Hades, the dark underworld. This "Hades", this gloomy, black, depressing, desolate, joyless, dreary realm so often mentioned and mistaken in Christian theology is actually our Earth. This realization has never once dawned upon the the vast majority of Christian pastors, teachers, professors, or acclaimed self-proclaimed Christian scholars namely because of their short-sightedness in failing to seriously study much of anything that is not "Christian" or that is not filtered through or approved by their denomination.

Osiris is the "Speaker" and the "Manes," these Spirits of the dead (incarnated Souls) are the incarnating gods and "Living Energies" which fell into this body of "death". Thus Osiris is truly the King of the realm of the dead. For we, living and breathing humanity, are those "dead", and the god within us came to rule this kingdom, this animal-nature, according to the mysterious meanings behind the often mistaken religious texts of almost every World Religion and their Sacred Books since ancient Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Egyptians called the coffin "the chest of the living." One only has to examine Gerald Massey's Ancient Egypt, The Light of the World, p. 152, to see this for yourself.

E.H. Wallis Budge says something very important that we must take notice of: "About the middle of the Ptolemaic period (332 BC to 30 BC) the attributes of Osiris were changed, and after his identification with Serapis, i.e., Pluto, the god of death, his power and influence declined rapidly, for he was no longer the god of life. In the final state of the cult of Osiris and Isis, the former was the symbol of death and the latter the symbol of life" (Budge, Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, II, p. 306).

Answer for yourself: Why is this changing of the "attributes Of Osiris so important?

First of all Osiris (Greek language), or as variously transliterated in the Egyptian language as Asar, Aser, Ausar, or Ausare) is the Egyptian God of the "dead" and the "underworld". Now we have already made the connection that the "dead" and the "underworld" referred to the "incarnated Souls in bodies of death". Thus Osiris is the Egyptian God of the "Living Energies" who are referred to as if "dead" due to their incarnational state. This change in the attributes of Osiris whereby he is no longer considered the God of "life" but the "dead" does not portend what Budge supposes, but quite the contrary. Budge missed it. This changing of the theological concepts and "reinterpretation" of Osiris as the Egyptian God of "the dead" hints at the fact that the Egyptian conception of the character of Osiris as Lord of the Underworld of incarnational death began to weaken in the later days, as foreign influences crept in, and the profound esoteric meaning of the word "death" became obscured. The god's influence as Lord of Death declined rapidly at this period, not because of the ascription to him of a new and untrue character, but because of the decay of the true comprehension and understanding of ancient symbolism that identified his place and function in the pantheon. His influence in his long-lasting office decayed because knowledge of him in that role had decayed and been lost. Sadly, many such misapprehensions connected to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom exist in contemporary Christian theology today simple because the "keys" so necessary for correct understanding of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom have been lost.

Now watch this. Proof that what I am teaching is the truth is easily given by looking that examples where the word "death" in the ancient usage did not imply extinction. The Manes, or Spirits of the "dead" in The Egyptian Book of the Dead (Ch. 30 A) says: "After being buried on earth, I am not dead in Amenta." Amenta we previously saw was the "Earthly body of death and flesh". Horus knows that though he enters the realm of the dead, he does not suffer annihilation. He knows that whom he is that which survives all defeat. Even though, as he adds, he is "buried in the deep, deep grave," he will not be destroyed there. He will rise out of the grave of the (living) body in his final resurrection.

We see over and over, from nation to nation, from passage to passage, from religion to religion, that the term "dead" refers to living inhabitants on Earth and not the Spirits of the departed of the deceased. Such a passage as the following is but more testimony that the application of the term "dead" is often used in referral to the living inhabitants on earth and not to the spirits of the deceased: "The peoples that have long been dead (?) come forth with cries of joy to see thy beauties every day."

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the "?" in the above quote? It must have been embarrassing for Budge to do this but it only goes to show you that this scholar does not understand what he is writing about since not being able to understand the term "dead". Simply, the above quote refers to resurrection. Another text says: Tanenet is the burial-place of Osiris."

Answer for yourself: What is "Tanenet"? Tanent, along with Aukert, Shekhem, Abydos, Tattu, Amenta and half a dozen others, is a designation for the earth as the place of burial for the Soul living in death.

Related with the idea of death is the presumption of burial in a tomb, grave, coffin or sepulcher. Evidence of the prominence of these burial terms in relation to the descent into Earth life is not absent in the old texts. The matter is not left in any state of doubt or confusion however. A sentence from Cocker's Greek Philosophy speaks in terms of unmistakable directness: "The Soul is now dwelling in 'the grave which we call the body'" (Thomas Taylor, Eleusianian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. 91. ff). Here is indeed the undebatable clarification of that poetic imagery, the confusion and chaos of which with the natural fact of bodily decease has cost Christianity its heritage of wisdom.

In The Egyptian Book of the Dead we Osiris as the god who "descended into Hades, was dead and buried" in Amenta. Massey's succinct statement covering the point is: "The buried Osiris represented the god in matter;" not in a hillside grave. The hillside grave, however, was the typography used to designate the non-historical burial in the body.

Massey, in his Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 706, states: "In the astronomical mythology the earth was the coffin of Osiris, the coffin of Amenta, which Set, the power of darkness, closed upon his brother when he betrayed him to his death". Massey goes on to say that "The coffin of Osiris is the earth of Amenta" (Ibid., p. 868).

Chapter 39 in The Egyptian Book of the Dead contains a plea for the welfare of the incarnated Soul: "Let not the Osiris-Ani, triumphant, lie down in death among those who lie down in Annu, the land wherein Souls are joined unto their bodies."

Answer for yourself: Where was Lazarus buried? In Bethany. Where was Osiris raised from the dead by his Son, Horus? In Beth-anu. The Gnostic pictures in the Roman catacombs suffice to prove the identity between the two. They show that Lazarus was buried as a mummy, and that he rose again in mummy-form. Thus the dead Osiris of Egypt, El-Asar or Lazarus, as portrayed in Rome, and the story of the death, burial, and resurrection are the same wheresoever and howsoever that story may be told.

Thus it is quite apparent that the land in which Souls lie down in "death" is this old Earth of ours, our clay bodies. For nowhere else in this Cosmos are Souls joined unto fleshly bodies! The failure of theologians to understand properly the symbolism attached to the word "death" has forced them to seek a locale in various subterranean worlds whose place is found at last only in their own imaginations. Not understanding the word "death" and the realm to which it referred theologians were forced to look to the interlude between "lives" as being the locale to which practically all religious values were thrown when the esoteric knowledge and the "keys" to its interpretation was lost. Simply said the meaning of all religion was catapulted from Earth where it properly belongs and where alone it is true to Heaven, when its meaning has little use for Earthly humanity.

Horus says: "I directed the ways of the god to his tomb in Peqar...and I caused gladness to be in the dwellers in Amenta when they saw the Beauty as it landed in Abydos" (Budge, Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, II, p. 9).

Answer for yourself: What is Abydos? Abydos was claimed to be the place of entry to the lower world where the "dead" lived, but in this use it was another of those transfers of uranographic locality to a town on the map in some way appropriately symbolizing the spiritual idea involved. There was no actual entrance to an actual underworld at Abydos (or anywhere else), but to complete the astral typology a temple, tomb and deep well (of great symbolic value) had been constructed there to the god Osiris. Abydos was mythically and symbolically the door of entry to the lower world, or realm of death, Amenta, or the bodily incarnation. Budge does not realize that he is writing only of the historical adaptation of a spiritual allegory when he says:

"But about Osiris' burial-place there is no doubt, for all tradition, both Egyptian and Greek, states that his grave was at Abydos (Abtu) in upper Egypt" (Ibid., p. 69).

Budge, like many scholars lacking these "keys", thinks that Osiris must have been a living king, who was later deified. This is highly not likely, as there is little to indicate that the Egyptian gods were other than abstract personifications of the powers of Cosmos, Nature and the Cosmic Intelligence. The legend that his body was cut into fourteen pieces, scattered over the land and then reassembled for the resurrection could have no rational application to the life of an actual King. Like we see so many times as the pieces of the puzzle comes together and the "keys" to proper interpretation of our Bibles increase, see come to see clearly that Religious Myths and metaphysical realities told through myths, metaphors and symbols has been taken for assumed literal history on a vast scale and in so doing our understandings of these texts are obscured.

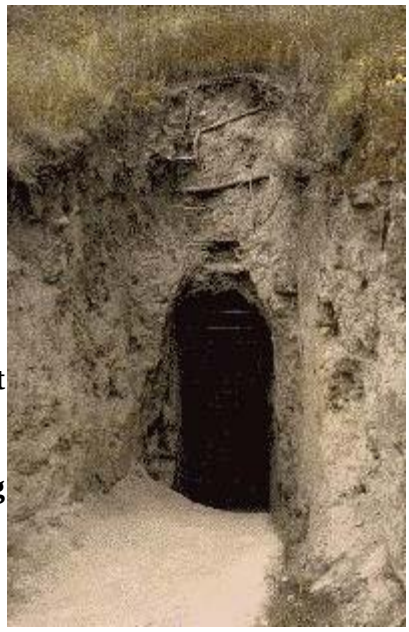
Budge goes on to quote on page 69 of the same book: "In the text of Teta the dead king is thus addressed: 'Hail! hail! thou Teta! Rise up, thou Teta! . . . thou art not a dead thing."

Answer for yourself: Why the contradiction of terms? Why is the speaker telling a dead king he is not dead unless a completely new interpretation of "death" is meant here? It is becoming very plain now. The Souls as deities and "Living Energies" entered the realm of "death", our Earth and "incarnation into this fleshly matter", although considered as if they "had died" in such an incarnation they were actually not dead. Only in philosophy and the Sacred Books was the Soul dramatized as if "dead" but actually, as stated before, it is at this same time of its "death" a "Living entity".

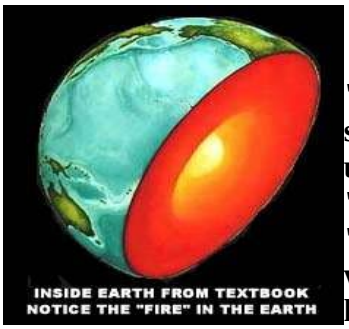


Let us now speak of the Eye of Horus, an emblem typifying Horus' life and said to contain his Soul. This

Eye of Horus (containing the Soul) was stolen and carried off by Set (the personified evil nature in flesh and "matter"), the evil twin of Osiris. Of this Budge says that "during the period when Horus' Eye was in the hands of Set, he was a dead god." This is important. However, Osiris regaining possession of his Eye symbolized the recovery of his buried divinity and his restoration to his original godhood. Horus, the Egyptian Christ, elsewhere (The Egyptian Book of the Dead, Ch. 85) says: "I come that I may overthrow my adversaries upon earth, though my dead body be buried."

Answer for yourself: What is meant here? Horus, the Egyptian Christ, incarnated into "matter" and human flesh, has come to tame the animal nature in humanity although working from an invisible realm "inside" the bodies of mankind. This battle between Horus and Set rages "in the bosom" of mankind. Such a statement can have logical meaning only in reference to the contention that the buried god is the Soul/Spirit in the fleshly body on Earth.

Now lets examine the word "underworld" as an idiom for the "sphere of death" for further "incarnational experience". This region of partial death in which the outcast angels were imprisoned was styled the dark "underworld." A variant name was "the nether earth." This descent of the Soul into material existence is often actually pictured as a subterranean cavern like the one on the right. Rarely has it ever dawned upon the unlearned Christian clergy or Christian scholars of our day that "the underworld" was but another figurative designation for the condition of life in the human body. Again a mass of data is available to show that it is.



Answer for yourself: What should this say to us? All Christian theology is turned upside down once the word "death" is restored to its ancient theological meaning. It seems silly to me that we read accounts in our Bibles of such stories of Lazarus only to find out that is the the retelling of a 5 to 10 thousand year old story of Osiris in which the original interpretation of which has radically changed in our day and since the 2nd century and Rome's radical "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. When all of this dawns upon you that we are reading a Bible to which we have little clue as to its original intended meaning then such an awareness should be impetus to you to begin your own personal study since coming to the realization that our current Christian establishment is incapable of teaching the truths behind the texts they quote and preach. It is time that we are given the truth and correctly interpret the theological concepts that were first embodied in these stories in our Bibles as they were in the beginning of their oral traditions and earliest recordings on papyrus and paper in the first place. To do such things as reading these ancient stories with Divine concepts diametrically opposed to their original meanings is not only foolish but sacrilegious, profane, and blasphemous.

These Divine Truths concerning the Descent of the Soul and its "death" when incarnated into "matter" or "humanity" was told from nation to nation through the use of allegories and myths. Religious myth is very important. Myth informs us, not of "reality" or actual events, but of something deeper. Something both shared and personal. While plenty of people see their religious beliefs as metaphorical, most seem to think things like "Christ died and was reborn" are statements of fact. I contend that the earliest Gnostic creators of Christianity never meant that. They meant to speak in the metaphors of spirituality; the same metaphors that had been used for centuries before. Christianity is descent mythology. There are numerous well-known myths from ancient times which describe a heroine or hero's descent into the underworld. One of the more significant is the story of Inanna, the Sumerian Goddess, who hearing the call, made her own eventful journey and return. Inanna's story is also known as the Babylonian Ishtar's Descent, but whereas Ishtar's tale is told with only 145 lines, the original story from which it was copied, Inanna's Descent, is told with 415 lines. The difference is attributed to the patriarchy, as it steadily eroded the power and significance of the Goddess during the second millennium BC. Inanna's Descent into the Underworld is both a fascinating story and a prime archetype of spiritual initiation. The Eleusinian Mysteries of Persephone seem to parallel a number of other descent myths, like those of Isis and Inanna. Again, descent mythology is everywhere - something about going below, beneath the Earth seems to resonate with the whole idea of death (the incarnation-birth (being born again)-rebirth (ascension at the demise of the body). There are connections between Persephone and the Gorgons, between Demeter and Dionysus, and hundreds of other interweaving of stories. Judaism is not with its descent myths into the underworld as well. Enoch I speaks of 200 apostates or descending "watchers".

A fallen angel in Abrahamic traditions is an angel that has been exiled or banished from Heaven. Often such banishment is a punishment for disobeying or rebelling against God (Asuras). One early source for information on angelology as well as demonology, is the Persian prophet Zoroaster, who is thought to have influenced Judeo-Christian beliefs. Origen, a father of the early Christian Church, believed that God had created all angels to be equal and free. However, in possessing the power of free will, some of them began to move further away from God of their own volition. Origen maintained that those who drifted the least remained in the regions closest to God, while those who moved further out fell into lower air, and became what we know as "angels". This is the lowest order of the angelic hierarchy. Those descending "Living Energies", or angels, who moved still farther away became humans. Origen states metaphorically that, although some angels fell and became humans, all hope is not lost. By practicing virtue, men can again ascend and be freed from this bondage of incarnational existence. While considered an early Father of the Church, Origen was deemed a heretic as a result of some of his writings and teachings, which did not conform to accepted scripture or tradition. Mainly, his concept of Apocatastasis, the belief that all beings (humans, fallen angels, demons and Satan) will return to God through God's love and mercy, was deemed unacceptable at that time. His excommunication was posthumously reversed.

Again let it be shouted from the rooftops and steeples of all Churches from which it was taken. All nations of antiquity show in their Sacred Books and writings traces of a legend in which the Soul makes a journey and a descent through a dark underworld. All nations of the world have this same story and myth of the Soul's journey to a dark underworld and behind them all lies a Divine Truth. The vagueness, indistinctness, and obscureness of its location, however, has failed to give any Christian scholar an illuminating suggestion as to its totally figurative and symbolic character. Nobody has ever seriously presumed to locate this dreary region which houses the Soul in spite of the fact that it was childishly regarded as an actual place. This underworld has been vaguely associated with the grave or assumed to lie in some dim region into which the Soul passed after death, somehow, somewhere "under" something or another. But what this "under" actually is has never been determined by Christian theologians with an accuracy because they accept and veer not out of the traditional Roman Christian mindset and traditional hermeneutic of the Book that Rome corrupted and pawned off on the whole world as the inerrant Word of God, its Bible. The cause of this continued perplexity as to the identity of this "underworld" can be laid upon the uneraseable assumption that its "underness" was to be oriented in relation to the physical Earth (the bowels of Earth) and not the "body on the Earth"! Few ever come to see without help and much study, due to the strong indoctrination of error by our Churches, that this "descent into the underworld", as depicted in the virgin birth of all the nations saviors, as well as our "Jesus Story", is "your story" of God Emanating a small "Divine Spark" of His "Living Energy" into you. Few see that the infant "Christ" is to grow up in you and was never meant to be limited to but one person as Rome as so tragically done. No one hardly ever catches a glimmer of the truth behind such a story and allows the smallest part of illumination "awaken" one's mind that the location of this underworld was the very fleshly body of humanity.

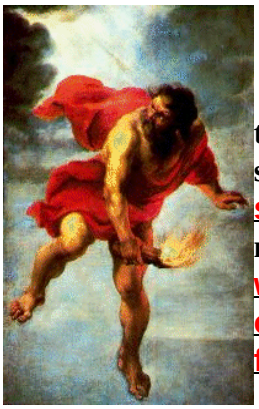
The surface of the earth, man's world, was assumed to be obviously not an "underworld." But the problem of locating another limbo beneath it baffled theological speculation through the ages. The outcome is that the locale of Hades', or Pluto's shadowy kingdom has been hung indeterminately between the surface of the ground and the dubious dim region of after-death spheres. All the while, as my studies advanced in Gnosticism, Comparative Religions, Comparative Mythology, and astronomy advanced, a thousand texts burst before my face in unison all pointing to the underworld, this grave, this tomb of the Soul, finds its location in the physical body of mankind!

Lewis Spence, in his Myths and Legends of Egypt, p. 121, admits cautiously admits that court of the Mayan underworld seems to have been conducted on the principles of a secret society with a definite form of



We concluded the previous study with the statement that often in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom that "carnal" threats to the incarnated Soul was characterized by "sevens". According to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom "seven" is always the characteristics of the sevenfold powers that builds the forms in which "matter" and material life is embodied; and this is the feminine principle in ancient theology.

Answer for yourself: And what again is this feminine principle in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom? It is "matter". Important for us to see in a few minutes is this relationship between "matter", the feminine principle of creation, and the number "seven" and its "carnal threat" to the evolution of "Spirit/Soul" incarnated in "matter". It would be a grave mistake on our part to rush to judgment and consider all aspects of the "feminine" to be "carnal" or "negative" and this will become clearer to the reader the further our study progresses. No greater example can be found for the Christian than the allegory of Mary Magdalene and here "seven Devils" which we will examine later in this article which I will share with the reader is but an allegory of "matter"; the womb for the incarnation of the Divine fire of God in all Creation. But that comes later. In order to fully understand that allegory properly then some more background instruction is warranted.

Let us not forget that Heraclitus has told us in his writings that "man is a portion of cosmic fire, imprisoned in a body ("matter") of earth and water." We have previously mentioned the allegory and myth of Prometheus who "stole fire from Heaven".

Answer for yourself: Who was Prometheus?

According to the religious myth Prometheus was one of the Titans, a gigantic race, who inhabited the earth before the creation of man. To him and his brother Epimetheus was committed the office of making man, and providing him and all other animals with the faculties necessary for their preservation. Epimetheus undertook to do this, and Prometheus was to overlook his work, when it was done. Epimetheus accordingly proceeded to bestow upon the different animals the various gifts of courage, strength, swiftness, sagacity; wings to one, claws to another, a shell covering to a third, etc. But when man came to be provided for, who was to be superior to all other animals, Epimetheus had been so prodigal of his resources that he had nothing left to bestow upon him. In his perplexity he resorted to his brother Prometheus, who, with the aid of Minerva, went up to heaven, and lighted his torch at the chariot of the sun, and brought down fire to man. With this gift man was more than a match for all other animals.

Answer for yourself: What are we to learn from this? Mainly, that mankind was to be separated and elevated above the animal kingdom. The Promethean "fire", this "Divine Spark" of Soul is what separated mankind from other animals and is linked with the watery nature of the body ("matter"). This was described by the ancient Spiritual Wisdom as "the Law of Incubation". Ralph Waldo Emerson has voiced this same esoteric Spiritual knowledge in the passage: "Man stands at the point betwixt the inner spirit and the outer "matter"."

It is a Law of the Cosmos that all values in life on any plane of existence are born as the result of the union of two opposing forces. This can be symbolized by the union of "male" and "female" natures, be it in physics, chemistry, psychology or the Spirit realm. Let us not forget that in the Bible God has many names; many of which are "masculine" and many which are "feminine". The union of these two "Living" potentials is related to the word for "knowledge". Interestingly the word "know", as in "knowledge", comes from the Egyptian "ANKH", meaning "life" and "tie" (as in tying life together, Spirit and "matter"). Therefore "knowing" is an action involving the tying or binding together of two different things, subject and object, in a living relationship between themselves.

Matt 1:25 25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son: and he called his name JESUS. (KJV)

Again, as we see in the New Testament, we find this same metaphysical idea of tying "two types" of "life" together by the allegory of the "virgin birth" associated with the word "know". Notice I said "virgin birth" here. It is here we find the "tying together of two Living Energies" together. This "tying together" results in "birth" at the borderline where Spirits, Energies, or Conscious subjects, and "matter" or known object, come together. A poet has once said that "Heaven and earth have kissed each other." This is equally rendered as if a "marriage" has taken place between these two "Living Energies" that have merged from two different planes of existence. For our purpose it is like a marriage in the "body" and "mind" of mankind.

Answer for yourself: Do you see it yet?

The Holy Spirit, this "Living Energy" that Emanated from the Ayn Sof and the virgin Maria ("matter") came together to give birth to the Christos (the Son) which is manifested "Deific Mind" and Divine Consciousness that becomes incarnated in "matter" (Maria-Mary). This is all that the legend of Joseph and Mary ever meant as a Spiritual allegory and it was understood originally by the earliest Gnostics in such a fashion long before the emergence of the later "literalistic" Roman Church.

Answer for yourself: Did ancient Egypt teach this same Divine idea of the "marriage" between Heaven and Earth, between Conscious Spirit and physical "matter"? Yes they did. We see the binding together of both "matter" and "Spirit/Soul" at the end of the battle between Set and Horus in the great Egyptian Religion and illustrated for us as seen in the depiction on the right. Following this battle between "Spirit" and "matter", Soul and flesh, harmony was finally struck between these two Energies and the both existed in harmony from then on. We hear in Christianity that we are to "kill" the flesh and the tragic results of ascetisicm during the history of the Church are easy to be read in the annals of Church history. Judaism, however, as well as Egyptian religion, never taught that asceticism is the will of God that but rather a progressive sanctification and training of the flesh to conform to the will of God and the Laws of God whereby mankind may mature and submit his flesh and appetites to God whereby they can be fulfilled in the ways that God intended and not the way that the unbridled flesh would desire. Christianity has a long history of ascetisicm and denial of base physical urges (not surprising, when you remember the early Christians believed the end of the world was not far off). A good case in point is that Christianity came to classify sex as bad but unavoidable instead of seeing as one of God's gifts within marriage.

Answer for yourself: Is our Mary and Joseph story but a retelling of it of this union of Energies in the Cosmos that brings about the birth of the Deific Mind of God in "matter"? Yes it is according to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of the ancients.

- The name "Joseph" is the original Egyptian-Hebrew name for the Divine counterpart and masculine aspect of God
- "Mary" is the personification of the Universal Mother, and another name for "matter".

Take note please that physical "matter" has always been and ever will be the "mother" for the rebirth of Spiritual Consciousness. Bringing forth of this Divine Consciousness in matter, in humanity as the highest animal expression and home for this Divine Consciousness, is the function of "matter" as "mother" (the word "mother" being "mater" in Latin). No longer is this Divine Truth just told by ancient religions. We are so blessed in our day to have the incredible discovery of Quantum Physics which has demonstrated to us clinically that there exists in all "matter" subatomic "levels of Consciousness" and they are manifest upon examination that this Consciousness is "interconnected". Quantum Physics today has proven that Consciousness and "matter" overlap. Today the ancient Spiritual Religions of the ancient world and their "theology" and "religious myths" are being validated by modern Science like never before because behind them all, behind all these myths, allegories, and host of symbolisms, lies the same story; namely, the Descent of the Soul and the birth of the "Christ" and "Divine Consciousness" in matter (for us humanity). In spite of what Rome tried to stop with its censorship and murder of the ancient scientists which threatened Church Dogma, God and Science are finally being shown to be linked together and "One".

Paul states that:

Rom 8:22-23 22 For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. 23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. (KJV)

Rom 8:18-19 18 For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time (Earthly incarnation of the Soul) are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. 19 For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is the goal for humanity as a whole? It is to bring forth the manifestation of the "Sons of God" from this animal body and nature in which our Souls were planted and incarnated. The message is not to kill the "flesh" but to bring the "flesh" to a level of "Godliness" and submission to the grand design of the Cosmos. Set and Horus are to become a harmonious union of "Living Energies". Let us not forget these

"Sons of God" in the above verse are often called "Sons of Mind" in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of antiquity.

Eph 4:13 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: (KJV)

The Christly principle of Divine intellect is being gestated in the womb of mother nature, in us, and the evolutionary function of "matter" was to bring it to birth in the fullness of time.

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Nature, had been obedient to the Divine Pattern and had brought forth the animal kingdom. Nature was next to create man, the human, whose mark of differentiation from the beast was this gift of Deific mind (the indwelling Mind of God as "the Christ" (the Prometheus myth above).

The wedding and marriage of the two cosmic elements, Heavenly "fire" and "matter" and the birth of their union or incarnation, the "Son", the "Christos", could take place only where the two parents could have vital communion with each other. This "marriage" of this Deific Mind with "Mother "matter"" could therefore occur only where Spirit, or as I prefer to call it "Living Energy", could impregnate "Mother "matter" with its masculine power, only where it could imprint its image upon a moldable substance. This opportunity for the expression and birth of this "Deific Mind" in "matter" was provided by Creation only at one place in this Cosmos as described in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of antiquity.

Answer for yourself: And where was this?

The physical body of mankind. Only in the physical "matter" of the human body does Soul and flesh have such "incarnation" and "impregnation" to give birth to Deific Mind, "the Christ" within.

When God or Life at the beginning of each period of its activity divides into the polarization of Spirit and "matter", the two forms of "being" move toward each other and meet in the "middle ground", so to say. They become "one" in unity. It is this partnership, connection, conjunction and interplay, between Spirit and "matter", where this "marriage" takes place and the "Son", "the Christ", God's "Deific Mind" is born within us. And when these two "Living Forces" meet at this point, one "descending", one "ascending" on the planes of all life, they counteract each other's vibrational Energies and bring each other to a standstill. Spirit descending as pictured in the Jewish Kabbalah comes to a stop in the bosom of "matter", because the resistance of "matter" quieted the vibrations of Spirit. Likewise "matter" ascending came to a lull in the breast and Soul of Spirit. The poets of old described this as if the two found themselves as if a Cosmic embrace; such is Divine Love and this "Divine marriage" of "Living Energies". The "descending" forces of Soul was exactly counterbalanced by the "ascending" forces of "matter" and effectively they annulled their opposing Energies, and each found itself immobile. Here, the animal nature, in it ascension and evolution, is met by the descending current of the Soul's Living Energy that is seeking embodiment. It is in this condition that the Spirit impregnates "matter" and the result is the "birth" of "the Christ", the Deific Mind in "matter". The animal we know as "humanity" is not separated from the lower animals in the animal kingdom.

The ancients taught that Souls can go no lower than the human estate. Physical energy, descending the fullness of seven planes of all existence, according to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, having reached the bottom of lowly "matter", turned to its return and re-ascension having reached the the lowest of seven planes. Just as there are seven colors in the rainbow and seven tones in a musical scale, each with a different vibratory rate, there are seven levels of being on the spectrum of creation. The physical plane is the densest of the seven planes and is where we presently reside. The ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books teach that the "Living Energy" that formed "matter" had descended as far down as the first plane of existence which is called the "mineral plane" (of "matter"). But since neither the mineral nor the plane above it, the vegetable, nor the plane above it, the animal forms, could furnish the proper expression for the Deific Mind or Spirit in all of creation that a proper vehicle, a higher type of animal life, was necessary for the expression of this Deific Mind in "matter". This principle of combined intelligence (Soul) and Spirituality (Spirit) could descend only as far as the human, or the fourth kingdom. The lowest point of the cycle of purely material Energy is therefore the material kingdom, while the lowest point of Mind and Spirit is the human kingdom. The physical power had gestated through aeons of Emanation and organized "matter" as the substances into the organic forms of the mineral, the vegetable and the animal beings. The highest animal forms were to become the embodiments of the Spirit that would place them in the category of humans.

Many might be skeptical about this but if you do the studies long enough you come to some incredible pieces of information. Ever since Charles Darwin published his Descent of Man in 1871, a dispute has prevailed over whether humankind evolved by a gradual process through millions of years, or whether Adam and Eve were the first mortals, created by God, as told in the Old Testament book of Genesis. Evidence today shows us that Neanderthal man existed before 70,000 B.C.E. This race became extinct after some 40,000 years, and in the meantime Cro-Magnon man had appeared by 35,000 B.C.E., thus beginning the era of Homo sapiens or "thinking man". I am sure that you are not aware but in 1995 science was able to examine preserved DNA from the Neanderthal species and compare it with that of Cro-Magnon species and they found that they are not the same! Today, humanity, or "thinking man" has the same DNA as that of Cro-Magnon man but not the same as Neanderthal man. I only mention this to help bring insight to the evolution debate. Evolution is a fact of Science. But there is "species adaptation" no doubt; however species don't cross lines and change "DNA". A tadpole does not become a man. All the more important is this fact to realize when we speak of the "incarnation" of Divine Mind into the animal species of God's choice already existing on this plane of existence which was to become the "tabernacle" for the Mind of God that will allow the Creator to experience His Creation. It is us! This is the "missing link" we hear about connected with Darwin and his research. That missing link is "the Descent of the Soul" and the birth of "the Christ" in parts of the animal kingdom long, long ago.

This incarnation of "Divine fire" with "matter" was effected at the position, boundary, or "horizon" where the two steams of "Living Energies", one in "matter" and one in "Spirit", had become entangled in each other's hold and became "immobilized". Here we find disguised in this embrace ironically the ancient's Spiritual teaching of the beginning of "the War" between "Flesh" and "Spirit"; between "matter" and "Energy, between Heaven and Hell. That's right, I said "Hell". We will see this in a second and it will all make sense. Heraclitus is famous for his theorem of the war between opposing powers in life. Heraclitus claims that opposites are continually at war or in opposition with each other. This warfare between Soul/Spirit and "matter" would be fought on the border-line between the two natures in mankind; namely, "matter" and "Spirit".

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that on this dividing line, this horizon between "Spirit" and "matter" that the Egyptian Religion taught the greatest battle of all will be fought? Can you guess its name? I refer to the Battle of Armageddon which is being fought daily on the "horizon," the line between Heaven and Earth.

Answer for yourself: And where is this War of Armageddon to be fought? It is being fought on a daily basis today, as it always has, since the incarnation of the Soul into "matter". It is fought within mankind, or between Spirit and "matter" (more commonly called "the flesh"). This is what lies behind the narratives of our world's Sacred Books and our Bible and its apocalyptic symbolism which is so tragically "reinterpreted incorrectly" in an erroneous "literal" fashion today by Orthodox Christianity. This gross misunderstanding of this ancient symbolism has produced a fatalistic outlook instead of hope and faith in the eventual sanctification of humanity where the "Christ" if formed in the whole of humanity whereby we achieve our goal of growing as a species into the "fullness of Christ"; thereby becoming "Sons of God" and "Sons of Mind".

Now lets read this concept again:

Rom 8:22-23 22 For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. 23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit (we are unfinished works in progress), even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. (KJV)

Relax! "God is not through we me yet" we have heard. So true! There is a wilderness temptation daily in our lives and war going on that we, with the help of "the Christ" within as our guide and schoolmaster, must win if we ever hope of experiencing the "redemption of our body".

Gal 3:24-25 24 Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. 25 But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. (KJV)

Until we Spiritually mature into a "Living Christ" then we have the "literal" Laws of God to lead and guide us daily throughout our lives; sort of a training manual to show us the goal of our Spiritual perfection in the days of our incarnation but once this "Christ" is "formed" within us, once he is "birthed" and grows to "maturity" within us, then we, ourselves, become living examples of the "Laws" of God, no longer needing to be taught by the literal Laws of God but now becoming "Living Christs", "Living Teachings" ourselves. Boy, do we, as Descended Souls "in training", have a long way to go before the redemption of our bodies in which we move to the next plane of our existence as we "ascend" the Tree of Life on our way back to the Father (the Prodigal Son allegory).

On a metaphysical level there are, as taught by this ancient Spiritual Wisdom, sevenfold "energies" or "powers" that are "carnal threats" to our Spirit/body and its "ascension" to the next plane of our existence. These sevenfold "energies" and "powers" are represented in the ancient Sacred Books by a host of allegories and metaphors that all teach the same story about the impregnation of "matter" by the "Living Energy" and the "Divine fire" of God. In this impregnation of "Mind" and "Spirit/Soul" into "matter" this "Descending Soul" is threatened on all sides by the opposing powers that lie latent in the awaiting "matter" of creation that impedes its reascension.

Answer for yourself: Is that why in all the ancient sungod stories (all of them if you recall are personifications of the Soul and its growth in "matter") and even in our "Jesus Story" that the infant Christ as soon as it is born is threatened and his very life in danger? Yes it is.

Answer for yourself: Is this threat often portrayed in symbolism by a serpent? Yes it is.

The insightful reader will immediately see a new indication and profound meaning behind the dogma of the "virgin birth" and the "immaculate conception". The virginity here, as originally taught by the ancient mystics, pertains to both the "Spirit" and "matter", the Spiritual as well as the material. Notice that it is referring to "two virgins" and not "one" which we have today with the literalization of the "virgin" as a human being. True, "Mother Nature" is a "virgin" as we will see but so is "the Divine Spark of God" as we shall also see. The later "reinterpretation" by Rome during the 2nd through the 5th century is wrong again and does not follow the "ancient Pattern" of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom that is found from nation to nation down through recorded history. Notice that it is the "matter", the material, the feminine principle of Creation who is to function as a "womb" in giving birth to the Spiritual Mind. This "feminine matter" was at one time not yet impregnated with the Divine fire of God (masculine), incarnation had not occurred as of yet, but take not that this "masculine Energy" of God was "unwedded" to matter at one point as well. This is an important distinction worth noting if we are to ever understand correctly the "virgin birth" and its true meaning in bringing forth the "Deific Mind", "the Christ", later in "matter" (mother Mary).

These "Descending" unwedded units of "Living Energies", called "Neteru" by Egypt that were descending into "matter" were, before impregnation, the "Bridegroom" of which reference is made in the New Testament narrative who were to wed the "immaculate virgins of the material nature". These Descending "Living Energies" were "innocent" of copulation with "matter". It is these Descending Energies (Asuras and Suras which we saw in an earlier article) who were chosen to Descend to Earth and wed material forms, inoculating virgin "matter" with the principle of Immortal Mind and subsequently birth "the Christ" in material existence. These "Descending Energies" were often symbolized by the ancient Egyptians as bird's eggs in the nest of the Tree of Life; eggs who were in constant danger of being devoured by a serpent which was a symbol of the lower nature in the animal kingdom. Let us not forget that mankind is dual in nature. One nature is of the lower self, represented in the Snake. The other nature is Spiritual, represented often by Eagle. The serpent is earth bound and the eagle has access to spiritual flight. When the two come to gather, you see the symbol of the Dragon. With this transformation, the Serpent overcomes his earthly plight.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

Here we find the message that man must learn to overcome his lower self and amalgamate with his higher self. At this time he will overcome the re-cycling of life on earth. All over the earth, people recognize the image of the Dragon. Whether it be Polynesian, Iroquois, Egyptian or Chinese, the image is the same as well as the message behind it. Not knowing the ancient art of religious symbolism this deeper Spiritual meanings escape us.

When we consult Egyptian Religion we find that this serpent (mankind's lower animal nature) lays in wait to devour the Spirits of the Dead.

Answer for yourself: Who are these Spirits of the Dead? What has the name The Egyptian Book of the Dead have to do with this if anything? Let us not forget what we have already learned; namely, that the "dead" were again understood in ancient religions to be "living incarnated Souls in matter"; actually the book was for Spiritual maturation of normal living people who were considered incarnated Souls in flesh which was like a "death" to this descended Soul. That is why the Egyptian Bible, The Book of the Dead was called a book for "the dead". They were not "dead" physically, but were ironically "dead men walking", to use the phrase since they were in reality "Souls a long way from home imprisoned in fleshly and carnal bodies to which they were birth in order to conquer the animal nature and elevate the Spiritual level of the Soul in the process". They they were not physically dead, but Spiritual as if "dead" in need of a "new birth". We call in today being "born again". So now you understand why this Egyptian Bible was called a book for the "dead"; in reality human beings, or Souls alive but buried under clay bodies when were to awaken to a higher Spiritual elevation in this plane of existence before the actual death of their bodies.

This "carnal nature of the animal" in mankind, in which these Souls were captive, was symbolized by many symbols and allegories, the least of which is not the serpent. The serpent has many "meanings" and "characterizations" in ancient religious myths. One in particular to which we must look now is the one in which the serpent was called by many names; namely Apap or Apep, Apepi, Hydra, Herut, or Herrut. It is this "serpent" who awaited in Amenta (the Underworld, the realm of the dead. Again, let us not forget that the "dead" was a term for the reality of living incarnated Souls which had descended and were entrapped in "matter" and fleshly bodies, in reality living people...not the "dead" buried under the ground or dirt after their bodies died. The importance of these "theological keys" that I just gave you, when you better understand its implications for Christian theology actually overturns almost all of Christian theology in one fatal swoop. This only goes to show you how drastic and tragic this later Roman "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom in the 2nd century and onward has been for the totality of Christian theology and such dogmas as the resurrection, being born again, the crucifixion, the meaning of the word "death", concepts of Eternal Life, and the true nature of "the Christ", and much more. The train jumped the track with Rome and has never been righted. One more example of such deception at the hands of Rome in seen in the fact many scholars have suggested that the name "Herod" was palmed off on this serpent character from the ancient Spiritual myths when this allegory was later historicized, and is just a cover for the Herut reptile that threatens the Innocents (who again were these Descending Souls) of which we have been speaking! Here we find the myth later transformed into a supposed "literal Herod and the story of the killing of the Innocents in the New Testament" to which no historical verification of such a "literal" historical event has ever been found nor any documents in the annals of world history. Furthermore the many historians who wrote of the evil deeds of this true Herod are all silent upon such a monstrous action. Scores of writers spared no ink in detailing the horrors left behind in this man's life but one thing in common with them all is that they are all silent upon such a supposed slaying of the infants in search of "the Christ child". Behind again this Herod story is the Spiritual Myth explaining the virginous Descending Living Energies" of God before incarnation into "matter" and the birth of the "Deific Mind" and "the Christ" in "matter". You see it is "matter" that threatens the Spiritual life of the Soul and the birth of "the Christ" within it; not some supposed historical Herod. But when to take the Spiritual Myths and allegories of the ancient, like those found in Egypt, Mesopotamia, India, China, etc, and covert the Metaphysical Descent of the Soul and the birth of "the Christ" and "Deific Mind" in matter to a supposed "literal historical" narrative the way Rome did then other allegorical figures, like this Herrut reptile become the "Herod of history". You might want to study more on this Herod myth as well which I present to you in article #1 and article #2. Now you know a bit more of the deception behind the Roman traditions and texts we inherited.

Answer for yourself: Is "Amenta" the "Underworld" and does this refer into "fleshly incarnation"? Yes it does. They are both the same. More on Amenta in later articles.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the historical Herod, tetrarch of Galilee, was dead at the year 4 B.C.? Are you aware that later Christian chronology has had to shift the "date" of Christ's "birth" to the year 4 B.C. in order to be able to include Herod in the story? How can Jesus be born after the death of Herod and yet have Herod seek his death? It is truly amazing the lengths to which the Roman Church as gone to preserve this "Jesus Story". Jesus, as an assumed historical person, if you think about it, has the distinction to be born "4 years" before his birth. (THINK). That is one for the Guinness Book of World Records. Further alarming is the historical fact that Cyrenius (Quirinus), the "Governor in Syria" at the time of the supposed birth of this historical Jesus, according to the Gospel account, reigned from 13 to 11 B.C. How can this be if Jesus' father and mother had to travel for this presumed census? These and other "proofs" reveal the gross irregularities in the depiction of our supposed "literal" and assumed "historical Jesus Story". And they don't end here believe you me. That is why I don't Pastor any more, I realized that I was a man of unclean lips teaching the Gospel of Rome and not the Gospel of God!

If we recall the "Kumaras", one of the names of theses descending Asuras was "Spiritual Virgins". They are called the "Hamemmet Beings" in the Egyptian Religion which we mentioned in the first article in this series. They are these same "innocents" which we find in the Gospel narrative having not impregnated "matter" as of yet. They are yet "virginous" because they had not as yet had full full incarnation into matter (clay, flesh), which was always symbolized in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom as a "marriage" of Spirit and flesh. These "Hamemmet Beings", in the Egyptian Sacred Books, glory and triumph in their escape from this serpent, this threat to their Soul and their Spiritual Evolution in matter with the cry: "Apap hath not found my nest. My egg has not been cracked!"

This marriage of "flesh and Spirit/Soul" is dramatized in the ancient Spiritual Myths many ways and found in nearly all the nation's religious myths. We have mentioned these before but I choose to again to emphasize it once again to our readers. The Greeks depicted the same threat to the newly incarnated Soul who had just Descended into "matter" as the infant Hercules, who in his cradle strangled the two great snakes that crept up to devour him. Hercules, the Latin equivalent of Heracles, was the son of Jupiter and Alcmene. His jealous stepmother, Juno, tried to murder the infant Hercules by putting a serpent in his cradle. Luckily for Hercules, he was born with great strength and killed the serpent that threatened his "infant life".

Even more ancient we find that both Horus, the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ and his cat symbol stand with feet upon the giant serpent's neck (personified as the resistance of "matter" to Spirit). Horus, "the Christ", symbolized by a cat is seen severing its head with a knife.

I would be amiss if I omitted Plato and his references. Thomas Taylor, possibly one of the greatest interpreters of Platonism, states that Plato taught that humanity is but mortal men who are composed of "fragments" of the Titans (the Law of Incubation and the Law of Dismemberment).

Answer for yourself: Who are these Titans? The Titans, also known as the elder gods, similar to the Elohim, ruled the earth before the Olympians overthrew them. These Titans were also understood to be but personifications of the forces of nature and the "Living Energies" in Nature. The ruler of the Titans was Cronus who was de-throned by his son Zeus. Most of the Titans fought with Cronus against Zeus and were punished by being banished to Tartarus. During their rule the Titans were associated with the various planets. In Platonism generally the Titans were styled Thyrsus-bearers, as recognized as having "led the Soul into the body" (into "matter").

Important for us is the relationship between Tartarus, Hades, Hell, and the Underworld.

Answer for yourself: Are all these places the same and do they all refer to the "incarnation into 'matter'''? Well, by now you are getting the point. This same Metaphysical story has been told and retold through myth after myth until it is finally told as if a "literal-historical" story which we recognize today as the "Jesus Story" to which sadly Rome tied one's Eternal Salvation to it.

This same idea of the Descent of the Soul and the birth of "the Christ" within "matter" is expressed in the Hebrew Scriptures in the Book of Leviticus 26 where we find these "Descending Living Energies" from the Ayn Sof. Here we find the gods, "plural", as the Elohim (in all reality the same concept as the Egyptian "Neteru"collectively saying to the Israelites (in this story portrayed as "matter"):

Lev 26:12 12 And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people. (KJV)

Brown-Driver Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

430 'elohiym-

1) (plural)

- a) rulers, judges
- b) divine ones
- c) angels
- d) gods

Please take not of the plurality in this concept. True Monotheism is behind the Egyptian and Hebrew religions hat both share the concept of "Unity in Diversity". Here again we find proof positive of the ancient Spiritual teaching of Emanationism which Rome will denounce and eradicate almost completely between the 2nd through the 5th century in their radical reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Judaism will never do this and this important concept of the Divine is kept intact today in the mystical Kabbalah which carries this ancient Spiritual Truth yet for the world to see. This truth of gods and goddesses, the "Neteru", this Divine Expression of this One Absolute God and Cosmic Mind of the Cosmos is again the legacy of the great Egyptian Religion and Hebrew Religion which gives us today this most glorious insights into the Metaphysical reality which is our true home and to which we long to return.

Time for a summary before we end this article. Behind this all we have shared with our readers we find hidden the opposition of the two races of Divinities, these incarnating Asuras who finally obeyed the Law of Incubation and Suras who failed in their obedience to this Law. This again is originally symbolized as the battle or war between Set and Horus, as again retold in the two brothers which we find in the Prodigal Son allegory, and again as the two groups of virgins, one wise and one foolish, etc. This opposition between those who "incarnated fully" and those "who did not" is termed the War in Heaven. Down through history men who lost this original "key" to its understanding foolishly have given this "war" a host of different and confusing meanings. In spite of that then know that "War in Heaven" was the celestial counterpart and prototype for all later struggle inaugurated between the Heavenly and the Earthly elements in human nature which we see began with these Asuras descended to assume physical embodiment in "matter". This struggle between Heavenly Spirit/Energy and Earthly "matter" was exampled in the battle between Set and Horus, but also we read the same ancient story over and over again in our Bibles never knowing we do. We see it so clearly in the stories of Cain and Able, Isaac and Ishmael, Jacob and Esau, David and Saul, Jesus and Satan, etc. It is "Pattern" once again that fills the pages of our Bibles which we never come to understand because we were never given the "keys" to open this Book of ancient knowledge and understand it correctly. Without these "keys" then we read all these different narrative as disjointed story after story never realizing the undercurrent theme running through them all. This was the "Pattern" in the Heavens of the war between the first Adam, or natural man, and the second Adam, or the man regenerated by the infusion of a Spiritual Consciousness as birthed by "the Christ" in "matter" which is to aid our Soul's journey home to our Father.

The insightful reader will quickly see the importance of this "incarnation" of this Deific fire into Earthly "matter". This incarnation of "the Soul" and "intellect" was localized in the bodies of a race that at the beginning was animal and in the end was to become human. The "tabernacling with men" which these Descending "Living Energies" or gods or deities (Neteru) consisted in their coming to live within the bodies of animals "matter". Such an idea is problematic for many today because it makes it appear that evolution has a "missing link" or jumped over the gap between beast and human. Charles Darwin on his most important book On the Origin of the Species by Natural Selection (1859) paved the way to what science widely accepts today as the "Theory of Evolution" or evolutionary process of the species. The Theory of Evolution basically proposes that all life in the planet undergo changes in order to adapt to the changing environment, these changes can be due to environmental changes. Darwin also observed that some were inheritable changes. No one today can argue with the validity of Darwin's theory and scientific research has proven that the evolution of life on the planet is indeed a reality.

Now don't jump out of your skin. Read the whole paragraph with wisdom.

Luke 18:27 27 And he said, The things which are impossible with men are possible with God. (KJV)

Humans, according to the most recent studies evolved from mammals, creatures called Primates. We are categorized in the mammalian order as Primates. Our nearest living relatives are the African Apes; the genetic similarities place them in the Hominid family. Mankind, not apes, appeared on earth rather suddenly and the rate of evolution has been quite rapid when compared to other species like the "apes". We, as mankind, stand out in the evolution picture quite abnormally having evolved physically and mentally as well in a rather short period of time, considering that the first life forms on earth are supposedly 3.5 billion years old. In this day and age to deny our animal self would be absurd, we are indeed "Part Animal" or Primate. But we as mankind are "part Divine" in a way that the "ape" is not. Nevertheless, to accept the idea that we simply evolved from primates by some freak genetic accident or by applying The Theory of Evolution, as we understand it today is very shortsighted indeed. A legitimate question should be:

Answer for yourself: What took place 6 to 7 million years ago, and how, that changed Ape into Man?

In order to begin to approach the question we must look first at some very important aspects of man and the evolution process. The Ape, our nearest relative, remains Ape without any significant changes, only that he supposedly became man. That does not make sense.

Answer for yourself: Are we to assume that only some apes underwent the genetic changes needed for man's evolution and the rest remained basically unchanged? The genetic change that occurred 6 to 7 millions years ago to our mankind's cousin the Ape was rather radical; what motivated the genetic change or evolution? Was it perhaps mankind's need to adapt to a changing environment? If so did the changing environment only affect selected populations of Apes or primates in a specific geographical location? Again this does not make sense.

With the appearance of man on the planet, evolution when compared to any other species before him broke the mold and the "pattern" established by evolution itself. No other life form, which we know of, has evolved in quite the same way as man has.

Answer for yourself: Why not? How can this "pattern" be broken just for us? What makes us different?

The search for the famous "Missing Link" is still going on today and will forever until the ancient Spiritual Wisdom is understood both religiously and scientifically together at the same time. In an attempt to verify and justify the Theory of Evolution, we have not found the so called "Missing Link" yet. With the Archeological research and scientific process, we have discovered a great deal of valuable information that helps us to understand better human evolution and all of this is important. However, the sudden appearance of intellect in mankind on our planet remains a mystery today. We can understand that through the evolutionary process, more than likely, Ape might have evolved "physically" to became which might resemble mankind today, but the mental and "Spiritual" development of man is still not understood at all and remains a mystery today.

Charles Darwin has been aided down through time by many other scientists that have contributed to the Theory of Evolution and these combined efforts have contributed a great deal in the search for the "Origin" of mankind. The scientific data that has been collected is of tremendous benefit and certain pieces of the "Human Origin Puzzle" are beginning to give us a clearer picture of mankind's physical origins. But evolution alone does not fully account for or can explain man's existence on this planet. The Theory of Evolution can explain partially the "Natural Evolution" of the species of mankind within the Planet Earth and nothing more or less than that. Something else many are missing.

The emergence suddenly by mankind endowed with self-determinative intelligence and with no provision made for his having earned it some sort of orderly development is a perplexing issue of immense proportions for anthropologists. But the ancient Spiritual Wisdom answers this problem quite acceptably. The ancient Spiritual Wisdom reveals the irrationality of Science's attempt to account for the presence and growth of a plant without permitting the assumption that its seed had to be first sowed in the soil in order for it to grow. Science has been laboring to explain the presence of Mind and Consciousness in this animal we call "man" and has done so for a long time because it fails to take into account the ancient theorem that teaches that each kingdom or plane of existence serves as the seed-bed for the generation of life of the kingdom above it. It is like a "ladder"; in this case a "Ladder to Heaven". Science has until recently with the advances of Quantum Physics been searching for explanation of this sudden elevation of the animal intelligence in mankind without a long evolutionary process as seen in other species across the board. Science has failed to see that all Creation is the manifestation of "one long immortal chain, whose sequence is never-ending; each level impregnating its Living Energy into the womb on the plane below, from the very lowest to the very highest"; a chain that is connected from Heaven to Earth below.

Important for us to understand in that today with the advent of the "New Physics" we find that mankind, like nature, is composed of a series of "levels of Living Energies and 'matter'", and each member of the series is a link in the chain, bound above and below to the adjoining links. The interrelation of the links is governed by the Law of Incubation, by which the seed bud, the seed nucleus, and the seed "Divine Spark" of life on the level above is deposited in the embryo or soil of the level below, there to be impregnated into a new manifestation of "birth" and "life". In the Egyptian Book of the Dead, in chapter 85, the incarnating Ego says: "I am the soul, the Creator of the god Nu, who maketh his habitation in the underworld; my place of incubation is unseen and my egg is not cracked."

Answer for yourself: Have you ever thought of your Soul living in the "underworld"? What is this "underworld"? Could our existence as "incarnated Souls" in fleshy bodies where we are engaged in a constant warfare with the "flesh" be called the "underworld" in the ancient Sacred Books and ancient Spiritual Wisdom?

And in the resurrection scene in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 86, the revived Ego, symbolized as a dove, exclaims: "I am the Dove; I am the Dove,"! as he rises from the realm of darkness wherein the "egg of his future being was hatched by the divine incubator" (Ch. 86). We are moving up the Ladder to Heaven in route home to God but only if "our Souls prosper". This is like a graduation and we live in hope of not being "held back" and not permitted to graduate to the next level of Spiritual growth and maturation.

Rom 8:18 18 For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time (dead but alive) are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is this "realm of darkness" that the Soul arises from? Could it be the Earthy body of fleshly "matter" in which it is incarnated?

THE ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND THE INCARNATION #4

We concluded the previous article with two very important questions which hold huge ramifications to Christian theology as it presently stands:

Answer for yourself: Have you ever thought of your Soul living in the "underworld"? What is this "underworld"? Could our existence as "incarnated Souls" in fleshy bodies where we are engaged in a constant warfare with the "flesh" be called the "underworld" in the ancient Sacred Books and ancient Spiritual Wisdom?

Answer for yourself: What is this "realm of darkness" that the Soul arises from? Could it be the Earthy body of fleshly "matter" in which it is incarnated?

We have brought forth for the reader to clearly see than the ancient Spiritual Masters of old connected the terms "death, Hades, Hell, Grave, Amenta, and Underworld" as being the same place.

Answer for yourself: And what was this again? It is this fleshly incarnation of our Soul into "matter" which we call the human body; the purpose of which is to allow the Soul to further develop something missing in its Spirituality which only could be accomplished through the daily struggle for mastery over the animal nature of the body. Upon completion and victory over the carnal and animal urges of this Earthly existence in "matter" the Soul was to continue its Spiritual Maturation in the next stage or step of its existence on a higher plane following the demise of the body in further perfection was not deemed necessary in the previous incarnational experience. We saw how this whole idea of the Soul's incarnation into "matter" had been symbolized and taught as a Divine Allegory from nation to nation in the myths and legends of their sungods and "Christs" and in the "Jesus Story" as well which tragically was later mistakenly presented as a "literal-historical" narrative. We looked previously at Mary Magdalene and how the name "Mary" was connected to the word "mud" and "matter" in a host of other languages. We pick up this idea of "Mary" or "matter" being the womb that brings forth the birth of the Divine Mind in "matter"; in humanity.

Now read this carefully and "think". In the Pistis Sophia of the Gnostics the doctrine of the Law of Incubation finds clear expression when Jesus says: "I found Mary, who is called my mother, after the material body; I implanted in her the first power which I had received from the hands of Barbelo, and I planted in her the power which I had received from the hands of the great, the good Sabaoth" (Mead's Trans., Bk. I, 13).

Answer for yourself: Who or what is this "Barbelo"? The Barbelo is the first Emanation of the Absolute, and the source of all subsequent manifestation. This Barbelo is a female principle, variously referred to as the Word, the Thought, Providence, Fore-thought or Foreknowledge (in Greek, all these words have female gender), and it also called the "Barbelo". In other words, the "Word" of which we read in John 1 is the feminine aspect of the Mind of God!

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that this Greek (Gnostic) work directly identifies Mary, the mother of divinity, the mother of "the Christ" with the physical body?

Answer for yourself: What is this teaching us? Could the depictions of Horus and Isis and late the same reinterpretation of "the indwelling Christ" in "matter" but taught through the anthropomorphic representation of Mary and Jesus as "the Christ" of Christianity?

I discovered in my exhaustive studies that "the mother" in all ancient allegories is symbolic for nothing more than the physical body which in mankind becomes the very womb for the impregnation and gestation of the Christ-body of Spirit which is brought to birth in "matter". It is in this way that the Creator can experience Himself as well as the whole of the Creation. The character of Mary Magdalene which we find in the New Testament and various legends, the events surrounding her and particularly the casting out of seven devils (remember the number "seven" is the number symbolizing the carnal threat to Spirit) from her spiritual life by the Christ, are but one part of a larger group of allegorical depictions of a central ingredient in all religious dramas and the "key" to proper interpretation of almost, if not, half of all interpretations of all Sacred Books and Scriptures. The central importance of this representation of Divine Truth in the "casting out of 7 devils" which we find in the Mary Magdalene story cannot be emphasized or stressed too highly. The Biblical narrative of Mary Magdalene has been, as so much of the whole Bible, been mistakenly interpreted as if literal history going on almost 2,000 years simply because we fail to read the stories in our Bibles as if allegories and symbolism of deeper Spiritual principles. This can be blamed upon many things such as inadequate scholarship by Christian clergy and other Christian leaders. Such lack of insight into the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, Comparative Religions, Comparative Mythology, Platonism, etc, are contributing factors that have contributed to the loss of correct interpretation of Mary Magdalene as the personification of the Motherhood of all life. Too few of us have ever stopped when reading this story and pondered why such impurity and sin connected to Mary Magdalene should be associated with only a woman and not a man let alone also why the number "seven" was connection to "Mary". Going on two thousand years such enigmas have had no solution at the hands of both the early and later Church which is "Patriarchal" and not "Matriarchal". The total destruction of the Gnostic and Esoteric Religious academies of the world by the emerging Roman Church did not help in this matter as well. Get a load of this:

"We shall believe in the single Deity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, under the concept of equal majesty and of the Holy Trinity. We command that those persons who follow this rule shall embrace the name of Catholic Christians. The rest, however, whom We adjudge demented and insane, shall sustain the infamy of heretical dogmas, their meeting places shall not receive the name of churches, and they shall be smitten first by divine vengeance and secondly by the retribution of Our own initiative, which We shall assume in accordance with the divine judgement." (Emperor Theodosius, The Theodosian Laws, A.D. 380, quoted on pp.27-28 of Helen Ellerbe's The Dark Side of Christian History, pub. A.D.1995).

"Orthodox Christians assembled the Bible not to bring all the gospels together, but rather to encourage uniformity. From the plethora of Christian gospels, Bishop Irenaeus compiled the first list of biblical writings that resemble today's New Testament around 180 C.E. By 393 and 397, Bishop Athanasius had a similar list ratified by the Church councils of Hippo and Carthage. By prohibiting and burning any other writings, the Catholic Church eventually gave the impression that this Bible and its four canonized Gospels represented the only original Christian view. And yet, as late as 450, Theodore of Cyrrhus said that there were at least 200 different gospels circulating in his own diocese. Even the Catholic Encyclopedia now admits that the "idea of a complete and clear-cut canon of the New Testament existing from the beginning... has no foundation in history." (Helen Ellerbe, The Dark Side of Christian History, p.16, pub. A.D.1995).

"You know, it's very interesting to think of the history of Christianity. During the first five centuries, there were lots of sects of Christianity, lots of ways of being Christian. And then, in the period of Theodosius in the fourth century, the only religion allowed in the Roman Empire was the Christian religion, and the only form of Christianity allowed in the Roman Empire was the Christianity of Byzantium's throne." (Joseph Campbell, The Power of Myth, p.248, pub. 1988).

"From the very first centuries, what was to become Christian orthodoxy vehemently suppressed those Christians of psychic, shamanic, or visionary temperament called the Gnostics. The authorities of the early institutional Church soon established a strict orthodoxy of doctrine against to which all contrary views were stigmatized as heretical. When in 313 the Emperor Constantine made Christianity the official state religion, attempting to syncretize it with various sun-god cults, Christianity was left to deal with the many cults that swarmed within the Roman Empire. The monotheistic zeal to convert and eradicate the diversity of polytheism gave the Church an authoritarian character that has plagued the West ever since with schisms, councils, inquisitions, and witch-hunts..." (Roger J, Woolger, Other Lives, Other Selves, p. 71, pub. A.D. 1987).

"It may truly be said that the blackest and bloodiest records that history can show us are the attacks of the Orthodox Church upon the Gnostic mystics." (Frances Swiney, quoted by Lloyd M. Graham in Myths & Deceptions of the Bible, p.446, pub. A.D. 1991)

"The persecuted primitive Church of the second century was to become in the fourth century itself the persecutor, and whereas in the earlier period Gnostics had been able to engage in theological dispute with the orthodox, later they were sought out, excommunicated, and sometimes burnt alive for their heresy." (Stuart Holroyd, The Elements of Gnosticism, p.22, pub. A.D. 1994)

"... Christians burned down one of the world's greatest libraries in Alexandria, said to have housed 700,000 rolls. All the books of the Gnostic Basilides, Porphyry's 36 volumes, papyrus rolls of 27 schools of the Mysteries, and 270,000 ancient documents gathered by Ptolemy Philadelphus were burned. Ancient academies of learning were closed. Education for anyone outside of the Church came to an end..." (Helen Ellerbe, The Dark Side of Christian History, p. 46, pub. 1995)

"When the great library at Alexandria was ransacked by Christian fanatics in 387... an inestimable wealth of Gnostic literature must have been destroyed. Until the nineteenth century the main source of knowledge of Gnosticism was, ironically, in the writings of the Church Fathers, who in their refutations summarized Gnostic texts and often quoted at length from them. In the nineteenth and present centuries a number of original Gnostic texts came to light, the most sensational find being an entire library of fifty-two texts discovered at Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt in 1946. These, scholars later ascertained, had belonged to an ascetic Christian community which, fearing discovery by the ecclesiastical authorities and the consequences of being charged with heresy, had sealed up their forbidden library in a large jar and buried it in the sand beneath a cliff near their monastery in about the year 360." (Stuart Holroyd, The Elements of Gnosticism)

The above quotes paints a very short picture as to why Christian Bible exegesis has not seen the connection or discerned the significance of this family of symbols in relation not only to Mary Magdalene but other women characterized in Bible narratives. In reality it is the reason why Christianity has so poorly interpreted and understood the Bible which it claims as their "authority" for their faith and practice. During my studies over the years I was able to find these "keys" and put this picture together and make this "connection" by spending serious study of the roots of the Christian faith as I traced them back through Judaism and eventually back to ancient Egypt where the beginning of all religions actually began. Of no small importance is the fact that ancient Egypt exerted great Spiritual influence upon the later Greek nation where this Egyptian Religion is expressed through the high ideas of Plato, Plotinus, Proclus, Iamblichus, and others.

I am staggered when I consider the sad fact that the "keys" necessary to unlock this hidden Spiritual Mystery in our Bibles has been overlooked by most Christian writers and leaders since the 5th century. It is next to inconceivable that centuries of supposedly sagacious study of the Bible by hosts of Christian clerics and leaders could have failed to yield to a single Christian scholar down through history who would come out and say frankly that many woman characterized in the Bible are in representatives of "matter"! Further study only confirmed to me that up until Constantine's Nicene Council the only major religious controversy in ancient times was over the point of the sex of divinity. I would find that up and until around 2,000 B.C.E. the concept of the Divine God was basically "feminine" and not "masculine"; that will all change with the invasion of the Southern Hemisphere by the barbaric tribes of the Northern Hemisphere who bring with them the concept of the "male warrior God". At this time the ancient teaching that the Earth was identified as female, as Mother Earth, the one who passively accepts the Spirit's seed, began to be eroded away. Left overemphasized from this time is the fact that Heaven was naturally and inherently male when in fact it is "both".

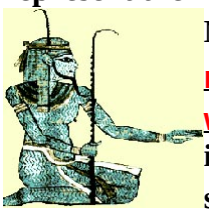
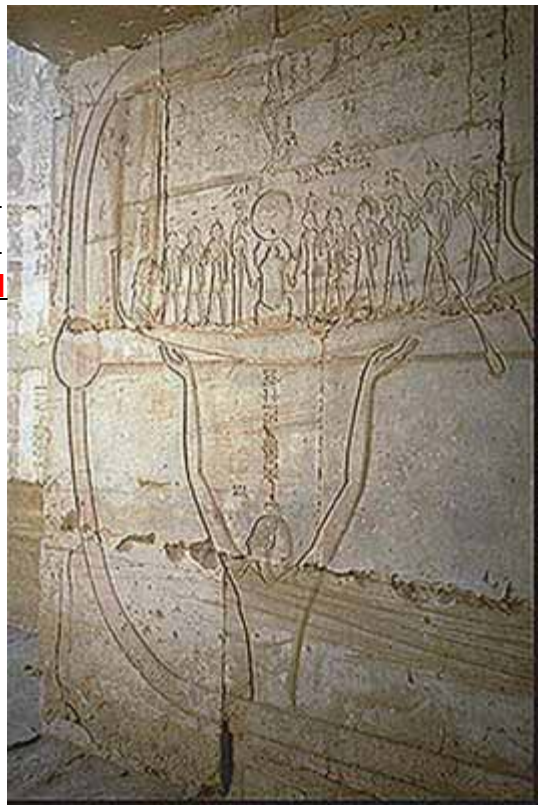
Throughout the Bible, the Holy Spirit has always been female. She is the Comforter and teacher so often referred to. I didn't come up with this theory. It is a basic from the Hebrew language and from Old Testament scriptures. Unknown to most is the fact that the patriarchal Church fathers decided to change "she" into a "he" to align to their patriarchal dominance and subjugation of the women. Even in the unfolding of the Lord's Sacred Name which is YHWH, Yod-He-Vau-He, the First "Yod" was masculine meaning God the Father.. The second "He" was the Holy Spirit and female. While the third letter "Vau" represents the Son, yet the Three are one. But the Lord is not complete without the Bride , the people that love the Lord with all their heart and Soul, and mind. These comprise the last "He", and she becomes ONE with the Trinity and the Holy Family and Holy Name is complete. This is called the unspeakable and holy Tetragrammaton, which could only be spoken out loud by the High Priest once a year inside the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement, for the hoped for remission of all sins of the people for the whole year.



The Holy Spirit or 'Rauch' , was feminine in all of Pharaoh Amenhotep (Solomon's) writings as the 'Divine Presence' was female, in Proverbs and his other writings. Often the Soul was personalized as female as well and the Hebrew Scriptures reveal many of the names for God are feminine. But except in this usage, the women figures usually typify "matter". Important to note is the fact that the word "mother" is in Latin our word ""matter"," with but one "t" left out as in "Mater". So we see that "Soul" and "matter" is often symbolized as if "feminine" since "matter" is again symbolically "Mary" (as in Mary, the mother of "the Christ" or Mary Magdalene). In Greek "matter" is "meter," in French it is "mere," it Spanish is its "madre," in German it is "mutter." This shows us that this idea that "mother" and "matter" is synonymous from nation to nation in antiquity. Not surprisingly all 3 these words for mother come from the same root which gives us our word "mud" (think clay - "matter"). According to the typology the Sacred Books of antiquity allotted to the kings and the male characters the role of Energy and to the women the part of lowly "matter". It would be a mistake to think that this characterization of the feminine with "matter" was like rubbing the nose of womanhood in the "mud"; far from it. Known then, but lost today, is the Divine Truth that women are a higher creation than men and are more Spiritual than men.

Further study over the years in Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology enlightened me to the fact that the goddesses of mythology and many of the women in the Bible, both Old and New Testament for that "matter", stand as the types of "matter", as "opposed" to Spirit. Understand some are historical references to real people and some are not; important for us is being able to distinguish between this difference if you ever hope of correctly interpreting the Bible we inherited. A good background in Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology will help you spot the "parallels" in ancient Spiritual Wisdom with the many narratives in the Bible. When the Sacred Books of the nations are examined I found that in common they all portrayed primarily the feminine principle as the emblem of "matter". "Matter" is the Universal Mother and is the womb of all organic life. This "matter" as the Universal Mother embodies "Living energy", it is the substrate in which are formed all the created worlds. Many of the "kings" of the Sacred Books of old are the literary types of the god, the divine Consciousness in man. Again, a good background in Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology will help you spot the "parallels" in ancient Spiritual Wisdom with the many narratives in the Bible. One thing is held in common with this kingly symbolism of Divine Spirit; namely, they all bring forth a "birth" from the same mother whether it is Meri (Egypt), Maya (India), Mary (New Testament), etc. Ever memorable should be the inscription at the base of the statue of the Egyptian Isis at Sais:



"I am the goddess Isis, the Mother ("matter") of all the living. No man hath lifted my veil, and the fruit I bore was Helios."

Answer for yourself: Who is this Helios? Helios is the Sun, which as we have seen is the majestic symbol of the Divine Spirit or "Living Energy" which incarnated into "matter", into humanity. Now we better understand the Book of Malachi which states that the Sun of righteousness, that rises on mankind with healing in its wings, is born of Mother "matter". "Matter" is the great World Mother, since it is the one vehicle of all manifested life.

Now make no mistake about it. "Matter" exits in a variety of forms. Matter exits often as a solid, a liquid, often it is gaseous and ethereal. Searching through the world of phenomena for types of universal truth, the ancient sages saw the motherhood function borne more particularly by the two lower elements, Earth and water. Earth was obviously the mother and sustainer of all the organic life dwelling upon it. Water was equally a party, and an essential one, to this generation of life. Modern biology asserts that all first life originated in the water, in the sea. Even earth remains unproductive without it. Interestingly the letter "M", as in "matter", "mother", Meri (Mary), is the archaic hieroglyph for water, and it reads "water" in the Hebrew alphabet; and its numerical value is 40, which just happens to be the duration of the great deluge of rain (water). This "M" is shaped to represent the line of a wave, and it begins all words for "mother." In outline it is itself a "u" between two "n's."

Now if the lines are taken and seen as if to overlap; we get the word "N U N" and Nun, if you recall spells the ancient Egyptian name for the aboriginal abyss of the firmamental waters, whence was born the whole creation. So more importantly for us is the fact that the Hebrew Scriptures state that the Biblical "Joshua", which is synonymous with the Hebrew word for "Jesus" or "the Christ", is the son of Nun (the son of the firmamental water which is "matter")! This is tantamount to saying that "Jesus" is the son of Nun which is but a simple statement revealing that the Spiritual mind, "the Christ Mind" born of "matter" and "Energy" incarnationally!

Now you have the connection before you as to how the Mind of God is birthed as the Son in "matter" by the impregnation of "Descending Energy, Spirit/Soul" into " matter". This is the "Christ within" us all who is to be aroused to awakening to enable our Soul's to complete successively its Spiritual journey on this plane of existence. This incarnation and impregnation births "the Christ" in the "matter" of humanity.

Answer for yourself: Is this but a coincidence or some fancy word manipulation the intent of which is to confuse us? Not, not in the least. Hidden not only in our Bible narratives but in the very words and their derivations are the Divine Truths of this incarnation of Deific fire in "matter" that brings forth the birth of the true and only Christ in humanity.

It all makes so much sense. The maternal function of Earth has been recognized in the common poetic designation "Mother Earth." There appears to be no similar phrase ascribing "motherhood" to water as we have with "Earth", but the ancients did give to the primal mother of life the very name for "sea" (water-think "womb") in several countries. Berosus, a native historian of Babylonia in the lifetime of Alexander the Great, in speaking of the Babylonia Creation accounts, states that Tiamat, the first Mother, is named "Thallath", which is the Greek "thallasa" which means "the sea". Added to this we find that the feminine Sephiroth, named "Binah:, is termed by the Kabbalists "the Great Sea." And "Mary", the name for the mother of "the Christ" is allied in derivation with "maria", the plural of the Latin "mare", the sea. Thus we see the "mother principle" of all creation is a symbol for both "matter" and "water".

In the ancient Spiritual Wisdom these "mothers" were almost always likewise linked with the moon, and called lunar goddesses. So we find stated in The Secret Doctrine (Vol. 1, p. 400) the statement: "All the lunar goddesses had a dual aspect,--the one divine, the other lower world of the dead (which we have seen is the realm of incarnated Souls..."matter"). All were the virgin mothers of an immaculately born Son--the Sun."

Interestingly we find the ancient Spiritual Wisdom stating that the "-hovah" portion of Jehovah is identical with Binah, Eve and the other lunar goddesses thus this carries the idea "of feminine". This teaches us that the Creative Energies or Powers are Spirit and "matter" which are linked together in this marriage of which we have spoken previously. The Secret Doctrine states that Jehovah and the Assyrian Anu are "both viewed from a dual aspect; male or spiritual, female or material, or spirit and "matter", the two antagonistic principles" which again we have mentioned before. And if there is any question as to water sharing the symbolism of "matter", The Secret Doctrine settles it specifically: "The Flames or 'Fires' represent spirit or the male element, and 'Water,' "matter", or the opposing element." And again: "Water is the symbol of the female element everywhere; "matter", from which the letter M is derived . . . a water hieroglyph (Nun). It is the universal matrix (womb) or 'the Great Deep.' Venus, the great Mother-Virgin, issues forth from the sea-wave, and Cupid or Eros is her Son." All life is born in and from water ("matter").

We need to focus on the term "Mother Nature." The Christian Bible states:

Rom 8:22 22 For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. (KJV)

Rom 8:19 19 For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God (the sons of Mind). (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What should this now say to us?

It should awaken in us that this theme is the whole kernel of what the Sacred Books and Bibles of the world are trying to teach mankind. We should by now be coming to the point whereby we recognize that all Holy Writings throughout the world deals fundamentally and mainly with the one great cosmic story of the motherhood of "matter" and nature in giving birth to Deific Mind and Spirit. Let us not forget that we said before that The Sons of God are often called the Sons of Mind. All Life starts from its birth in nature and its goal is to pass over from nature to the pure realm of Spirit or Energy at its completion.

Answer for yourself: How do we know that this is true?

Paul tells us it is in our own Bible.

1 Cor 15:46-47 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. 47 The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. (KJV)

1 Cor 15:49 49 And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. (KJV)

Paul teaches us here the basics of all religion and philosophy. Everywhere in the Universe the natural comes first, and must come first to function as the womb and "mother" for the birth of the Spiritual. Over eons of time Mother Nature was to evolve a creature--man--in whom godlike intellect would come to "birth" above the animal kingdom. Then, and only then, could the Father God could produce his Son, the reproduction of Himself through this new evolved body of Mother Nature. Now, finally, we see clearly the place and meaning of the goddesses of ancient mythology: Isis, Hathor, Neith, Apt, Typhon, Cybele, Ishtar (Esther), Mylitta, Parvati, Venus, Diana, Freya, and many others.

The ancients taught this principal of the Descent of the Soul and its incarnation into "matter" through a host of allegories, myths, legends, and folk-tales; gods and goddesses were only one form of them. When Christians recite the Apostles' Creed they affirm their belief that Jesus descended into hell, although most of them probably have little more than a vague idea of what this phrase implies. At the beginning of the current era, however, and for centuries earlier, such a statement as "descent into Hell" would have been meaningful to followers of many religions which flourished in the ancient classical world. Alarming for me to learn years ago is that my Jesus, as "the Christ", was not the only one who supposedly "descended into Hell". He appears as a "copy-cat" in this regard. In fact he was the "last" one of many of these who "descended into Hell". I discovered this same story of this "descent into Hell" told over and over again in a host of other world religious traditions down through recorded time. Others who descended into death or "hades" included Attis, Dionysus, Enoch, Herakles, Ishtar, Krishna, Orpheus, and Persephone. I discovered upon my own serious study of Comparative Religions and Comparative Mythology that from the ancient Middle and Near East comes numerous collections of descent myths from nation to nation. One of the most famous is the that of Gilgamesh who is the hero of the Babylonian epic. Another is the story of the goddess Ishtar who descended into Aralu, the Akkadian Hades. We find an earlier Sumerian version even before that. Variations of the myth can be traced from there to have spread to the north and west. In Phoenicia the goddess Astarte and her consort Adonai appear in the principal roles. Elsewhere this same story of the descent into "death" or "hades" or "hell" was told through Venus and Adonis. In Asia Minor it is "Magna Mater", the Great Mother Cybele, associated with her consort Attis. The famous Eleusinian Mysteries celebrated not far from Athens were the origin of most of the classical references to a descent into Hades, including Plato's. Their establishment is described in the Homeric Hymn to Demeter, which dates from the seventh century B.C. -- very early for a literary source. In it the story is unfolded how the god of the Underworld, Hades, abducted Persephone, daughter of Demeter. One of the most famous "descent myths of the Soul" is told personified, as they all were, in the story of Orpheus who went to Hades to plead for the release of the soul of his dead wife, Eurydice. His beautiful music captivated the god of the dead, who granted his request on condition that if Orpheus looked back when leaving the Underworld, Eurydice must return to Hades. Orpheus failed to honor this rule of the spiritual path and his journey was in vain. In the Orphic Mysteries to which centers upon Orpheus, the descent theme was prominent.

Answer for yourself: So what is this "Hades" to which the Soul descended, this "Hell" and "death" to which "the Christ" and all the other gods descended long before the Gospel story? Could this not be, as we have been taught by Christianity, in all actuality a literal fiery "Hell" as the KJV Bible interprets the word when it so badly misinterpreted the word "Hades"? Have we completely misunderstood "Hades" and "Hell" and could this be nothing more than an allegorical depiction of the Descent of the Soul into "matter" to which this "Living Energy" has fallen in its incarnation and into which it is bound and subjected to carnal dangers? Could such a horrible travesty of loss of Divine truth befallen us to such a degree to mistakenly believe in a fiery Hell of punishment instead of an incarnation into the flesh for an intended Spiritual purpose designed for our Soul? Have we completely misunderstood such a dogma of Christianity along with millions of others who, like ourselves, inherited this radical "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome from the 2nd century onward? Did Rome purposefully "reinterpret" these ancient Spiritual Dogmas in order to enslave mankind to the Roman Church which conveniently declared itself the "only" way to God and Heaven for mankind? Was this their sinister plan whereby the Roman Church and their concocted theology could later say, as Cyprian did: "There is no salvation outside the Bishoprick, and by so doing enthrone itself as the only vessel of God's grace in the world for the whole of mankind whereby man could escape an eternal punishment of a fiery Hellish existence? Lets see if that is possible.

- St. Irenaeus (130-202), Bishop and Martyr: "The Church is the entrance to life; all others are thieves and robbers. On this account we are bound to avoid them We hear it declared of the unbelieving and the blinded of this world that they shall not inherit the world of life which is to come Resist them in defense of the only true and life giving faith, which the Church has received from the Apostles and imparted to her sons."

- St. Augustine (354-430), Bishop and Doctor of the Church: "No man can find salvation except in the Catholic Church. Outside the Catholic Church one can have everything except salvation. - Pope St. Gregory the Great (590-604): "The holy universal Church teaches that it is not possible to worship God truly except in Her and asserts that all who are outside of Her will not be saved."

- St. Thomas Aquinas (1226-1274), the Angelic Doctor: There is no entering into salvation outside the Catholic Church, just as in the time of the Flood there was not salvation outside the Ark, which denotes the Church."

- Pope Pius XII (1939-1958): Some say they are not bound by the doctrine which teaches that the Mystical Body of Christ and the Roman Catholic Church are one and the same thing. Some reduce to a meaningless formula the necessity of belonging to the true Church in order to gain eternal salvation. Others finally belittle the reasonable character of the credibility of Christian Faith. These and like ERRORS, it is clear, have crept in among certain of our sons who are deceived by imprudent zeal for souls or by false science." (The dates for the two Popes are the years they reigned as Sovereign Pontiffs.)

Answer for yourself: Was this "radical interpretation" of "Hades" and "matter" done in order to control the minds of the ignorant masses who, like ourselves, did not possess the "keys" to the "inner mysteries" and the knowledge so necessary to make sense of these inherited religious myths and allegories?

Let us now correct this most egregious error by stating that Hades, otherwise known as the Underworld, was the abode of the "dead" or, more accurately, of departed souls, which are incarnated into this body of "matter" in which it lives.

Answer for yourself: And where had Souls departed from? Heaven, the origin for the Soul, was the point of the "descent" of the Soul into physical manifestation ("matter") which was likened by the ancient Spiritual Wisdom as like a "tomb", "grave", "death", and "hades", etc. The "incarnation" into "the denseness of restricted "matter"" was a like a "death" to this Descending Soul/"Living Energy". This is terribly important to grasp in light of this religious dogma's later "REINTERPRETATION BY ROME" whereby "incarnation of the Soul" into humanity became for Rome a "fiery Hell of torment and anguish" to which only Rome could set one free!

Answer for yourself: With this insight then what do all of these "Descending myths" of mythology have in common? They all were representative of and taught the Descent of the Soul into "matter" to which "the Christ" was to be born in order to "redeem the human existence". No wonder Augustine will say:

That which is known as the Christian religion existed among the ancients, and never did not exist; from the beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, at which time the true religion, which already existed began to be called Christianity. (Retractt. I, xiii, cited by Dr. Alvin Boyd Kuhn in his Shadow of The Third Century, Elizabeth N.J.: Academy Press, 1949, p.3).

Stop and read this quote again. Now it begins to maybe make sense to you. God has been teaching mankind since the beginning of time this same "story" of His "descent into "matter", eventually into mankind", over and over again, from nation to nation, from religion to religion; only the names of these personified saviors/sungods as personifications of this "Descending Deific Mind" or this "Descending Krst/Karest/Christ" were changed. What is important for us to grasp is the sad fact that this "story" and its "unchanging interpretation" for thousands of years was radically altered and promoted as a solitary "literal-historical" event which was localized by Rome in the body of "one" supposed man, this "literalized" Jesus of Nazareth, to which "required belief" was made necessary in this "literalized-historical" Jesus by the Roman Church for the Soul's Salvation. Millions became enslaved by fear of damnation and feared the fires of Hell by such a pernicious doctrine throughout history and even yet today.

Answer for yourself: Why is this so tragic for us?

Lost in such a terrible misinterpretation and "reinterpretation" of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome was each person's hope of bringing to birth "the Christ" within themselves which is so necessary for their personal ascent and Spiritual evolutionary journey up this Tree of Life in their return to the "Father". The prodigal son allegory says it all. Hidden behind such a simple story is the reality that humanity is constantly evolving to a higher level of existence whereby it raises itself to a higher spiritual level.

Once you begin to acquire these "keys" that explain the real story of our Bible then you see clearly that the Christian story is the same story, when properly interpreted, that has always been taught to mankind since the beginning of recorded time under various "names" of gods and goddesses (Living Energies like the allegorical Jesus as "the Christ"). This "story" is never to be taken in a "literal" fashion unless it is about YOU! Augustine's comment will make sense now once you get enough "keys" to objectively look at the "Jesus Story" in the proper way in light of the other more ancient similar "Christ stories" that we know are about the Descent of the Soul! If you have never studied what the ancient's believed about their own sungods then click the link above and learn; then compare that with our inherited tradition of the "same story" and ask yourself "why is our Jesus Story to be understood any differently"? One comes to the realization that it does not "matter" which religion a person believes in. All religions lead back to the original source. It does not "matter" whether a person is a Christian, Buddhist, Hindu, etc., since these deep truths are found in all major world faiths to be held in common. You come to see that these religious ideas of which I am teaching lay behind our mistaken "Jesus Story" which is not "literal" but actually "allegorical". You come to see that our "Jesus Story" is not new and was originally present in all world religions since the beginning of time but has been lost to various degrees over the centuries; especially since the 2nd century and the emergence of Roman Christianity.

Now let us continue our study in the next article in this series.

THE ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND THE INCARNATION #5

We mentioned earlier these Descending sungods who traveled to "Hades" or "Hell". Of importance for us in our study is the fact that Orpheus, after his "descent" into Hades, tries to calm the "seven beasts" of hades, the "carnal" power of "matter", by the music of his lyre. We connected the number "seven" earlier to carnal threats to the Spiritual nature of the Soul. Notice also that by "music" these "seven beasts" of Hades were calmed.

Answer for yourself: Does this remind you about the story about King David who played music that calmed Saul's troubled spirit?

Proclus also speaks of the Soul having "fallen" as "like a seed" into the realms of physical creation and "matter" (quoted by Iamblichus: The Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians, p. 364). Using the same symbolism we find in the New Testament that Paul characterized the "nature of man" as "sown" in corruption (this "animal nature). Both of these analogies is a resort again to the imagery that is behind the Law of Incubation. In reality these "Lesser Living Energies", which are often called "junior gods," were "sown" or "planted" into a soil prepared by the Cosmic Law of Evolution in order to fan provide the next stage in the evolution of the "Deific Mind" and their Spiritual Evolution. This is the purpose of the physical "incarnation" of these "Living Energies" that "fell" into "matter". Of course you recognize that the zenith of such "incarnation" is the physical body of animal-men and not the "mineral", "vegetable" or "animal" kingdom. The entry of these Divine seeds of "Living Energy" and "Divine intellect" or "mind" into each animal form made possible for those creatures their transition across the gap between the animal kingdom and the human kingdom which is often referred to as the "missing link" between animal and mankind. No matter how hard scientists look or deep anthropologist may excavate the link between the "animal" kingdom and "thinking man" will never be found on Earth because is was fashioned by evolutionary process in another realm than here of Earth. It is not overstated to say that, together with Augustine of Hippo and Aristotle of Stagira, that Plutarch of Chaeronea is the most influential ancient philosopher. As Plutarch tells us, only one fourth of man, his physical body, is derived directly from the earth; the other three parts are brought here from other realms in the Cosmos and linked to his material frame. That this may not remain an unsolvable enigma to modern skepticism about such things, it may be said that each of these principles intermixed in man's constitution was the product of an evolution on a different globe in the Universe. We already have mentioned that ancient Egypt's great god Ra, the Logos of the Book of John, chapter 1, was regarded by them (Amen-Ra) as the unseen although immediate over-all deity of our local Universe (that is, of the Milky Way) in its entireity, the latter existing within His unfolding, omnipresent aura. Our own Sun was thus thought of as but a very partial expression of Ra's being, even the solar system as a whole representing merely a small part of God's objective form. Consequently, our planet Earth has to be viewed here (from the Egyptian point of view) in the context of a holographic microcosm of Ra's (God's) macrocosm, fulfilling a partial role in the live of this vast organic life cycle, and being therefore also directly subject to the effects felt within it of His feelings, emotions, and mental and Spiritual states. Mankind was understood to be the progeny of Ra and the product of His Divine Thought (Word) and in this stage of "being" presently populated the Earth. Said simply the ancients understood God as the "Cosmos" and that everything in it, both visible and invisible, was part of the being of Amen-Ra, or as we call Him today "God". With that as a background and short review of previous teaching it can now be said that these other "globes" that produced the "building blocks" for later humanity were themselves but cells or organs in a larger composite living Stellar Being, and the possibility of their sustaining vital relations or co-operative linkage in a common creative work is far from an unnatural presupposition. Astrophysicists and scientists today believe that over the eons often comets and meteors have seeded many worlds and planets with "life forms" and that there is cross-fertilization from meteors enclosing enclosing bacteria or other minerals necessary for progression of "life" into more developed manifestations. Many scientists today feel it is probable that organic chemicals have fallen to earth to help form the basis of life, and that they could have done so on any planet with suitable conditions throughout the cosmos (cf. Joe Alper, "It Came from Outer Space," Astronomy, November 2002, pp. 36-41). Take note that of the dramatic announcement in August 1996 of possible signs of microbial life preserved in the heart of meteorite ALH84001 found in the Allan Hills of Antarctica. About 15 million years ago a major asteroid impact on Mars blasted ALH84001 into space, whence it eventually fell onto an ice field in Antarctica 13,000 years ago, to be found by scientists in 1984. In 1996 NASA scientists and others identified organic molecules and strange wormlike shapes deep inside this meteorite that appeared to have been made by primitive microorganisms, perhaps giving hard evidence of extraterrestrial life, however primitive (cf. "Signs of Past Life on Mars?" American Association for the Advancement of Science News Release, August 11, 1996; and Leon Jaroff, "Life on Mars," Time, August 19, 1996, pp. 76-83). In August 2002 scientists at NASA's Johnson Space Center gave credence to this discovery by reporting that some 25% of the magnetic crystals in ALH84001 have passed the set of criteria that only biological magnetic crystals have so far met. It is interesting to note the theosophical idea that comets represent an early phase in the evolution of planets and stars. Rushing from their birthplaces in the interstellar "mother-substance," they follow their pilgrimage within the galaxy to their home system and begin the process of building new arenas of life for the billions of lesser creatures like us who live on them or depend upon their life-giving energies. Never forget that such a "design" was easily begun by the "Thoughts" of this "Ultimate Intelligent Energy" of this whole Universe whom we call "Amen-Ra" or "God" and from Whom "Emanated" all expressions of "life" which is "God Himself".

We next turn to Greek Platonism to a famous statement upon the Soul's incarnation into the human body. From Olympiodorus' Commentary on the Phaedo of Plato we find:

"It is necessary, first of all, for the Soul to place a likeness of herself in the body. This is to enSoul the body. Secondly, it is necessary for her to sympathize with the image, as being of like idea. For every eternal form or substance is wrought into an identity with its interior substance, through an integrated tendency thereto."

The "body" and "Soul" are married together in this one manifestation we call humanity.

We next look to a point taken from the Chaldean Oracles:

"For the Father of Gods (PLURAL) and men placed our intellect in Soul, but Soul he deposited in sluggish body."

He we have before us the interplay between "life" and "nature" merge in order that "Divine Consciousness" can come and incarnate into physical manifestation by "descending this Ladder from Heaven" (Jacob's Ladder).

From Proclus we turn to Thomas Taylor's as he recounts this same idea for us:

"In order likewise that this may become manifest and also the arrangement, let us survey from on high the descent, as Plato says, and defluxion (a falling down) of the wings of the Soul. From the beginning, therefore, and at first the Soul, departing from this divine union, descended into intellect, and no longer possessed real being unitedly and in one, but apprehended and surveyed them by simple projections and, as it were, contacts of its intellect. In the next place, departing from intellect, and descending into reason and dianoia (the human capacity for comprehending the nature of reality), it no longer apprehended real being by simple intuitions, but syllogistically (reasoning from the general to the specific) and transitively, proceeding from one thing to another, from propositions to conclusions. Afterwards, abandoning true reasoning and the dissolving peculiarity [analysis], it descended into generation, and became filled with much irrationality and perturbation (an unhappy and worried mental state....also called "DISORDER"). It is necessary, therefore, that it should recur (return) to its proper principles and again return to the place from whence it came (Heaven)"

Answer for yourself: What did we just read? We read of Plato's analysis of the "death" of "the Soul" as it incarnates into "matter" and in doing so descends into the lowest and most darkened activity of a spiritual intelligence imaginable. Before us Plato outlines the "descending degeneration" of the Soul in its incarnation into "human flesh"; from higher levels to lower levels of "Emanation". We trace the descent of the Soul from a "piercing light into murky darkness as it descends into body: first from true identity with the Absolute reality and direct inclusion of consciousness in it; then the plunge downward into that form of intellect which apprehends by immediate intuition; again the dip into the more sluggish processes of logical reasoning, in which, the inner relations of things being lost, the mind must establish them slowly by syllogistic process; and finally the dropping altogether from rational procedure into following the lead of sheer sense and impulse of the lower nature" (Alvin Kuhn, Lost Light: An Interpretation of Ancient Scriptures, p. 136).

No wonder the Gnostic Paul correctly says:

1 Cor 13:12 12 For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. (KJV)

As you can see there are "graduations" and "steps" in this "Descent of the Soul into humanity". From another Platonist names Ficinus we share:

"So that all things are full of divine natures; terrestrial natures receiving the plenitude of such as are celestial, but celestial of supercelestial essences; while every order of things proceeds gradually, in a beautiful descent, from the highest to the lowest. For whatever particulars are collected into one above the order of things, are afterwards dilated in descending, various Souls being distributed under their various ruling divinities" (quoted by the editor in Iamblichus' The Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians, p. 345).

I have always been fascinated by Plato's Timaeus. In the Timaeus Plato presents an elaborately wrought account of the formation of the universe. Plato is deeply impressed with the order and beauty he observes in the universe, and his project in the dialogue is to explain that order and beauty. The universe, he proposes, is the product of rational, purposive, and beneficent agency. It is the handiwork of a divine Craftsman ("Demiurge," the Demiurge refers in some belief systems to a deity responsible for the creation of the physical universe and the physical aspect of humanity), who, imitating an unchanging and eternal model or "Pattern", imposes mathematical order on a preexistent chaos to generate the ordered universe (Cosmos). The governing explanatory principle of the account of this Creation is one of design and purpose in the ordering of natural phenomena: the universe as a whole as well as its various parts are so arranged as to produce a vast array of good effects. It strikes Plato strongly that this arrangement is not fortuitous, but this Universe is the outcome of the deliberate intent of Intellect (nous..the Cosmic Mind or Cosmic Soul responsible for the rational order of the cosmos...in reality "Thought"), anthropomorphically represented by the figure of the Craftsman who plans and constructs a world that is as excellent as its nature permits it to be. From Plato's Timaeus, chapter xliv, we share:

"The Deity (Demiurgus) himself formed the divine; and then delivered over to his celestial offspring (the subordinate or generated gods..."neteru", "Living Energies"), the task of creating the mortal.

These subordinate deities (the Elohim), copying the example of their parent, and receiving from his hands the immortal principles of the human Soul, fashioned after this the mortal body, which was consigned to the Soul as a vehicle (the body is the vehicle of our Soul), and in which they placed also another kind of Soul, which is mortal and is the seat of violent and fatal passions."

Answer for yourself: What is this "other kind of Soul"? It is the lower Soul, or the Soul of the animal, not the god-Soul of the man. It is this lower Soul, called often the "elemental" which is the seat of the animal instincts. In this "body" this "god-Soul" has come to educate and sanctify this "lower Soul" and this war, this battle between them is fought in the same same body in which these two natures have come to dwell. When Plato describes it as "the seat of violent and fatal passions," he is definitely identifying our mortal tenement with the body of an animal.

Further corroboration of Plato's idea is found when consulting the Zoroastrian Oracles:

"The wild beasts of the earth shall inhabit thy vessel."* (Article by Thomas Taylor in Classical Journal, Vol. 16, p. 338).

Edward Carpenter says that "Brahma, . . . Indra, Soma, Hari and other gods, became incarnate in animals" (Edward Carpenter, Pagan and Christian Creeds, p. 132).

Taylor in Primitive Culture, I, p. 469, states: "The sense of an absolute psychical distinction between man and beast, so prevalent in the civilized world, is hardly to be found among lower races".

Naturally so, because the gap between man and animal there is less wide than it now is in cultured races. The animal did not at one jump land into full manhood. He was given the as yet ungerminated seed of divinity to nurse within the depths of his own nature. Only a tiny segment of the god's life was in conscious manifestation in and through the lower mentality of the beast at the start. The god could put little of his full power and capacity into expression through the imperfect brain of the animal. For a long time, or until the angel's presence in the brute body could refine the latter's impulses and proclivities and increase brain expansion, the deity could only lurk in the background of consciousness, becoming what we now so ignorantly term "the subconscious mind." There was obviously little difference between the first humans and the nearest animals. The difference did not assume marked proportions until ages had rolled by and the slow march of development had enabled the god to project more and more of his innate endowment into the sluggish nature of the beast he was tutoring. We have here, systematically propounded for the first time, the basic criterion for evaluating the progress of human culture. Culture is essentially nothing but the gradual modification of crude animal impulses into the refined higher manifestation of the higher self. Science, until this generation, has not known the cosmic or evolutionary underpinnings of this bond. These lay hidden under the rejected esotericism of ancient Egyptian, Platonic, Mystery Religions, and other cabalistic teachings.

Let us look at a problematic passage in the Hebrew Scriptures. In our Bibles the Old Testament often sets forth the implications of the incarnation in places where we might least expect it. Take for example the Book of Daniel. In ancient religious symbolism often the "king" was a "figure for God". Understanding this then we find that Daniel tells "the king" Nebuchadnezzer that he will be taken away from human beings to dwell with the wild animals; and in so doing he concentrates literally volumes of ancient Egyptian teachings as well as Platonic philosophy in one example of "a king" which is really dealing with the concealment of the "Deific Mind" in the "Descent of the Soul". This most important event of "Soulish incarnation" is mentioned three times in the first five chapters by Daniel stating" that "you shall be given the mind of an animal"! An animal's mind was given unto King Nebuchadnezzer and his dwelling was "with the wild beasts." Also: "He ate grass like cattle, and his nails grew like the claws of a bird." When we stop and objectively think of these passages it reveals to us the non-historicity of this Bible narrative, since these things did not happen to the historical King, Nebuchadnezzar! The climax of the whole narrative is seen in the end, for finally, "When the time was over, I, Nebuchadnezzar, lifted up my eyes unto heaven; my reason returned unto me, and I blessed the Lord, praising him and honoring him forever." The period of the constraint in animal habitat is given as "seven years."

Answer for yourself: Do you recall that we mentioned earlier that that the ancients taught that each cycle of incarnate life was completed in seven ages? Sadly again we fall into the same trap of taking "Spiritual Allegory" for supposed "literal-historical" narrative instead of a symbolic representation of the very god in man and mankind.

Let our attention now turn to ancient Egypt where we look at their teachings on the incarnation of "the Soul" into the animal kingdom in one of the prayers addressed to Osiris:

"Hail, Osiris Khenti-Amentiu (Lord of Amenta....remember Amenta was earlier described as the realm of the "dead" pictured in the "Soul's incarnation into 'matter'")! Thou art the Lord of millions of years, the lifter-up of wild animals, the Lord of cattle; . . ."

It is here in "Amenta" that we find the region in which the Osiris-Soul contacts the material body, and realizing this then the verse is staggering in its towering meaning in this connection. Massey writes in The Natural Genesis (Vol. I, p. 71): "A very comprehensive designation for the divinities of all kinds, says Gill (Myths and Songs, p. 34), is the Mangaian 'te anau tuarangi,' the heavenly family. This 'celestial race includes rats, lizards, beetles, sharks and several kinds of birds. The supposition was that the heavenly family had taken up their abode in these birds and fishes.'" "Plutarch refers to the idea 'that the Gods, these "Living Energies", being afraid of Typhon; did, as it were,hide themselves in the bodies of ibises, dogs and hawks,' and repudiated it as 'foolery beyond belief.' This, however, is a matter of interpretation. We know that such representations were part of the drama of the Mysteries. Many descriptions might be quoted to show that in their religious ceremonies, the actors performed their masquerade in the guise of animals."

Answer for yourself: Could this be the origin of Hallowe'en which is totally lost today?

We have here a startling revelation concerning the lost meaning of most of the weird ritualisms that are yet carried out in our celebration of Hallowe'en every year. The "Spiritual" importance and mesmerizing significance of this remnant of ancient Spiritual symbolism is not dreamed of today. The masks worn by the ancients in their portrayal of the "Descent of the Soul" into "matter", or in this case the animal kingdom, were originally those of animal faces or hides.

Answer for yourself: And when did this occur? This Hallowe'en festival comes at the time of the September Equinox (with a forty-days' interval), when the Sun, as the eternal symbol of the divine Soul, was "Descending" across the line which marked the boundary between disembodied Spirit and Soul embodied. The original "Hallowe'en" festival dramatized the entry of the god, this "Living Celestial Energy" into the animal body and today its focus is upon "fear of monsters" and potential violence to one or his property if not "treated".

The word itself, "Halloween," actually has its origins in the Catholic Church. Of course that should not surprise us. It comes from a contracted corruption of All Hallows Eve. November 1, "All Hollows Day" (or "All Saints Day"), is a Catholic day of observance in honor of saints. But, in the 5th century BC, in Celtic Ireland, summer officially ended on October 31. The holiday was called Samhain (sow-en), the Celtic New year. One story says that, on that day, the disembodied spirits of all those who had died throughout the preceding year would come back in search of living bodies to possess for the next year. It was believed to be their only hope for the afterlife. The Celts believed all laws of space and time were suspended during this time, allowing the spirit world to intermingle with the living. Naturally, the still-living did not want to be possessed. So on the night of October 31, villagers would extinguish the fires in their homes, to make them cold and undesirable. They would then dress up in all manner of ghoulish costumes and noisily paraded around the neighborhood, being as destructive as possible in order to frighten away spirits looking for bodies to possess. The Romans adopted the Celtic practices as their own. But in the first century AD, Samhain was assimilated into celebrations of some of the other Roman traditions that took place in October, such as their day to honor Pomona, the Roman goddess of fruit and trees. The symbol of Pomona is the apple, which might explain the origin of our modern tradition of bobbing for apples on Halloween. The thrust of the practices also changed over time to become more ritualized. As belief in spirit possession waned, the practice of dressing up like hobgoblins, ghosts, and witches took on a more ceremonial role. The custom of Halloween was brought to America in the 1840's by Irish immigrants fleeing their country's potato famine. At that time, the favorite pranks in New England included tipping over outhouses and unhinging fence gates. The custom of trick-or-treating is thought to have originated not with the Irish Celts, but with a ninth-century European custom called souling. On November 2, All Souls Day, early Christians would walk from village to village begging for "soul cakes," made out of square pieces of bread with currants. The more soul cakes the beggars would receive, the more prayers they would promise to say on behalf of the dead relatives of the donors. At the time, it was believed that the dead remained in limbo for a time after death, and that prayer, even by strangers, could expedite a soul's passage to Heaven.

The word "Mask" is in Latin the word "persona" as in "personality".

Answer for yourself: Why is this important?

Simply because it is these "Descending Living Energies", these gods, who literally put on the mask of the animal nature and "personality" in their incarnation into the animal kingdom; and all the weird antics, rowdiness, high jinks, horseplay and general pranking of the Hallowe'en revelry foreshadowed the deity's awkward animalish behavior when frolicking behind the outward mask of the animal's nature! Understand that all the time the deity "within" this animal body looked out the eyes of this grotesque mask which symbolized the animal nature since "living within" this animal body.

Gerald Massey relates to us that "Diodorus has it that the gods were at one time hard pressed by the giants, and compelled to conceal themselves for a while under the form of animals, which in consequence became sacred" (Gerald Massey, The Natural Genesis, I. p. 74).

Answer for yourself: Why is this important?

We find in such a statement the truth of anthropology which lies hidden under semi-fable. Massey shares the true explanation of "animal" symbolism that explains a huge amount of tribal customs that has perplexed the learned world and scholars for centuries. Now whole chapters of Frazers's Golden Bough and many other similar works, of which the authors have offered no rational interpretation and believed none possible, become intelligible at once, and such a cultured people as the ancient Egyptians are exonerated from the charge of crude animism and fetishism in "worshipping animals." Ancient Egypt "never" worshipped animals but animal symbolisms often were used to depict various attributes of the "Invisible Living God".

The incarnation was inarguably the most decisive event that had ever taken place in the evolutionary career of animal-man, giving him a status far above that of his former "animal only" condition. The incarnation served as the animal-man's mode of entry into the kingdom of Mind. The folk-lore of nation after nation carries this most important story of the "incarnation of God into 'matter'" in apparent childish fantasy and crudest imagery. These seemingly childest stories and legends are the reason why the train has jumped the track of proper interpretation and will continue to do so until we all come to grips with how the ancients used symbolism in their religious stories. We have but to use our imagination constructively to see how religious myth passed first into the realism of dramatic representation, then into legend sadly lacking the original spiritual meaning, and finally into a sadly distorted and barren folk-tale. Hallow'en is a perfect example. Gerald Massey once again states for us in Natural Genesis, I, p. 74, that "Herodotus was told that the Neurian wizards among the Scythians, settled about the Black Sea, became each of them a wolf for a few days once a year. The Texan tribe of the Tonkaways did the same, when, clothed in wolf-skins, they celebrated the resurrection of the wolf from the Hades. The head of a wolf was worn in the Mysteries of Isis; because the wolf (Anup) was her warder and guardian during the search for Osiris in the underworld. . . . The candidate as the Loveteau of French Masonry still enters as a young wolf."

A Chinese legend tells us this same story of the Soul's incarnation into the animal kingdom. It is related in this ancient Chinese legend that a maid conceived by air (the Holy Spirit!) and brought forth a child, which the father then threw into the pig-yard (animal body)! "It was the rightful heir, who lived to become the monarch." This should bring to mind of the reader the obvious resemblance to the Prodigal Son allegory and the conception story of Mary. The "story" is the same around the whole world because at one time there was only "one religion" that expressed this "same idea" from sea to shinning sea and can be found in existence as far back as recorded history can take us. It will all change at the hands of Rome in the 2nd century when these religious allegories are "literalized" and "reinterpreted" by Rome and the emerging Orthodox Christian Church.

The people inhabiting the western bank of the Nile River in southern Sudan, the Shilluks, have a tradition that "Nyakang (the Spirit of the divine or semi-divine Nyakang is incarnated in the reigning king, who is accordingly himself invested to some extent with the character of a divinity) then created men and women out of the animals he found in the country."

Now let us turn to Genesis. The promise to mankind in the Genesis account, that the human should be lord of the animal creation, ruler of the beasts of the field, has obvious reference to the headship of the mental man over the body itself, which would be assumed by the Soul or god upon his entry therein, under the terms of his covenant with Deity.

Answer for yourself: And why was the Soul to incarnate and what is his goal?

The Soul's great task in the incarnational assignment was to tame, subdue, discipline, bring into submission this animal nature to the Laws of God and in so doing finally exalt the lower personality, or animal nature in the animal-man, which was the depository of all animal experience in its Soul; our sub-conscious mind. Two extremes must always be avoided in the Christian life. The first is what has often been called "antinomianism" (the doctrine or belief that the Gospel frees Christians from required obedience to any law, whether scriptural, civil, or moral, and that salvation is attained solely through faith and the gift of divine grace) or "libertinism." Essentially, this error centers about the concept that the best law is no law at all. This is totally wrong. Orthodox Christianity has always been accused of advocating the heresy of "antinomianism" because of their conviction that men are saved totally apart from works and solely on the basis of faith. The ugly fact is that some Christians have actually advocated "antinomianism." They maintain that since we are no longer under Law, but under grace (cf. Romans 6:15), we go about our Christian lives "as the Spirit leads us," and that this leading is independent of any form of biblical absolute. This should not be when our actions contradict these Laws of God which were given to train our Souls. Without exception, this has led to careless and sinful living. At the opposite end of the spectrum is the error of legalism. Legalism seeks to produce godliness through the keeping of a certain set of regulations and prohibitions; many of which go beyond the Laws of God. Again this should not be.

Answer for yourself: What is the key? It is "balance" between Spirit and this "animal nature" where they both grow to live in harmony within this animal body where both are submitted to the Spirit of the Law until the demise of this animal body.

Moses uses the metaphor of circumcision to show that Israel's stiff-necked and stubborn nature would be changed. The obstinate attitude to the things of God would be removed. He is not talking about the outward sign of the covenant. That would be literal circumcision, and if that were the point it would be unnecessary since in the flesh all Jews were circumcised. Moses is instead referring to the heart and in Dt 10:16 Moses says that the "foreskin" of the heart will be trimmed clean. The spiritual impurity of the heart, our animal nature, its evil lusts and longings, all that impedes its service to Hashem, these will be circumcised and cut away. But this takes time of learning and training for this to occur. It takes a life time; maybe more. All haughtiness and stiffness of neck toward Him and His creatures will be cut away. There is an inward reality of surrender here that Moses is referring to. Jeremiah speaks of the same thing in Jer 4:4. The total inner life of the people of God will be changed. Whatever is stony or cold or incorrigible or dead will be cut away (Ezek 36:26). Moses says in Dt 30:6 that the Nation of Hashem will have a new birth, a "new awaking", for the Lord will circumcise their hearts and the hearts of their children. The fulfillment of this promise has been ongoing from the beginning of time actually. We look at Ezra and Nehemiah and see a remnant spiritually reborn as they return from the national death of the Israelite nation in the Babylonian Exile. We see another remnant at the time of the Roman Diaspora. These are our "examples".

In Romans chapter 7, we find the inner man (Ephesians 3:16), that is, the regenerate Spiritual man, which is called the "Mind," because the Holy Spirit has made the believer's mind agree with the words of the "good" Book (I Corinthians 2:13-16). Indeed, if our "mind" is renewed, we have the mind of "the Christ". Yet we also find in Romans chapter 7 the carnal man, our animal nature, in whom dwells nothing good, whose proclivity is to serve the desires of the old animal nature still present within. This is the sin and defiance of the Laws of God that dwells in the believer, which is real, as surely as the Holy Spirit's indwelling is real (compare Romans 8:11 and Romans 7:17). When we yield to "the indwelling voice of 'the Christ'", the true "I" can act: "I live, yet not I, but Christ who lives in me."

Paul says that very often the other "I," the carnal man, the believer's alter ego, or, if you will, another aspect of the believer's self, this "animal nature", this other "I," does just exactly what the true "I" doesn't want to do, and in fact the deed done or the thought entertained is the exact opposite of the good thing I know I should be doing, according to the Scriptures. It is not the true "I" who falls short in Romans chapter 7; it is the sinful "animal nature" which lives in my body with my true "Soul-Self" (me). I wish to do the thing that is right, but if I rely on my flesh, or even my old corrupt way of thinking, I fail. However, I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me, who teaches me, who leads me "within". Daily I must remember that I, as Soul, "died" when I "fell" into "incarnation" and was co-buried with "the Christ" when "Christ died" (Romans 6:2-3) and Hashem considers me legally dead with him, reckoning my faith as right standing before Him (Romans 5:1) and no longer reckoning my past transgressions against me. But here is the "rub"; faith without the "right works" is as James says "dead". And "dead faith" cannot save. Thus the importance for the Laws of God which instruct me and lead me and train me to handle not only these situations defined by these Laws but to apply these same "Godly principles" to situations unique to my day and time in which I live which Moses never addressed.

Answer for yourself: According to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the "keys" which we have established for its proper understanding, along with the world's Sacred Books and Bibles, have we not found out that the ancient understanding of this Descent of the Soul "into matter" was always considered like a "death" to this Soul? Have we not seen previously that in ancient accounts galore that as Souls we "died" when we incarnated and Descended "into the denseness and darkness of matter"? Yes we have; and not only in the ancient Egyptian Religion but a host of other world religions as well as Platonism and the Neo-Platonists that followed Platonism down through history. But more than this we are not left alone as orphans in "the 'matter' of humanity and in these animal bodies" for along with us as Souls we find "the Christ crucified" and put to death in this "same matter", and in this same manner as us (incarnated), in order to be our teacher to aid us in our Spiritual evolution in this plane of existence. It is our job to finish our incarnational task and this is impossible unless the "Christ be formed in us". So as a believer with my ongoing daily struggle with my "animal nature" (Set) and sin, I need to reckon myself "dead unto sin and this animal nature" and my members as dead and unusable as weapons of unrighteousness for expression of this "animal nature". The carnal man, the sinful "I", will no longer have mastery over me as Soul; for I will remind him of his deceitful heart (Jeremiah 17:9) and the yetzer hara (evil nature) delusions of his old carnal nature, remnants of which are still present within every believer.

Passages in the Book of Enoch are equally illuminating when it says that "man shall dwell with the wild beasts and shall subdue and overcome them". One of the earliest admissions of this Soulish incarnation in all religious literature is found in the Epistle of Ignatius to the Romans, an apocryphal New Testament Gospel, when the Soul, speaking as one of the characters in the drama, most beautifully poetizes his nature and mission in this remarkable utterance: "Suffer me to be food to the wild beasts, by whom I shall attain unto God. For I am the wheat of God, and I shall be ground between the teeth of the wild animals that I may be found the pure bread of Christ."

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the metaphor of "crushing of wheat into flour for bread" was a widely used symbol of the fragmentation of Deity (the Law of Dismemberment) as a result upon His descent into "matter" and material bodies? The statement here that the crushing was done by the teeth of the wild beasts is without a doubt a positive reference to the animal embodiment. And the added information enlightens us that lowly incarnation the Soul "into the animal kingdom" or "beasts of the field" prepared for the Soul's descent is purposeful in that the end result is that through friction with the "animal nature" the Soul shall ultimately vanquish the "animal nature" and bring it into submission to the will of God and the Laws of God thereby creating "peace" and "harmony" between "Spirit" and "matter". Here we see the importance of our bodily life that it conform to the "Divine Pattern" set before us "Above" and "Below".

Answer for yourself: And what is this "Divine Pattern" and "goal" set before each Soul which finds expression in humanity? Ephesians 4:13 says it correctly:

Till we all come in the unity of "the" faith (meaning one and only), and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: (KJV)

Yet we are warned though symbol after symbol in the Bible that we "shall be as sheep among wolves". Here before us as plain as day is a hint at the picture of the gentle Christ Spirit inhabiting the bodies of the wild beasts of earth! And let us not forget the scene of Daniel, the man of God, who is found to be in the "lion's den".

Answer for yourself: Could this be but an allegory suggesting that the Soul may safely reside in the animal's body or "den," untouched by the carnality of the "animal nature", if it holds true to its divine ideal, goal, and "Divine Pattern" for its incarnation? I believe it is beyond any doubt especially when the historicity of the Book of Daniel is studied out. The purpose for the Soul's incarnation into "matter" need not be aborted or destroyed.

The Egyptian religion incorporates one of these "Living Energies" by the name of Tehuty, Djehuty, or Thoth. He is the personification of the teacher of man, the messenger of the gods (and thus identified by the Greeks with Hermes) and the divine record-keeper and mediator. An Egyptian text addresses Thoth as "he who sendeth forth his heart to dwell in his body." Another presents us with a definite corroboration of the incarnation thesis. It speaks of Annu (in this case our earth) as "the land wherein Souls are joined unto their bodies even in thousands."

The Arunta people are a gentle people who inhabit Central Australia who are used to living off the harsh land that is their natural element. An Arunta legend speaks to the doctrine of spiritual beings and in so doing describes Souls endowed with reason, intelligence and volition who "reproduce themselves by incorporation in the life on earth in the course of becoming men or animal."

It was the fundamental Egyptian conception that the god, this descending or "fall" of this "Living Energy" to earth, became "fleshed." The word Karas, which was used to designate the mummy, is traced to the Greek "kreas", or flesh. The taking on of a carnal form was in its true connotation the mummification of the Osiris or Spirit. An Egyptian text asserts most positively the union of Soul and body. Chapter 163 of the Egyptian Book of the Dead says: "Let his Soul have its being within his body, and let his body have its being within his Soul." And chapter 89 in the Egyptian Book of the Dead is entitled "the chapter by which the Soul is united to the body."

Answer for yourself: What is this "body"? Surely it cannot mean the dead body, since obviously the Soul is separated from, not united with, the cadaver. Therefore it can only mean the conjunction of the incoming Soul with the body at birth or a little later.

All of these example might appear to the reader as "over-kill" but let me assure you that it is not. This presentation of so many examples in support of the Incarnation may appear superfluous but it has been done to show the wide scope of such a belief in the ancient World. Such presentation of these representative examples hopefully shows the reader that it was never intended to mean that the whole of the power of the Logos was crowded into the admittedly limited area of a single personality. It was never accepted or taught in this way by the earliest intelligent Fathers of the early Church, such as Clement and Origen; for they are on record as expressly repudiating such a dogmas later espoused by the later Latin Fathers of the Church. eventuality. They regarded a single personalized embodiment of deity as infinitely degrading to the Logos, verily a blasphemy.

If there is ever a hope of restoring the ancient cardinal "truths" to Christianity before their later tragic "reinterpretation" by Rome between the 2nd through the 5th century, then Christianity must admit it deviation from the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and "Gnosis" of the ancients who laid the foundation, from nation to nation, for the dissemination of God's truth to mankind; a truth from which Roman Christianity decided to stray. The hope of the salvation of Christianity in this age of enlightenment and this age of information lays in its repentance and acknowledgment that its own Bible's declaration of the advent, the incarnation, the birth, the temptation, the baptism, transfiguration, crucifixion and resurrection is not that of "another" but is the "Divine Pattern" for our own actual experience in this present life.

Let us look at what Gerald Massey, in his Ancient Egypt, The Light of the World, p. 231, has to say: "The doctrine of the incarnation had been evolved and established in the Osirian religion (the Egyptian Religion) at least four thousand years, and possibly ten thousand years, before it was purloined (stolen) and perverted in Christianity." Massey goes on to say that "The legend of the voluntary victim who in a passion of divinest pity became incarnate and was clothed in human form and feature for the salvation of the world, did not originate in a belief that God had manifested once for all as an historic personage. It has its roots in the remotest past. The same legend was repeated in many lands with a change of name, and at times with a change of sex, for the sufferer, but none of the "initiated" in the "esoteric wisdom" ever looked upon the Kamite [Egyptian] Iusa, or Gnostic Horus, Jesus, Tammuz, Krishna, Buddha, Witoba, or any other of the many saviors as historic in personality, for the simple reason that they had been more truly taught" (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, The Light of the World, p. 211). We were not!

Being instructed by the ancient Egyptians we find that later Greek philosophy viewed the descent and incarnation of the "gods" ("Living Energies") as entailing upon these exalted beings an almost total loss of their pristine glory and happiness, and a devastating reduction of their coefficient of consciousness. The Soul became "cribbed and confined" in the sorry limitations of the carnal body, as it lost a dimension of consciousness at each step on the downward descent and path. As a result of the Soul's incarnation into "matter" and fleshy bodies it became bound to the sensual and the carnal, after having been able to range at will throughout the limitless spaces of Universal Thought. Proclus, as reported by Iamblichus' Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians, p. 355, states that "the Soul by descending into the realms of generation, resembles a thing broken and relaxed. . . . Hence the Soul energizes partially and not according to the whole of itself . . . the intellectual part of it is fettered (hampered)."

Proclus, one of the last major Greek philosophers of Neo-Platonism, illuminates Plato's findings by telling us that "it is impossible while here, to lead a theoretic life in perfection, as is evident from the causes which are enumerated in the Phaedo, ...the occupations and molestations of the body, which do not suffer us to energize theoretically without impediment and disturbance" (Proclus, The Six Books of Proclus on the Theology of Plato, II, p.475).

And his fellow-Platonist, the learned Iamblichus, the chief representative of Syrian Neoplatonism, adds to the same idea: "For the human Soul is contained by one form and is on all sides darkened by body..." Iamblichus, Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians, p. 179). Empedocles, a Greek presocratic philosopher, states that the Soul descends from the realms of light to the region of gloom: "She flies from deity and heavenly light to serve mad Discord in the realms of night."

Most of have never read great thinkers like Plato, Proclus, Iamblichus, or ever studied in detail the great Egyptian Religion and ever compared their writings and dogmas to those in later Roman Orthodox Christianity and noticed "the changes". Fewer still have never chronicled the successive evolution of such religious ideas from their earliest origins with pre-Egyptian Sumer, ancient Egypt, down through successive history and ever notices that from nation to nation, from religion to religion, a basic thread of parallel ideas continued up until the 2nd century when the emerging Roman Church can be found to begin their "radical reinterpretation" of almost all these religious dogmas that existed before. Let me assure you that this is a study of not only unbelievable proportions which will require great amounts of time involving years but will also be the most eye-opening experience that possibly one can ever have. I never set out to do this actually, but over the years of continued study "it just happened" and all the pieces fell into place. A blind man could see the tragic "replacement religion" of Rome for what it really is; a counterfeit of the real Divine Revelation given mankind since the beginning of time.

Let us continue our study in the next article in this series.

THE ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND THE INCARNATION #6

I assume most readers have little or no understanding of the ancient "Mysteries" which Rome persecuted out of existence or drove underground at best through their ruthless persecution of "Gnosis" during the early centuries and even during the "Dark Ages". It might surprise you to know these "Mystery Religions" that were challenging to the birth of Roman Christianity we find the highest ideas ever conceived or taught concerning "the Soul". These so "hated" Mystery Religions were simple; they symbolized the preexistent condition of the Spirit and Soul, and the lapse of the Soul into earth-life or "matter" which was called "Hades", "the Underworld", "the grave", "Sheol", "Amenta", etc., the miseries of that life in the bondage of human flesh, the purification of the Soul while in this Earthly incarnation, and its restoration to divine bliss, or reunion with Spirit upon return to "the Father". For the life of me I have never understood why Rome would have a problem with this teaching and their Mystery Dramas and Plays, where the story of the Soul was acted out, other than the fact that the "savor" in the Mysteries is the "Christ within" the bosom of humanity which helps elevate the Soul over the threatening "animal nature" in humanity, and not the "literal-historical" Christ of Rome's later devise.

Let us look at Plato for a second. Basing all his doctrines upon the presence of the Supreme Mind, Plato taught that the "Nous", or spirit, or rational soul of man, being "generated by the Divine Father," possessed a nature kindred, or even homogeneous, with the Divinity, and was capable of beholding the Eternal realities of the "Deific Mind". This aptness of contemplating true reality in a direct and immediate manner belongs to God alone; the aspiration for this Divine knowledge constitutes what is really meant by the word "philosophy". Philosophy is actually "the love of wisdom".

Prov 2:2-9 2 So that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; 3 Yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; 4 If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; 5 Then shalt thou understand the fear of the LORD, and find the knowledge of God. 6 For the LORD giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding. 7 He layeth up sound wisdom for the righteous: he is a buckler to them that walk uprightly. 8 He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints. 9 Then shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path. (KJV)

Plato teaches us that the love of truth is inherently the love of good; and so prevailing over every desire of the soul, purifies it and thereby assimilates the Soul to the Divine, thus governing every act of the individual, it raises man to a participation and communion with Divinity, and restores him to the "likeness of God". "This raising of man to God," says Plato in the Theaetetus, "consists in becoming like God, and this assimilation is the becoming just and holy with wisdom."

The basis of this assimilation is always asserted by Plato to be the preexistence of the Spirit or "Nous". In the allegory of the chariot and winged steeds, given in the Phaedrus, Plato represents the Soulish or "psychical" nature as composite and two-fold; the "thumos", or sensual part, formed from the substances of the world of phenomena (senses); and the "thumoeides", the essence of which is linked to the Eternal world. The present earth-life is a fall and punishment. The soul dwells in "the grave which we call the body," and in its incorporate state, and previous to the discipline of education, the "noetic" or Spiritual element is "asleep." Life is thus a dream, rather than a reality. Like the captives in the subterranean cave, described in Plato's The Republic, the back is turned to the light, we as "incarnated Souls" perceive only the shadows of objects, and think them the actual realities. But these shadows, if we have not given ourselves up absolutely to the sensuous nature, arouse in us the reminiscence of that higher world that we once inhabited. "The interior spirit has some dim and shadowy recollection of its former Heavenly state of bliss, and subsequently some instinctive yearnings, from a preceding time, for its return." It is the province of the discipline of philosophy, the love of wisdom and truth, to free the Soul from its bondage of sensual nature (the animal nature), and raise it into the celestial realm once again of pure thought, to the vision of Eternal truth, goodness, and beauty. "The soul," says Plato, in the Theaetetus, "cannot come into the form of a man if it has never seen the truth". Plato speaks of those things which our Soul formerly saw when journeying with Deity, despising the things which we now say are, and looking up to that which REALLY is. Wherefore the "Nous", or Spirit, of the philosopher (or student of the higher truth) alone is furnished with wings; because he, to the best of his ability, keeps these things in mind, of which the contemplation renders even Deity itself divine. By making the right use of these things remembered from the former life, by constantly perfecting himself in the perfect mysteries, a man becomes truly perfect -- an initiate into the diviner wisdom."

We thus see Plato describe the search for and ultimate attainment of "Truth"; the Ultimate Reality by the Soul. But this is not easy to attain.

Answer for yourself: Why not?

In the Phaedrus Plato gives us a wonderful allegory of the Chariot and the Winged Steeds. This is intended to portray the Soul as being dragged down by the lower elements in man's nature and subjected to a slavery to the denseness of "matter" because of the Soul's embodiment in the "flesh of mankind". The descent of the Soul, or gods, as well as men, are allegorically depicted under the figure of two winged steeds and a charioteer. There is no difficulty in seeing that the charioteer represents the reason, or that the black horse is the symbol of the sensual or lustful element of human nature. The white horse also represents rational impulse of the Soul. It is important to note that the Soul has had a previous existence, in which following in the train of some god, from whom she derived her character, she beheld partially and imperfectly the vision of absolute truth. All her after existence, passed in many forms of men and animals, is spent in regaining this. The stages of the conflict are many and various; and she is sorely let and hindered by the animal desires of the inferior or lustful steed. Again and again she beholds the flashing beauty of the beloved. But before that vision can be finally enjoyed the animal desires must be subjected. The moral or Spiritual element in man is represented by the immortal steed which always sides with the reason. Both are dragged out of their course by the furious impulses of desire. Thus we have the eternal battle of the "Spirit/Soul" and the "Flesh". Out of such a condition Plato delineates numerous evils that produce chaos to the mind and befuddle the reason. The rational element, formerly in full function, now falls "asleep". Life is thereupon more generally swayed by the inclinations of the sensual part of mankind. Man becomes the slave of his physical sense. This state of mental dimness is the true "subterranean cave" of the Platonic myth, in which we see only shadows, mistaking them for reality.

Now you can better understand the Gnostic Paul's admonition:

Eph 5:14-15 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, (KJV)

Thomas Taylor (1758 - 1835), known as the English Platonist, was the first to translate into English the complete works of Plato and Aristotle. He also translated many of the later Platonists and also some of the remaining fragments of the earliest Greek writings, such as the Orphics, and the Pythagoreans. These translations, together with his original works, represent the most comprehensive survey of the philosophical thought of European antiquity. Taylor states: "Such indeed is the wretched situation of the Soul when profoundly merged in a corporeal nature. She not only becomes captive and fettered (hampered), but loses all her original splendor; she is defiled with the impurity of matter; and the sharpness of her rational sight is blunted and dimmed through the thick darkness of a material night" (Thomas Taylor, Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. 103).

These ideas and many quotes only remind us of what the Gnostic Paul says in the New Testament. Notice I said "the Gnostic Paul" for there are two entirely different "Pauline dogmas" in the New Testament that are completely opposite. One is the authentic Paul comprising only 7 authentic Epistles and the other is the "worked over" Romanized Paul given to us by the Church which makes up the bulk of the Roman New Testament. The Gnostic Paul distills for us in the New Testament the previous Greek philosophy found hidden in these authentic 7 Epistles. Make no mistake about it. It was the descent the Soul "to the ruinous bonds of the body" that brought the Spirit of man under the dominion of the "animal nature" from which he is to free himself. This bondage of the Soul in "matter" is what is called the "the bondage in Egypt" which we find mentioned in the Old Testament. I hope you remember that "Egypt" was the symbol for the natural body of mankind as we showed you earlier. Only by the Soul's incarceration in a vessel in which this descended Soul is subjected to laws of physics and science was the Soul subjected to the rule of "matter". "The dark night of the Soul," was, in the ancient mind, just the condition of the Soul's embodiment in physical forms, the incarnation of the godlike intellect and Divine Soul in the darksome conditions of animal bodies. The word "darkness" was the only fit symbol to give to the mind any suggestive realization of the conditions of "Living Intellectual Energy" when reduced in Divine potential under the resistance of matter.

So severely hampered were the Soul's powers in this physical embodiment that it was dubbed as if the incarnation was an incarceration or imprisonment by a host of writers. The Soul was a captive, caught in a flesh of an animal prison, the doors of which were clamped fast upon it until the demise of the body. Its jailer was this body of "matter" with its sensuous nature. The Soul has a job to do before its return to the Divine Realm. The Soul must transform this "animal nature" into the likeness of her own if ever to gain a release from this "cycle of darkness" (reincarnation again to complete the unfinished job given the Soul). As Souls we can not escape our obligation to the animal who is lending us his body for our own Spiritual advancement. As Souls which have descended we have come to metamorphize these animal bodies, and such an endeavor demands the exertion of our greatest effort and commitment while in these "bodies of death".

Rom 7:23-25 23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin. (KJV)

As mentioned previously the Greeks believed "that human Souls were confined in the body as in a prison, a condition which they entitled "generation" from which Dionysus ("the Christ") could and would liberate them." The Soul's sufferings in this fleshly prison, its progress through the ascending stages of being and "becoming", its cleansing or purification, and its eventual enlightenment comprised the various themes of the Mystery Religions and Orphic writers which the Roman Church persecuted and exterminated almost out of existence. All that was left for Rome to do was to "reinterpret" everything and burn the world's libraries to cover up this "replacement religion" of their making along with the slaughter of the Gnostics and their works which told the true story of the Soul and its "incarnational" purpose.

let us look at more examples to make sure we get this important religious dogma certain in our understanding beyond any doubt. Proclus declares that Plato in the Phaedo maintains that "men are placed in the body as in a prison, secured by a guard, and testifies, according to the mystic ceremonies, the different allotments of purified and unpurified Souls in Hades." (Thomas Taylor, Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. vxiii).

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that the "incarnation" of the Soul into humanity is called "Hades" (the KJV calls this word "Hell"? Does this not make you want to think over, or study out, the whole dogma of "Hell" which we have heard preached in Church our whole lives?

Plato continues to speak of the Soul's bondage in these bodies of "matter" by stating: ". . . liberated from this surrounding vestment, which we denominate body, and to which we are now bound like an oyster in its shell." It is Plato who goes on to state: We, as Souls, are "captives chained to sense (the sensual)."

The Aeneid is a Latin epic written by Virgil in the 1st century BC (between 29 and 19 BC) that tells the legendary story of Aeneas, a Trojan who traveled to Italy where he became the ancestor of the Romans. Many scholars today tell us that Virgil's Aeneid was above all an allegory of the soul. That being the case it sadly has not occurred to many modern classical students that the many descriptions scattered through the Aeneid of Virgil, of shadowy groves, vales and caves, are aleatoric of the gloomy conditions that the Soul encounters in her residence in bodies. The woods whose shadows terrify the hero (the Soul) are the gloomy manifestations of physical incarceration.

Answer for yourself: What is so important to learn right now?

Physical imagery must be translated over into Spiritual or Soulish/Psychic realities if we ever hope of arriving at "truth" when reading the ancient works simply because of the fact that the ancients were "not literalists" but were "allegorists" deluxe. To apply a "literal" interpretation to an "allegory" guarantees that you never obtain the truth from such a reading. Let me give you an example for the Aeneid. Speaking of the removal of the junior deities from Heaven to Earth, the poet writes in the Aeneid: "Nor do they, thus enclosed in darkness and the gloomy prison, behold the heavenly air". Surely this is allegorical and not literal.

Now we look to ancient Egypt. One of the Egyptian texts says that it is impossible for the shade, another name for "the Soul" to leave the body on Earth until the latter, the body, is raised up. After the perfecting work is finished, it is shown in chapter 91 of the Egyptian Book of the Dead, that the Soul "does not [any longer] suffer imprisonment at any door in Amenta," this lower earth, "either in coming in or going out."

Answer for yourself: And what is Amenta once again? It is but another word of many used by the ancients for the fleshly death to which the incarnated Soul has "fallen". Amenta was also the name of the underworld which we have also previously shown the reader referred to "the body".

King David echoes the Egyptian idea when in the cave (Ps. 142) he cries to the Lord: "Bring my Soul out of prison;" by that statement meaning the fleshy body.

Answer for yourself: Was Thuthomse III, the Biblical King David, in a literal prison or was he crying out to God for his Soul's release from the pain and punishment that this fleshy body and his life experiences had subjected him?

All of these examples stress the same point and central idea of all ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The Soul is imprisoned in a "body of death"; a body that is the prison for the Soul that must be "raised up" to God if there is ever hope of the Soul's departure from this Earth-bound mission and the containing prison doors opened for the Soul's release from this "Hades" on Earth, this "Hell" on Earth.

But I can remember my astonishment when finding that in the Egyptian Religion Horus, exactly as the Christian Jesus, comes to "the spirits in prison" to set them free from bondage and darkness and lead them to the land of light. The Manes, or Soul in this body of death, cries to the keepers: "Imprison not my Soul, keep not in custody my shade (the shade is the abode of the dead; the underworld; the "body of death" that traps the Soul). Let the path be open to my Soul. Let it not be made captive by those who imprison the shades of the dead. O keep not captive my Soul, O keep not ward over my shadow" (The Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 92).

I Peter 3:19....a highly questioned book only later included in the New Testament by the way:

By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Are we to believe that Horus literally descend into the bowels of the Earth to some literal prison to preach to some "Spirits in prison"?

A significant misconception that has prevailed through the centuries within Christendom has been the idea that Jesus went to hell after His crucifixion. The creedal statements of historic Christianity are largely responsible for generating this notion. For example, the Apostles' Creed affirmed belief in Jesus on the following terms: "Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and buried; He descended into hell, the third day He rose again from the dead". The Athanasian Creed states: "He suffered death for our salvation. He descended into hell and rose again from the dead". Both "Church Fathers" and Reformers concurred with this viewpoint. John Calvin, in his voluminous Institutes of the Christian Religion, treated the subject at length (1599, II.16.8-12). Further impetus for confusion was generated by the English translations of the 16th and 17th centuries, due to translator confusion regarding the technical distinctions that exist between the pertinent Greek terms. Specifically, the Greek term hades generally was equated with gehenna; they are not the same but Christianity did not evidently know or care to do a better job of translation. This confusion culminated in the King James Version's rendering of hades as "hell" in all ten of its occurrences in the New Testament (Matthew 11:23; 16:18; Luke 10:15; 16:23; Acts 2:27,31; Revelation 1:18; 6:8; 20:13,14). Rendering hades as "hell" in Acts 2:27, 31 leaves the reader with the impression that when Jesus exited His physical body on the cross, He went to hell.

Answer for yourself: Can you begin to grasp the horrible effects this deadly religious dogma has had on the whole of mankind by such a gross loss of "keys" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom whereby the Soul's incarnation into "fleshy bodies" on a Heavenly Errand has become an Eternal punishing fire of God's wrath?

Can you begin to see how the "descending Christ, or Deific Mind of God" into "matter" to aid an equally descending Soul ("Living Energy") into "matter" which has been sent into "incarnation" to elevate the animal nature to God, has been so miserably and tragically misunderstood that it is later interpreted as being a sole "literal-historical" being to which the whole of the salvation of mankind is attached by the Holy Roman Church?

Answer for yourself: Could this horrible metamorphosis of the beautiful ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome along with its purposeful forgery of religious texts, its purposeful misquotation of the Hebrew texts, is purposeful mistranslation of the Hebrew Bible, and its pure "Scriptural Invention" been on purpose to gather all the fearful and apprehensive of Roman Church dogma the Roman fold where they also "radically transformed" the "idea of the true Christ within" to a solitary individual and by doing so confined the "Christ" to but one person and thereby robbed humanity of its Soulish purpose of its own incarnation?

Answer for yourself: And what is this Soulish purpose of the Soul's incarnation? To allow the "developing Christ within" to help the Soul elevate the human-animal to holiness and win for itself the next stage of its Soulish evolution!

Answer for yourself: So what is the bottom line? The mutation of an "Earthly incarnation of the Soul into fleshly bodies" for a "Divine Purpose" was turned into a hot burning Hell with unquenchable fire on purpose by the Roman Church. Let us not forget that along with this goes the slaughter of millions of "heretics" who knew better or who would not submit to such a devious dogma from a loving God; a word (heretic) that only Rome could define.

Looking at Egypt once again we turn to Gerald Massey. Massey in his Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 479, states:

"Horus (the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ) is the Kamite prototype of the chosen one, called the servant by Isaiah, who came 'for a light to the Gentiles, to open blind eyes, to bring out prisoners from the dungeons, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house.'" (Isaiah 42:7) An allied designation of the "spirits in prison" is *"those who are in their cells."

Answer for yourself: Is it any wonder then that Horus, the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ comes to wake "those who sleep in their cells (their Earthly prisons, their fleshly bodies)?" Again the Manes, the Spirits/Souls of the incarnated dead) in the prison of Osiris cries: "Let not the Osiris enter into the dungeon of the captives." "Let not Osiris advance into the valley of darkness." Osiris says to the warders of the prisons: "May I not sit within your dungeons, may I not fall into your pits" (The Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 17).

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that Earthly incarnation of Souls is likened to "darkness, dungeons, and pits"?

Osiris elsewhere asks to be delivered from "this land of bondage." Set, the opposer of the Egyptian Christ, the personified evil one as the arch opponent of the "deliverer" and "savior" Horus, the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ, is called "the keeper of the prison-house for death," to which Horus comes as the lord of life and freedom. Horus, as "deliverer", and as the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ is said to come "to those who are in their prison cells," held captive by Set. An interesting sidelight is thrown on one aspect of the function of the Goddess Hathor, who was the "habitation of the hawk, or the birdcage of the Soul"! Here we must understand that Hathor was the goddess of material creation ("matter"), to which the body belonged, and the hawk represented the Soul.

Answer for yourself: Do you see that according to these religious allegories that the Soul is caged in the body, a prison, the birdcage for the Soul?

The latter is even called "the chamber of torture" in the title to Ch. 85 of The Egyptian Book of the Dead. In Ch. 164 it is promised that the Soul "shall not be shut in along with the Souls that are fettered" (hampered), and the prayer is uttered: "Let him escape from the evil chamber and let him not be imprisoned therein." The title of Ch. 91 of the The Egyptian Book of the Dead is: "The chapter of not letting the Soul of Nu . . . be captive in the underworld." In Ch. 130 there is a prayer: "Let not the Osiris-Nu fall headlong among those who would lead him captive."

Here again the Egyptian Religions uses many different symbols for the Soul's incarnation. The Soul's incarnation into "matter" is likened to "torture, being hampered, imprisonment, called the underworld, and like being captives.

In the Egypto-Gnostic text, the Pistis Sophia, we find these same twelve legions of angels "Living Energies" which we spoke of somewhat earlier. In the Pistis Sophia there were twelve dungeons of infernal torment, in which the twelve legions of angels or "Living Energies" were imprisoned. The Souls could only escape by pronouncing the name of the god who guarded each dungeon door.

Answer for yourself: What are we missing here?

To pronounce a god's name was to become equal to him in Spiritual nature.

Answer for yourself: Is it any wonder then when we find that the Egyptian historical records of the 18th Dynasty records no "evil taskmasters" beating the Hebrew children as recorded in the Bible that supposedly occurred in the days of Moses? That is because in the Biblical account of the Exodus that we find the children of Israel, who are figured as these twelve legions of exalted beings "chosen" for the specific work of incarnation, "were groaning under their bondage (Earthly incarnation), and the wail of their cries for help came up to God?" Before you think this is impossible I advise you that you do the necessary studies on how this Old Testament was really put together and how metaphor, simile, allegory, and other ancient literary techniques were used by its writers. Also included for such study is the true history of the Exodus, a truth that we share elsewhere on this website. Of course before you are expected to believe this or even possibly understand this then your own personal study of the Hebrew Pharaohs is necessary along with the historical record of Pharaoh Akhenaten (the Biblical Moses) and his Exodus from Egypt. Back on track, the land to which these "descending Souls" had been sent to work their redemptive errand in bondage to the flesh was "Egypt,' also called the "fleshpots" of Egypt and also a "slave pen." In chapter 16 of the Book of Leviticus Moses admonishes: "Remember, you were once a slave in Egypt" (symbolic for the fleshly body).

We are almost finished with this study. One short article to go.

Beside Plato's immortal cave allegory, there are many other uses of the cave as emblem of the dark chambers of the body. David's pleading in the cave to be delivered from his prison is paralleled by Osiris' crying for deliverance in the cavern of Set in Amenta. We mentioned these already. Thomas Taylor expressly says that the cavern was used to "signify union with the terrestrial body" in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. We find in the fables of the Hercules that our personified hero (the Soul, as always) tracks the Nemean lion (the animal nature) into a cave where its capture is effected. Let us not forget that the warfare between Spirit/Soul and "animal nature" occurs in the body and it is in this body that the Divine nature in man was to "capture" or embrace the animal Soul to lift it up to God. It is fitting that such "cave symbolism" be used for the fleshly body of "darkness".

Once again in The Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 28, the Soul affirms: "This whole heart of mine is laid upon the tablets of Tum, who guideth me to the caverns of Set" (evil nature of the animal nature), or through the dark passages of Amenta (the body of Earthly incarnation).

Answer for yourself: What are the "tablets of Tum"? The tablets of Tum are records of the Law, or Maat (the Divine Order/Harmony manifested by God's Law). The goddess Maat represents the ideals of law, order, and truth. The word, Maat translates "that which is straight." it implies anything that is true, ordered, or balanced. She was the female counterpart of Thoth. These Laws of God are kept by Thoth, the divine scribe, in the Hall of Judgment. Thus to come under the law (St. Paul's Law of Incubation) brings the deity to the caverns of Set, the physical body.

Answer for yourself: Have we heard of these "wings" before?

Ps 61:4 4 I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever: I will trust in the covert of thy wings. Selah. (KJV)

Ps 91:4 4 He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Why is this anthropomorphic representation of Divine truth, Divine Order, and Divine Harmony wearing a feather? We have to go to judgment seat of Osiris for this. In the underworld (in this Earthly incarnation), the heart (Soul) of the deceased is weighed by Anubis against Maat's feather. If the heart (the Soul) was heavy with wicked deeds, it would outweigh the feather, and the Soul would be fed to Ammit. But if the scales were balanced, indicating that the deceased was a just and honorable person in life, he would be welcomed by Osiris into the Blessed Land.

Answer for yourself: Who is Ammit? Ammit is the eater of the Dead, the Devourer. He is responsible for the death of the Souls of the wicked who finish not properly their incarnated mission. Ammit sits beneath the Scales of Justice before the throne of Osiris where she waits for the daily flow of Souls to come before Osiris for judgement. During the Judging of the Heart, if the deeds of the soul being judged are found to be more wicked than good, Anubis feeds the soul to Ammit.

Answer for yourself: Is this feeding of the Soul to Ammit but a symbolic representation of reincarnation and further Soulish incarnations?

In ancient Egypt, The Egyptian Book of the Dead mentions the travel of the Soul into a next world without coming back to Earth. The ancient Egyptians conceived man and cosmos to be dual: firstly, the High God or Divine Mind arose out of the Primeval Waters of Outer Space at the beginning of manifestation. Space, symbolized by the Primeval Waters, contains the seeds and possibilities of all living things in their dormant state. At the right moment for awakenment, all will take up forms in accordance with inherent qualities. Or to express it in another way: the Word uttered by the Divine Mind calls manifested life to begin once more. Secondly, the material aspect expressing what is in the Divine Mind must be in a process of ever-becoming. In other words, the cosmos consists of body and soul. Man emanated in the image of divinity is similarly dual and his evolutionary goal is a fully conscious return to the Divine Mind. Growth is effected through a succession of lives, a concept that is found in texts and implied in symbolism.

Herodotus, the Greek historian (5th century B.C.), wrote that the Egyptians were the first to teach that the human soul is immortal, and at the death of the body enters into some other living thing then coming to birth; and after passing through all creatures of land, sea, and air (which cycle it completes in three thousand years) it enters once more into a human body, at birth.

The theory of reincarnation is often ascribed to Pythagoras, since he spent some time in Egypt studying its philosophy and, according to Herodotus (bk. ii, § 123), "adopted this opinion as if it were his own." Reincarnation has been connected with the rites of Osiris, one of the Mysteries or cycles of initiation perpetuated in Egypt.

Herodotus writes of transmigration, i.e., that the Soul passes through various animals before being reborn in human form. This refers not to the human soul but to the molecules, atoms, and other components that clothe it. They gravitate to vehicles similar in qualities to their former host's, drawn magnetically to the new milieu by the imprint made by the human Soul, whether it be fine or gross. It is quite clear from the Egyptian Book of the Dead and other texts that the Soul itself after death undergoes experiences in the Duat, the realm and condition between Heaven and Earth, or as some say beneath the earth, supposedly traversed by the Sun from Sunset to sunrise. Understand that this Duat was imaged not only by being beneath the Earth but celestially as well.

The evolution of consciousness is symbolized by the Solar Barque moving through the Duat. In this context the "hours" of travel represent stages of development. This Spiritual Development is accomplished in sages of evolution of the Soul; from step to step in further Spiritual Awakening!

Of Horus it is written again that Horus comes to awaken the "prisoners in their cells, the sleepers in their caves."

This should make you think as you read:

Eph. 5:14 "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ (the indwelling Christ) shall give thee light."

Answer for yourself: Is Paul's "Jesus", as "the Christ", the same being represented by the "Horus of Egypt", the "Christ only within" the bosom of humanity? You bet it is. The authentic Paul never wrote of a historical or literal "Jesus Christ" simply because he never existed until Rome corrupts and grotesquely misinterprets on purpose the ancient Spiritual Wisdom whereby they can make themselves the only dispenser of God's grace to humanity.

Another direct employment of the cave emblem in Egyptian scripture is in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 182. Here we find that "Thoth says: 'I gave Ra to enter the mysterious cave in order that he may revive the heart of him whose heart is motionless.'" As Ra is always the Divinest Spirit, there is again a clear allusion to the god (the "Living Energy") descending into the cave of the body. In the Egyptian Bethany scene the "dead" Soul is called aloud nine times to "come forth" from "the mysterious cave." Gerald Massey traces the word "cave" to the Egyptian "Kep", which he says means a secret dwelling (the secret dwelling of the Soul is within the body of humanity). It is obvious that the mythologists of old did considered the body to be that mysterious hidden dwelling of the Soul, that shadowy cavern into which the descending "Living Energies" of Heaven were obliged to plunge for added physical experience so necessary for the Soul's intended Spiritual development through incarnation into bodies.

In the Biblical account of the rebellion of the sons of Korah, already mentioned in a previous article, it is said that they went down into the pit in death, but did not die but lived on like Adam, as did the Manes in the Egyptian Amenta as well. Please note the "parallelism" here. "Death" did not mean a "literal death" as we might expect but rather only an allegory of the descent of the Soul into "bodies of death" where the Soul lives "on" as did the "Manes" in the Egyptian Amenta (again symbolic for the body of Soulish incarnation). As the earth opened to swallow these rebels (ourselves...part of the 5 Legions of Asuras), the pit is equated with our Earthy home. In the Hebrew writings the pit is identical with the region known as Sheol, equivalent to the Greek Hades and the Egyptian Amenta (again we have seen that this is the fleshly body). It is the same story repeated over and over again in order than we don't miss it. As Christians we did according to the Roman plan!

Answer for yourself: Does this slightly bring to mind Jonah being being in the "belly" of the great fish for 3 day as both Horus and Jesus was in "Hell" for 3 days (again "Hades" and "Hell" being symbolic for the Earthly incarnation)? Is Jonah's great fish another "pit" or "cave" hiding the Soul?

Jonah, upon being saved from the sea-monster, exclaims: "Yet thou hast brought up my life from the pit, O Lord, my God."

In the Egyptian Book of Hades (10th division) there is a scene "of making fast the dragon in the pit," which is preparatory to the rising of Ra, or the birth of the Divine in and from the human (the Deific Mind by the Soul with the aid of the indwelling "Christ"). In Revelation (20:2, 3) the seer visioned an angel coming down out of heaven, having the keys of the abyss, or "pit", and a great chain in his hand, with which he bound the dragon, the devil or Satan, for a thousand years, and sealed him fast in the "pit".

Oh how much truth we have lost over these last two thousand years of the famine of the true Word of God. Let us regain truth by coming to the understanding that in the above verse in the Book of Revelation that these "evil spirits" (remember the Asuras?) that were cast down and bound for a thousand years is a reference to a long series of incarnations of these descending "Living Energies". These "evil spirits" were connected with the name Satan because of their rebellious and recalcitrant behavior under the hard decrees of enforced "incarnation" into the bodies of animals. This means that these "fiery pits" are none other than our very physical bodies.Again we find the same symbolism and hidden meaning behind what we were taught was "literal" when in fact it has always been "allegorical".

In the Egyptian Religion we find that "the Krst/Karest/Christ" Horus makes war on the powers of evil for what they have done to his father Osiris, and calls to the gods to strike them and "punish them in your pits." To them he says: "Your particular duties in Amenta are to keep the pits of fire in accordance with Ra's command, which I made known to you."

In E.A. Wallis Budge's account of the functions of the ba-Soul in Egyptian Religion, he states that in the Papyrus of Nebqet the "ba", or Soul, is seen, depicted as a human-headed hawk, flying down the funeral pit, bearing air and food to the mutilated body lying in the mummy-chamber. Here is additional confirmation that the "pit" designates the human body. Another Egyptian text, the Book of Am-Tuat (Division 20) describes the mutilation of the gods and their being cast down into pits of fire. When we read the Book of Revelation we read of horsemen, ten thousand times ten thousand, going forth to battle with those forms which had come up out of the smoke that ascended from the pit of the abyss, emitting fire. We find the same symbolism of "pit" and "fire" repeated over and over again, from ancient Egypt to the Book of Revelation, beginning to end.

Answer for yourself: What are we to make of this?

It is not too hard once you possess a few "keys" to interpreting correctly this same ancient Spiritual Wisdom we find from ancient Egypt all the way down to even our Bible. The symbolism is the same or should I say "should hold true" to the original interpretation. These symbols of "evil", "fire" and "pit" are to be understood as various forms of evil generated in the struggle between Set and Horus, Jesus and Satan, the gods and the animals whose natures are long in combat with each other.

Answer for yourself: Do you see this?

Gerald Massey links the Egyptian abyss, called "Tepht", with our "depth." He equates it also with with the Babylonian Tiamat, as well as the old Egyptian underworld monster, Typhon, the Dragon of the Deep. They are all various symbols of the same Divine Truth. As such they are all symbols for the original birthplace of creation, and in a more human application it meant the human body as the seat or birth-place of the Spiritual life and its evolutionary experiences required for its next step in Soulish evolution. For the body is composed of "matter", the infinite fathomless mother of all things. Typhon, who brought forth her brood of chaos in the abyss, later brings forth the young Sun-god, the divine immortal Soul. The figure in this connection is common around the world, we are told, in Akkad, China, Egypt and inner Africa the same story only through different symbols and names.

Answer for yourself: Is there a connection between "Tepht" to the Hebrew "Tophet", the "dark pit"? You better believe there is and they both refer to the human body.

There were said to be "seven sons of the Abyss," (Incarnational Records, Vol. II, p. 131), or the seven powers generated in nature, to be matched later by seven phases of growth in the human constitution--the universal seven in archaic literature.

The universal religious myth of the descent of the solar hero, ever typical of deity, into some dark abysmal region, emerging from it after ordeals of suffering, can have but one explanation: the incarnation of the hosts of light, these "Living Intelligent Energies", in the dense physical body.

Another earthly figure much used to type the dreary existence in the flesh was that of the "wilderness."

Answer for yourself: Where was the Christ's battle in the Gospels? It is in the wilderness, in the "human body".

Let us continue our study in the last article in this series.

THE ANCIENT SPIRITUAL WISDOM AND THE INCARNATION #7

We wrap up this study in this final article.

Unknown to most is the fact that the tents and tabernacles in which the Children of Israel (symbols of "incarnated Souls" as the children of God) lived in the wilderness are symbols of the fleshly body that men put on and off, again and again. In order to build this indestructible body we, as Souls, must make manifest in ourselves the works of God.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Israel going down into Egypt, then later going through the wilderness, and getting back into Canaan is a symbol of the Soul's incarnation into "matter", progressing spiritually during this Earthy incarnation, and finally its ascension following the demise of the body? Notice the types if you please. As Israel went down into Egypt, we find that "Egypt" is a symbol of physical bodily manifestation in which the Soul find itself "incarnated". Next we see that Israel went through the desert; again the "desert" or "wilderness" is symbol of the constant battle between Spirit/Soul and the flesh which ancient Egypt symbolized by the famous battle between Set and Horus (the Egyptian Christ); this famous battle being itself a symbol for the later struggle between "Energy" and "Matter" in the Mystery Religions and finally the Jesus and Satan allegory in the New Testament. The return to Canaan is symbolic of the ascension of the Soul from this bodily prison and its return to the Heavenly realm.

A variation of this "wilderness" motif is found with other "desert" symbolisms. We next look to the ancient Egyptian Religion where we find that the people in the Typhonian, or Sethian darkness of Amenta were furnished a guide "through this wilderness." Set and Typhon are again symbolic for the "the embodiment of evil." The great Greek religions later depicts this same Comic Struggle as the Battle between Zeus and Typhon; a battle in which Typhon was consumed in a raging inferno.

Answer for yourself: Is this raging inferno this body of darkness which often is describes as the "fires" of Hades and Hell? Yes it is. Notice that this "evil animalistic nature" is to be conquered in this fleshy body which once was a raging inferno; now the fires of battle between "Spirit" and "matter" are at a truce in the Halls of Maat.

We find shadows of this same religious myth in the Maya civilization in Guatemala. The Popul Vuh portrays the ancestors of the race as wanderers in a wilderness upon their way to their final homestead.

Furthermore there exists a Hawaiian legend that says that the Hawaiian progenitors of the Hawaiian peoples "wandered in a desert wilderness until at last they reached the promised land of Kane".

Answer for yourself: If you have ever been to Hawaii have you ever seen a desert? And is this "Kane" related etymologically to Canaan? Yes it is; Canaan being a symbol for the celestial abode; the eventual home of the ascended Soul following bodily incarnation.

Answer for yourself: How do we know that Canaan is symbolic of the celestial abode? Canaan is the land described in the Bible as flowing with milk and honey". Canaan is the land promised to God's children in Exodus 3:8.

No one disputes the fact that the Abrahamic covenant is the background for the New Testament Gospel (Gal. 3:6ff.). But this means that the martial language of the Abrahamic promise is brought into the New Testament also. This will only be a surprise to those who have forgotten the typological meaning of the conquest of Canaan. In the conquest God sent His people, symbolic of these descended "Living Energies" in "matter", to conquer the land of Canaan. Paul alludes to the symbolism of Canaan representing the physical world when he says that Abraham is the covenantal "heir of the world" (Rom. 4:13).

Numbers (14:33, 34) states: "Your children shall be wanderers in this wilderness even forty days, for every day a year." The same book supplies another highly elucidative text (14:31, 32) which says: "Your little ones will I bring in, but as for you, your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness."

Answer for yourself: What could this mean, that "carcasses shall fall in this wilderness"? The spiritual meaning here foreshadowed is that the Earthly or carnal nature of "matter", in this case humanity, in which the descending "Living Energies" as gods took residence would be eventually conquered by Spirit/Soul and "die", as the substance of the old seed dies that falls into the ground dies in generating its offspring. This offspring is the Spiritual Soul, the Prodigal Son who returns home to the celestial Canaan and Promised Land now ready to meet the Father.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that a lot, and I mean a lot, of Old Testament Biblical accounts concerning what we think is about "historical Israel" is but a Spiritual Allegory? You most likely ask "How we know that this is true" and I understand that. The answer comes in the last two hundred years especially through the aid of advances in modern Bible Scholarship, the restoration of the Egyptian hieroglyphs and extensive examination of ancient historical records of ancient Egypt, and advances through dedicated archeologists. The findings of these disciplines alone through into serious doubt the "literal" interpretation of "Israel" in many passages and Books of the Hebrew Bible. At the bottom of all this study and examination one come to the conclusion quite easily that the wanderings of the Biblical Israelites are a symbolic graph of this Spiritual and racial experience, and have no other meaning in many Biblical passages, historical or literal, whatever. Hagar's fleeing into the wilderness under the compulsion of her situation, is but another similar picture of the same truth. Let us not forget the Gnostic Paul calls this Abraham and Hagar story an "allegory" in the New Testament.

The hiding of the various Sons of God in a mysterious cave or secret Earth of Amenta is just one small part of a much larger story that began in Heaven (the Sky-Space) long ago. It encompasses all levels of Energy that has been Emanated from one this "Big Bang". Earth, it is clear, from these ancient Spiritual writers of old, is but an outpost of Heaven, and our history as "descended Living Energies" or Souls here is plane of existence is without full meaning when detached from its celestial base. One only has to read, consult, and study the ancient books of ancient Egypt, Greece, Chaldea, Assyria, Persia, and India which hold the "keys" to all later world religions and our Christian Bibles. They are absolutely priceless for what they give the reader in this regard. Sure, such study takes time but if you "want to know the truth before you die" then this is task that is escapable for the true lover of God today in light of the "reinterpretation" of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome during the early 2nd through the 5th century.

It always is problematic that Jesus, as symbolic for the "Jewish Christ" is called a "winebibber" in the Gospels as if he is "drunk". Likewise problematic for Greek mythology is the same appellation for Greek deity Bacchus as the "god of wine and intoxication". Really this is allegory again which symbolizes only the the befuddlement and mental darkness of the Heavenly born intellectual powers of the Soul following its incarnation in "fleshly bodies". Says Thomas Taylor: "For Bacchus is the evident symbol of the imperfect energies of intellect, and its scattering into the obscure and lamentable dominions of sense" (Thomas Taylor, Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. 104). It appears that as incarnating Souls we have been intoxicated with the wine of the physical senses and lusts of the flesh in which we came to dwell.

Ancient Egypt said that the body of man "seizes" Souls. The Speaker in The Egyptian Book of the Dead cries out to the highest Divinity, Ra:

"O deliver me from the god who seizes Souls. The darkness in which Sekari dwells is terrifying to the weak".

Answer for yourself: Who is Sekari? Sekari is the god suffering diminishment as he passes through incarnation.

We need to speak more about "darkness" as a metaphor and symbol for this Earthly life. We have much earlier made notice of Plotinus' statement that in the Soul's descent into matter that the "Soul was precipitated into a darkness profound and repugnant to the intellect," which was shrouded by it. The body is for the Soul and its incarnation into "matter" called by Plotinus "a dark imprisonment in the body."

In this darkness of incarnation we find that Osiris suffers; next we find Osiris praying to Ra for light. Ajax, an Achaean commander, Great Ajax (sometimes called "Telamonian Ajax" or simply "Ajax") is the second mightiest Achaean warrior after Achilles. Like Osiris we find Ajax crying out to God for light. Horus, in the Egyptian Religion, in his resurrection rises "from the house of darkness." Set (Satan), the twin of Horus, is portrayed imprisoning his brother the Soul of light, in the realm of darkness. Set, the opposer and adversary of the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ, is called "the power of darkness." A dozen sections of the Pyramid Texts and the Records of the Past describe the journey of the Soul through a "valley of darkness." Now with new illumination let us read a portion of Psalm 53 which is appropriate here. Speaking as the Soul King David, Tuthmose III, Pharaoh of Egypt says:

Ps 23:3-4 3 He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. 4 Yea, though I (as Soul) walk through the valley of the shadow of death (incarnated experiences), I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. (KJV)

The place to which the Soul in the Egyptian scripts was conducted was termed "An-ar-ef, the house of obscurity, the city of dreadful night." The mole was the animal symbol used by ancient Egypt to depict the god in humanity and his groping through this Earthly journey in an underworld region of darkness. Horus, coming as deliverer, says: "I have sung praises unto those that dwell in darkness."

Answer for yourself: Do you know the name of the chapter in The Egyptian Book of the Dead from which this above quote is taken? The chapter in which this occurs is entitled "the chapter of making the transformation into the god who giveth light in the darkness." He comes to set prisoners free, and also, it is said, "to dissipate darkness." Incarnation being necessary for the higher birth of the Soul, an Egyptian text reads: "The Soul is brought forth through the embrace of the Lord of Darkness. He is Babi, the Lord of Darkness." In Ch. 175 in The Egyptian Book of the Dead we find: "saith Osiris, the scribe Ani: Hail, Tmu! What manner (of land) is this into which I have come? . . . it is black as blackest night, and men wander helplessly therein. In it a man may not live in quietness of heart, nor may the longings of love be satisfied therein."

Beside Plato's immortal cave allegory, there are many other uses of the cave as an emblem of the dark chambers of the body. David's pleading in the cave to be delivered from his prison is paralleled by Osiris' crying for deliverance in the cavern of Set in Amenta. We mentioned these already. Thomas Taylor expressly says that the cavern was used to "signify union with the terrestrial body" in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. We find in the fables of the Hercules that our personified hero (the Soul, as always) tracks a lion (the animal nature) into a cave (the fleshly body) where its capture is effected (the animal nature is subdued by the Soul with the aid of the indwelling Christ). Let us not forget that the warfare between Spirit/Soul and "animal nature" occurs in the body and it is in this body that the Divine nature in man was to "capture" or embrace the animal Soul to lift it up to God. It is fitting that such "cave symbolism" be used for the fleshly body of "darkness".

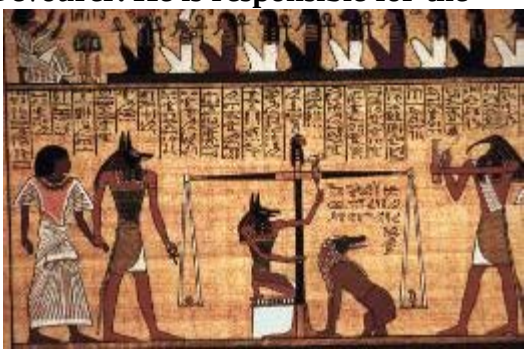
Once again in The Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 28, the Soul affirms: "This whole heart of mine is laid upon the tablets of Tum, who guideth me to the caverns of Set" (evil nature of the animal nature), or through the dark passages of Amenta (the body of Earthly incarnation).

Answer for yourself: What are the "tablets of Tum"? The tablets of Tum are records of the Law, or Maat (the Divine Order/Harmony manifested by God's Law). The goddess Maat represents the ideals of law, order, and truth. The word, Maat translates "that which is straight." it implies anything that is true, ordered, or balanced. She was the female counterpart of Thoth. These Laws of God are kept by Thoth, the divine scribe, in the Hall of Judgment. Thus to come under the law (St. Paul's Law of Incubation) brings the deity to the caverns of Set, the physical body.



Answer for yourself: Have we heard of these "wings" before?

Ps 61:4 4 I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever: I will trust in the covert of thy wings. Selah. (KJV)

Ps 91:4 4 He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Why is this anthropomorphic representation of Divine truth, Divine Order, and Divine Harmony wearing a feather? We have to go to judgment seat of Osiris for this. In the underworld (in this Earthly incarnation), the heart (Soul) of the deceased is weighed by Anubis against Maat's feather. If the heart (the Soul) was heavy with wicked deeds, it would outweigh the feather, and the Soul would be fed to Ammit. But if the scales were balanced, indicating that the deceased was a just and honorable person in life, he would be welcomed by Osiris into the Blessed Land.

Answer for yourself: Who is Ammit? Ammit is the eater of the Dead, the Devourer. He is responsible for the death of the Souls of the wicked who finish not properly their incarnated mission. Ammit sits beneath the Scales of Justice before the throne of Osiris where she waits for the daily flow of Souls to come before Osiris for judgement. During the Judging of the Heart, if the deeds of the soul being judged are found to be more wicked than good, Anubis feeds the soul to Ammit.

Answer for yourself: Is this feeding of the Soul to Ammit but a symbolic representation of reincarnation and further Soulish incarnations? I believe it is and I am not alone in this understanding.

In ancient Egypt, The Egyptian Book of the Dead mentions the travel of the Soul into a next world without coming back to Earth. The ancient Egyptians conceived man and cosmos to be dual: firstly, the High God or Divine Mind arose out of the Primeval Waters of Outer Space at the beginning of manifestation. Space, symbolized by the Primeval Waters, contains the seeds and possibilities of all living things in their dormant state. At the right moment for awakenment, all will take up forms in accordance with inherent qualities. Or to express it in another way: the Word uttered by the Divine Mind calls manifested life to begin once more. Secondly, the material aspect expressing what is in the Divine Mind must be in a process of ever-becoming. In other words, the cosmos consists of body and soul. Man emanated in the image of divinity is similarly dual and his evolutionary goal is a fully conscious return to the Divine Mind. Growth is effected through a succession of lives, a concept that is found in texts and implied in symbolism.

Herodotus, the Greek historian (5th century B.C.), wrote that the Egyptians were the first to teach that the human soul is immortal, and at the death of the body enters into some other living thing then coming to birth; and after passing through all creatures of land, sea, and air (which cycle it completes in three thousand years) it enters once more into a human body, at birth.

The theory of reincarnation is often ascribed to Pythagoras, since he spent some time in Egypt studying its philosophy and, according to Herodotus (bk. ii, § 123), "adopted this opinion as if it were his own." Reincarnation has been connected with the rites of Osiris, one of the Mysteries or cycles of initiation perpetuated in Egypt.

Herodotus writes of transmigration, i.e., that the Soul passes through various animals before being reborn in human form. This refers not to the human soul but to the molecules, atoms, and other components that clothe it. They gravitate to vehicles similar in qualities to their former host's, drawn magnetically to the new milieu by the imprint made by the human Soul, whether it be fine or gross. It is quite clear from the Egyptian Book of the Dead and other texts that the Soul itself after death undergoes experiences in the Duat, the realm and condition between Heaven and Earth, or as some say beneath the earth, supposedly traversed by the Sun from Sunset to sunrise. Understand that this Duat was imaged not only by being beneath the Earth but celestially as well.

The evolution of consciousness is symbolized by the Solar Barque moving through the Duat. In this context the "hours" of travel represent stages of development. This Spiritual Development is accomplished in sages of evolution of the Soul; from step to step in further Spiritual Awakening!

Of Horus it is written again that Horus comes to awaken the "prisoners in their cells, the sleepers in their caves."

This should make you think as you read:

Eph. 5:14 "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ (the indwelling Christ) shall give thee light."

Answer for yourself: Is Paul's "Jesus", as "the Christ", the same being represented by the "Horus of Egypt", the "Christ only within" the bosom of humanity? You bet it is. The authentic Paul never wrote of a historical or literal "Jesus Christ" simply because he never existed until Rome corrupts and grotesquely misinterprets on purpose the ancient Spiritual Wisdom whereby they can make themselves the only dispenser of God's grace to humanity.

Another direct employment of the cave emblem in Egyptian scripture is in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 182. Here we find that "Thoth says: 'I gave Ra to enter the mysterious cave in order that he may revive the heart of him whose heart is motionless.'" As Ra is always the Divinest Spirit, there is again a clear allusion to the god (the "Living Energy") descending into the cave of the body. In the Egyptian Bethany scene the "dead" Soul is called aloud nine times to "come forth" from "the mysterious cave." Gerald Massey traces the word "cave" to the Egyptian "Kep", which he says means a secret dwelling (the secret dwelling of the Soul is within the body of humanity). It is obvious that the mythologists of old did considered the body to be that mysterious hidden dwelling of the Soul, that shadowy cavern into which the descending "Living Energies" of Heaven were obliged to plunge for added physical experience so necessary for the Soul's intended Spiritual development through incarnation into bodies.

Answer for yourself: Is the calling forth of Lazarus as found in the Roman New Testament but a "literalization" of a much older account of the Soulish resurrection of Osiris from the death as the god in "matter"?

There are clear parallels between the "Jesus raising Lazarus" story and the Egyptian "Horus raising "El-Azar-Us" or "El-Osiris" story, and given that there is a Gnostic sarcophagus or maybe two that depicts Jesus as beardless man with a wand raising Lazarus who is wrapped like a mummy, that would suggest that we are speaking here of the mythic mystery over the literal historical interpretation of the raising of Lazarus or "El-Azar-Us" (the Egyptian word we recognize today as Osiris). In that case, the story of the raising of Lazarus should be considered in its pagan mythical mystery layer, as opposed to first viewing the story as if it is reflection of a historical account that involved a historical Jesus as well as one poor dead soul. It seems we are right back to where we have been since the beginning; namely are we to interpret the stories in our New Testament as "literal occurrences" or "allegories" that expressed Divine Truths which were later "literalized? Well the facts that I am presenting are intended to help you decide.

In the Biblical account of the rebellion of the sons of Korah, already mentioned in a previous article, it is said that they went down into the pit in death, but did not die but lived on like Adam, as did the Manes in the Egyptian Amenta as well. Please note the "parallelism" here. "Death" did not mean a "literal death" as we might expect but rather only an allegory of the descent of the Soul into "bodies of death" where the Soul lives "on" as did the "Manes" in the Egyptian Amenta (again symbolic for the body of Soulish incarnation). As the earth opened to swallow these rebels (ourselves...part of the 5 Legions of Asuras), the pit is equated with our Earthy home. In the Hebrew writings the pit is identical with the region known as Sheol, equivalent to the Greek Hades and the Egyptian Amenta (again we have seen that this is the fleshly body). It is the same story repeated over and over again in order than we don't miss it. As Christians we did according to the Roman plan!

Answer for yourself: Does this slightly bring to mind Jonah being being in the "belly" of the great fish for 3 day as both Horus and Jesus was in "Hell" for 3 days (again "Hades" and "Hell" being symbolic for the Earthly incarnation)? Is Jonah's great fish another "pit" or "cave" hiding the Soul?

Jonah, upon being saved from the sea-monster, exclaims: "Yet thou hast brought up my life from the pit, O Lord, my God."

In the Egyptian Book of Hades (10th division) there is a scene "of making fast the dragon in the pit," which is preparatory to the rising of Ra, or the birth of the Divine in and from the human (the Deific Mind by the Soul with the aid of the indwelling "Christ"). In Revelation (20:2, 3) the seer visioned an angel coming down out of heaven, having the keys of the abyss, or "pit", and a great chain in his hand, with which he bound the dragon, the devil or Satan, for a thousand years, and sealed him fast in the "pit".

Oh how much truth we have lost over these last two thousand years of the famine of the true Word of God. Let us regain truth by coming to the understanding that in the above verse in the Book of Revelation that these "evil spirits" (remember the Asuras?) that were cast down and bound for a thousand years is a reference to a long series of incarnations of these descending "Living Energies". These "evil spirits" were connected with the name Satan because of their rebellious and recalcitrant behavior under the hard decrees of enforced "incarnation" into the bodies of animals. This means that these "fiery pits" are none other than our very physical bodies.Again we find the same symbolism and hidden meaning behind what we were taught was "literal" when in fact it has always been "allegorical".

In the Egyptian Religion we find that "the Krst/Karest/Christ" Horus makes war on the powers of evil for what they have done to his father Osiris, and calls to the gods to strike them and "punish them in your pits." To them he says: "Your particular duties in Amenta are to keep the pits of fire in accordance with Ra's command, which I made known to you."

In E.A. Wallis Budge's account of the functions of the ba-Soul in Egyptian Religion, he states that in the Papyrus of Nebqet the "ba", or Soul, is seen, depicted as a human-headed hawk, flying down the funeral pit, bearing air and food to the mutilated body lying in the mummy-chamber. Here is additional confirmation that the "pit" designates the human body. Another Egyptian text, the Book of Am-Tuat (Division 20) describes the mutilation of the gods and their being cast down into pits of fire. When we read the Book of Revelation we read of horsemen, ten thousand times ten thousand, going forth to battle with those forms which had come up out of the smoke that ascended from the pit of the abyss, emitting fire. We find the same symbolism of "pit" and "fire" repeated over and over again, from ancient Egypt to the Book of Revelation, beginning to end.

Answer for yourself: What are we to make of this?

It is not too hard once you possess a few "keys" to interpreting correctly this same ancient Spiritual Wisdom we find from ancient Egypt all the way down to even our Bible. The symbolism is the same or should I say "should hold true" to the original interpretation. These symbols of "evil", "fire" and "pit" are to be understood as various forms of evil generated in the struggle between Set and Horus, Jesus and Satan, the gods and the animals whose natures are long in combat with each other.

Answer for yourself: Do you see this?

Gerald Massey links the Egyptian abyss, called "Tepht", with our "depth." He equates it also with with the Babylonian Tiamat, as well as the old Egyptian underworld monster, Typhon, the Dragon of the Deep. They are all various symbols of the same Divine Truth. As such they are all symbols for the original birthplace of creation, and in a more human application it meant the human body as the seat or birth-place of the Spiritual life and its evolutionary experiences required for its next step in Soulish evolution. For the body is composed of "matter", the infinite fathomless mother of all things. Typhon, who brought forth her brood of chaos in the abyss, later brings forth the young Sun-god, the divine immortal Soul. The figure in this connection is common around the world, we are told, in Akkad, China, Egypt and inner Africa the same story only through different symbols and names.

Answer for yourself: Is there a connection between "Tepht" to the Hebrew "Tophet", the "dark pit"? You better believe there is and they both refer to the human body.

There were said to be "seven sons of the Abyss," (Incarnational Records, Vol. II, p. 131), or the seven powers generated in nature, to be matched later by seven phases of growth in the human constitution--the universal seven in archaic literature.

The universal religious myth of the descent of the solar hero, ever typical of deity, into some dark abysmal region, emerging from it after ordeals of suffering, can have but one explanation: the incarnation of the hosts of light, these "Living Intelligent Energies", in the dense physical body.

Another earthly figure much used to type the dreary existence in the flesh was that of the "wilderness."

Answer for yourself: Where was the Christ's battle in the Gospels? It is in the wilderness, in the "human body".

The inquiry "Who sinned, this man, or his parents, that he should be born blind?" indicates a previous incarnation of the man in the fleshly body, in which he might have sinned. It is time for every Christian to know that the belief in successive incarnations of man was accepted by all the Scriptural writers of antiquity who were spiritually wise.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? Simply because today we are "reading these same Scriptures"!!!

The very name of the great Egyptian script, The Egyptian "Book of the Dead", hints at the realm of darkness from which the Soul emerges in its resurrection; for the title, translated, means "The Coming Forth by Day,"--or into the daylight, or from region of darkness. Needless to say The Egyptian Book of the Dead contains the 44 Negative Commands or Laws of God that help shape the path for the Soul's Spiritual evolution in this Earthy body of "death"; thus The Egyptian Book of the Dead was intended for Religious instruction for people who were alive but yet considered as if "but dead" as "incarnated Souls" in the darkness of "matter" and "animal flesh". Hopefully such study of the Laws of God and their implementation by incarnated Souls not only will enlighten the path for the Egyptian Souls and their return to the "Father of Lights" but us as well. Never forget that we are Souls in training and I hope you are beginning to see the true message of God to man comes not from Rome, but from the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which will has for over twelve thousand years been our road-map home to Heaven from which we came.

ALIVE BUT CONSIDERED AS IF "DEAD": THE TRUTH ABOUT THE INCARNATED SOUL #1

It is our aim is to bring to light the real teachings of the ancient wisdom which lies behind many of the words and concepts in our Christian Bible which are so sorely misunderstood today since the early Roman Church eliminated the ancient wisdom teachings and plunged the world into a Dark Age which still envelopes us today. Ironically, the ancient wisdom is yet contained in our Bible and is available to those who have the "keys" to its proper interpretation. When one possesses the necessary "keys" to properly understanding the real message of the Sacred Books of antiquity let alone our Christian Bible then one receives for the first time in his life a penetrating insight into the human condition and the cosmic purpose of human life as we know it. We sorely need this understanding of the ancient wisdom hidden in the pages of our Bibles to restore our Earthly life to its true glory and purpose. This will become abundantly clear to you as our studies advance.

We have been teaching and examining the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and their teaching on the origin of the Soul from on high, its fall into the darkness and distractions of this body of fleshly "matter" and its immersion into carnal sensuality in its incarnation into "matter". We described this as the "fall" as the ancients called it. We saw in the series on the "incarnation of the Soul" that our discoveries as to the original intended meaning of such words in the Bible as "death", "Hades", "Hell", "underworld", "Amenta", "pit", "wilderness", "desert", and a slew of other related words makes necessary the "re-reinterpretation" of almost all if not all Biblical Scripture from the traditional meaning inherited by us by the tragic purposeful "reinterpretation" of these terms by emerging Roman Christianity and their "historization" and "literalization" of prior Spiritual Myths and Mystical allegories of the ancients.

Let me warn you. We are not through exposing this horrible reinterpretation of Spiritual Truth by Rome. It is an understatement to say that traditions long institutionalized do not easily bend to correction of principles that are considered vital to its very existence and its current creedal theology. But Christianity must submit to such a correction in the light of today's new enlightenment to the truth of what has happened to the Sacred Wisdom of old and its grotesque misrepresentation in our Christian interpretation of the Bible we inherited from Rome. Bet Emet is Hebrew for "House of Truth". It is my firm conviction that the highest religion that mankind can have is "Truth". This "Truth" demands insistently from her devotees her relentless tribute of sincerity and courage, and any scholarship must have its unflinching goal to not recoil from such truth-seeking even if such discovery threatens long cherished dogmas accepted by "faith alone". When we blindly adopt a religion, a political system, a literary dogma, we become automatons. We cease to grow and we put to sleep the "Divine god" in us and all hope of true Spiritual Growth is thwarted. Believe nothing just because some Book, in this case the Bible you own, which you have never investigated or studied intently, says "this" or "that". Believe nothing just because a belief is generally held by a majority of people. Forget not that we have been warned:

Matt 7:14 14 Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. (KJV)

Believe nothing just because you heard it from some pulpit or from a pastor you love and trust. Believe nothing just because it is said to be of divine origin. Believe nothing just because someone else believes it. Believe only what you yourself test and judge to be true. It has been said by the wise of antiquity "There is nothing to fear except the persistent refusal to find out the truth"; the truth about this Bible and the Divine Message of God in it which as a Christian you have never heard before, and I speak as an ordained Pastor and scholar today to the authenticity of this Universal Law. Galileo said "All truths are easy to understand once they are discovered; the point is to discover them". In a time of universal religious deceit as found in contemporary Christian dogmas and preaching the telling of the truth becomes a revolutionary act. John Locke once said "It is one thing to show a man that he is in error, and another to put him in possession of truth". This is my promise to my readership, when I expose the "lie" I always replace it with the "truth" you were never supposed to know. The greatest evil ever perpetrated upon the whole of mankind happened between the 2nd through the 5th century when Christianity evolved and took historical form as the result of a corruption of high wisdom already in existence, and not as the promulgation of new light and wisdom previously unknown as Christianity likes to maintain. Serious study shows this to be a big lie. There is nothing unique or "new" about Christianity except its alteration of the prior ancient pagan Religions and their interpretations of their dogmas which Christianity "borrowed" and altered in meaning. Christianity only gained the favor and held the allegiance of the masses of the populations of the West for centuries because it succeeded in "reinterpreting" the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and accommodating its new message and new religion to the prevalent levels of general unintelligence. Little has changed today at the hands of a religion that emphasizes "blind faith" over study and knowledge. Mark Twain once said: "In religion and politics people's beliefs and convictions are in almost every case gotten at second-hand, and without examination, from authorities who have not themselves examined the questions at issue but have taken them at second-hand from other non-examiners, whose opinions about them were not worth a brass farthing". Sadly, such a statement is the epitome of truth as my experience as a Seminary student, Ordained Pastor, and Scholar has proved to me and multiple thousands of our readers the world over these last many years. "Real knowledge is to know the extent of one's ignorance

We turn our attention now to the ancient use of the figures and symbols under which life in the body was mythically represented. What we will examine in these articles will absolutely revolutionized the entire interpretation of Christian dogmas and doctrines since the 2nd century. Not one or possibly two, but all of the doctrines of Christian theology will be in need of drastic revision and restatement in the light of what I will show the reader in these articles. We will come to see that in antiquity the proper understanding of the terms "death" and "the dead" was the Divine stamp by which the meaning of all scriptural writing could be gauged and trusted. The terms "death" and "the dead" carried in their ancient usage a hermetic, hidden, secret, and esoteric connotation, which was at once the supreme clue to the primary meaning of the entire structure of theology and a key to the rational understanding of our mortal life. The sagacious ancients were content to let a secondary implication of the above terms, more readily apparent on the surface, prevail in the exoteric understanding and "Outer Mysteries", while imparting to the Mystery Initiates of the "Inner Mysteries" an occult signification which bore the real sum and substance of Scripture, infinitely more informing, enlightening, and dynamic than what was taught in the "literal" understanding of the texts which accompanied the "uninitiated" into the deeper secrets of the Scriptures.

We are reliably informed that the sages of old employed mythical and mysterious devices at once to reveal, but yet at the same time, conceal a profounder meaning in their sacred writings, using at times a shallow rendering, while conveying to those versed in symbolical methodology a far profounder message. The most startling of these stratagems was their use of the word "death". Teaching for the living was put out under the guise of instruction for "the dead".

Answer for yourself: Have you ever wondered why the Egyptian Bible was called The Egyptian Book of the Dead if it was intended to be read by living and breathing people? Could it be that people who were "alive" were considered as "if dead"?

Great moral and spiritual systems were camouflaged under the disguise of "Books of the Dead," as in Egypt and Tibet. This being so, the information that follows will show why a revisal of our understanding of what was implied by the archaic use of the terms "death" and "the dead" will so radically transform the meaning of every single doctrine of the Christian faith.

Answer for yourself: Could it just be that the "key" to the correct interpretation of all Scripture is the recovery of the true ancient meaning and understanding of the ancient theological implication of the word "death"? It sure is.

Most cannot fathom the consequences to Divine Truth that has occurred by the loss of the ancient understanding of the words "death" and "the dead" since the 2nd century but that will quickly change as your studies advance. Coming to the accurate understanding of the true meaning by the sages of old to the words "death" and "the dead" will expose the grotesque distortion of very Christian doctrine when compared to their original meanings as held for thousands and thousands of years by the ancients around the world before the rise of the Roman Church. You will come to see that every single dogmas of Christianity has been sadly distorted our of its original and intended sense. Likewise, you will soon come to see for yourself that Christian doctrines were interpreted in blind ignorance of a former esoteric and profound wisdom and that humanity has been made for ages the blind slave of such purposeful misconceptions and gross misinterpretations in Rome's gift to the world of its replacement religion. Almost unbelievably not a single Christian "reputed" scholar, Seminary professor, Pastor or Evangelist or teacher, mediaeval or modern, has stumbled upon Christianity's blatant "misinterpretation of the word "death" and "the dead" as was used since the beginning of time as found as far back as ancient Egypt. Not a one. But I found it! Had but one looked in earnest to Egyptian Religion or Greek Philosophy (philosophy means "the love of wisdom"), Comparative Religion or Comparative Mythology, he would have found the "key" and "clue" to correcting the erroneous dogmas of Christianity which have been supported by gross misinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom for some 1,800 years at present.

Christianity, as a system of exclusive Sacred Truth or a unique revelation of Divine Wisdom, is already staggering and tottering today under the impact of one blow after another dealt it by the study of Comparative Religion and Comparative Mythology and the enlightenment coming from the restoration of the ancient Egyptian Religion. The "deadly parallels" found to run so consistently and so strikingly between the life of the supposed "literal-historical" Jesus and the ancient legends of some twenty or more preceding Christly figures, Sun-gods, and Pagan Christs, in the role of world-saviors, are rapidly piling up undeniable, inarguable, and incontestable facts and evidence that tends to jeopardize and endanger the validity of the entire body of our Gospel narrative as factual history worthy of belief which is necessary for Eternal Life as Rome has maintained now for some 1,800 years. Understand, as a "truthseeker", I am overjoyed by this, but at the same time saddened because most "enlighteners" who make these comparisons stop short by selling Christianity as but another "pagan religion" itself and they are unaware that Christianity, once interpreted correctly and restored to its Egyptian roots, is but a later rendition of the same Divine Truth that we find exactly in ancient Egypt which spawned all later world religions. This need not be bad when Christianity is allowed to recover the proper interpretation of its symbols as it once had some 2,000 years ago at the hands of the Gnostic Chrestians. Rome' radical "reinterpretation" which robbed the world of "true Divine Light" is in desperate need of "reinterpretation" once again whereby it recovers its "Egyptian and Jewish Roots".

It is beginning to dawn on intelligent and informed students that the New Testament Gospels are not the biography of any "person" or living character at all, but retelling of an ancient story taken from old dramatic books of the religious Brotherhoods, portraying, not the "life" of any man, but only the spiritual history of a typical figure and "representative" for the whole of humanity. All previous Messianic characters, or Sun-gods, were but only typological and symbolic dramatizations of man's inner Soulish life, under the form of a representative "history" told through the agency of personification and anthropomorphic characterizations. These multiple "Pagan Christs", which our Jesus is but another example, were simply ideal figures held up before men to provide them with an inspiring picture of their own attainable Soulish perfection in this Earthly existence and incarnation. Unbelievable as it may appear, it is the fact of history that with the lapse of time and the decay of philosophical culture, the more ignorant came to take these dramatic Solar heroes and Sungods for actually living historical and literal persons. But as this same time the true understanding of the intended meaning of the words "death" and "the dead" as used in ancient Sacred Books was lost as well. And the religious establishment, either itself now sunken in similar ignorance, or motivated by selfish agendas, or both, found it advantageous to the interests of a worldly ecclesiastical system to provide new interpretations of "the Christ" and meanings for the words "death" and "the dead". At any rate, the Gospels, which were only spiritual allegories (easily seen if we but consult the writings of Philo, Clement and Origen, let alone Paul's own statement that the story of Abraham, Sarah and Hagar "is an allegory"), were about the 2nd and early 3rd century converted into literal history. And it was at this same time that the ancient meaning of the term "death" and "the dead" passed out from the knowledge of even the most learned of the leaders of Christianity, and with it fled all possibility of retaining or regaining the deep inner sense of the truths concerning "the Christ", let alone the intended meaning of the words "death" and "the dead" as they had previously been used in the Sacred Books of old as they pertained to the "incarnation of the Soul".

Christianity would come to almost destroy completely the ancient Wisdom-Religion or Gnosis from the 2nd till the 5th century. With that along with the burning and destruction of the world's libraries Rome positioned itself to hid the awful "reinterpretation" of the arcane and ancient Spiritual Gnosis and ancient Wisdom which they by necessity had to undertake to created a "new replacement religion" for the world; a religion in which they were central to its success and propagation as the "sole Salvation for mankind". In all honestly we lost the "truth" behind almost all, if not all, of what Christianity will teach the whole of the world for the last 1,800 years.

Answer for yourself: How can death ever have had a meaning other than its common one? How could this understanding ever been "lost"?

Answer for yourself: How could the whole outline of Biblical wisdom suffer such a loss of original interpretation and endure the most gross mischaracterization and misinterpretation of its intended meanings that humanity has ever seen and been told to "believe" or "burn"?

Answer for yourself: How could ancient teachings on Hades, Hell, purgatory, baptism, circumcision, the temptation, the transfiguration, the crucifixion, the resurrection, the ascension, etc., have lost their earliest meanings and integrity which they held for thousands and thousands of years and be "reinterpreted" and given different meanings by Rome some 1,800 years ago? How could Rome get away with this? I already told you. They destroyed the ancient wisdom the ancient Temples, killed the devotes by the millions who were adherents to these ancient Spiritual understandings of God and His Cosmos. A massive campaign of terror and stupefaction was launched the scope of which the world has never seen since. Mission accomplished in just 300 years.

Answer for yourself: How can I make such a daring statement? You have to do the studies in the ancient Egyptian religion, Gnosticism, Comparative Religion, Comparative Mythology, Judaism, Manuscript evidences and Roman forgery of the texts, and then you will see the awful truth for yourself as I and many others have.

At the hands of an antisemitic Rome humanity was blinded from both knowing and ever finding out the truth. Humanity was given a "Counterfeit Religion" instead of "Divine Truth" by this juggernaut of darkness, Roman Christianity. The message of all Sacred Scriptures the world over, before Rome, had located the Soul's incarnation on Earth as the place where all Sacred Scripture was intended to apply. That would change with Rome. Religion had been instituted by God and man as instruction, teaching, training, and guidance for the Soul and man's life on this Earth. But false indoctrination that followed the purposeful loss of arcane teaching and ancient interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and religious myths of the ancients caused the disastrous and castastrophic shift in the focus of vision and location of Spiritual values from the Earth to Heaven by the hands of Rome. The religion given mankind by Rome became an "other-worldliness" religion; a religion that looked to Heaven for fulfillments intended to occur on Earth only. Heaven, instead of Earth as the location for the Soul's growth and merit, became the focal point of Christianity from the 2nd century onward.

This loss of Spiritual knowledge only aided Rome in its ghoulish endeavor to deter mankind from his incarnational purpose. At the hands of Rome and their "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Gnosis and Wisdom all Earthly effort for mankind and his Soul was deemed of no account; "belief" over "Soulish effort" and "growth" was seen as ineffective and of little if any value. Grace was the only necessity for mankind. Lack of Spiritual effort by man and his Soul was rewarded with salvation by Rome; a salvation than was never to be found in any of the ancient Religions of the world before Rome since recorded time. Rome gave mankind a "get out of Hell free card" and such nonsense defeated the purpose of religion altogether. Rome stripped mankind of all incentives for Spiritual growth and maturation; it became unnecessary. Grace became a tool to further Rome's political and religious agenda. Grace, according to Rome, is "unmerited favor". I am sure you have heard this repeated as nauseam in your Churches.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever investigated this Christian teaching that grace is "unmerited favor" for yourself? If you had then you would have found as I did that grace is "merited favor" and not "unmerited favor" in the Hebrew. Again we have a perfect example of Rome's later "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom that goes unnoticed by billions Sunday after Sunday around the world.

At the heart of our gospel there is a truth which at first glance offends the judicial sense of perceptive people. That judicial sense is expressed by the Old Testament wise man in Proverbs 17:15 which says, "He who justifies the wicked and He who condemns the righteous are both alike--an abomination to the Lord" (cf. Proverbs 24:24).

Answer for yourself: Do you believe that?

We unseat judges with indignation, who acquit the guilty. Our moral sensibility is outraged when wrong and guilt are given legal sanction. Yet at the heart of our gospel stands the sentence: Romans 3:20-4:5 God justifies the ungodly who trust in Him. God acquits the guilty. That is the gospel!

Rom 4:5 5 But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: But how can it be right for God to do that? How can Proverbs 24:24 and Rom. 4:5 be the Word of God when they are 180 degrees opposite in meaning?

Rom 4:5 is but another of Rome's reinterpretations of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which always stressed the importance of the Soul and proper works in this "body of death" that is so necessary for the Soul's Spiritual evolution to the next plane of existence. This example could be multiplied by hundreds and hundred if we had but the time. Rome gave mankind a false salvation and a gross misrepresentation of the ancient Spiritual Gnosis because righteousness was not their way of doing things back then. Might made right and few if any could stand in the way or the Mighty Roman Empire and their Legions.

The Soul incarnated on Earth with a purpose and designated tasks that had to be accomplished before the Soul's return home. Roman theology has absolutely stultified the Spirit of mankind ever since.

Without a doubt the Hebrew Scriptures and the ancient Egyptian Religion with "birth the Jewish faith" both has as an undergirding religious tenant to their faiths that the Soul achieves no further cycle of growth or Spiritual maturation outside of the Earthly body. Rome's denial and "reinterpretation" of this ancient religious dogma has paralyzed an infinite amount of human effort and Soulish evolvement on this Earth for almost 2,000 years. And this loss of knowledge is tied to the loss of the true meaning of the words "death" and "the dead" as was used in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of antiquity the world over.

The obscuration of the inner meaning of the word "death" and "the dead" at the hands of Rome has utterly wrecked God's will for the Soul's existence on Earth going on now for 2,000 years. Rome's disastrous "reinterpretation" of just these two words, along with other instances of a Roman induced loss of Spiritual knowledge, has immobilized Soulish growth for billions of people and continues to do so yet even today.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that almost everywhere, if not everywhere throughout antiquity, Earthly life was interpreted, represented, imaged, pictured, and portray as a "death"? At first one might wish to disagree with such a statement but such would be foolish once you see the evidence that this Soulish incarnation, this Earthly existence and life of the Soul was characterized metaphorically as if a "death". Once seeing the forthcoming evidence then disagreement is impossible.

The appeal of early Roman Christianity to the uneducated and ignorant masses, and the popularization of its tenets, which were originally drawn from the prior esoteric schools and Mystery Religions, which Rome will later persecute and destroy after is "reinterpretation" of their existing mystical and allegorical religions tenants, is easily provable if you seek out for yourself any good text on Christians origins and compare their ancient dogmas with Christian Roman dogmas. Any keen reader will notice the similarity between the Mystery Religions and their dogmas and later Roman dogma; but one thing is different. Rome has "reinterpreted" everything they could and given almost each ancient "dogma" a new meaning which finds its new expression in a "literal" and "historical" interpretation which was lacking in the entirety of the ancient Mystery Religions. Christianity smothered out the ancient Wisdom-Religion or Gnosis, and by garbling the interpretation of the high purely spiritual teachings, wrecked the integrity of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom beyond recognition. The main shift of the wrecked cabalistic mechanism was the re-defining of the prior cryptic connotation of "death" and "the dead" as used in this ancient Sacred Books and their faiths. Its restoration at this time will go far to restore and reconstruct the Divine Truths of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The recognition by Christianity of the prior understanding of the use of the words "death" and "the dead" will lead in Christianity recognizing that is owns its very dogmas and existence to the "pagan" sources which the Early Church Fathers did their very best to corrupt and obliterate beginning in the 2nd century. For the Ancient or Ageless Wisdom, taught in the arcane schools of old, has had a modern rebirth, and Christianity will find its salvation from almost universal distrust by recognizing in the occult movement the spirit of its original motivation.

In the light of modern scholarship and the fruits of archeology studies it can now be stated without fear of contradiction that not an item of current Christian theology retains the most distant resemblance to that grand meaning which it they once held in the minds of the great sages and Spiritual Masters of antiquity.

It is a fact beyond all doubt that the ancient called life of Earth metaphorically as like a "death", and that when they spoke of "the dead" in sacred books, like The Egyptian Book of the Dead, it is indisputable that they meant a book of Spiritual instruction for living human beings. We will come to see that the words "death" and "the dead" are used in the ancient Scriptures to refer to living humanity in earthly embodiment. Living, breathing, walking humanity are "the dead" of the Bible and other Sacred Books, and the "death" spoken of there is our living existence here in this physical plane of existence in which we currently abide. We have been conditioned to read into the Bible the traditional meaning of "death" which we have heard uttered from pulpits since we were children. This makes it hard for us read our Bibles and respond in accurate "faith" if we approach such reading with erroneous concepts of what the words we read "mean". Blame it on Rome and their "radical reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom accomplished by them over 300 years; primarily from the 2nd through the 5th century.

Foolish are we to continue to to read a meaning into words of our Bibles which they never "meant". You will come to see at the end of this series of articles that the correct meaning of the word for "death", as used in our Bibles from examples and illustrations taken from prior Sacred Books, will be the central item of the whole theological corpus, the real "lost key" to a correct reading of underground meaning in esoteric literature. In ancient theology "death" means our life on earth. Unless we understand correctly how the ancient sages and mystics who wrote this Spiritual Writing of old used the word "death" then many texts of Scripture will remain unintelligible or vague at best. The Bible stands today as a sealed book mostly because these two words, "death" and "the dead," have not been read as indicators of a far deeper sense than the superficial one when taken "literally" by mistake.

Let our inquiry begin by stating another fact; namely, that the word "death" is to pertain to the Soul in man, and not to the physical body. That seems almost silly when hearing the opposite taught most of your life I know. But hold on. Ironically, as one plane of the Soul's existence goes to "death" the other one rises in "life". If you think for a moment at the demise of the body the Soul ascends to a higher life than it ever experienced in its fleshly incarnation. We saw previously only in passing that as the Soul incarnates the ancient Spiritual Masters described this incarnation as the Soul "dying". Ironically the ancients, in the Sacred Books, up until the rise of Latin Christianity, described the descent of the Soul into "matter", into human generation, as a form of "death to the Soul" but ironically "life to this animal-body". If you notice this understanding of the word "death" is just opposite of what Christian theology teaches. The theological death of the Soul in its incarnation into "fleshly matter" is a type of "death" that does not literally kill in any ultimate sense. This "death" of the Soul is only "allegorical" and is a death from which the Soul will later ascend at the cycle of its rebirths when this fleshly bodies returns to the dust from which it came originally. Ironically the "death" of the Soul ends in its resurrection; not the physical body.

Answer for yourself: Can you begin to imagine now that this resurrection of the physical body is a bunch of mistaken theology that long ago lost its proper "keys" so necessary for its correct interpretation? Resurrection "Yes"; but of the "Living Intelligent Energy" that had been encased in "dead matter". We are in truth speaking of the whole Earthly incarnation and not a later resurrection of a "physical body"!

Answer for yourself: Are you aware how many Biblical texts will be affected once the word for "death" in the ancient Scriptures and in our Bible is interpreted correctly?

Answer for yourself: How came the doctrines of hell and purgatory likewise lost in Christianity their earlier understanding as taught by the ancient Egyptians and later Greek philosophers?

Answer for yourself: How did it happen that other confusion of interpretation by Rome contaminated other sacred ancient dogmas like baptism, the circumcision, the temptation, the transfiguration, the crucifixion, resurrection and ascension.

Ironically, what is a "death" for the Soul is actually "life" to the physical body. This truly is one of the greatest theological dogmas of the entire Bible, but only if "interpreted correctly"; otherwise then it is the worst theological dogma of the entire Bible.

The descent of the gods, or "Living Energies" which incarnated into "matter", was in reality the very opposite of an actual death, but yet is was considered Spiritually as a "death" by the ancient sages of antiquity. Life might have been imparted to the "lower animal" or the "lower animal-man" but along with it came a battle between carnality of the animal nature and the indwelling Soul and "Christ nature" the very moment of man's first breath. Yet this was and yet is the Divine "Pattern" and plan of the Ayn Sof, the Absolute Intelligent Invisible Living Energy of the whole Cosmos. This Emanation of God's thought that spread through the whole of existence and the impregnation of these "Living Energies" into invisible and visible "matter" was called the "dying" of the gods in order than mortals might "live". These descending Asuras, these procrastinating "Living Energies" came that the animal-man, now in the fullness of time, might have and experience "life" more abundantly as the Scripture says but at a great cost to themselves.

Gal 4:4-6 4 But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman ("matter"), made under the law (the Law of Incubation), 5 To redeem them that were under the law (the Law of Incubation), that we might receive the adoption of sons. 6 And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. (KJV)

Notice that this Law of which Paul speaks is not the Torah as we have been taught to believe; being a Gnostic

Paul was speaking of the Law of Incubation. We now possess enough "keys" to this ancient Spiritual Wisdom to interpret Paul's passage above much differently than we previously might have done. Having previously seen that "matter" was always "feminine" and a "mother"; in fact on her names was "Mary", is expressed generally as "woman" in the above verse.

Answer for yourself: What is this "law"? Wait. Think! It is the Law of Incubation to which all descending Souls had to obey. The purpose of this "incarnation" of "Living Energies" as Souls into "matter" was to redeem that part of the Cosmos, this animal-man who in the fullness of its evolution finally provided a fitting vessel for the tabernacling of the "Deific Mind" as well as the Soul. These descending Souls, along with "the Christ-Mind" had to "die" (be subjected to the physical limitations of "matter") for "Divine Life" and "Deific Mind" to be imparted into the animal-man and his "fleshly matter". This teaching, expressed from nation to nation, in folk-tale and legend galore, in religious myths and metaphors everywhere up until the 2nd century A.D., was the only teaching mankind has ever received by Divine fiat concerning his place and mission in the world. But that was to change and change it did. Sad for us is that when reading these same "myths" in our Bible we have been given a whole different set of instructions by Rome as to who to interpret these same ancient teachings than the ones mankind used for over 10,000 years. And we don't know it and had I not been relentless in my studies to prove beyond any doubt this "fact" to myself then I would never have known the truth myself. The cover-up is immense and truly Rome has deceived the whole world. As mentioned in a prior article when we looked at the 23 Psalm in a new light truly these descending "gods", these "Souls falling into 'matter' and 'material' existence, are now required to 'walk through the valley of the shadow of death'".

Answer for yourself: Where have we read about this before and never knew it? It is all through the Old Testament and the New Testament in hundreds of allegories and metaphors which are mistakenly taken as if "literal-historical" narratives. That is the whole problem, we don't possess enough knowledge and "keys" to recognize them when we read them. The Lazarus story is one great example of hundreds which has been told for thousands and thousands of years; it is the story of the Spiritual Resurrection of "La-Asar", or "the Osiris".

These "descending Living Energies" as they impregnated "matter" were in reality subjected to a "cross" of "flesh" or "matter". This "cross", as shown in two different articles on the uranograph, #16 and #17, teach of this metaphysical intersection of "Divine Living Intelligent Energy" and "matter" awaiting it next evolutionary cycle of "becoming". It is here on this "cross" that this "Living Energy", this "Christ" dies when incarnated into humanity. This is the ancient teaching existing for thousands of year long before the rise of the Roman Church. This incarnation of "Living Energy" into "matter" was called by the ancients the "death" of God and the "dying/rising" of the "gods" or "Living Energies" which Christianity still teaches today as if these were "literal" gods. Oh how great is this darkness to which we have fallen and by that I mean our Christian faith and not as Souls which have fallen into "matter". If you have ever studied our Astronomy-Jesus website, or our First New Testament and Gnosticism website, then you already understand how the ancient were way ahead of us in physics today and used personification, metaphor, allegory, folk-tales, and religious myths to teach this metaphysical truth to humanity of God "falling into material existence" and they did it through the symbol of a "cross" that incorporated two planes of existence; one in Heaven and one on Earth. The descending "god" was crucified on the cross of matter that this animal-man, this mankind might experience Divine Life. This is what truly lies behind our "Jesus Story" which has tragically and grossly been fed to us as a supposed "literal-historical" narrative; an understanding that NEVER existed from the beginning of time until the 2nd century with the rise of the "literalizing" Roman Church which blasphemously "reinterpreted" the whole of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. And we, who line the pews of our Churches, buy Bibles and listen to homiletic sermons by unqualified teachers and pastors who only know denominational rhetoric and not the "keys" to accurately interpreting this ancient sage writings from thousands of years ago.

The ancients taught that the Krst/Karest/Christ and Soul is "crucified on the cross of matter in humanity" (the intersection of "Living Energy" with "matter"). This "cross" become paramount in proper understanding in our Christian theology. We find upon study that the symbol of the cross was everywhere to be discovered in the ancient world. This "cross" was often linked to the Sungods who were "crucified" on the cross as was Jesus in our "Jesus Story". But there was one place that is was conspicuously absent that you would normally expect to find the cross where we cannot find it; a place where it should have been but was not.

Answer for yourself: And where was that? Where did we not find images of "the Cross"? Rarely was the symbol of the cross found in the catacombs where Christians were buried, where it was less frequent as a symbol than others which later dropped out of sight.

Answer for yourself: When in history does scholarship today tell us that the crucifix begin to appear in Christianity? It was late as the sixth century after Christ. Six hundred years pass after the supposed death of Jesus that the "cross" makes its entrance into Christianity as a religious symbol. Today it is everywhere but in emerging Roman Christianity for six hundred years rarely could it be seen. But the cross existed in the world tens of thousands of years before the birth of the the Christ.

The cross is among the oldest and most universal symbols. In preliterate societies it often represented a conjunction of dualities. The horizontal arm was associated with the terrestrial, worldly, feminine, temporal, destructive, and negative, passive, and death, while the vertical arm connoted the celestial, spiritual, masculine, eternal, creative, positive, active, and life. Often symbolic of the four astrological elements of earth, water, fire, and air, a cross was also perceived as the cosmic axis from which radiated the spatial dimensions of height, length, width, and breadth, as well as the directions of north, east, south, and west.

The ankh (crux ansata) was an ancient Egyptian T - shaped cross surmounted with a loop. It symbolized the creative energies of the male and female and the essence of life. The simple T - shaped cross is named for the Greek letter tau. It is often referred to as the Old Testament cross because Moses supposedly placed a brazen serpent on a T cross (Num. 21:6 - 9), and according to legend, the Israelites on Passover eve marked their doors with blood - drawn tau crosses to identify themselves as Yahweh's followers. Another name for the T cross is the crux commissa. Ankh is commonly known to mean life in Ancient Egyptian language. It symbolizes eternal life and also power. Egyptian Gods and Kings are often shown carrying the Ankh to distinguish them from mortals. The loop of the Ankh is held by the Gods. It is associated with Isis and Osiris in the Early Dynastic Period. The Loop of the Ankh also represent the feminine discipline, while the elongated section represent the masculine discipline. These two units come together and form life (the incarnation of the gods/"Living Energies" in "matter").

Remember that behind these "crosses" of all nations lies the idea of the impregnation of "matter" with "Divine Living Energy". In reality it is the symbol of "life" and "incarnation".

You most likely have heard an idea most troubling to your mind and heart; namely, that the whole of the so-called history of the Christ grows out of the Sun-myth stories. Now a myth is the expression of the Idea as it exists in the Heavenly world, and that is always true. The myth comes down then in the pictorial form, and the picture contains much more than the word, the dogma. The picture of a thing tells you much more than a few words describing it. Put a thought into music, and it tells you more of its beauty than if you only described it. Paint it on canvas, carve it in marble, and more of the Idea comes through than in the mere description. And so with myth. The great myth is the truth that God, as a "Living Intelligent Energy", pours out His life into the world; the Sun being but a symbol or representation of this "Living Energy" we call God. God sends a small part of "Himself" into all material existence, or "matter". God, whose body is the Sun, Emanates this life-birthing and sustaining "Living Energy" into the world, supporting, maintaining and vivifying. The Sun-worship of the elder days was not only a collection of stories; it was the very life of the Sun, of the God in the Sun, poured down on and into the worshippers upon Earth. It is the oldest and the mightiest of all religions, the religion of our far-off ancestors in Atlantis even. And that religion taught how the life of God interpenetrates and "incarnated" His world, so that every fragment of the world is vitalized by the Divine Life. That it lives by Him, moves in Him, exists in Him, and if He could cease to think it, would pass away like a shadow of a dream.

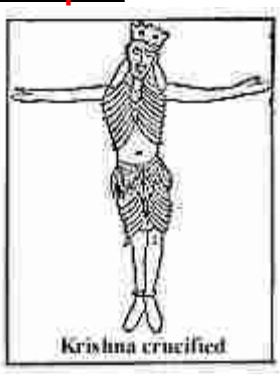
Very important is the next statement. Spiritual elders taught the people, from nation to nation for thousands of years, how the Sun as symbol passed through the stages, year by year, which marked out the ideal human life. The "Pattern" for all human life, existence, and "becoming" was imaged before them in the cycles and "Pattern" of the Sun in its yearly path in the Sky as interpreted through the Equinoxes and Solstices and their effect upon humankind.

Answer for yourself: The Sun is related intimately with the Equinoxes and Solstices. What has this to do with being "alive" or "dead"? What are we missing here?

We are missing the secrets hidden in the "cross". Let me explain. The Equinoxes and Solstices refer to these stages of the Sun's "life cycle" in relation to the Earth, or the Earth in relation to the Sun. We are linked together for all life to exist. We are linked this same way to God as this "Living Energy" in the same way. Notice the cross on the right which adorns many Churches. We have the 2 longer and 2 shorts "beams" of this "cross" which a "solar disk" in the background as seen as a circle. These 2 shorter beams" which are "equal length" are the 2 Equinoxes, one Spring and one Autumn where the amount of "light and darkness" are equal. Then we next have 2 longer "beams"; the longest symbolic for the Summer Solstice when the Sun is the highest in the Sky and the amount of light and life given man is at its fullness and the "shorter beam" which is symbolic of the shortest amount of life and light a year which is the Winter Solstice.

Answer for yourself: What has this to do with the Soul?

Behind such imagery is the Descent of the Soul, along with the "Deific Christ Mind" into "matter" as these Emanated rays of "Living Energy" impregnates "matter" and in so doing experiences its own personal "Winter Solstice" where the "Sun", as symbol of "Living Energy", dies upon incarnation. As the Sun rises and sets, and moves from House to House through the Zodiac as its "ascends" to its zenith in the Sky only to again "descend" to its allegorical death at the Winter Solstice, we see the same "cycle" and "pattern" teaches us of the same cycle and "pattern" for the Soul which is but a smaller "Divine Spark" of "Living Energy" which is symbolized for mankind as the Sun. As the Sun "descends" so does the Soul; as the Sun "ascends" so is to the Soul. Both are "Living Energies" which finds adequate symbolism through the Solar orb of the Sun.



Answer for yourself: Is this why the "Christ" is born at the time of "death" in the Bible, at Christmas or the Winter Solstice, when the "Sun dies for 3 days in darkness" (symbolic of "matter")? Is this why the "Krst/Karest/Christ" is born to "ascend" in life following the its "incarnational death" at the Winter Solstice This "descent" of "Living Energy" is seen in the Autumn Equinox as the Sun "falls" into "incarnational existence" and "death" at the Winter Solstice. It is at the Winter Solstice that the Soul, the "Son of the Sun", can "ascend" to the realization of its "Spiritual birth" which occurs at the Spring Equinox and its further Spiritual maturation and evolution at its Summer Solstice where it merits its next plane of celestial existence as it climbs the Tree of Life. This "incarnation of Living Energy" was depicted by the Soul/god/"Living Energy" being crucified on the cross of "matter" by the ancients. Here we find Bacchus, one of many Pagan Christs, which were crucified on the cross of "matter" as seen on the left. This mind you was long before the repetition and later "literalization" of this same Divine Truth by Rome in their Jesus Christ.

Answer for yourself: Aren't these "keys" wonderful in helping us make right sense of our "Jesus Story"?

Think on this for a second. The "Christ" has to "die" being "impregnated and incarnated" by "crossing into matter" in order that man, in order for the Soul to live Spiritually above the animal nature. This descent into "matter" for both the "Christ Spirit/Mind" and the "Soul" is a "death" for them both; that is why the baby Jesus is born at the Winter Solstice in the New Testament and wrapped in burial clothes (swaddling clothes, mummy clothes). But all Sungods and Pagan Christs fit this "pattern" of Winter Solstice birth, or should I say "died upon descending into matter". That is why the former "Jesus prototype" Bacchus, as another "pagan Christ", is "crucified on the cross of matter" as is all Sungods and later even the Sungod Jesus Christ does the same. Note the icon on the left that tells us the truth about this "crucifixion into matter" of all "Christs". That is why Christ is "crucified" on the "cross of matter". This is the Heavenly Paradox of all ancient religions; a Divine Truth lost to us as Christians since the 2nd century and the rise of Roman Christianity. On the right we see the same metaphysical idea portrayed in "Krishna crucified". In all of these notice the limitations imposed on the "Krst/Karest/Christ" by "matter"; either feet nailed to wood or "matter" or tied together and bound. The ancients understood the "incarnation of Living Energy" into "matter" was a restriction imposed upon "Spirit/Living Energy" and was likened to a "death".

This Sun, born into the weakness of childhood at the Winter Solstice, rising into the strength of manhood at the Spring Equinox, giving of its "life saving Energy" for the benefit of humanity as seen in the harvests and food-chain, ascending into the zenith of Heaven to pour down blessing upon earth at the Summer Solstice in further harvests; descending in the Sky on its way to the Autumn Equinox and finally to its death at the Winter Solstice where it is "reborn"; this is the "Story of the Sun-God" as they called it. This story, told from nation to nation was but a symbol for the "incarnation of the Soul/Christ" into "matter".

But much lies behind this myth. In reality the path of the Sun in the Sky, as it move from Equinox to Solstice in its yearly path, is Nature's picture to mankind of the hidden metaphysical reality of the "Pattern" intended by the Absolute for the very life of this incarnating "Living Energy" we call "the Soul". And that you find in every nation; but more than that you find this SAME story traced fully or partially in the great Scriptures of the world. And much of that great story wound itself round the picture of the Christ as this "descended Living Mind-Energy" which gestates in the "animal-human". This "incarnated Christ" as "Jesus" in the New Testament is not a "historical story" but a "celestial story" and ONLY becomes "historical" in you and me. The ancients taught that this same Divinity, as a germ in us, grows in this "matter" of humanity. What is "death" to this "Christ/Soul" is "life" to the "animal-man" for which they both came to "seek" and "save" what was "lost". Today we live in an age of increasing challenges to the idea of a "historical Christ" and rightfully so. Daily more evidence is amassed proving this Roman deception foisted upon the whole of mankind in their radical reinterpretation of this Divine Ancient Wisdom.

Let us hold our thought as we move to the next article in this series.

ALIVE BUT CONSIDERED AS IF "DEAD": THE TRUTH ABOUT THE INCARNATED SOUL #2

Now let us enlarge our understanding some more as we continue our study of the ancient meaning of the word "death" and "the dead" as used in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which finds its way into our Christian Bibles.

Let us establish right now that this term "death" as used in the Sacred Books of old was never intended to always be interpreted as if always a "literal death" or a "physical death" or a "ceasing to be". Ironically the ancients taught that the "body lives the death of the Soul (its incarnation) and the Soul lives beyond the death of the body". In fact the death of the body is "life again" for the Soul which has struggled in a carnal warfare since the minute of its birth or incarnation into "matter". This struggle was interpreted Spiritually as a "death" for the Soul which "fell from Heaven into the coarseness of "matter". We have studied previously the Law of Incubation and I ask the reader that if he is not familiar with this most important theological dogma that he stop right now and read the article before proceeding. This Law of Incubation bring these descending "Living Intelligent Energies", our Soul and the indwelling "Christ" into "Hades". Hades" is sometimes employed by Christians as a classicizing euphemism for Hell, which otherwise has few of the original attributes of Hades. In classical mythology, the world of the dead or the netherworld has many different names. Though, the ruler of the Underworld was named Hades, the netherworld itself was popularly called Hades. The domain of Hades has many different names, such as Underworld, Hades, Erebus, Tartarus, Elysium and Isles of the Blessed.

Answer for yourself: How can "Hell", as defined in Christian theology, be called the "Isles of the Blessed"?

Something is wrong here in our traditional interpretation of "Hell" as Christianity has fed it to us these last 1,800 years. Hades is a popular name and it is often used interchangeably with the Underworld, for the entire subterranean realm; subterranean realm (the Underworld) refers to the "obscurity" of the abode of the Soul/Christ deep within this fleshly "matter". Important for us to realize is the fact that for these gods, these "Living Intelligent descending Energies", the cycle of incarnations of "Living Energies" into "matter" was allegorically described by the ancients as the descent into Hell.

Answer for yourself: What do we need to learn now?

> This descent was metaphysically actually the Soul's, as well as "the Christ's", crucifixion or "crossing over" into "matter" which was symbolized as their "death and burial". This whole theology of "incarnation" into "matter" was pictured by the ancient Egyptians in their cross, the Ankh. This my dear ones can be found in all ancient literature! We just don't know that what we are reading in our Bibles is quite often meant to be understood "only" allegorically since they were originally myths depicting this metaphysical reality in which we as "Living Energies" ourselves abide.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that restoration of the true meaning of the word "death" as understood originally in the ancient Sacred Scriptures and myths will impact our current understanding as Christians for hundreds of passages, and the ultimate interpretation of the main theses of almost all, if not all, Christian theologies? Once this become apparent to you then we have to begin anew our understanding of the whole of the Bible from the start having now possession of imporant "keys" to its proper interpretation. We will have to start all over from scratch if we ever hope of understaning God's true Divine Message for us that Rome made sure we never knew.

We have to start over from scratch and literally "undo" what Rome has done to these Sacred Scriptures and Sacred Wisdom if we ever want to truly hear the voice of God and his true message to all Creation. That means we have to study for ourselves and quit listening to emotion instead of intellect on our televisions and in our Church pulpits. God gave us a mind that separated us from the animal kingdom and it is time we started using it. We have been literally "brainwashed" in Christianity and by our preachers and in so doing we agree to babble never knowing the heinous things that we say and "believe" that contradicts the Absolute Divine Truths and Laws of this Cosmos established by this Creator in the beginning of existence. God gets credit way to much for our silly and ignorant thoughts and further quoting a forged Christian Bible full of purposeful misquotes, mistranslations, and pure Scriptural inventions accomplishes nothing but the establishment of more darkness; not to mention the utter incapalbeness of our current Spiritual authorities to have a grasp of of the "keys" to this ancient symbolism that lies the pages of our Bible which sadly is taugth as "hitorical-literal".

Moving on we continue to see that the restoration of the original ancient meaning for the word "death"and "the dead" which carries with it the long forgotten "true meaning of the resurrection doctrine" which is the the cornerstone of the major world religions!

Answer for yourself: But resurrection of what; a physical body or a Soul to its new "awakeing"? Where is that "tomb" of which we read in the Bible which is echoed in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom whose gates and bars are to be burst open by a resurrecting Christ? It is on a hillside or in us?

Without a proper knowledge of the ancient religious symbols and their original meaning from these ancient Sacred dogmas and ancient texts, many of which we find repeated in our Bibles, then we have no chance of ever interpreting our current Bibles correctly or ever identifying correctly this "tomb" as our "Earthly body".

The incarnation, for the Soul, was its "death and burial". But it was a "living death". The ancient Egyptian religion and ancient Spiriutal Wisdom from nation to nation teaches this abundantly. It is not incorrect to think of the Soul being "buried alive". The conditions of this incarnation and entombment of the descending and incarnating Soul into this "animal nature" was poetically dramatized down through ages as a type of "death" for this Soul. Failure to understand the ancient and true meaning of the word "death" in the ancient Sacred Books of antiquity has led us to blindly accept the Roman "reinterpretation" of this religious concept and in so doing we degrade the true interpretation of the crucifixion, death and resurrection of Deity in which occurs no where but in our mortal life. This false Roman "historical literalism", as applied to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, has tragically robbed and debased humanity of the true understanding of the very purpose and intention of his own Soulish incarnation.

We have heard Rome our whole lives. It is time now for us to look at what the ancients have to say about this word "death".

When we purview the ancient literature we find that many sages of old have left us witness to the true meaning of the word "death" and "the dead" as it relates to the Soul. Proclus tells us that these incarnating "Living Energies" were forewarned before their embarking upon incarnational experience that their "fall" into flesh would be successful on condition that they achieved it "without merging themselves with the darkness of body." These "Living Energies", in their "incarnational fall", were to make connection with the animal body by means of a linking their "Living Energy" with that of the energies of the nervous system of the animal. At the very core of the animal-body is "electricity" or "energy"; it is this "energy" which animates the whole of mankind and activates this "nervous system". They were thus to merge their "essence" with that of the animal. The "two" essences were to become "one". These "divine fires" of "Living Energy" from the Divine Absolute were to commingle with the "energies" latent in "physical matter" without being conformed into the image projected by this dardkened "matter".

Eph 2:11-14 11 Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; 12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: 13 But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. 14 For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Brought nigh by the blood of Christ? Little do we know that when we read this passage that it reiterates this ancinet Divine Spiritual Wisdom which speaks of "the crucifixion of God in matter"; a process that reconciles the animal nature of "gentiles" with that of the "enlightened circumcsion" of the flesh. Metaphysical to its very core, we are speaking of the taming of the "animal nature" in mankind by the "awakening of the indwelling Horus or Krst/Karest/Christ" in mankind where the Divine Spirit/Soul in man subjugates the "evil inclanation" in mankind and brings it into harmony with the Divine Will of God and His plan for the cosmos. Ancient Spiritual Egypt taught this from the beginning of time in the coming into harmony of Set (the evil nature) with that of Horus (the Divine nature of the incarnated Soul/Spirit) as seen in the image on the right. And it lays right before us in our Bibles and we never grasp the true idea behind such Spiritual Symbolism. The incarnation of "the god into matter" was likened to a "death" of "the god" as seen in our exegesis of Phillipians 2:8:

Phil 2:5-8 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

The "Divine" in mankind is not to be conformed into the "image of matter"; rather the reverse is actually to occur. "Matter" is to be conformed into the image of "Spirit".

Rom 8:29 29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. (KJV)

1 Cor 15:49 49 And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the

heavenly. (KJV)

Col 3:5-10 5 Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry: 6 For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience: 7 In the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them. 8 But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. 9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; 10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: (KJV)

To fall into this incarnation and "neglect" the very purpose of this "incarnation" is termed by a familiar word we have heard our whole lives. That word is "sin" and such an uncompleted task ends in more "death" (repeated incarnational cycles).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that there were always two deaths spoken of in the books of the past?

There was a "death", in the first place, for these "descending Living Energies" to become immersed into fleshly existence. This was the first death. But to sink deeper into darkness of animal sensualism to such a degree that made a return to their Heavenly state next to impossible. This was called the "second death". It was this "second death" of which we are warned in Scripture and which every Soul stood in fear and terror in the ancient Sacred Books.

Rev 2:11 11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. (KJV)

Rev 20:14 14 And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. (KJV)

Rev 21:8 8 But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: And what is this "second death" again?

This is the repeated cycle of "incarnation" where the "death" of "carnal existence" again was a stumbling stone which the Soul has to master in order to experience advancement in its Spiritual evolution and not return again to this "living death" in animal existence. Hence, reincarnation actually means rebirth of tendencies. As desires are varying and unlimited, the creation of forms as bodies will also be innumerable and eternal. In general, desires are unending but in specific cases -as in a liberated soul- they have an end. The teachings of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, much of which is found in our Bibles, offer means of escape from the sufferings of life and the endless reincarnations

Answer for yourself: Then, is this "first death" the "incarnation" of the Soul into this human body which is ruled by the "animal nature"? Yes.

Answer for yourself: Then, is this "second death" the result of the Soul "living in bondage" to the "animal nature" during this incarnational experience? Yes, again. It is this "second death" then that brings more death in that the Soul would never, by such choices and life experiences, ever take the next step in its Spiritual evolution and be resided to repeat more incarnational cycles of "death" and Earthly suffering.

Apuleius says that when the Soul, in its descent, approached the "bounds of death", or nears "Earthly incarnation, that at the very moment of this "impregnation" that a partial loss of consciousness occurs to each Soul. This "loss of Divine consciousness" is called by the ancient writers a "swoon."

The ancients both spoke and wrote of this phenomena quite often. We first look at the Tibetan Book of the Dead. The Bardo Thodol also spelled Bardo Thotrol, translated as The Tibetan Book of the Dead, for centuries it was passed down orally. This ancient text was first put into written form by the legendary Padma Sambhava in the 8th century A.D. Translated, Bardo Thodol means "liberation by hearing on the after death plane". This scripture from Tibetan Buddhism was traditionally read aloud to the dying (those alive but approaching a physical death) just like The Egyptian Book of the Dead was read to the dying in order to help them attain liberation when they, as Souls, ascend after the demise of the physical body. It teaches that awareness once freed from the body, creates its own reality like that of a dream. Since the awareness is still in shock of no longer being attached to and shielded by a body, it needs guidance and forewarning so that key decisions that lead to enlightenment are made. The Tibetan Book of the Dead teaches how one can attain Heavenly realms by recognizing the enlightened realms as opposed to being drawn into the realms of seduction that pull incorporeal awareness into cyclic suffering of repeated "incarnation fleshly experiences". An interesting piece of information showing the connection to the New Testament and its later "reinterpretation" by Rome is the fact that many of the concepts found in the Tibetan Book of the Dead can be found in The Gospel of Mary Magdalene; further proof that before the rise of the Roman Church the earliest "Christians" were Gnostics.

Early references to reincarnation in the New Testament were deleted in the 4th century by Emperor Constantine when Christianity became the official religion of the Roman Empire. Could it be that the emperor had felt that the concept of reincarnation was threatening to the stability of the empire? Citizens who believed that they would have another chance to live might be less obedient and law abiding than those who believed in a single Judgement Day for all? In the 6th century, in the year 553 A. D., the 2nd Council of Constantinople officially declared reincarnation a heresy and the doctrine of reincarnation was officially banished by the Christian Church. It was banished for no other reason than it was considered to be too much of an influence from the East. The decision was intended to enable the church to increase its power at that time, and to tighten its hold upon the human mind by telling people their salvation had to be accomplished in one incarnation and one lifetime, and if they didn't make it, they would go to Hell. During the same Early Christian Era leading up to the Council of Constantinople, notable Church fathers like Origen, Clement of Alexander and St. Jerome accepted and believed in the reincarnation principle. So did the Gnostics and the Christian Cathars of Italy and Southern France and they were severely brutalized for their belief in reincarnation as late as the 12th century!

Answer for yourself: So them, was reincarnation removed from the earliest Christian dogmas for politial and not Spiritual reasons?

"In the Bardo Thödol the deceased (the descending god) is represented as retrograding step by step into the lower and lower states of consciousness. Each step downward is preceded by a swooning into unconsciousness; and possibly that which constitutes his mentality on the lower levels of the Bardo is some mental element or compound of mental elements . . . separated during the swooning from higher and more spiritually enlightened elements. . . ." (The Tibetan Book of the Dead, 44).

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this "swooning" on the downward path to Earthly incarnational "death" is likened to a "falling asleep" by the ancient writers?

Answer for yourself: Do you recall in the New Testament, in fact in the very Gnostic Gospel of John, that Martha and Mary sent a man to Jesus who told him, "Lord Lazarus, your friend, is sick"? What is the significance that the name of this person who calls out to "the Christ" for help in this "death" is another "Mary" or "Meri" or "Mud" or "Matter" or "Mother Nature"? Is "matter" asking for help toward its ultimate redemption? Yes, it is.

Answer for yourself: Why was this not a "Helen" or "Rebecca" who calls out for help? Why is it always a "Mary" or "matter" that calls out to the Christ for help? THINK!

Answer for yourself: In this story is this "cry for help" in "redemption" meant to be "matter" and not a historical person? Have we lost another "key" to correctly interpreting the ancient Spirtual Wisdom we read in our Bibles never aware of what we are reading? THINK!

Answer for yourself: Do you recall what "the Christ" says when told Lazarus was "dead"? What did he say?

[11] After he had said this, he went on to tell them, "Our friend Lazarus has fallen asleep; but I am going there to wake him up."

Answer for yourself: When confronted by "Jesus' assertion that Lazarus was not dead but only sleeping, and needed only to be awakened, then is this the very same condition that describes the Soul and not a supposed "literal-historical" fleshly body of a deceased man? This is proof positive that we are dealing with another allegory again and not a "historical" or "literal" physical account or miracle story was we have been taught over and over again by Christianity our whole lives. This again is the ancient Spirutal Wisdom of ancient Egypt and later Greek philosophy restated in its purest thought. The miracle stories in our New Testament are anything but that; they are allegories ignorantly read and interpreted as if "literal" and "historical"; ever one of them. And behind every one of them is not a "historical-literal" anything; they are personfications of the metaphyiscal reality which we as Souls find ourselves at this present state of existence and evolution. One only has to read some great books on the ncinet Egypt Religion as explained and "simpled down for us " by Alvin Kuhn, Gerald Massey, Thomas Taylor, Plato, Proculus, Plotinus, or some of the earliest Church Fathers like Origen, Clement of Alexandria, St. Jerome, and others to see this for yourself. Awake thou who sleepest from Sunday to Sunday and stop thwarting your Soulish incarnation! Learn the truth that you were never meant to here.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that this same thing is said of the earth-bound Osiris in ancient Egypt? Are you aware that Osiris is told to "awaken" from "the dead"?

"That is Osiris, who is not dead but sleeping in AnnU (this is the Biblical Betany), the place of his leisure, awaiting the call that bids him come forth to day."

Massey, in his Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 846, states:

"Osiris in Annu, like Lazarus in Bethany, was not dead but sleeping. In the text of Har-Hetep (The Egyptian Book of the Dead, Ch. 99), the Speaker, who personates Horus (the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ), is he who comes to awaken Asar (Osiris) out of his sleep. Also in one of the earlier funeral texts it is said of the sleeping Asar: 'The Great One waketh, the Great One riseth . . .' The Manes (Spirits/Souls of the dead) in Amenta (the Egyptian Hades, the realm of incarnational Souls) were not looked upon as dead, but sleeping. Hence Horus comes to awaken the sleepers in their coffins." Notice "asleep in your coffin" is the same as "asleep in the body"!

Answer for yourself: Every heard this idea in the New Testament?

No wonder Paul admonishes us to "awake thou that sleepest" and "arise from the dead" while we are yet "alive" (ironically "alive physically" but "Soulishly dead").

Horus says (The Egyptian Book of the Dead, Ch. 64):

"I go to give movement to the Manes (Spirits/Souls of the dead); I go to comfort him who is in a swoon,"*--showing the perfect matching of Egyptian and Tibetan "necrological science. No wonder both are called "The Book of the Dead".

Answer for yourself: Why are these "Bibles" called "books of the dead"?

They are Sacred Books intended to awaken a "slumbering dead Soul" encased in a mummy of "matter".

The ancients taught that this swoon and loss of Divine consciousness attending each further step downward into "matter" deepens by stages until it amounts to the full "sleep" or "dream" of mortal existence caused by the influence of the sensual animal nature upon the Divine Spirit/Soul. The vivid awareness of existence which we feel so positively is to the ancient sages only a dull slumber and stupor in comparison with that life of ecstatic realism from which we "fell" and "descended" from Heaven as "dying gods".

Thomas Taylor, a famous expounder of Plato and Greek Platonism, states in his Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries that the Soul "in the present life might be said to die, as far as it is possible for a Soul to die." He asserts directly that the Soul "suffers death through this union with the body."

So also in Plato's Gorgias Socrates is represented as saying: "I should not wonder if Euripides spoke the truth when he says, 'Who knows whether to live is not to die, and to die is not to live?' And we perhaps are in reality dead. For I have heard from one of the wise that we are now dead, that the body is our sepulchre, and that the part of the soul in which the desires are contained is of such a nature that it can be persuaded, and hurled upward and downward."

By "Death" material existence is intended, in a figurative sense, precisely as Heraclitus says, speaking of unembodied souls, "We live their death and die their life." Heraclitus was the most important philosopher between Pythagoras and Parmenides (540 B.C.E. to 480 B.C.E.) . He goes on to say: "For psyches (Souls) it is death to become water (the "material body/matter" is almost all water), and for water death to become earth. Water comes into existence out of earth, and psyche out of water." (DK22 B36)

Answer for yourself: Then in the New Testament is this physical world constantly referred to as "Death," and its inhabitants as "the dead," who have to be born "from above"? Yes. One only has to read John 3:1-21 to see that is that "one must be "born spiritually, before they become 'living'."

The more we study the more we see that this incarnate life of ours is in reality our "death" as it was described by the ancient Spiritual Masters and the Sacred Books of antiquty. The ancients beliefed that the Soul was confined in the body as in a prison. This was a kind of death to the higher form of life that the Soul is capable of experiencing in this life. The ancients likened evil to this condition of Soulish incarnation, the Soul was thought of dwelling in the human body as in a prison or a grave. This "earthly life" was for them more of a dream and non-reality than an actual reality. Knowldge of the Soul and its present state was seen as the cure and the necessary instruction of the Soul to "rise from the death" while alive in this body of "death". That being so, then release from it must presuppose a liberation from the "dead." In this regard the vast majority of Christian pastors and teachers show little if any evidence of having the remotest apprehension of textual meanings pertaining to this ancient interpretation of the verses they teach incorrectly to their flocks.

Plotinus, in his Enneads I, lviii, states very clearly that: "When the Soul had descended into generation (from this first divine condition) she partakes of evil and is carried a great way into a state the opposite of her first purity and integrity, to be entirely merged in it . . . and death to her is, while baptized or immersed in the present body, to descend into matter and be wholly subjected to it. . . . This is what is meant by the falling asleep in Hades, of those who have come there."

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that "incarnation" of the Soul in accomplished in "Hades", the realm of the "dead"? Did not again notice that this is not "the physically dead" but Hades refers to the "Spiritually Dead" who are yet "alive physically"?

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the very important words "baptized" and "immersed" in the above quote by Plotinus, the famous Neo-Platonist? Are you aware that you have read this your whole life and never put it together correctly. As the "Krst/Karest/Christ" is incarnated in this body of death, then likewise as Souls we are the same?

Rom 6:3 3 Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death (the curicifixion of 'god' in matter as taught by the ancient Spiritual Wisdom)? (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is it possible that the word "baptized" was originally understood to refer to the incarnation of the Divine Soul-Christ "into matter" and later it was changed by the Roman Church? Did you make the connection between "incarnation" and being immersed or plunged into the watery condition of the body, the womb for the Soul's maturation? This is the whole of the meaning of the baptism in ancient theology!

Virgil the Roman poet, reiterates the prior Greek philosophy when he says:

"Souls are deadened by earthly forms and member subject to death"

Next we look to Pythagoras, which said according to Clement, "that whatever we see when awake is death; and when asleep a dream."

The great Plato says: "men are places in a body as in a prison" and he considered "the body as the sepulchre of the Soul". Plato said living as bodies is like an oyster in its shell.

Milton, who wrote Paradise Lost, mentions Adam's astonishment when on being driven out from the garden under condemnation of "death" that our first father found this sentence of "death" as nothing more than a lingering existence, not a destruction of his conscious life, as he had expected. He discovered that his "death" meant not his extinction, but a less vivid type of "life". Adam found himself condemned to a "living death". He was made to live and "suffer death", not be annihilated.

We next look at Thomas Taylor once again who says: "For the Soul, coming hither, as she imparts life to the body, so she partakes through this of a certain privation of life, but this is an evil. When separated, therefore, from the body, she lives in reality; for she dies here, through participating of privation of life, because the body become the source of evils. And hence it is necessary to subdue the body".

The ideas I have expressed can be found in the ancinet Egyptian Religion and later Greek philosophy which again was instructed by ancient Egypt. The Greek mind considered all life resulting from the streams of vivific energy flowing forth from God, or "the One", the infinite fount of all things. These streams of "Living Energy" and Cosmic Forces, sprang outward from the zenith of all "Spiritual Living Energy" and suffered diminution of their power as they preceeded farther and farther from its primal source, until at last they came to a pause in the inert arms of "matter". Their living quality was countered and finally stifled in the meshes of "matter", where the "fall" and downard emanation came to a "dead" halt or suffered "death". This "dying away" of a vibration or voice of other sound, or the ripple made by casting a stone in the pond, is allegorical of the "type of death" here signified in the ancient Egyptian Religion and Greek philosophy. Life comes out from its First Cause and meets its death in the bosm of "matter". Here again though we are required to distinguish between this "death" of a power and force and its absolute annihilation or extinction. Life was merely held at bay in the grip of an element able to since its vibration and activity. It has not ceased "to be". Its powers had only gone into latency. They would emerge again.

Such a thing as "death" in the sence of total annihilation either of "being" or "matter" is impossible. That which "is" cannot "cease to be". That only which can happen to it is a change of state or transmutation of form. It can only come into manifestation and go out again, yet never is not again. This is the Law of the Conservation of Energy which is a Law of the Cosmos. Thus this "death" is but the passing from a more to a less vivid and active state of manifestation. "Death" is accurately defined as the less heightened, less vibrant, condation of any form of being or life. This fact gave solid philosophical base for the re-establishment of the ancient meaning of "death" as found in the world's Sacred Books and Spiritual Wisdom that existed before the rise of Roman Christianity and its radical re-interpreation in the 2nd century.

It is sometimes true that old-fashioned usage of the word "death" can be made also to apply to the period following the occurrence of the death of the body in its common meaning, or the demise of the body (termed the "deceased"). Incarnation was understood by not only the ancient religions of the world but the earliest Christians, as seen in previous quotes in a prior article, as a continuing experience for each individual Soul that eclipses the death of the body. This periodical rhythm of release from the body and re-incarnation and "immersion once again into a body of 'death'" was likened in the ancient Sacred Books and Bibles of the world to the similar "Pattern" of nightly sleep that breaks the continuity of the awareness of daily experience. For us I think that we all would agree that the most important parts of our Earthly existence occurs during our "waking" days of existence on this Earth. Yet the nights when "asleep" are times but interludes of rest and renewals of strength for both body and Soul.

This period of discarnate manifestation of the Soul was understood by these ancient Spiritual Masters as times allotted for the Soul to examine this past life and the effect it has on its overall Spiritual development. Theologically, "death" was the bodily life on earth, but this death was comprised of both sleeping and waking, living and dying. Known by these mystics is that all activity of the Soul while tabernacling in this "animal body" during the waking phase of this "incarnational death" was the alone determinative of its next destiny.

Thomas Taylor quotes, in his Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. 7, that the priests said: "that the Soul is buried in body as in a sepulchre." This is in complete agreement to the prior quotes of Plato.

Alexander Wilder, in a note to Taylor's Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries (p. 31), comments: "Hades . . . supposed by classical students to be the region or estate of departed Souls, . . . is regarded by Mr. Taylor and other Platonists as the human body, which they consider to be the grave (incarnational existence) and place of punishment for the Soul (Karmic retribution)."

Proclus, commenting on Plato, writes that the Soul brings life to the body, and goes on to say: "she becomes herself situated in darkness; and by giving life to the body, destroys both herself and her own intellect (in as great a degree as these are capable of receiving destruction). For thus the mortal nature participates of intellect, but the intellectual part, of death, and the whole, as Plato observes in the Laws, becomes a prodigy composed of the mortal and the immortal, of the intellectual and that which is deprived of intellect. For this physical law which binds the Soul to the body is the death of the immortal life, but vivifies the mortal body."

Wilder in his Introduction to Taylor's Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries comments again: "The Soul was believed (by the Greeks) to be a composite nature, linked on the one side to the eternal world, emanating from God, and so partaking of Divinity. On the other hand, it was also allied to the phenomenal and external world, and so liable to be subjected to passion, lust and the bondage of evils. This condition is denominated (termed) generation; and is supposed to be a kind of death to the higher form of life. Evil is inherent in this condition; and the Soul dwells in the body as in a prison or a grave".

We need not look any further or deeper into Greek philosophy or religion for such ideas but to ancient Egypt which is the fountain head for all such metaphysical ideas and religious dogmas. Having seen the lustrous presentation of the "death" philosophy in Greek systems so far, we turn to Egypt and Kamite knowledge found in voluminous presentations of such theology which stagger the imagination. The great Egyptian Religion use a variety of symbols, metaphors, and personifications to personate the incarnating god and "Living Energy" into a body of "death".

We will pick up this study in the next article in this series.

ALIVE BUT CONSIDERED AS IF "DEAD": THE TRUTH ABOUT THE INCARNATED SOUL #3

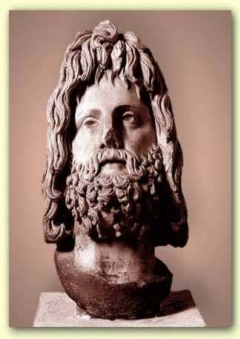
We mentioned earlier in studying the Greek philosophers and their understanding of the words "death" and "the dead" that they inherited such metaphysical ideas from ancient Egypt which is the fountain head for all such metaphysical ideas and religious dogmas that have encircled the globe since then. Having seen the illumination presentation of the "death" philosophy in Greek systems so far, we turn to Egypt and Kamite knowledge found in voluminous presentations of such theology which absolutely staggers the imagination. The great Egyptian Religion used a variety of symbols, metaphors, and personifications to personate the incarnating god and "Living Energy" into a body of "death". Lets see what they had to say about "death" and "the dead".

In the ancient Egyptian Religion we find different "neteru" like Osiris, or Ra himself, or Tum, Atum or Horus taking the leading role in relaying this metaphysical truth concerning "death" and its relationship to the Soul's incarnation into "matter". There are the two characters which we meet most often, the "Speaker" and the "Manes", or the Souls or Spirits of "the dead" in The Egyptian Book of the Dead. These "Manes" appear to be distinctly the human Soul.

Answer for yourself: Who are these Manes and "Spirits of the dead"? It is "the Soul" incarnated into "dead matter"; the "dead but alive" in the sepulcher of the body. Sometimes this "Soul" is entitled and represented as the "deceased," again we find them called the "Osirified deceased." Besides this, we find the names of four or more Kings which are used to symbolize these "walking dead" or "Living Energies" in "matter". We encounter this Divine Concept under the names Unas, Ani, Pepi and Teta, and frequently with "the" prefixed as in "the Unas", "the Ani", "the Pepi", and "the Teta".

It is of major importance that we understand the Egyptian symbolism or else all hope of elucidating the truth escapes us. Therefore, we begin by stating that the central god figure in Egyptian religion, Osiris, the Father, in distinction from Horus, the Son, is consistently assigned the functions, prerogatives and sovereignty of the "King of the dead." He is hailed in hundreds of passages as the Ruler of the Underworld, or as Lord of Amenta (Amenti, Amentiu), the Egyptian Hades, the correct locating of which region in theology is one of the major purposes of these articles. We will deal exclusively with Amenta in the next series of articles. Osiris is paralleled to the Greek Pluto, ruler of Hades, the dark Underworld. This "Hades", this gloomy, black, depressing, desolate, joyless, dreary realm so often mentioned and mistaken in Christian theology is actually our Earth. This realization has never once dawned upon the the vast majority of Christian pastors, teachers, professors, or acclaimed self-proclaimed Christian scholars namely because of their short-sightedness in failing to seriously study much of anything seriously that is not "Christian" or that is not filtered through or approved by their denomination.

Osiris is the "Speaker" and the "Manes," these Spirits/Souls of the dead (incarnated Souls) are the incarnating "gods" and "Living Energies" which "fell from Heaven" into this body of "death". Thus Osiris is truly the King of the realm of the dead. For we, living and breathing humanity, are those "dead", and the "god" within us came to rule this kingdom, this animal-nature, according to the mysterious meanings behind the often mistaken religious texts of almost every World Religion and their Sacred Books written since ancient Egypt.



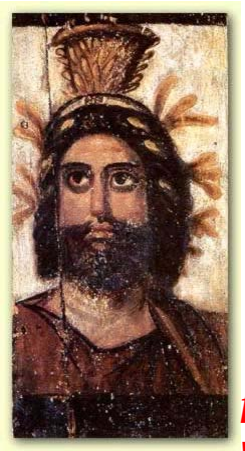
Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the Egyptians called the coffins of their deceased "the chest of the living"? One only has to examine Gerald Massey's Ancient Egypt, The Light of the World, p. 152, to see this for yourself.

E.H. Wallis Budge says something very important that we must take notice of: "About the middle of the Ptolemaic period (332 BC to 30 BC) the attributes of Osiris were changed, and after his identification with Serapis, i.e., Pluto, the god of death, his power and influence declined rapidly, for he was no longer the god of life. In the final state of the cult of Osiris and Isis, the former was the symbol of death and the latter the symbol of life" (Budge, Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, II, p. 306).

Answer for yourself: Who is this Serapis?

He was a composite of several Egyptian and Hellenistic deities who were introduced to the world at the beginning of the Ptolemaic (Greek) Period in Egypt during the reign of Ptolemy I, though his legacy lasted well into the Roman period. Thus, Serapis was meant to form a bridge between the Greek and Egyptian religion in a new age in which their respective gods were bought face to face with each other, so that both Egyptians and Greeks could find union in a specific supreme entity.

Linguistically, the god's name is a fusion of Osiris and the bull Apis, which by the Greek period might be said to have represented the essence of Egyptian religion. In fact, a cult of this combination god, named Osirapis (or Userhapi, Asar-Hapi), had existed in Egypt prior to the rule of the Ptolemies. Osirapis was basically the sacred bull of Memphis after its death. According to the hieroglyphic texts which were found on stelae and other objects in the Serapeum at Sakkara, Egypt, established long before the Greek Period, Apis is called "the life of Osiris, the lord of heaven, Tem {with} his horns {in} his head" and he is said to "give life, strength, health, to thy nostrils for ever."



Elsewhere from the 18th Dynasty, Osirapis is described as, "the great god, Khent, Amentet, the lord of life forever," Apis and Osiris were joined together by the priests of Memphis, where the attributes of Apis had been made to assume a funeral character and hence recognized as a god of the Underworld. On a monument of the 19th Dynasty, Apis is said to be "the renewed life of Ptah," and in an inscription of the 25th Dynasty he is called the "second Ptah." In the same text we have a mention of the "temple of Asar-Hapi (Osirapis)," and here it is clear that his identity had been merged with that of Osiris. The identification of Apis with Osiris was easy enough, because one of the most common names of Osiris was "Bull of the West". Apis was, in fact, believed to be animated by the soul of Osiris, and to be Osiris incarnate. The appearance of a new Apis was regarded as a new manifestation of Osiris upon earth.

Answer for yourself: How was Serapis associated with early Christianity?

Serapis may have finally had certain ties with the early Christian community. There were certainly some similarities between Serapis and the Hebrew God. Serapis was a supreme god, and it seems that some early worshippers of Christ amongst the Gentiles could have possibly worshipped Serapis either purposefully, or confusing him with Christ, though the confusion seems more likely to have been one of language.

> Now watch this as it will go a long way to confirm my statements of Rome later "reinterpreting" the ancient Spiritual Wisdom when they later took the earliest Gnostic understanding of "the Christ" and "literalized it" and "historicized" it beginning in the 2nd century. Before that time the earliest Christians accepted and believed this metaphysical understanding of the "Horus/Christ" which dwelled in the depth of man's fleshly body. But that would change. Notice if you will a correspondence of Emperor Hadrian refers to Alexandrian worshippers of Serapis calling themselves *"Bishops of Christ":

'Egypt, which you commended to me, my dearest Servianus, I have found to be wholly fickle and inconsistent, and continually wafted about by every breath of fame. The worshipers of Serapis (here) are called Christians, and those who are devoted to the god Serapis (I find), call themselves Bishops of Christ.' Hadrian to Servianus, 134 A.D. (Quoted by Giles, ii p86). Notice the date being 134 A.D.

I say again, please notice the date, 134 A.D. Hadrian became Emperor on the death of Trajan, in August, 117 AD. One would think that as "Christians" that worship would be directed toward Jesus of Nazareth had he been a real historical person as we are taught today; but Hadrian says different. These earliest Gnostic Chrestians or Christians were worshipping facets of the Egyptian Religion; the combination of Osiris and Apis. Before you jump to conclusions one needs to understand how Apis bulls related to the knowledge of the Cosmos and the coming of "the Christ" in the Age of Taurus. This "Krst" or "Christ" will come again in the Age of Aries as well as the Age of Pisces and will come again soon in the Age of Aquarius. God's Christ was always understood to have a different appearance to mankind with each changing of the Age which occurred every 2,160 years. We are speaking of the Precession of the Equinox and the changing of the Age of Taurus, Aries, and Pisces. We are speaking of the metaphysical understanding of God and His "Krst/Karest/Christ" and not a literal-historical person. Had Jesus been a historical person then we would not expect to find Christians worshipping Serapis as they were.

Answer for yourself: Let that sink in while we look back at the changing of the attributes of Osiris. What impact did this changing of the attributes of Osiris have upon the worship of God through the symbol of Osiris? Why is this so important?

First of all Osiris (Greek language), or as variously transliterated in the Egyptian language as Asar, Aser, Ausar, or Ausare is the Egyptian God of the "dead" and the "Underworld". Now we have already made the connection that the "dead" and the "underworld" referred to the "incarnated Souls in bodies of death". Thus Osiris is the Egyptian God of the "Living Energies" who are referred to as if "dead" due to their incarnational state in "deadened matter". This change in the attributes of Osiris whereby he is no longer considered the God of "life" (on Earth) but the "dead" does not forebode what Budge supposes, but quite the contrary. Budge missed it. This changing of the theological concepts and "reinterpretation" of Osiris as the Egyptian God of "the dead" hints at the fact that the Egyptian conception of the character of Osiris as Lord of the Underworld of incarnational death began to weaken in the later days, as foreign influences crept in, and the profound esoteric meaning of the word "death" and "the dead" became obscured. Up until this time the ancient had always known that the word "death" and "the dead" has referred to the incarnational Soul's life upon the Earth. With the influx of foreign nations this understanding begins to erode. The gods influence as Lord of Death (really of incarnation life) declined rapidly at this period, not because of the ascription to him of a new and untrue character, but because of the decay of the true comprehension and understanding of ancient symbolism that identified his place and function in the pantheon of God's "neteru". Mankind began, in parallel to the decline and Hellenization of ancient Egypt, began to lose the arcane and ancient Spiritual understanding of the original meaning of "death" and "the dead" gradually as had been used in the Sacred Books of old. His influence in his long-lasting office decayed because knowledge of him in that role had decayed and been lost. Sadly, many such misapprehensions connected to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom exist in contemporary Christian theology today simply because the "keys" so necessary for correct understanding of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom have been lost over the last 2,000 years.

Now watch this. Proof that what I am teaching is the truth is easily given by looking that examples where the word "death" in the ancient usage did not imply extinction. The Manes, or Spirits of the "dead" (Souls) in The Egyptian Book of the Dead (Ch. 30 A) says: "After being buried on earth, I am not dead in Amenta." Amenta we previously saw was the "Earthly body of death and flesh for the Soul". Horus knows that though he enters the realm of the dead (incarnational existence), he does not suffer annihilation. Even though, as he adds, he is "buried in the deep, deep grave," (of incarnational existence), he will not be destroyed there. He will rise out of the grave of the (living) body in his final resurrection.

We see over and over, from nation to nation, from passage to passage, from religion to religion, that the term "dead" refers to living inhabitants on Earth and not the Spirits of the departed of the deceased. But that will slowly change with the Hellenization of the world. Such a passage as the following is but more testimony that the application of the term "dead" was often used in referral to the living inhabitants on earth and not to the spirits of the deceased. Budge again says: "The peoples that have long been dead (?) come forth with cries of joy to see thy beauties every day."

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the "?" in the above quote from Budge? It must have been embarrassing for Budge to do this but it only goes to show you that even this scholar and Egyptologist does not understand what he is writing about since not being able to understand the term "dead" correctly. He is confused but he is not alone. Simply, the above quote refers to resurrection. Another text says: Tanenet is the burial-place of Osiris."

Answer for yourself: What is "Tanenet"? Tanenet, along with Aukert, Shekhem, Abydos, Tattu, Amenta and half a dozen others, is a designation for the Earth as the place of burial for the Soul living in death.

Related with the idea of death is the presumption of burial in a tomb, grave, coffin or sepulcher. Evidence of the prominence of these burial terms in relation to the descent into Earthly life is not absent in the old texts. The matter is not left in any state of doubt or confusion however. A sentence from Cockers Greek Philosophy speaks in terms of unmistakable directness: "The Soul is now dwelling in the grave which we call the body" (Thomas Taylor, Eleusianian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. 91. ff). Here is indeed the undebatable clarification of that poetic imagery, the confusion and chaos of which with the natural fact of bodily decease has cost Christianity its heritage of wisdom.

In The Egyptian Book of the Dead we find that Osiris is called the god who "descended into Hades, was dead and buried" in Amenta. Notice that "Hades" is the same place as "Amenta". Massey's concise statement covering the point is: "The buried Osiris represented the god in matter;" not in a hillside grave. The hillside grave, however, was the typography used to designate the non-historical burial in the body.

Massey, in his Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 706, states: "In the astronomical mythology the earth was the coffin of Osiris, the coffin of Amenta, which Set, the power of darkness, closed upon his brother when he betrayed him to his death". If one is not familiar with the "Osiris Story" I suggest that you research it and come to understand it as it lies behind all the world religions of today in one way or the other. Massey goes on to say that "The coffin of Osiris is the earth of Amenta" (Ibid., p. 868).

Chapter 39 in The Egyptian Book of the Dead contains a plea for the welfare of the incarnated Soul: "Let not the Osiris-Ani, triumphant, lie down in death among those who lie down in Annu, the land wherein Souls are joined unto their bodies."

Answer for yourself: Where was Lazarus buried? In Bethany. Where was Osiris raised from the dead by his Son, Horus? In Beth-anu. Is the Egyptian "Beth-anu" the same place we read in the New Testament called "Bethany"? Yes it is. The Gnostic pictures in the Roman catacombs suffice to prove the identity between the two. They show that Lazarus was buried as a mummy, and that he rose again in mummy-form. Thus the dead Osiris of Egypt, El-Asar or Laz-arus, as portrayed in Rome, and the story of the death, burial, and resurrection are the same wheresoever and howsoever that story may be told. There truly is nothing new under the Sun and we read Egyptian Religion all through our Bibles and never have a clue to this truth. Sadly we read it with Rome's later "reinterpretation" which destroys the Divine Truths behind it.

Thus it is quite apparent that the land in which Souls lie down in "death" is this old Earth of ours, our clay bodies. This is the lost meaning of "death" and "the dead" as used in the ancient Sacred Books the world over. For nowhere else in this Cosmos are Souls joined unto fleshly bodies but on this Earth! The failure of theologians to understand properly the symbolism attached to the word "death" has forced them to seek a locale in various subterranean worlds whose place is found at last only in their own imaginations. Not understanding the word "death" and the realm to which it referred theologians were forced to look to the interlude between "lives" as being the locale to which practically all religious values were thrown when the esoteric knowledge and the "keys" to its interpretation was lost. The meaning of "death", instead of an Earthly incarnation, was moved to the realm following the time after the deceased body. It does not belong there. This is the "resurrection" of Soul from death to which again the original meaning was lost. We got it just backwards due to the loss of the "keys" to properly understanding the ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom. Simply said the meaning of all religion was catapulted from Earth where it properly belongs and where alone it is true to Heaven, when its meaning has little use for Earthly humanity.

Horus says: "I directed the ways of the god to his tomb in Peqar...and I caused gladness to be in the dwellers in Amenta when they saw the Beauty as it landed in Abydos" (Budge, Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, II, p. 9).

Answer for yourself: If Hades and Amenta is the same as Hell as many teach today then how in the world can "gladness" be the experience of those who dwell in a burning Hell? Maybe they should read The Egyptian Book of the Dead for themselves before they write any more books and make some simple discoveries of their own instead of parroting what others have said who again walk in gross darkness about what they write.

Answer for yourself: What is Abydos? Abydos was claimed to be the place of entry to the lower world where the "dead" lived, but in this use it was another of those transfers of uranographic locality to a town on the map in some way appropriately symbolizing the spiritual idea involved. There was no actual entrance to an actual underworld at Abydos (or anywhere else), but to complete the astral typology a temple, tomb and deep well (of great symbolic value) had been constructed there to the god Osiris. Abydos was mythically and symbolically the door of entry to the lower world, or realm of death, Amenta, or the bodily incarnation. Thus Abydos was significant in historical times as the main cult center of Osiris, the lord of the netherworld. At Abydos, the burial place of Osiris, thus we find the symbolic city for the entrance into the Underworld or the Earthly incarnation of Souls into "matter". Festivals and the passion plays of Osiris' life and death (the Soul's incarnation) were performed here from about the 12th Dynasty (1985-1795 B.C.E.) until the Christian era. The other nations would have the same mystery plays of the Soul's incarnation into the death of "matter". The Eleusinian Mysteries, held annually in honor of Demeter and Persephone, who "descended into Hades" (the Soul's incarnation into "matter") were the most sacred and revered of all the ritual celebrations of ancient Greece. They were instituted in the city of Eleusis, some twenty-two kilometers west of Athens, possibly as far back as the early Mycenaean period, and continued for almost two thousand years. Large crowds of worshippers from all over Greece (and later, from throughout the Roman empire) would gather to make the holy pilgrimage between the two cities and and participate in the secret ceremonies, generally regarded as the high point of Greek religion. As Christianity began to spread, the Mysteries were condemned by the early Church fathers; yet the rites continued for hundreds of years more and exercised considerable influence on the formation of early Christian teachings and practices.

Budge does not realize that he is writing only of the historical adaptation of a spiritual allegory when he says:

"But about Osiris burial-place there is no doubt, for all tradition, both Egyptian and Greek, states that his grave was at Abydos (Abtu) in upper Egypt" (Ibid., p. 69).

Budge, like many scholars lacking these "keys", thinks that Osiris must have been a living king, who was later deified. This is highly not likely, as there is little to indicate that the Egyptian gods were other than abstract personifications of the powers of Cosmos (neteru), Nature and the Cosmic Intelligence. The legend that his body was cut into fourteen pieces, scattered over the land and then reassembled for the resurrection could have no rational application to the life of an actual King. Like we see so many times as the pieces of the puzzle comes together and the "keys" to proper interpretation of our Bibles increase, see come to see clearly that Religious Myths and metaphysical realities told through myths, metaphors and symbols has been taken for assumed literal history on a vast scale and in so doing our understandings of these texts are obscured.

Budge goes on to quote on page 69 of the same book: "In the text of Teta the dead king is thus addressed: Hail! hail! thou Teta! Rise up, thou Teta! . . . thou art not a dead thing."

Answer for yourself: Why the contradiction of terms? Why is the speaker telling a dead king he is not dead unless a completely new interpretation of "death" is meant here? It is becoming very plain now. The Souls as deities and "Living Energies" entered the realm of "death", our Earth and "incarnation into this fleshly matter", although considered as if they "had died" in such an incarnation they were actually not dead. Only in philosophy and the Sacred Books was the Soul dramatized as if "dead" but actually, as stated before, it is at this same time of its "death" a "Living entity".

Let us now speak of the Eye of Horus, an emblem typifying Horus' life and said to contain his Soul. This Eye of Horus (containing the Soul) was stolen and carried off by Set (the personified evil nature in flesh and "matter"), the evil twin of Osiris. Of this Budge says that "during the period when Horus Eye was in the hands of Set, he was a dead god." This is important. However, Osiris regaining possession of his Eye symbolized the recovery of his buried divinity and his restoration to his original godhood. Horus, the Egyptian Christ, elsewhere (The Egyptian Book of the Dead, Ch. 85) says: "I come that I may overthrow my adversaries upon earth, though my dead body be buried" (on the Earth)!

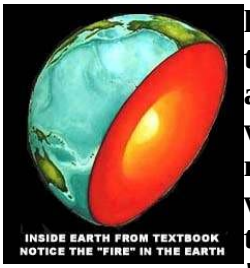
Answer for yourself: What is meant here? Horus, the Egyptian Christ, incarnated into "matter" and human flesh, has come to tame the animal nature in humanity although working from an invisible realm "inside" the bodies of mankind. This battle between Horus and Set rages "in the bosom" of mankind. Such a statement can have logical meaning only in reference to the contention that the buried "god" is the Soul/Spirit in the fleshly body on Earth. This is the metaphysical story of the incarnation of the Soul/Spirit at Abydos where it was "buried in matter". Thus this same "Christ" will later be said to be "formed in you" by Paul:

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Now lets examine the word "Underworld" as an idiom for the "sphere of death" for further "incarnational experience". This region of partial death in which the outcast angels were imprisoned was styled the dark"Underworld." A variant name was "the nether Earth" (Netherworld). This descent of the Soul into material existence is often actually pictured as a subterranean cavern like the one on the right. Rarely has it ever dawned upon the unlearned Christian clergy or Christian scholars of our day that "the Underworld" was but another figurative designation for the condition of life in the human body. Again a mass of data is available to show that it is.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

All Christian theology is turned upside down once the word "death" is restored to its ancient theological meaning. It seems silly to me that we read accounts in our Bibles of such stories of Lazarus only to find out that is the the retelling of a 5 to 10 thousand year old story of Osiris in which the original interpretation of which has radically changed in our day and since the 2nd century and Rome's radical "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. When all of this dawns upon you that we are reading a Bible to which we have little clue as to its original intended meaning then such an awareness should be impetus to you to begin your own personal study since coming to the realization that our current Christian establishment is incapable of teaching the truths behind the texts they quote and preach. It is time that we are given the truth and correctly interpret the theological concepts that were first embodied in these stories in our Bibles as they were in the beginning of their oral traditions and earliest recordings on papyrus and paper in the first place when dating as far back as ancient Egypt. To do such things as reading these ancient stories with Divine concepts diametrically opposed to their original meanings is not only foolish but sacrilegious, profane, and blasphemous.



These Divine Truths concerning the Descent of the Soul and its "death" when incarnated into "matter" or "humanity" was told from nation to nation through the use of allegories and myths since the beginning of recorded time. Religious myth is very important. Myth informs us, not of "reality" or actual events, but of something deeper. Something both shared and personal. While plenty of people see their religious beliefs as metaphorical, most seem to think things like "Christ died and was reborn" are statements of fact. I contend that the earliest Gnostic creators of Christianity never meant that. They meant to speak in the metaphors of spirituality; the same metaphors that had been used for centuries before.

Christianity is itself a descent mythology. There are numerous well-known myths from ancient times which describe a heroine or hero's descent into the underworld. One of the more significant is the story of Inanna, the Sumerian Goddess, who hearing the call, made her own eventful journey and return. Inanna's story is also known as the Babylonian Ishtar's Descent, but whereas Ishtar's tale is told with only 145 lines, the original story from which it was copied, Inanna's Descent, is told with 415 lines. The difference is attributed to the patriarchy, as it steadily eroded the power and significance of the Goddess association with God during the second millennium B.C.E. Inanna's Descent into the Underworld is both a fascinating story and a prime archetype of spiritual initiation. The Eleusinian Mysteries of Persephone seem to parallel a number of other descent myths, like those of Isis and Inanna. Again, descent mythology is everywhere - something about going below, beneath the Earth seems to resonate with the whole idea of death (the incarnation-birth [being born again]-rebirth (ascension at the demise of the body). There are connections between Persephone and the Gorgons, between Demeter and Dionysus, and hundreds of other interweaving of stories. Judaism is not without its descent myths into the underworld as well. Enoch I speaks of 200 apostates or descending "watchers".

A fallen angel in Abrahamic traditions is an angel that has been exiled or banished from Heaven. Often such banishment is a punishment for disobeying or rebelling against God (remember the Asuras?). One early source for information on angelology as well as demonology, is the Persian prophet Zoroaster, who is thought to have influenced Judeo-Christian beliefs. Origen, a father of the early Christian Church, believed that God had created all angels to be equal and free. However, in possessing the power of free will, some of them began to move further away from God of their own volition. Origen maintained that those who drifted the least remained in the regions closest to God, while those who moved further out fell into lower air, and became what we know as "angels". This is the lowest order of the angelic hierarchy. Those descending "Living Energies", or angels, who moved still farther away became humans. Origen states metaphorically that, although some angels fell and became humans, all hope is not lost. By practicing virtue, men can again ascend and be freed from this bondage of incarnational existence. While considered an early Father of the Church, Origen was deemed a heretic as a result of some of his writings and teachings, which did not conform to accepted scripture or tradition of the later evolving Roman Church. Mainly, his concept of Apocatastasis, the belief that all beings (humans, fallen angels, demons and Satan) will return to God through God's love and mercy, was deemed unacceptable at that time. His excommunication was posthumously reversed.

Again let it be shouted from the rooftops and steeples of all Churches from which it was taken. All nations of antiquity show in their Sacred Books and writings traces of a legend in which the Soul makes a journey and a descent through a dark underworld. All nations of the world have this same story and myth of the Soul's journey to a dark Underworld and behind them all lies a Divine Truth. The vagueness, indistinctness, and obscureness of its location, however, has failed to give any Christian scholar an illuminating suggestion as to its totally figurative and symbolic character. Nobody has ever seriously presumed to locate this dreary region which houses the Soul in spite of the fact that it was childishly regarded as an actual place. This Underworld has been vaguely associated with the grave or assumed to lie in some dim region into which the Soul passed after the death of the body, somehow, somewhere "under" something or another. But what this "under" actually is has never been determined by Christian theologians with an accuracy because they accept and veer not out of the traditional Roman Christian mindset and traditional hermeneutic of the Book that Rome corrupted and pawned off on the whole world as the inerrant Word of God, its Bible. The cause of this continued perplexity as to the identity of this "Underworld" can be laid upon the uneraseable assumption that its "underness" was to be oriented in relation to the physical Earth (the bowels of Earth) and not the"body on the Earth"! Few ever come to see without help and much study, due to the strong indoctrination of error by our Churches, that this "descent into the Underworld", as depicted in the virgin birth of all the nations saviors, as well as our "Jesus Story", is "your story" of God Emanating a small "Divine Spark" of His "Living Energy" into you. Few see that the infant "Christ" is to grow up in you to help your ascent home to Heaven and was never meant to be limited to but one person as Rome as so tragically done. No one hardly ever catches a glimmer of the truth behind such a story and allows the smallest part of illumination "awaken" one's mind that the location of this Underworld was the very fleshly body of humanity.

The surface of the earth, man's world, was assumed to be obviously not an "Underworld." But the problem of locating another limbo beneath it baffled theological speculation through the ages. The outcome is that the locale of Hades', or Pluto's shadowy kingdom has been hung indeterminately between the surface of the ground and the dubious dim region of after-death spheres. All the while, as my studies advanced in Gnosticism, Comparative Religions, Comparative Mythology, and astronomy advanced, a thousand texts burst before my face in unison all pointing to the Underworld, this grave, this tomb of the Soul, finds its location in the physical body of mankind! The nativity is to be "your story"; not another's.

Lewis Spence, in his Myths and Legends of Egypt, p. 121, admits cautiously admits that the court of the Mayan Underworld seems to have been conducted on the principles of a secret society with a definite form of initiation, and that the Mysteries of Eleusis and others in Greece were concerned with the life of an Underworld, especially dramatized in the story of Demeter and Kore. Lewis Spence goes on to admit that the Greek deities were "gods of the dead". But Spence makes a tragic mistake not limited to a few Christian scholars when he states that the Egyptian Book of the Dead is the work of prehistoric Neolithic savages! That make me laugh to where I need to call 911 for help. If that is true then Roman Christianity for 1,800 years incriminates itself daily as less than savages and verifies itself to be of pure animalistic stock because it yet today is totally incapable of understanding the very High Divine Message preserved for all of mankind in the Egyptian Bible, called "The Egyptian Book of the Dead". Thus by a process of deduction, let me say as an Ordained Pastor of Christianity, Roman Catholic and Protestant Christianity lies several levels below that of such savages which is proven by its failure to understand the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and its unrelenting adherence to its aberrant unintelligible dogmas and theology let alone its radical reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which goes unnoticed by the vast majority of Christians today. This my dear friend is proof positive that the term "savage" must be held in sacred custody and reserved only for use of adequate description for the Church and its "swiss cheese" theology.

It is the truth. The Mystery Rituals did dramatize the life of an Underworld, but the "gods", as kings of this nether realm, were not subterranean deities as we might suppose or have heard taught before. The gnomes and other nature pixies were the only "deities" that were believed to subsist beneath the surface of the physical earth. The "gods of the Underworld" were always the gods of the "incarnational dead". And as the Souls of deceased mortals were in all religions asserted to ascend to Heaven and never to remain in the burial ground with the corpse, it was again impossible to place the Underworld down with the gnomes (fabled race of dwarflike creatures who live underground). But it seems next to incredible that abundant academic diligence should have missed the plain correlation which would have made the descent of Spirits and "Living Energies" from Heaven parallel with the descent of all the divine heroes and sun-gods into the dark Underworld of the Earth which we now clearly see is this "fleshly body of death" for the Divine Soul.

The Egyptian Book of the Dead cryptically allegorizes this Earthly death of the Soul into the darkness of "matter" and "human flesh". From this Egyptian Book of the Deadwe learn that the mystery of the Sphinx originated with the conception of the Earth as the place of passage, of burial and rebirth, for the humanized deities. An ancient Egyptian name for the Sphinx was Akar.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Gerald Massey equates Achor, the valley of Sheol, and the Hebrew Hades, with the Sphinx which is called "Akar"? Why does he do this? Why does Massey connect the valley of Achor with the Sphinx?

Hosea 2:15 15 And I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope: and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt. (KJV)

Notice the words "hope", "singing", and "coming out of Egypt". Earlier we saw that in the Bible the word "Egypt" was used for the physical body. Not putting all of this together we understand by Massey refers to the valley of Achor and connects it to the Akar, the Sphinx. The reason why is that Akar, or Achor, the Sphinx, is also the name for the tunnel through the Underworld of fleshly incarnation for the Soul, which happens to be his only way to merit a return to Heaven and this repeated cyclical Soulish incarnation into the "death of the flesh".

Answer for yourself: This Sphinx sets where? On the Giza Plateau. So naturally then we have to ask then is there a conduit or a "highway to Heaven" for the incarnation of Souls into "matter", a pathway for "descent" and "ascent" connecting Heaven to Earth invisibly between the Sky and the Giza Plateau someway? Before you laugh at this thought you need to do some intricate study on the Duat and metaphysics and energy levels upon this Earth or read the articles dealing with the uranograph, the sky charts, astronomy, and the Giza Mount as an "image of Heaven" on this website.

And it is said that the very bones of the deities quake as the stars (think of stars as celestial "Living Energies" themselves) go on their triumphant courses through the tunnels of Akar (Pyramid Texts: Teta, 319). As the stars, as symbols of these "Living Energies", were the descending deities and "gods" into "matter", the metaphor of stars passing through the underworld tunnels is entirely clear in its implication. The riddle of the Sphinx is but the riddle of mankind on this Earth. The terms of the riddle at least become clearly defined if we know that the mystery pertains to this our mortal human life of "death", above ground, and not to our existence in some unlocalized underworld of theological fiction.

The entrance to Amenta, this realm of Earthly incarnation of our Souls, was depicted with twelve dungeons and is described as containing blind doorway which neither Manes (Spirits/Souls of the dead) nor mortal knew the secret of and none but the descending "god" and "Living Energy" could open. Hence we see the great need of a Deity who should come to unlock the doors and unbar the gates of Hell for the Soul's ascension and "jailbreak" from this "body of death".

Answer for yourself: Should this not make you recall the Lazarus resurrection story from "the dead".

Thus we see the need for the coming of a Deity that can be "the door" for us and "the way" for the Soul.

John 10:7 7 Then said Jesus (the Christ) unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. (KJV)

This is of course "the Christ" of whom I speak. This descending "Living Energy", this descending god came not only to unlock the door of Divinity to human nature, but to be himself that very door that will aid in the Soul's release from this "body of death". The giving of the keys to bolt and unbolt the doors of the Underworld, this earthly body of "death", was but the allegory of this evolutionary reinforcement of the human by the divine nature.

"The doors of the sky are thrown open for Horakhti & the doors of the sky are thrown open at dawn for Horus of the east & go to & Horakhti at the horizon & on the eastern side of the sky where the gods are born" (incarnated existence into "matter").* (R. Bauval & G. Hancock, Keeper of Genesis, p183 Mandarin 1996).

Descriptions of this dark realm of our present state of "being" as human beings, or should I say Souls incarcerated in bodies of "death" are abundant in the ancient Sacred texts. "It is a land without an exit, through which no passage has been made; from whose visitants, the dead, the light was shut out." "The light they beheld not; in darkness they dwell."

Answer for yourself: What implication does this have for us when we learn that Gerald Massey says that the "the inferno, the purgatory and the paradise of Dante Alighieri are extant recognizably in the Book of the Dead as the domains of Amenta"; which we have previously seen abundant testimony that this refers to the "fleshly incarnation of our Souls" into these bodies of "death" and "suffering"? It means that the trying of our Souls and suffering of our Souls is ongoing every day of our human existence ON this Earth. Our lives as Souls on Earth is honestly our "Hades" and our "Hell".

The first chapter of the The Egyptian Book of the Dead was repeated in the Mystery festivals on the day when Osiris was buried. His entrance into the Underworld as a Manes, a Spirit of the dead, corresponds to that of Osiris the corpse in Amenta (the physical incarnation of the descending "Living Energy" into the body of "death" and "matter"). This "incarnation" is a symbolic representation of the "god" and his Spiritual Nature rendered lifeless by his suffocation in the body of dark and coarse "matter". The "dead Osiris", because he descended into "fleshly matter", is said to enter the place of his burial called the Kasu.

Answer for yourself: Is this why we so often see Osiris wrapped as if a "mummy" as a symbol for the "capture" of this Soul in its "fleshly incarnation" and body of death? Yes it is.

In this low domain of the "dead", the abode of the incarnated Soul, this Underworld, there was nothing but darkness; the upper light of the Heavenly Spiritual reality had been greatly dimmed by the coarseness of "matter". But Horus, Ptah, Anup, Ra and others of the savior gods would come in due time to awaken the sleepers "in their sepulchres" and their "dead fleshly bodies of Soulish incarnation", in order to open the gates and prison bars of this "fleshly matter" and thus guide the Souls out of "death" into the light of the upper Spiritual regions and Spiritual awareness once more. The Jewish Christ say in relation to the "incarnated Soul":

Luke 4:18 18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, (KJV)

One of the sayings of the Soul contemplating its plight in the underworld is: "I do not rot. I do not putrefy. I do not turn to worms. My flesh is firm; it shall not be destroyed; it shall not perish in the earth forever" (Ch. 154).

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

Inasmuch as the flesh of the physical body most certainly will die, rot, putrefy, and turn to worm food in the only grave that Christian theology has been able to instruct us about, the term "flesh" in the excerpt can not be taken as that of the human body in a "lifeless state". It refers to the substance of another body which does not rot away.

The same sense may distinctly be caught in the term "body" as used in the prayer uttered by the Soul in the body when it says: "May my body neither perish nor suffer corruption forever." Such a prayer directed to the physical body would be obviously irrelevant, expecting the impossible. Horus, on his way to earth to ransom the captives, says: "I pilot myself towards the darkness and the sufferings of the deceased ones of Osiris" (Ch. 78).

Again Gerald Massey give us insight: "The wilderness of the nether earth, being a land of graves, where the dead awaited the coming of Horus (the Egyptian Christ for illumination and direction), Shu, Apuat (Anup), the guide, and Taht . . . as servants of Ra, the supreme one god, to wake them in their coffins (incarnated bodies) and lead them forth from the land of darkness to the land of day" (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 643-644).

Over and over again we see these same words like "wilderness", "desert", "Underworld", "nether earth", "coffins", graves", etc., speaking to us of this same Earthly incarnation of our Soul as this "descended Living Energy" which is "asleep" in the denseness and darkness of "matter". Analysis of other types of representation will disclose the fact that the Egyptians, in their lavish use of animals as symbols, filled the Underworld of "incarnated existence" with a menagerie of mythical monsters. We will deal this this animal symbolism later.In passing let it be said that Egypt used number of animal symbols like dragons, serpents, crocodiles, dogs, lions, bears, etc., that were said to lay in wait in the Underworld to devour the luckless Manes (the spirits of the Dead).

Answer for yourself: What is the significance of this? Simply said such symbolism and allegory prefigures the menace to the Soul of its subjection to the "animal nature" of its host, since it had taken residence in the very bodies of the lower creatures. Although in somewhat of a "detachment" from this "animal nature", it was yet not immune to being drawn down into ever deeper alliance with the carnal nature. Let us never forget what the Book of Daniel tells us about this King Nebuchadnezzar: "his mind was made like the mind of an animal."

Let us take a break and conclude this study in the next and last article in this series.

ALIVE BUT CONSIDERED AS IF "DEAD": THE TRUTH ABOUT THE INCARNATED SOUL #4

We pick up where we left off from the previous article.

More confirmation of this correctness of this teaching comes from examination of the etymology of the two words "tomb" and "womb," which Massey asserts rise from the same root. At all times it is rigorously in accord with the Greek theory that the body, as the tomb of the Soul, is at the same time the womb of its new birth. The Bible has always taught that "out of death comes life" and we have shown this inverse parallel previously. In The Egyptian Book of the Dead the Soul is addressed as he "who cometh forth from the dusk (darkness again symbolic for 'matter'..the first birth), and whose birth is in the house of death (referring to the second Spiritual Birth--'born again' while in these bodies of fleshly death and 'matter')". We have discussed this thoroughly in our articles on the uranograph and sky chart and its relationship to all later world religions; especially in light of the two birth prefigured in the Heavens and Sky: the natural birth in Virgo (water/womb) and in Pisces (Spiritual birth). The Greek language bears striking testimony to the same kinship of the two words, as Plato points out in the Cratylus, in the practical identity of "soma", body, and "sema", tomb.

In our own Christian Bible the textual evidence is voluminous. Do to the vast number of them we must take only a few for examples. Paul's says:

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Paul further cries out to us these truths:

Rom 7:24 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death (the Soul's death in this carnal body of animal nature)? (KJV)

This is why Paul previously said:

Rom 7:18-24 18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. 19 For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. 20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. 21 I find then a law (the Law of Incubation and not the Torah), that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. 22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: 23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? (KJV)

And Jonah, correlative name with Jesus, cries from the allegorical whale's belly:

Jonah 2:2 2 And said, I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the LORD, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice. (KJV)

Jonah enters the "belly" of this great fish, and remains unharmed for 3 days and 3 nights (Jonah 1:17). This "belly" of this great fish is the "human body" which has "swallowed the descending Soul". When we see that the virgin born sungods were "3 days in the belly" of "Hell/Hades" as was Jesus 3 days in the "grave", as was Jonah, a correlative name for Jesus, was also 3 days in the belly of this fish, then to try to interpret all of these accounts as if "literal" or "historical" is an insult to God who imparted the Divine Revelation to mankind in the first place.

Paul again pronounces us "dead" in our trespasses and sins, adding that "the wages of sin is death" and "to be carnally minded is death."

Answer for yourself: What is this "death" of which Paul speaks?

This "death" of which Paul speaks is further incarnation into "matter" which brings the uncertainness of possible suffering, distress, agony, misery, passion, lust, and further carnality; let alone continued separation from our Father at home (the Prodigal Son allegory...we need to return home). It is sin that brings us back again and again into this incarnational "death" until we learn better and consequently "live better" lives.

Answer for yourself: And how is this again accomplished? We feed our physical body 3 times a day. We must not forget to feed the "inner man", this "indwelling infant Christ", in order to rise him from "slumber" to maturity to where he can instruct us as Souls, and this "Christ be formed in us". Only in such a way can our carnal prone Souls become enabled to not only battle with a stronger "animal nature" but share in the victory of Horus over Set (Christ over the adversary in us...this "animal nature" whom the Jews called "Satan"). And Paul further states:

Col 3:3-10 3 For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. 4 When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, ("be formed in you"), then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

Answer for yourself: And how again is this to be accomplished? Simply by learning and thereby adopting the Laws of God, the Torah, the Commandments of God which are intended to subdue the animal nature within this carnal body. Life is a training process and by so doing, by submitting to the Laws and Commandments of our Covenant with God, then we merit grace which is so needed to escape this wheel of incarnational experience to which we are subjected at the present time. The next time some Christian Pastor or teacher tells you that the word "grace" means "unmerited favor" I dare you to tell him to go "look it up" as to how it is used in the Hebrew Scriptures where he will find at his amazement that the word "grace" is "conditional"....."it is merited"! It certainly is not "unmerited" as we have heard incorrectly our whole lives. We merit such ascension as Souls by adopting the following path for our Soul:

5 Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry: 6 For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience: 7 In the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them. 8 But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. 9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; 10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: (KJV)

If you never learn the "truth" in this incarnational experience and make proper decisions based upon it, decisions that affect your conduct and behavior and bring the "animal nature" into surrender to the will of God, then you are doomed to repeat this incarnational experience and your eventual return to your Father will be prolonged needlessly. Paul affirms that we are dead and that our life is hid with Christ in God. Our true life is as yet undeveloped, buried down in the depths of the latent capacities of being. Psalm 170 says that we "like sheep are laid in the grave," though "God will redeem my Soul from the power of the grave." No, we are not speaking of digging up a body that has been buried six feet under the surface of the ground. This "grave" is the "death of incarnation" which is spoken of "even the death of the cross," when spirit is bound to the cross of "matter" and the flesh.

Isaiah declares that "we live in darkness like the dead."

Isa 9:2 2 The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Have we not already seen the parallel between "the valley of the shadow of death" and the incarnation of the Soul into the "darkness of matter"? Yes we have.

Isa 42:5-7 5 Thus saith God the LORD, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein: 6 I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; 7 To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Have we not already seen the parallel between the Soul being incarnated into a "prison" with the need to be "set free" from the carnality of the "animal-nature"? Yes we have.

We are currently experiencing the imprisonment of the Soul which awaits the continual further revelation of the Christ within which enables this trapped Soul the final victory over death (the incarnational experience into human flesh).

Isa 50:10 10 Who is among you that feareth the LORD, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the LORD, and stay upon his God. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: If you read the above verse carefully then how is it possible to "fear the LORD", to "obey the voice of his servant" and yet at the same time "walk in darkness" and "have no light" in a literal sense or manner? It is not possible. Something we are missing here that is central to the mind-set of the ancients who wrote these Sacred Scriptures in order to further elaborate upon their peoples the Divine Truth of God imparted to mankind in the beginning of their existence. It is this truth that Rome denied and radically reinterpreted and in so doing assured mankind that such "darkness" would increase. They are not called the "Dark Ages" for nothing and let us not forget that they parallel the mighty rise of Roman Christianity in the world. The "light went out".

And the Jewish Christ states a promise:

John 11:25 25 Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: (KJV)

This could be one of the saddest Scriptures in the whole of the Bible. Billions of Christians have gone to their graves with a replacement religion that was supported by a Roman fostered belief in a "historical Jesus" that died for them that "never existed" either "historically" or "literally". We are warned to believe "in the Christ" because we are "dead now" and our hope is to "live Spiritually"; no, not after our physical body dies but "now" while we live in these "bodies of death" as descended Souls climbing the Ladder back to Heaven.

Answer for yourself: Which Christ are we to believe "in"? Rome's Christ which is being daily shown to be a monstrous deception of immeasurable proportions or conversely the Gnostic Christ within which is the only Christ ever sent to mankind which is validated daily by both archeological and historical records which are being uncovered routinely in our day?

1 Pet 4:6 6 For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are "dead", that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. (KJV)

There is our dichotomy once again. The preaching of the Gospel where it is interpreted correctly is so necessary for the living and breathing people of the world who are called dead "in the flesh" but "alive in the Spirit". We are alive as human beings but "dead in the flesh as descended Souls" while, with the aid of the indwelling Christ, we are to Spiritually grow to be "alive in the Spirit".

Answer for yourself: Would not such addresses to the dead as noted in several of these above passages, be preposterous if not referring to those presently alive and living on earth?

Let us not forget the Prodigal Son allegory. Here we find the rebuke of the jealous obedient elder brother at the rejoicing over the other brother: "This my son was dead and is alive again."

Answer for yourself: What is this "thing" which is described as "death" in the Prodigal Allegory itself? It is this "far-country" to which the "younger brother" had gone. In this case it means Earth.

The Book of Revelation will serve us best now as we look at Rev. 3:1

Rev 3:1 1 And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What follows next after this verse? We have read it before and I have referred to it often. They are told to "wake up", to "arise from their sleep", to "awaken from the dead" while they are alive on this Earth!

Rev 3:2-3 2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. 3 Remember therefore how thou hast (KJV)

Strong's Concordance: for the word "watchful":

1127 gregoreuo (gray-gor-yoo'-o); from 1453; to keep awake, i.e. watch (literally or figuratively): KJV-- be vigilant, wake, (be) watch (-ful).

These people who are alive are warned to rally what is still left Spiritually in their lives because it lingers at the very point of Spiritual extinction and "death" which will ensure another round of incarnational experience and suffering. This is again a strong hint of the danger that the Soul might be so far submerged under sensuality that it could fail to rise again, and if be the case then the Soul would sink down into the dreaded "second death"

(repeated incarnational experience with the potential of suffering).

As Christians we are all familiar with Paul and his discussion of the problem of sin and death in Romans chapter 7. The statements made can be rendered intelligible and enlightening only by reading the term "death" in the sense here being promoted as an "incarnational death". Paul says first:

Rom 7:5 5 For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. (KJV)

In Romans 8 he later says:

Rom 8:6 6 For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. (KJV)

And then he says: Rom 7:5 5 For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. (KJV)

Few understand what is really being said here. Paul is speaking about the relationship of 3 things: the law, sin and death. He asks:

Rom 7:7 7 What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet. (KJV)

And he replies that sin developed in us "under the Law."

Rom 7:8 8 But sin, taking occasion by the commandment (Law), wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law sin was dead. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is this Law? What is this mysterious Law that the Apostle harps on with such frequency? Is it the Torah and the Laws of Noah and the Laws of Moses? No. Get really to have possibly one of the greatest revelations of you whole life; a revelation missed by the whole of early Roman Christianity from the 2nd century onward. Or is there another Law to which Paul speaks that we have never heard of or know very little concerning?

Christianity has stopped way short in it understanding of the very Law of which Paul speaks. They stop blindly at equating this Law to the carnal nature in man. And this is "partly right" but it misses the mark by thousands of miles. There is no way to ever hope of understanding the deeper meaning behind this "Law" which Paul refers without possessing the "keys" to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and esoteric interpretation of this arcane wisdom. This Law of which Paul speaks is that cosmic commandment from the Ayn Sof which draws all Spiritual entities down from the heights into the confines of fleshly incarnation in the darkness of "matter". It is the Law of Incubation of which we have mentioned several times. It is the ever-revolving Wheel of Birth and Death, the Cyclic Law, or as called by the ancients "the Cycle of Necessity". As every cycle of embodiment runs through seven sub-cycles or stages, it is the seven-coiled serpent of Genesis that encircles man in its folds. Theosophy teaches that evil and good are the result of differentiation of Spirit/matter in a "cycle of becoming". There is a natural involution of Spirit into "matter" followed by an evolution of "matter" back into Spirit. The purpose of the Universe is for Spirit to manifest itself self-consciously throughout the whole of the Cosmos.

Now, by the Law (the Law of Incubation) came sin, and by sin came death (the incarnation of Souls into darkened "matter"). Here is the iron chain that binds man on the cross. The Law of Incubation brings the Soul to the place where it sins and sin condemns it to death (more repeated incarnational experiences of unknown experiences, both possibly good or bad).

Answer for yourself: What what is this "death"? This "death" here must mean something other than the natural demise of the body, for that comes to all men be they pure or be they sinful. Sin is the result of the Soul's condition of immersion or entanglement in the nature of the flesh. For the animal is not spiritually conscious and hence not morally culpable. And the angel is under no temptation or motivation from the sensual nature, which alone urges to "sin." Only when the Law of Incubation links the Soul into animal flesh does sin become possible. Romans (7:7) expressly declares:

Rom 7:7 7 What shall we say then? Is the law (of incubation) sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law (of incubation): ...(KJV)

Rom 7:8 8 But sin, taking occasion by the commandment (the Law of Incubation), wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law (of incubation) sin was dead. (KJV)

Paul even says that at one time he lived without the law himself.

Answer for yourself: And what was this law? It was the Law of Incubation. And when was this? It was before "the command" to "incarnate" came to the Soul we come to know later as the human manifestation of the Soul named Paul. And what was this command? It was this Law of Incubation.

I cannot tell you the amount of paper that has been wasted on exegesis of Paul's mind as expressed in the Epistle to the Romans and the vast majority of it is but a waste of good paper. Again Christian theology has missed the mark of what Paul is saying primarily because they are unlearned concerning the ancient cosmologies and anthropologies. The "command" was the Demiurgus' order to incarnate. It is found in the Timaeus of Plato and Proclus' work on Plato's theology. It is found in ancient Egypt way before that even.

Rom 7:9 9 For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came (the Law of Incubation), sin revived, and I died. (KJV)

Paul states that once he was "alive" without the Law but when the Law came sin was revived and "he died".

Answer for yourself: What are we missing here?

Notice the word "revived" which carries with it the idea of a previous existence under the influence of sin as it related to the Soul we currently know as Paul. Again hidden in this verse is a reference to Paul's previous Soulish existence.

Answer for yourself: Can you reason satisfactorily that when the "Law" came that said "Thou shalt not kill" that such an instruction "killed" the hearer? Instead of an expression of great love of God for all of His creation, including mankind, is such an admonition intended to bring "life" or "death" to those who pattern their lives after such instruction? Surely you see that such Laws of the Torah, were "life" and "not death" to the hearer and his Soul. It was the way for the incarnated Soul to resurrect from further Earthly existences and repeated incarnations. Thus we are missing something. There is something other than "physical death" that is meant by these sayings of Paul. This "Laws" refers to the command to "incarnate" given to the Asuras and Suras long, long ago, and those obedient to this command of God "died" upon incarnation into the darkness of "matter".

"She is a Tree of Life to those who grasp Her and those who support Her are enriched." Proverbs 3:18

The Laws of God, the Torah, are "life" to the hearer and not "death". Therefore this "command" or "Law" that brings "death" must refer to another "Law" and the ancients tell us that it refers to the Law of Incubation and the following "incarnational experience". When the command to incarnate came to the Soul which we later will know as Paul , then sin sprang to life again for Paul and his Soul and this Soul we know as Paul "died" allegorically when plunged into the darkness of fleshly and lustful humanity with the unbridled "animal nature".

Rom 7:10 10 And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. (KJV)

This "commandment" again is the command of the Ayn Sof for the Soul to leave to a "far country" and "incarnate" into the "animal nature". This command to incarnate gave an impulse to sin, sin beguiled the Soul, and it "was death" for the Soul but "life" to the animal-body if but the Soul conquer the animal-nature. And notice please that Paul proceeds to defend the entire procedure of nature and life against the unwarranted imputations of its being all an evil design:

Rom 7:12-13 12 Wherefore the law (Law of Incubation) is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good. 13 Was then that which is good (Law of Incarnation whereby the Soul attains a need Spiritual maturity and at the same time redeems the animal-man) made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment (to incarnate) might become exceeding sinful. (KJV)

Now take a deep breath. In this light and understanding of this must debated "Law" in Christianity, it appears that up till now we never knew what we were reading about or heard preached from the pulpits of our Churches. Rarely if ever, or most likely never, has anyone ever taught you the truth about what this Gnostic Paul meant in his writings. In ignorance we have called the Laws of Moses and the Laws of Noah "passed away" or "death" themselves never understanding what we have been taught nor what we were saying. These Laws of the Torah are "Life" to our Souls and the remedy for us to this "Law of Incubation" and "Law of Incarnation" by which we can remove ourselves from further "death" and "sin". But since Paul was the only "big name" to reach out to the Gentiles then Rome had to use him to their advantage. This was accomplished by forging 2/3 of the New Testament in Paul's name and re-writing much of his Gnostic theology which was the earliest manifestation of the Christian faith. But a discerning eye once enlightened to the "keys" to the correct interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom opens the New Testament in glorious ways never dreamed before.

Now for another shock of your lifetime. Most Christians have been erroneously taught that Isaiah chapter 53 is about the "literal-historical" Jesus Christ of Christian theology who was a willing sacrifice. Time and space will not allow such an expose about this book of the Bible which stands today with over 6,000 changes in our Christian Bible when compared to the Hebrew. That said, we deal with Isaiah 53 elsewhere on other websites and disprove the traditional Christian stance and do so in such a way to leave no doubt as to the truth of what is being said in the Hebrew. Here today we look at only one verse and in so doing rescue it from sheer nonsense by applying the new and true meaning of the word for "death." Speaking of the divinity, it says that:

Isa 53:9 9 And he made his grave (incarnation) with the wicked, and with the rich (incarnation) in his death; (KJV)

If you are lucky then you have a marginal note in a column in your Bible that tells you that this word for "death" in the Hebrew is not "singular", as applying to but one person as Christian theology proclaims. Rather this word in its original meaning and "number" proves conclusively that this chapter is not about a sole assumed "literal-historical" Jesus, but is "plural". The word "death" in the above verse should have been rendered as "deaths" (plural). This is just one reason why Isaiah 53 could never and has never been about "one person" or a historical Jesus as the Jewish Messiah. Here the word "death" is used in the plural number--"deaths"--in the original manuscripts.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us? Here is invincible evidence that the word carries the implication of "incarnations," for in no other possible sense can "death" be rationally considered in the plural number. Further explanation will illuminate. In one incarnation the Christ Soul is "fallen" among the wicked; in another this Christ Soul "incarnates" among the rich. This is a common affirmation in a host of world religions that is lacking in our Roman Christianity. And of course the human body, with its animal-nature, is the "grave" of the Soul.

1 Cor 15:35-44 35 But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?

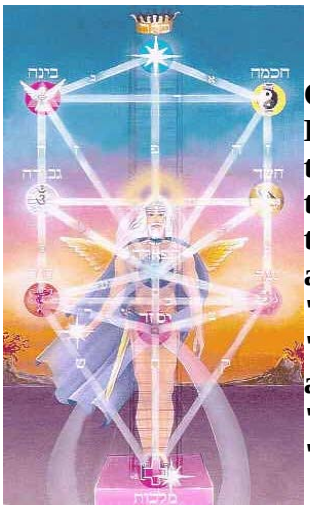
Notice first of all Paul responds to such a question by calling those who frame such questions "foolish".

36 Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: 37 And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: 38 But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body. 39 All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds. 40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. 41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. 42 So also is the resurrection of the dead.

Paul just hinted at an ancient Spiritual Truth that mankind is a composite creation of building blocks fashioned by the Cosmos, like the Sun, the moon, and the stars. Literally, humanity is a collection Space Energy and "matter" with a nucleus of Deific Fire/Energy that animates the whole existence. This body of death, the home of the Soul and the indwelling Christ, is a body of corruption that is intended to be raised after the death of the body not in another fleshy body or some resurrection of a physical body. Such teaching of a physical bodily resurrection is not taught by Paul but by an aberrant Christian Ecclesiasticalism which long ago lost its way.

It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: 43 It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: 44 It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. (KJV)

If you are waiting and expecting a physical resurrection then I have sad news for you. It will never happen and as long as we approach these ancient Spiritual Myths and allegories as it they were meant to be interpreted "literally" then we will be sorely misled into what is really going to occur when we die. Christian theology has led millions to expect the wrong type of resurrection that awaits us as incarnated Souls. Instead of the truth of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom being shared with humanity Rome decided to give them a lie and did so through the formation of blasphemous Creeds that espouse a physical "resurrection of the body". The Nicean Creed is but one of many errors that is believed necessary to believe for Eternal Life. How foolish but we are don't know the truth because we go to Churches that "peach" and don't "teach". Notice if you will that the Gift of the Spirit is "Teacher"; not a preacher. The picture of the cemetery graves being opened at the last trump, and the "dead" (cadavers) arising to array themselves in line before the tribunal of the judgment, if just foolishness. We have the words of Paul very clearly saying that the dead will rise in a spiritual body.



44 It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body

It is as plain as the nose on your face. Sadly the unlearned listen more to unqualified preachers and the zealous armed with little or no scholastic ability about this book, this Bible, written thousands of years ago in a completely different culture and expect that what they hear is "the truth" when such simple statements as the one above disproves the whole teachings of the resurrection as currently taught by Christianity today. This Bible states:

1 Cor 15:26 26 The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. (KJV)

Many will say that this verse means that mankind is to overcome the body's continual demise and decay, and thereby live on in the physical vessel indefinitely; all the while negating Paul's reference to the raising of a "Spiritual Body" from an "Earthly Body" that dies. This idea has caused

Christian theology to be buried immobile in the mire of tragic misunderstanding of the Bible once again. The continue Spiritual evolution of the Soul is negated by such a theology as the "physical resurrection of the body". Without the periodic destruction of this Earthy form and home for the Soul whereby is profits from Earthly experience then there could be no renewal of life in higher and better forms. There would be no hope for ascent upon this Ladder to Heaven beyond the current level of our existence as Souls "entrapped in the matter" of "human flesh". Life would be imprisoned forever in "matter", and the Prodigal Sons and Daughters could never return to "the Father" which abides at the "top" of this Emanated Tree of Living Energy and Life. The cycle of "descent" and "reascent" of these "Living Energies" would be stilled and stuck in "park".

Answer for yourself: If death is the incarnation, the significance is found in the assurance that at the conclusion of the cycle, when the Spirit/Soul has mastered all its mundane instruction, it will be made a "pillar in the house of God and shall go no more out." Its descents into the tombs of bodies will be at an end at last. "Death" will then be finally overcome. Under the great Law of Rebirth we undertake that journey again and yet again, until at last we enter into the Light of our own understanding as self-perfected Sons of God.

In The Egyptian Book of the Dead the Soul rejoices in life, shouting, "He hath given me the beautiful Amenta, through which the living pass from death to life."

Answer for yourself: And what is Amenta again? Amenta is this physical existence of the Soul in this physical world, and the Soul is pictured as running through cycles of descent from "life" to "death" and back again. Death is considered a natural part of the life cycle and the body is returned to the earth whence it came; thus facilitating its return "from ashes to ashes, dust to dust." The same sequence is set forth in the first chapter of Revelation: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore!" The Law of Incubation sequences us from the life above to the "death" down here, but lifts us up again.

There is no greater chapter in the entire Bible than the fifteenth of I Corinthians.

Well we have covered a lot and rattled a few cages I suspect. Let us take from this study the assurance that Paul give us about our fate as "immortal Souls". Using our new understanding of the word "death" then read the following and interpret it correctly for yourself:

"So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death (incarnational experience where the Soul is subjected to the carnal nature and sin) is swallowed up in victory." "O death (incarnational experience), where is thy sting? O grave (incarnational experience), where is thy victory?"

In summary we have seen repeatedly, from ancient Egypt on down through history and later expressed by the greatest of minds of Greece like Plato, Plotinus, Proclus, and later Thomas Taylor, that our lives in these fleshy bodies are constantly depicted as the dark cavern, the pit, the abyss, the bleak desert, the wilderness, the grave, the prison, the tomb, Amenta, the Underworld, Hades and Hell. These all express the same idea; namely that our Souls, our very selves, "fell" from the Sky and Heaven into "matter". We are as Paul states citizens of Heaven while in fleshly bodies:

Phil 3:20 20 For our conversation is in heaven;...(KJV)

In closing a summary is in order. Each spirit is a manifestation of the One Spirit, and thus a part of all. It passes through a series of experiences in incarnation, and is destined to ultimate re-union with the Divine. This incarnation is not single but repeated, each individuality becoming re-embodied during numerous existences, and accumulating the experiences of each incarnation towards its perfection. Between adjacent incarnations, after grosser elements are first purged away, comes a period of comparative rest and refreshment, the Spirit being therein prepared for its next advent into material life. The nature of each incarnation depends upon the merit and demerit of the previous life or lives, upon the way in which the man has lived and thought; and that this law is inflexible and wholly just. "Karma," a term signifying two things:

- The law of ethical causation (Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap), and
- The balance or excess of merit or demerit in any individual, determines also the main experiences of joy and sorrow in each incarnation, so that what men call "luck" is in reality "desert," the deservance acquired in past existence. When union with the Divine is effected, all the events and experiences of each incarnation are known. But at the present time our Deific Souls are at the very bottom of the arc of "death", and can never be as "dead" again as they are now, and have been. "Awake thou that sleepest and rise from the dead"!

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #1

It is our aim is to bring to light the real teachings of the ancient wisdom which lies behind many of the words and concepts in our Christian Bible which are so sorely misunderstood today since the early Roman Church eliminated the ancient wisdom teachings and plunged the world into a Dark Age which still envelopes us today. Ironically, the ancient wisdom is yet contained in our Bible and is available to those who have the "keys" to its proper interpretation. When one possesses the necessary "keys" to properly understanding the real message of the Sacred Books of antiquity let alone our Christian Bible then one receives for the first time in his life a penetrating insight into the human condition and the cosmic purpose of human life as we know it. We sorely need this understanding of the ancient wisdom hidden in the pages of our Bibles to restore our Earthly life to its true glory and purpose. This will become abundantly clear to you as our studies advance. We begin by looking at ancient Egypt once again.

This article begins a new series of studies of such an important nature that the impact of our findings upon current Christian theology let alone contemporary Egyptology will not only be staggering in its implications and corrective in nature but a shot heard round the world that will necessitate the re-interpretation of all Christian religious dogmas. Our findings will bring shame upon past and present theologians, pastors, and teachers let alone Egyptologists who have in the face of the most volumous preponderance of evidences stubbornly refused to say the "unspeakable"; namely, that their conclusions which they spread in books and pulpits the land over which are based upon maintaining the validity of both the Judeo-Christian and Islamic religious traditions, are outright wrong and 180 degrees diametrically opposed to the truth which they are either ignorant of or ashamed to espouse since to do so would only further incriminate the dogmas of both the Judeo-Christian and Islamic faiths and jeopardize their standing among their peers and organizations.

Answer for yourself: And what is this errant theology concerning? It concerns two religious concepts that lay behind the word "death", "the dead", and "Amenta". We dealt with the word "death" and "the dead" in the articles entitled "Alive But Considered As If Dead". We will now take a deeper look at what lies behind the word "Amenta" in this current series of studies.

Let it be said that it is incalculable the damage done to the truth about God and all Creation, let alone the journey of the Soul into humanity, by the gross misunderstanding of the two words "death, the dead" and "Amenta" that few have ever grasped in their correct and intended meanings. What I will share in these articles will challenge accepted ideas in religion and theology to its very core. In so doing I don't expect that such presentation of truth will be received without scepticism or resentment, since it intrudes into the very religious heart of Christian dogmas which has been solidly rooted in a immovable tradition for 1,800 years. I invite all our readers to do your own studies or follow my tracks in the studies which I undertook over the years in which I uncovered these buried and hidden Spiritual truths of antiquity. Again it needs to be said that we live in a day, as Christians and "followers of the Christ", where we are unaware of the horrible re-interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Orthodox Christianity and we basically are not aware of this not only because of the 1,800 year gap in time from us when this was accomplished but we have in our possession a long false tradition that only reinforces the forged religious documents and their interpretations which we carry. Having not devoted our lives to study of the very materials we inherited "on our way to Heaven" few Christians if any are aware of such a deception or the very depth to which it goes. But that "inherited" tradition, if shown to be in error, needs to be exposed by the light of day and God's truth. Traditions long institutionalized do not easily bend to correction of principles basically vital to their very existence. Yet truth demands insistently from her devotees the relentless tribute of sincerity and courage, and true scholarship must not be intimidated just because it is not voiced by the many who have missed the mark in their religious beliefs. Here me well. Not just one or two, but all of the doctrines of Christian theology will have to suffer drastic revision and restatement in the light of the import of the restoration of the true meanings of the word "death" and "Amenta" in religion and Egyptology.

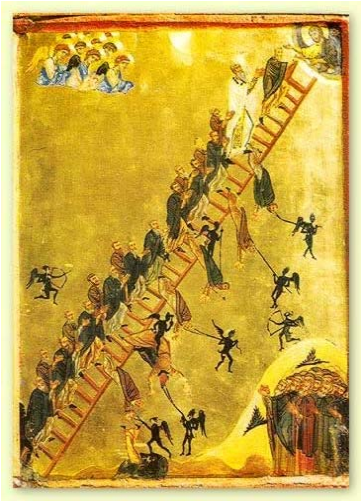
Answer for yourself: So let us begin this second part of our study that follows the previous articles on "death". What is Amenta?

Amenta is an Egyptian word that represents the Underworld or Land of the Dead. As we dramatically showed in the earlier articles on "Alive but Dead" we saw that the ancient meaning of "death" and "the dead" was quite different than what we might have supposed or been taught today. The symbol for Amenta is on the right. We must say that if you consult most books on Egypt written in the last one hundred years of so you will find the traditional meaning of Amenta reinforced by long-standing Judeo-Christian and Islamic traditions. You will find generally stated that Amenta is the religion of Ammut, a creature in the Netherworld. Ammut us usually depicted with the head of a crocodile, the forepaws of a lion (or panther), and the rear of a hippopotamus, whose epithets were "devourer of the dead" and the "great of death". All 3 of these depictions (crocodile, lion, hippopotamus) were fierce creatures to the Egyptians. All of these creatures had one thing in common.

Answer for yourself: What was this one thing in common? They were all man-eaters. They all consumed and devoured humanity. Mankind was "swallowed-up" by these creatures. In other words, they all consumed "the Soul" of man. It's no wonder that Ammut was depicted as one who consumed the unworthy dead at the weighing of the "heart" of the deceased. In the Book of the Dead, Ammut sat at the judgement of the dead in The Hall of Double Ma'at (when the deceased's heart was weighed on the scales against Ma'at....[justice]), ready to devour the Souls of the unworthy "dead".

Answer for yourself: If the "dead" were "consumed", if they were judged "unworthy" of their incarnational lives on Earth, then what happened to them when they were "devoured"?

This is where the debate lies. The traditional belief of the last 100 to 200 years is that they were "annihilated" and "ceased to exist". But if we consult the ancient Spiritual Wisdom in existence long before this 200 year time period we find that this "devouring the dead" was not the ceasing of "existence" but rather another incarnation into "dead matter" and the world of physical suffering for an Egyptian whose Soul was found unworthy of its next Spiritual evolutionary step outside the realm of "matter" and the "body". We saw in earlier articles that the living-breathing humanity on this planet Earth were likened to be "dead" since their Souls were imprisoned in these bodies of fleshly "death".



In other words Ammut would prevent the Soul from taking its next step up on the Ladder to Heaven. The ancient Egyptians believed that Souls ascended to Heaven by ladder and this expression of course was but an allegory for a metaphysical concept which we find repeated in the Bible with "Jacob's Ladder". The Egyptian theologians conceived that a ladder was necessary to enable the Soul to ascend to the next world of "becoming" and escape this "body of death"; itself the "grave" for the Soul.

Answer for yourself: Is this "Ladder" and the word "death" connected to our word

"Amenta" as the realm of the "incarnational 'dead'"? Yes it is.

As given in the pyramid of Unas we find an inscription that applied to the deceased Pharaoh Unas that is very important: "Hail to thee, O daughter of Amenta, mistress of Peteru(?) of Heaven, thou gift of Thoth, thou mistress of the two sides of the ladder (one for ascension and one to descend), open a way to Unas, let Unas pass . . . let Unas pass, for he is a being from the purified Amenta, ..."

It appears that the daughter of Amenta is being petitioned to allow the "dead" to ascend the Ladder to Heaven so that Unas could pass from Amenta to the next level of his Spiritual Evolutionary journey. It should jump out at you that Amenta is connected to Heaven and not to the traditional understanding of "Hell" as most Egyptologists and religionists maintain today. As we saw previously it is this "descent" of these "Living Energies/Souls/Spirits" into "matter" that leads to the grave, the pit, the inferno, the Underworld, Hades, Hell, and this "incarnational existence" for the Soul who has "gone into a far country".

Answer for yourself: But else are we missing here? Notice also that "purification" of Souls is accomplished in Amenta. Our only task is now to find out where this "Amenta" really is at.

Answer for yourself: Was the idea of "purification" of the Soul and "purgatory" connected in ancient Egypt? Was this "purgatory" a place on Earth for the purification of the Soul and not in some after-bodily-death? Yes it was originally.

Now understand that Ammut was known as the "Eater of Hearts" (consciousness), because she was a demoness of punishment. In the Egyptian Book of the Dead, in chapter 135, she is depicted waiting besides the scales in the Hall of Two Truths, where the hearts of the dead were weighted against a feather of Ma'at. This is the judgment of the Soul, the "dead". Now you are beginning to see what is going on. The Soul is being "judged" for its behavior in the realm of "incarnational existence;" and existence on Earth which was to the Soul its "very death" since it "fell from Heaven" into "darkened and deadened matter". It was Ammut who consumed the hearts (consciousness) of those whose evil deeds made them unfit to proceed into the afterlife (Ian Shaw, Paul Nicholson, The Dictionary of Ancient Egypt, p. 30).

Linked to all of this is the idea that the Duat (Tuat) is the gate of entrance to this Amenta. We saw in earlier studies that this Duat was believed to be the path "under the Earth" for the next life following "death".

It was later imaged in the Sky since "Living Energy" intersects with "Mother Earth" in producing this "life" and "cycles of life". Not only that but another name for Amenta (the Egyptian Hell and Hades) is the "Abode of the Blessed". Now wait a minute. You can pick up old books by Christian and Islamic Egyptologists and they will tell you that Amenta is the same concept as the Christian and Islamic "Hell". We have all heard of Hell as a Lake of Fire where the fires and punishment is never ending .But ancient Egypt wrote extensively about Amenta and called it the "Abode of the Blessed".

Answer for yourself: How hard is it to believe for a "thinking believer" to picture a literal "Lake of Fire" and "literal flames" as capable of being called "the abode of the Blessed"? It should be impossible. What are we missing here?

We are missing something very big here. It is the "Truth" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The New Testament goes on to describe this "Hell" or this "Amenta" as a place of physical agony, mental suffering, loneliness and emotional sorrow. The New Testament described it as a place where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth (Jude 6; Matt 8:12; Matt 13:42, 50; Matt 25:30;). It goes on to say that this Hell is a place of insecurity and fear. The Bible describes it as a bottomless pit, an abyss (Revelation 20:1). Again the Bible calls this Hell a place of instability. It is described as a lake of fire. Hell is a place where every moment is lived in uncertainty (Matthew 5:21-23; Revelation 20:15). Hell is a pit of darkness; totally devoid of light. It is pitch black in Hell; there's nothing to distract people from their suffering, sorrow, fears, insecurities, and instability (2 Peter 3-5). Hell is a place of eternal separation from God. Each person who goes to hell will be separated forever from the source of life, the heart of love, the very One for Whom they were created. Hell is a place where your Soul will be destroyed (Matthew 7:23 and 10:27-29). This is the picture we get from the New Testament.

Answer for yourself: Hold on. Is it possible, just maybe possible, that the above conditions mentioned above in describing Hell in the New Testament could apply to the incarnated existences of Souls' in bodies of flesh? Remembering that these ideas were not only written two thousand years ago but existed many thousands and thousands of years before that, then is it maybe possible that the whole of these conditions that are so "negative" to the Soul originally were termed and taught as the description of Earthly experiences of "incarnated Souls" who have been sent into a "far country"? I don't expect you to know yet but remember the question because when we finish these articles you will be able to answer this question for yourself not only correctly but assuredly.

Again, I was troubled no end when I read the ancient religious concepts from which our Christian religious dogmas have derived today and encounter the ancients calling this realm of Amenta, Hades, and "Hell" the "Abode of the Blessed". I did not know all the answers then but it is things like this which were such huge problems for me over the years; I wanted to know the truth before I died so I set out to find the truth about this religion into which I had been born and indoctrinated. The results of my twenty years of scholarly study lay before the readers in the articles that I write. This idea that Amenta is the "abode of the Blessed" is rather hard to imagine when most religionists and many Egyptologists tell us that Amenta is a burning Hell reserved for the Soul's punishment and treat it as if a "literal" burning Hell. They just forget to tell you this small part of the Egyptian Religion that the ancient Egyptians called this "Hell" the "Abode of the Blessed" and expect you to never to buy and read, let alone come to understand as you read, The Egyptian Book of the Dead for yourself. Again, it appeared to me that much was "overlooked" in their attempt to maintain the integrity of their prior Judeo-Christian and Islamic religious traditions; concerning for example the dogma of "Hell". Even harder to believe otherwise is that religions today support such ancient Egyptologists and their writings. Much Egyptian archeology is funded by monies from such religious camps.

Yet, something is wrong here. I had to know so I studied more looking for the clues to sort this all out. I began to find Egyptologists which taught differently and began to stumble slowly upon the "keys" to unlock this puzzle. I was overwhelmed to see the hidden truth that lies behind such traditional religious lies and superstition which I had received "by faith".

Here is what I found. I found that the Manes (the Spirits/Souls of the Dead) in Amenta were not looked upon as really dead, but sleeping. I found that in The Egyptian Book of the Dead that Horus, the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ comes to awaken the "sleepers in their coffins" (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, Light of the World, p. 846). That reminded me of what Paul has said in the New Testament when he writes:

Eph 5:14-15 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, (KJV)

Continued study showed me that Osiris, the Father, in distinction from Horus, the Son, is consistently assigned the functions, prerogatives and sovereignty of the "king of the dead." He is hailed in a hundred passages or more as the Ruler of the Underworld, or as Lord of Amenta (Amenti, Amentiu), the Egyptian Hades.

Answer for yourself: What have we just seen?

Ok, we just make the connection between "Hell", "the dead and sleeping", "sleepers in their coffins", "king of the dead", "Underworld", "Amenta", "Hades", and the "Abode of the Blessed" as all being synonyms for the same religious idea! These terms are interconnected and if so then they fly right into the face of contemporary meaning of the religious dogmas of Judeo-Christianity and Islam regarding "Hell" and "Hades", let alone other concepts like the "Lake of Fire", the pit, the Underworld, the Neterworld, etc. Something was not right; literal fire and anguish is not a blessing I thought so I was missing something or the people I had been reading and the books that they wrote had missed something. So I dug deeper.

It dawned on me after some early study into the The Egyptian Book of the Dead and its commentaries that coming to the correct understanding of this region of the "sleeping dead" in all religious theology could have a dramatic impact upon the very core of my Christian religious beliefs; especially in light that Horus and Jesus as the Christian "Christ/Horus" called out to the "dead" to "awake from sleep and come forth". They both do the same things and have now over 10,000 years as found carved in the stones of ancient Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Where did the Horus clone, our Jesus say to "the dead" to "come forth"? The same place that Horus did, at "Beth-annu", which is called "Bethany" in the New Testament, when La-Asar-us was awakened from the slumber of "death" as was Lazarus when Jesus did the same thing at Bethany. Again, something is not right; it appears that I am reading the same story; one is allegorical of the awakening of the "god in mankind" and the other supposedly "literal-historical".

Answer for yourself: Or is it?

The correct locating of this region of Amenta, Hades, and Hell quickly became one of my major goals in my studies. I found that Hades or Amenta has a ruler. Hades is the lord of the dead and ruler of the Netherworld, which is referred to as the domain of Hades or, by transference, as Hades alone. The Greeks called him Hades; Egypt called this ruler Ammut. This Greek Hades is assimilable to the Roman Pluto, ruler of Hades, the dark underworld. As I studies this realm out completely, it dawned upon me that without a doubt this realm of suffering, pain, torment, loneliness, sorry, emotional sorrow, insecurity, fear, physical agony, weeping, fear, insecurity, and instability (all the terms used in the New Testament to define this "Hell") is this Egyptian Amenta. It began to dawn upon me from my studies of ancient Egypt and later Comparative religions, including the great Greek philosophers, that "Hades/Hell/Underworld/pit/abyss, etc.," are all synonyms for this "Earthly Incarnation" of our Souls in this "darkened matter" of fleshly existence; an existence of sorrow and pain for our Souls.

To say that I was overwhelmed is an understatement. I had heard sermons from pulpits my whole childhood warning me of the wrath of God toward me and the sure prospect of a literal burning eternal torment from this God of Love my whole life. All of that vaporized in about 2 months of serious study into these issues. Once I began my study outside of the "Christian Box" a whole new world opened for me. Once I quit reading books by Christians who said what other Christians has previously wrote and said, who like themselves knew not the truth behind what they zealously wrote, intending good, and got back to the original writings of the ancients from which all our current theological dogmas have been derived, I saw clearly that our current Christian religious dogmas and religious beliefs had so tragically veered off the mark from intended interpretation of these ancient Spiritual concepts as was understood in the beginning of recorded time. I was believing something entirely different from those who gave the world these concepts in the beginning of recorded time. I wept at time at the revelations and illuminations which I was receiving realizing that I had not "the Truth" about myself and my own existence on this planet. Here I was in my mid-40's not knowing the truth about God, me, who I really am, my purpose here, and where I go when I die and I had been in church my whole life and even graduated Seminary and pastored at a mega-church in Dallas, Texas, and I awakened slowly to the fact that I could no longer trust anything that I had been previously taught by the Christian machine of diminished light. My personal study outside the "mind-control" box of organized religion was my only hope of salvation and accurate knowledge of God and this Cosmos and my very incarnational "purpose". Judaism and ancient Egypt provided me with all that I could ever hope to learn. My tears turned to joy. Understand that I love Judaism, but "Judeo-Christianity" or "Messianic Christianity" is lethal to the intellect!

That this dismal limbo of theology, Amenta, Hades, Hell, the grave, the pit, the inferno, etc., is actually our Earth in which the descending Soul has been "incarnated" is a fact which has never once dawned upon the intellectual minds of most Christian leaders, pastors, and teachers over the last 1,800 years. Of course to make such a statement and ask people to consider it "true" will necessitate a diligent effort on my part to present the facts of the matter concerning "Amenta" as the realm of Earthly incarnation death for our Souls. To say that this correct understanding of Amenta as well as the words "death" and "the dead" will absolutely overturn the vast majority of all Christian religious belief, if not all of them, will only become plain as the evidence for such a statement on my part is amassed. So we continue and we get to the very heart of these truths by coming to an accurate understanding of the ancient Egyptian religion when so many others have tried and failed.

We will continue our study in the second article in this series on Amenta.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #2

We continue our study by stating that in earlier articles we presented the truth about the use of the word "death" and "the dead" and how in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of antiquity that it referred to the "incarnation of the Soul" into "matter" in ancient Egypt and various Greek systems and writings of the great thinkers and philosophers of old. We saw that this idea of "death" and "the dead" as it relates to the "incarnation of the Soul" into "matter" actually began much earlier in ancient Egypt (the "dead" being a term for incarnation into "matter"). We looked briefly in passing to the Egyptian word "Amenta". We now will go into detail concerning this concept of Amenta. We mentioned that recovering the true meaning of the word "death" as it was used in all the ancient Spiritual Books of antiquity as well as in the Old and New Testament necessitates a complete reinterpretation of current Judeo-Christian and Islamic religious beliefs. And I mean "complete". In this article we will continue to go in-depth in the examination of the ancient Egyptian Religion as it relates to this word "death", "the dead", and "Amenta". Since all later world religions have their origin in this great metaphysical Egyptian Religion the effect of the restoration of the word "the dead", "death", and "Amenta" to their correct meanings as used in these ancient documents and dogmas long before the later Roman "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom will have staggering consequences upon our current Christian beliefs since almost most of them can be traced to ancient Egypt one way or the other. Again, I must say, had it not been for the radical Roman reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom from the 2nd through the 5th centuries then these teachings would not be necessary since we would hopefully have followed in the steps of the ancient Spiritual Masters as intended.

It is important for our studies to note that in the Egyptian writings such as The Egyptian Book of the Dead we meet more than one "god" or entity that is used to personify the "incarnating god" into "matter". Often we find Osiris, or Ra himself, or Tum, Atum, or Horus as the "descending and incarnating god".

One more thing. There are 4 or more Pharaohs that are used to personify or be the representation of the incarnating Deity into "matter".

- Pepi, and
- Teta

Quite often these "descending gods" and "Living Energies" are prefixed with the article "the"; as in "the Unas" or "the Teta".

Equally important is the fact the two characters show up a lot; namely, the "Speaker" and the Manes in The Egyptian Book of the Dead.

Answer for yourself: Who again are these "Manes"? The Manes are the revered spirit of one who has died a physical death. They are the Spirits of the deceased and often referred to as the "Human Soul".

Again, one more thing. Sometimes the Soul shows up as described in The Egyptian Book of the Dead as:

- The "deceased,"
- The "Osirified deceased".

Answer for yourself: Why is understanding these above "identities" so important?

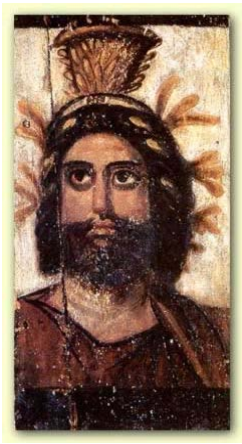
If we understand the above identities better then we should understand much better who is speaking to whom when we pick up The Egyptian Book of the Dead and begin our study to find the original meanings of the religions concepts that we find in our Bibles and in our Christian religious dogmas current today.

It is important to state that Osiris is the central "god" in the Egyptian religion. Osiris is the "Father", in distinction to Horus, the Son. It is Osiris who is given the distinction of the " king" in this "realm of the dead". Osiris is found in hundreds of passages called the Ruler of the Underworld, or as Lord of Amenta. Amenta, again, is the Egyptian Hades (Amenta, Hades, Underworld being synonymous terms for the "death of the incarnation of Divinity from Heaven").

Answer for yourself: And what is this "realm of the dead" we mention? The "realm of the dead" is a term for the incarnation of the Divine (Spirit/Soul) into "matter"."

Answer for yourself: When we come to understand that Osiris is the "king of the dead" and that we as Souls are the "incarnated dead" then we have to ask: Where are the actions and activities of these "Living Energies" occurring in this matter"?

They are occurring inside of us and our fleshly bodies and the whole of fleshly humanity.



Man is a microcosm of the macrocosm. For we, as living and breathing people, "Living Souls", are those "dead", and the "god" ("The Living Energies") within us came to rule this kingdom (our animal-body of "matter"), according to the ancient cabalistic meaning of every religion the whole world over.

Luke 17:21 21 Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you. (KJV)

We read this verse our whole lives never understanding what it is really saying. This should have been the understanding of Christianity today; study will show you that in reality the things I am teaching you were at one time the religious belief of the earliest Gnostic "Chrestians" who would later be persecuted and exterminated almost out of existence by the emerging Roman Orthodox "brand" of "literalized" Christianity between the 2nd through the 5th century.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the earliest Christian author, Justin Martyr, around 150 C.E., calls, in his first Apology, his co-religionists Chrestians, [Chrestianoi]...and not Christians? Justin paints us a picture of the times in which he lived and "Chrestians" is a term for the earliest "Gnostic believers in the Krst/Karest/Christ" who taught and believed ONLY in the "indwelling Krst/Karest/Christ" and never believed or wrote of a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus Christ. This is the "kodak-moment" we see when we consult the original writings instead of reading current Christian writers who only repeat their inherited Roman traditions never knowing the truth of the matter on which they write for themselves.

Ok, better set down for this. These "Chrestian", these earliest Gnostic believers in the "indwelling "god" within mankind" followed Osiris/Serapis or the "metaphysical" understanding in the indwelling "Krst/Karest/Christ" long before the 2nd century and the rise of the Orthodox Roman Church which would shun and alter these earliest beliefs of mankind concerning the "Krst". Christianity, as we know it today, is but a gross misinterpretation of the ancient Egyptian Religion and the Spiritual Wisdom of the ancients. The more I studied these events the more the facts, evidences, and pieces began to come together and in so doing it became undeniable that Rome reinterpreted almost all the existing religious dogmas since the beginning of recorded history. That is why many scholars call the Christianity of today a "replacement religion".

The Egyptians called the coffin in which they laid their corpses "the chest of the living" (Gerald Massey, Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 152). When we think of "coffins" we think of the "deceased Soul"; Egypt didn't. Ancient Egypt thought of them as "Living Souls"; this is completely opposite of the way we have been taught to think. I came to see that the word "death" in the ancient usage did not imply "extinction", that Amenta did not also imply "extinction" as I had so often read when reading Egyptologists that I had trusted because they had written a book and I had not. I would come to find that many Egyptologists today have several ancient concepts incorrect. That is why reading one or two books won't cut it. You need to survey the literature on the topics you wish to better understand and compare what you find with others who give often a wider perspective than maybe a current writer.

The coffins of the Egyptian were "chests for the living"; not the dead. We find the Manes, the Spirits and Souls of the Dead and deceased, the Souls, in The Egyptian Book of the Dead, chapter 30, saying:

"After being buried (incarnated as "the dead" in "matter"; not deceased) on Earth (not under the Earth), I am not dead in Amenta."

Answer for yourself: What did you just see with your own eyes? Did you notice the word "On" Earth? The ancient Egyptian Bible calls "the Soul's incarnation" and burial "ON" Earth, not under the Earth, the equivalent to being "in Amenta" (the Egyptian Hades and Underworld). This is amazing. You may not realize it but this one verse alone corrects much of what I have read about the Egyptian religion regarding "Amenta" as the realm of the "dead" as written by Christian Egyptologists as well as many Islamic Egyptologists. It appears that when we consult The Egyptian Book of the Dead and read it for ourselves we see things that contradict much of which is written in contemporary books today.

Answer for yourself: Why is that so? What are these writers trying to conceal and for what reason? Could it be their religious traditions of Christianity and Islam?

Answer for yourself: Is Amenta another name for Earth and this Earthly incarnation of the Soul? Is Amenta another name for the incarnation of Heaven's "Living Energies" and "gods" into Earthly "matter" and "Mother Earth"? If Hades and Hell are the same as Earth then do all these words imply the same concept; namely "incarnation of the Soul into matter, or humanity"?

Yes they do; or at least a long, long time ago they did. We have lost so much truth since the 2nd century C.E. that we walk blindly in our current theologies today proclaiming the brightness of the darkness.

Answer for yourself: When did we begin to lose these ancient Religious truths? About the middle of the Ptolemaic period (4th century B.C.E.) the attributes of Osiris were slowly being changed, and after his identification with Serapis, i.e., Pluto, the "god" of death, Osiris' power and influence declined rapidly, for he was no longer the "god" of "life". In the final state of the cult of Osiris and Isis, Osiris was the symbol of death and Isis became the symbol of life (Budge, Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, II, p. 306). This tells us a lot. As foreign influences crept in the original and ancient Egyptian conception of Osiris as Lord of the Underworld of death (incarnation of the Christ & Soul into "matter") began to weaken. It is then that the esoteric meaning of the word "death" and "the dead" began to be lost. Osiris' influence as Lord of Death (incarnation) declined rapidly due to the decay of the true comprehension of his place and function in the pantheon. Osiris' influence in his perennial office decayed because the knowledge of him in that role had decayed and been obscured and lost. This being the case it was easy then for Rome, another foreign influence, to come along and exert her authority to the further radically reinterpret this ancient Spiritual Wisdom which she did.

Horus, the Egyptian Christ, knows that though he enters the realm of the dead (fleshly "matter"), he does not suffer annihilation. He knows that he will survives all opposition from "matter" that will try to thwart his Heavenly purpose. Even though, as he adds, he is "buried in the deep, deep grave" (of incarnational existence) he will not be destroyed there.

Ps 16:8-10 8 I have set the LORD always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. 9 Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope. 10 For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. (KJV)

Contrary to what you might think that this verse might be saying the writer, King David, otherwise known as the Pharaoh Tuthmose III, knows, like Horus, that this "flesh" will not suffer in "Hell", this Earthly incarnation forever, that there is a limit to his Soul's corruption as it is "dead" in this Earthly material "incarnation". He simply is echoing the sayings of Horus in the ancient Egyptian religion from thousands of years earlier.

Horus knows that he will rise out of the grave of the his living body of "fleshly death" in his final resurrection and ascend and return up the Ladder to Heaven. I came to see that such a passage as the following carries in its natural sense the allocation of the term "dead" to living inhabitants on Earth, not to the spirits-Souls of the deceased:

"The peoples that have long been dead come forth with cries of joy to see thy beauties every day"* (The Egyptian Book of the Dead).

This above passage says it all; it pertains to people who were once "dead" who now are "alive" on Earth. It refers to the resurrection of the Soul from its "slumber" and "death" and speaks to the awaking of the Soul to its Heavenly origin and its "Spiritual Birth" in these bodies of "death". Along with this is the associated idea of the cessation of further incarnational experiences and the Soul's eventual return and ascent to the Father.

Another text says: "Tanenet is the burial-place of Osiris."

Answer for yourself: What is "Tanenet"?

Tanenet, along with Aukert, Shekhem, Abydos, Tattu, Amenta and half a dozen others, is a designation for the Earth as the place of burial for the Osirisifed Deceased (the Soul living in the death of "material existence).

Here we see in "matter", in this Earthly incarnation of humanity, the Divine Soul "died"; it is called the Osirisifed Deceased in The Egyptian Book of the Dead. In the Egyptian records we have Osiris as the "god" who "descended into Hades (incarnation into "matter", was dead and buried" in Amenta. Since we are seeing that "Amenta" is another term for the "death of incarnational experience" then Osiris is buried in "matter"; in the "bodies" of humanity. Gerald Massey comes right out and says the truth of the matter: "The buried Osiris represented the 'god' ("the Living Energy") in matter,"--not in a hillside grave.

The hillside grave, however, was the typography used to designate the non-historical burial in the body and the "incarnation of Living Energy into matter".

Let us speak a second about this "hillside grave". I learned from my studies that the primary model of the tomb used for the burial of the deceased in antiquity was that of the mother's womb. This fact is proved by the tree, the coffin, and the vase with female breasts, being varieties of the Great Mother of Life, "matter". When the identity of womb and tomb is indicated, as it is, by many pre-historic names; and further, when we have compared the images interred and buried with the corpse, we learn for certain that in burying the dead in such a fashion, Primitive Man was preparing the mummy in the likeness of the fetal embryo, or child in utero. In fact, he was burying it for a future birth. In reality this was symbolic of a further "incarnation" of this prior "Living Energy" into "matter" once again; not in the same body but "another". The Egyptians believed that the next life would be very much like this one. Interestingly enough, the dead were buried in a fetal position, surrounded by the burial offerings and artifacts, facing west, all prepared for the journey to the world of the dead, where the Sun shone after leaving the world of the living. Again, it needs to be said that the ancient Spiritual Wisdom taught "rebirth" but not in the prior body; a new one. This is the basis for reincarnation. The tomb was a representative image of the maternal birthplace. Therefore, the dead, some 50,000 years ago, were buried with an idea of reproduction for another life.

We see this example by looking at a "cairn", a hillside tomb. These Cairns were usually depressions in Mother Earth to which large stones were placed above to form a type of "cave" or "entrance" to which the deceased body was slid into this depression of the Earth. The symbolism here is astounding. These stones were understood as being "masculine" and Earth was understood as being "feminine". These "cairns" and hillside tombs were constructed as symbols of the reabsorption of the "dead matter" by the great mythical Great Mother of Life. We often hear of our "Mother Earth"--and the uterine formation of certain cairns in Britain can be identified by means of Egyptian hieroglyphics and symbols, which prove that the tomb was a representative image of the maternal birthplace. We see that opening into this "cave" or "chamber" that is likened to the womb and birth canal of the female of our species. Therefore, the dead, some 50,000 years ago, were buried with an idea of reproduction for another life. This mother-mould of the beginning is also shown by the "Navel-mounds" of the Red Men in America, the Nabhi-Yoni images of the Hindus, and the Nave of the Church (on the right); by the Mam-Tor, a bosom-shaped hill, and the Mamsie, a Scottish Tumulus, in which the dead were returned to the Great Mother, accompanied by various types belonging to the symbolism of re-birth (like hair (it keeps growing after the death of the body), bones, etc.). The Egyptian dead were buried in the Mam-Mesi, or Meskhen. Both names literally denote the re-birthplace of the mummy. The Meskhen is also European. This Nave of the Church was the entrance into "the Mother", a symbol of her birth canal of sorts as seen in architectural example on the right. The Nave in our Churches represents the pathway to "rebirth" of "Spiritual Energy". As the "dead" were placed into the womb/tomb of "Mother Earth" then it was believed that this meeting of "masculine energy" (the erect stones) with the womb of Mother Nature "feminine energy" would result in a union of "Living Energies" and produce a "new birth".

We now know that all descent was first traced by mankind from the Mother alone, who survived as the Virgin Mother in mythology; and the earliest form of the burial-place was simply feminine. Later on when humanity became aware of the role of the male sperm and phallus in creation then the male symbol was added, and then we see that both sexes are then represented in the place of burial as the place of re-birth. Now erect stones (phallic symbols) stand above the tomb to signify the unification of these "Two Living Energies" that brings forth a re-birth. The dead were placed in such a structure being symbolic for a new life to come. In Egyptian tombs the male emblem is a sign of rising again, or of being re-erected (as they expressed it) from the female place of re-birth. When these two "Living Energies" converge then "new life" is born. That is why the ancients buried their dead in a fetal position, preparing the deceased for his next evolutionary step for his Soul.

Answer for yourself: How did Egypt symbolize this "male" and "female" in this "rebirth"?

According to the Egyptian myth the soul of Osiris (the sun) descends into the underworld of Amenta (Earthly incarnation), where it meets the soul of Isis (the moon); there the two are reunited in creative union. In many ways this parallels the physical plane of creation where the sperm (the male element) descends into the dark cavern of the womb to meet there the ovum (female element) that has likewise come down from above. It also parallels the symbolism of the ankh, the Egyptian Cross.

Ancient Egypt used the ankh-cross and the blue lotus flower to express this Divine Truth. The ankh-cross is a symbol representing this very "Energizing life" which only occurs when Spirit (masculine) and "Matter" (feminine) are unified together. This metaphysical concept was similarly symbolized by the ankham-flower of immortality which was worn at the ear of many ancient Egyptians. The Ankh, in the shape of a mirror or a knot, is a symbol of life. It was often carried by deities or people in a funeral procession, or offered to the king as the breath of life. It is symbolic of two "Living Energies" separated by a plane or boundary (the horizontal bar). The womb or "female Living Energy" is the circle or womb at the top of the Cross. The "phallic male Living Energy" is the vertical staff at the bottom. When these two different planes of "Living Energy" converge and penetrate the division between them then "Life" is the fruit of such union.

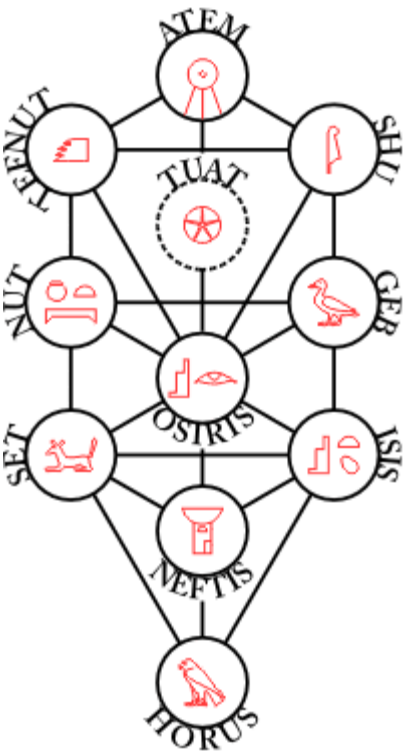
Egypt taught the same Spiritual concept with the blue lotus flower. The blue lotus was a symbol of the Sun "god" and the Pharaohs. Like the Sun that sets in the evening and rises in the morning (symbolic of death and rebirth), the lotus flower blooms in the day and closes each night (symbol of life and death). The lotus thus became a symbol of rebirth, the renewal of life and the promise of everlasting life.

This principle of "future life" and "rebirth of the Soul" was symbolized in ancient Egypt by other examples as well, the Tat cross, the scarab, , the vulture, etc., and a host of religious symbols which all shadowed in one way or another the immortality of the spiritual principle lodged within this "body of death". Let us look at the mummy for a second as we will deal with this in more detail later. The spices and balsams used to anoint the mummy were preservatives, and they did their work so well that they were called "juices of immortality." In many countries a liquor called Soma (the Greek word, incidentally, for the "Spiritual" body) was considered to bestow immortality.

It is important for us to understand that it is because of the animal-nature, this lower nature in mankind, often called in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom "Lower Egypt", that man is allowed allegorically by his Soul to drink of that immortalizing drink of the "gods". It you notice it was always the "woman", "Mother nature", "matter", often symbolized as Eve, or Hathor, or Ishtar, another "goddess", a woman, who offers to man the tempting cup (or apple/fruit) of "immortality".

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

It is always the feminine "matter", the mother of life, that offers deification to the "masculine" principle. That is why in ancient Egypt the power to the throne always came through the "wife" and "woman" and never the "man". That is why the Pharaohs had to marry their "sisters" to inherit the "power" of immortality as well as the throne of Egypt.



Thus we have seen over and over again that the "Soul was buried into the "body of death and matter". Egypt called this burial of "Living Energy" into this "dead matter" a "mummy". The "mummy' became symbolic for the the "incarnation" of "the god" into "matter". By its descent on this Ladder from Heaven into "matter", the Soul had become, as it were, "the dead", "the mummy". {short description of image}

Answer for yourself: Egypt had a name for this "mummy". Can you guess what it was? It was called the "Krst-Mummy" or the "Christ Mummy". Amazing.

This descending Soul into "matter" became the Manes, the Spirit of the dead, the "dead Soul" or shade (the abode of the dead; the Underworld) in the realm of the "dead" which expressed its incarnation into the darkness of "matter". This is what we find in the archeological records and depictions when understood correctly.

Thus we see that Egypt expressed this very same idea, this incarnation of Divinity into "matter", in the symbol of the Ankh. In passing know that the "incarnational "Living Energy" of Father God passes the plane dividing "Spirit" and "Matter" (the horizontal bar of the Ankh cross) and impregnates the "Womb of Mother Matter" and in doing brings forth "Life". Thus the Ankh was the Egyptian symbol of "Life, the symbol of the incarnation of "Living Energy" into "virgin matter" which laid dormant waiting for the union of the two Divine Essences in which it could bring forth the next stage in this Comic Evolution we know as "Life".

The Ankh is but another symbol for the "Tree of Life" as seen on the left. Likewise, the Ankh is but another depiction of the "Ladder to Heaven" and the "Tree of Life" where these "descending and ascending Living Energies" travel between Heaven and various manifestation of "matter" as it evolves from "level" to "level". One level serves as "Father" to the "level" below ("Mother") and then that "level" becomes "Father" to the "level" below ("Mother"), etc. And on it goes. In the ascent it is reversed.

Now we return to the great Gerald Massey. He goes on to state: "In the astronomical mythology the Earth was the coffin of Osiris, the coffin of Amenta (the Earth), which Set, the power of darkness (symbolic of "matter", closed upon his brother (descending "Living Energy") when he betrayed him to his death"? (Ibid., p. 706). Massey equates Earth with "Amenta" (Hades, Hell, pit, Underworld, grave, etc.).

"The coffin of Osiris is the Earth of Amenta,"* he says again. (Ibid., p. 868).

Let us not forget that Osiris was imprisoned in a wooden coffin ("matter") and was killed by Set, his evil brother which personified darkness. Late when set afloat in the Nile the "coffin of Osiris" ends up embedded inside a "tree" or "matter". Here we find the same idea expressed in the Descent of the Soul, its death and imprisonment into confining "matter". It lays at the very heart of the "Osiris Story", which is the prototype for all later "dying and rising gods" and "Sungod Stories" like our "Jesus Story".

Conclusively Massey restores the long lost and hidden truths about our very existence as mankind; a species

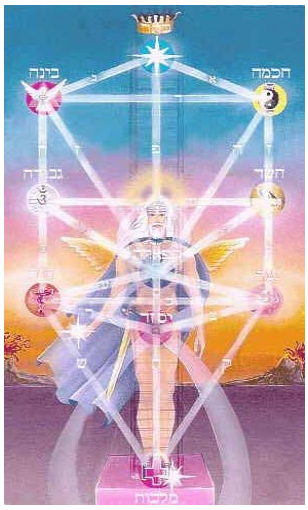
"asleep" as "if dead" in "matter" which is in need of a Spiritual Awakening form the "dead" as Paul states in the New Testament.

Egypt taught that the entrance to Amenta, with its twelve dungeons, consisted of a blind doorway which neither Manes (the Souls) nor mortal knew the secret of and none but the "god" could open. Hence the need of a Deity who should come to unlock the portals and throw open the prison gates of Hell, and be "the door" and "the way" for the Soul to escape this carnal existence and take the next step of his Soulish Evolution and climb and ascend the Ladder to Heaven and leave Amenta for good. The "god", whether it be Osiris, Horus, Dionysus, Attis, Mithra, or Jesus, came not only to unlock the door of Divinity to human nature, but to be himself that door; the way to Truth and Life. The giving of the keys to bolt and unbolt the doors of the Underworld, this bodily prison of darkness and suffering, was but the allegory of this evolutionary reinforcement of the human/animal-nature by the Divine nature.

In The Egyptian Book of the Dead the Soul rejoices in life, shouting, "He hath given me the beautiful Amenta, through which the living pass from death to life."

Answer for yourself: Wait a minute, hold on a minute. If you read the above verse from The Egyptian Book of the Dead then how in the world can Egyptologists have the audacity to say that Amenta is the realm literal fire and physical suffering and tantamount to the Christian idea of a tormenting and burning Hell which carries the same idea when the ancient Egyptians called it "beautiful" and a "path from death to life"? When was the last time your preacher told you "Hell is beautiful" or Hell as a pathway from "death to life"? Again, we have been taught just backwards and got it all wrong. But restore the ancient meaning of Hell and Hades and Amenta to this Earth then we have the arena where the Soul works out its salvation with fear and trembling as the Scriptures say.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? We already saw that "Hades" is translated as "Hell" in the KJV version of the Bible. What should this say to us now?



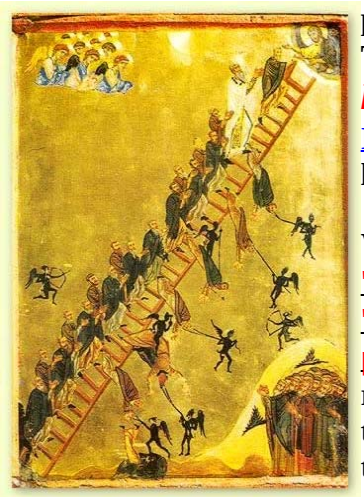
Simply, as Christians we have got the concept of "death", "the dead", Hades, and Hell as wrong as possible. Hell has been taught to us Christians as a place of eternal punishment for the wicked after death, presided over by Satan. The doctrine of Hell and the fear of Hell has been a wonderful motivator by religions. The problem is that the whole of the Church's "Hell" doctrine and dogma as it is taught today is simply not true. We have been taught that Hell is a state of separation from "God"; exclusion from "God's" presence. Again, this is not true. We have been taught that Hell is the abode of the dead, and is identified with the Hebrew Sheol and the Greek Hades; the Underworld. This is true but only when we understand the ancient meaning of the word "death", "the dead", and "Amenta" correctly which both referred to the "incarnation of the Soul" into the denseness and darkness of "Earthly matter" and not some eternal punishment in literal fires where there is no relief. We are "dead" but "alive" now as human beings. Thus the admonition by Paul and the ancients to "Awake"!

Eph 5:14-15 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

Because of awakening from this "death" and Spiritual diminished awareness then we can see the truth in order than we can follow a higher course in life whereby we can choose to walk holy by the aid of the instruction of the indwelling "Krst/Karest/Christ". The whole purpose of "awaking from the death of incarnation" is given below:

15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, (KJV)

Paul is teaching the whole purpose of awakening of our Souls from this "incarnational death" is that we can live our lives on Earth, regulate and adjust our lives, conduct ourselves and out behaviors, and to pass our life on this Earth worthy of God's approval.



An approval so necessary that we are merit ascension on the Tree of Life. We are warned to not learn on our own understanding or emotion for Spiritual guidance. We need help. God provided that both in His Torah, the Law, as well as the indwelling Krst/Karest/Christ to lead our Soul through its Earthly incarnation. Not understanding many of the "keys" to correctly interpreting the ancient Sacred Books and Scriptures we come to passages for instance, like the one about when the Law came "I died" and mistakenly believe that this refers to the Torah and the Laws of Moses. It does not. It refers to the Law of Incubation and "incarnation" of Souls into matter where they "died". Now you better understand:

Rom 7:10 10 And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: When God told man "Thou shall not kill" then was this death to us or life to us if we obeyed it? When God told man "Thou shall not commit adultery" then was this death to us or life to us if we obeyed it? I could go on 613 times as this is the number of the Laws; all of which are "life to us" and not "death" if we obey them. But there is a Law that Paul is speaking of that is not the Torah but which is "death" to him but intended to be "life". This is the Law of Incubation and incarnation of the descending Souls into "darkened" and "dense matter" where immediately the Soul died and was in need to a rebirth (being Born Again). This is the Law of which Paul speaks and 2.5 billion people on Earth never have a clue because they fail to study to find the "keys" to the religion we practice today which has its origin in ancient Egypt 10,000 years ago or earlier. Think with me for a second. That is why the Sungods and baby Jesus were wrapped in swaddling clothes, burial clothes when born in their myths; the Soul was incarnated into "matter" and it "died".

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us? Only if we awaken to our true Spiritual identity as "incarnated Souls" who are working out our Salvation (ascension) with fear and trembling by listening to the daily instruction of the "indwelling Horus/Christ" as He guides our Soul's Spiritual Pilgrimage whereby we properly develop by living out the Will of God in His Laws will we ever have the hope of returning home and ascending up once again this Ladder to Heaven as we see in the Prodigal Son allegory.

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom shows us that the Underworld, Amenta, is this Earthly world, and the Soul is pictured as running through cycles of descent from "life" to "death" and back again. The same sequence is set forth in the first chapter of Revelation: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore!" The Law of Incubation allows us to fall from the "life above to the "death" down here, but it also lifts us up again.

We have mentioned this word Amenta before as it relates to the "grave", the "Underworld" and the "dead". As we have seen previously this realm of the "dead" was the realm of the Soul's incarnation into "fleshy matter", this planet Earth. Originally ancient Egypt symbolized this event with the Sun and its relationship to the horizon. They looked at the Sunset as a picture of the descent of the Soul into "matter" and likened it to the Sun "setting" in the "West". This was for the ancient Egyptian a picture of the allegorical death of the Soul when, like the Sun, slipped into the realm of "darkness" ("matter") below the horizon and the "light" or "Living Energy" of the Sun as well as the Soul was darkened. All of this is allegorical for the metaphysical reality of the incarnation of "Living Energies" into "matter" or "Mother Earth" and the slipping of the Sun, symbolic for the Absolute Living Intelligent Energy we call "God", below the Earth's horizon which the ancients understood was symbolic of the impregnation of "mud" or " matter" with this "descending Intelligent Living Energy" (Soul/Krst/Karest/Christ) into humanity (clay/"matter"/Mary). This sinking of this "Living Energy" into the Earth and "matter" was symbolized by darkness. We have already looked at the etymology for these names being the same. This is why "matter", "mud", or "Meri" or "Mary" is to bring forth "the Christ" in order to help guide the Soul up the Ladder to Heaven by illuminating the way home to Father. Later, Amenta became the symbol of the West bank of the Nile, where the Sun at Sunset (the Sun being symbolic of "The Living Energy" of the Cosmos/God) descended back into the waters of Nun (Space, the watery abyss) for "rebirth". This place, the "West", on the West side of the Nile (Nun), also was where the Egyptians traditionally buried their dead in preparation for "rebirth" in a Spiritual body. As you might expect the Egyptians buried their dead in the West (the death of the Living Energy as the Sun set and descended into the primordial waters of Nun once again for rebirth) so we find the cemeteries and tombs usually built or hewn in the stony plateaus (cairns) and mountains on the western bank of the Nile. Burial is a testimony of "God" burying His "Living Energy" into "matter" in preparation for the next stage of His evolutionary being. To the Egyptians, West was a direction linked to death (incarnational, spiritual). Important for us to note is that the Christian Egyptians or Copts used the word "Amend" to translate the Greek word "Hades", to which they attributed all the ideas which their ancient ancestors had associated with the Amenta of the Egyptian Book of the Dead. Take note that again previously we have made the connection between Hades and "Hell" with the incarnation of the Soul into this darkened matter we call the flesh of humanity.

Just reviewing the above should stagger your mind as to how it could happen that mankind could stray so far from "God's" message to mankind in Nature let alone in the great Egyptian Religion who got all of Celestial Symbolism so right. The very "keys" to humanity's existence are accurately portrayed in the ancient Egyptian Religion like no other religion ever known to mankind. These ancient Spiritual Masters never dreamed their glorious truths could hardly have suffered so utter a destruction as it has at the hands of Roman Christianity since the 2nd century. What a shame.

We will continue our study in the third article in this series on Amenta.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #3

We now continue our study and move on to a more in-depth study of the mummy and the mummification process as it relates to the Soul and to the words "death", "the dead", and the word "Amenta". Our focus will be with ancient Egypt and their earliest beliefs of the Soul. But as a background for our study of ancient Egypt and the Soul and its relation to Amenta, this Earthly existence, some background information will be helpful before we begin to dig into what comes next.

It is known that the Egyptians believed in reincarnation or the transmigration of the Soul. Let us dispel another untruth. It is generally believed today, and sadly expressed and shared by "so-called" learned Egyptologists, that the Egyptians mummified their dead for the reason that, believing in reincarnation or forms of transmigration of the Soul, that they desired the physical body to be preserved intact for the re-occupancy of the Soul upon its return to Earth. These Egyptologists believe that the Soul transmigrated from body to body and this was a reason why they embalmed the body in order to preserve it so that it could journey along with "ka", an animating force that was believed to be counterpart of the body, which would accompany it in the next world or life. "Ka" might be considered equivalent to the term of Soul. This establishes the dating of the concept of reincarnation back to the ancient Egyptian religion but many think it dates beyond antiquity. The belief is thought to have been an necessity among primitive peoples. Certainly long before ancient Egypt peoples believed in transmigration of the soul. If they were not sophisticated enough to understand the concept of a soul, then they may have simply called it life. An individual or object which moved had life, and the one which did not, did not have life. This is analogous to the belief of animism.

Answer for yourself: What is animism?

The term animism is derived from the Latin word "anima" meaning "breath" or "soul". The belief of animism is probably one of man's oldest beliefs, with its origin most likely dating to the Paleolithic age. From its earliest beginnings it was a belief that a soul or spirit existed in every object, even if it was inanimate. In a future state this soul or spirit would exist as part of an immaterial soul. The spirit, therefore, was thought to be universal. They viewed life as being in everything, and everything, even man, supporting life. Life is sacred -- all life. One of the foremost characteristics of Neo-Paganism (or occultism) is the return to the ancient idea that there is no distinction between the spiritual and material, sacred and secular. Everything is still one as it was to primitive man.

Some background information is in order. We are making a strong case for the truth that our Earth is "Hades, Hell, and Amenta". Thus the Soul incarnated in Hades, Hell, and Amenta. This brings up the issue of reincarnation as the path of the Soul for its evolutionary purification. The transmigration of the Soul is also called "metempsychosis" which is a belief common to many cultures, in which the Soul passes from one body to another, either human, animal, or inanimate. Gradually the concept of a soul developed with a further realization that the soul departed the body at death and entered the body at birth. Soon it was thought the soul leaving a dead body would seek another body to enter, or enter an animal of a lower life form. It was also thought the soul left the body during sleep. This soul was pictured as vapors that entered and left through the nostrils and mouth. Later grew the notion the soul transmigrated to an infant of one of dead person's kin. This helped to explain family resemblances. The terms reincarnation and transformation of the soul, especially when applied to humans, are about synonymous. However reincarnation is not accurately synonymous with either metamorphosis or resurrection. Metamorphosis is roughly the changing of one life form into another life form. Resurrection, in the Christian sense, means the rising again of the body after death of the animal body. About the first definition of soul transmigration came from Pythagoras, the Greek philosopher and mathematician, who taught that the soul was immortal and merely resides in the body; therefore, it survived bodily death. His further teachings held the soul goes through a series of rebirths. Between death and rebirth the soul rests and is purified in the Underworld, which we have seen is in reality Earth. After the soul has completed this series of rebirths is becomes so purified that it can leave the transmigration or reincarnation cycle. Plato, another Greek philosopher, shared similar views as Pythagoras in that the soul of man was eternal, pre-existence, and wholly spiritual. In Plato's view of the transmigration of the soul from body to body, however, there is a difference. Plato claimed the soul tends to become impure during these bodily inhabitations although a minimal former life knowledge remains. However, if through its transmigrations the soul continues doing good and eliminates the bodily impurities it will eventually return to its pre-existence state. There is little evidence of reincarnation among the early Hebrew people but it later became a part of the Kabbalistic teaching. The Kabbalah, and ancient mystical teaching of the Jewish faith is filled with references to incarnation that are thousands of years old. This very same teaching occurred among the early Christians, especially the Gnostics, Manichaeans, and the Carthari, but was later repudiated by orthodox Christian theologians. Few know that early Christians taught reincarnation, and this can be proved by the words of Saint Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa (540-604 A.D....notice the date): "It is absolutely necessary that the soul shall be healed and purified, and if it doesn't take place in one life on earth, it must be accomplished in future earthly lives." Notice that this is the belief by a most important Bishop in the 6th century. Let us not forget that in A.D. 533, reincarnation was declared a heresy by the Council of Constantinople but that did not dissuade others from believing the ancient Spiritual beliefs. The reason reincarnation was repudiated was because of the eschatological teachings of death and judgment which were established as orthodox Christian doctrine. In simplicity this doctrine states man has just one life in which to merit his eternal reward or damnation. Such a doctrine as you might imagine also strengthened the Roman Church and its Earthly authority over mankind since given mankind only "one" chance for redemption and that redemption came only through Roman Catholicism. However, many Christians still believed in reincarnation because they think it was taught by Christ as evidenced by Saint Gregory's quote.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that Christianity embraced reincarnation for three hundred years, until the Roman influence expunged it after the Emperor Constantine recognized the Church? What do you think the early Christians were thinking when they asked Christ whether he was Elijah, who had come before? They were think reincarnation. If you think of reincarnation as rebirth, then we will be able to understand the principles of reincarnation better. Just as the earth has a constant rebirth, so does the spirit. Again before us we have the words of "the Christ": "Unless man is reborn, he cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven?"

In Matthew, 11:13-14; 16:13, the Christ is asking his disciples "Whom do men say that I, the son of man, am", and the disciples answer Some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias and others Jeremiahs or one of the prophets" (Matt. 16:13).

Answer for yourself: How could the Christ be thought to be any of these except in a past life? Elias and Jeremiahs lived centuries before. As for John the Baptist, since he had recently been put to death, there could not have been a reincarnation, but it seems that some people thought that his Spirit could have inspired Jesus. If people could speak in this way they obviously took the doctrine of reincarnation for granted. That Jesus is actually asking the question shows he is aware of the doctrine of reincarnation and considers it valid.

The Christ in the New Testament again tells his disciples who John the Baptist really was in the past: "For all prophets and the law prophesied until John. And if ye will receive it, this is Elias which was for to come. He that hath ears to hear let him hear". (Matt. 11:13-14)

So Elias, according to the Christ, came back to Earth in the personality of John the Baptist. This is repeated or confirmed in Matt. 17:12: But I say unto you that Elias is come already and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the son of man suffer of them. 13. The disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

Another reference comes as a question concerning a blind man. The disciples ask Jesus: "Who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?" (John 9:2-3)

Answer for yourself: How could a man sin before he was born, unless the sin was committed in another life?

The apostles are not asking what kind of sin resulted in blindness, but 'who" sinned, taking for granted that the act of sinning itself brought about this dire result.

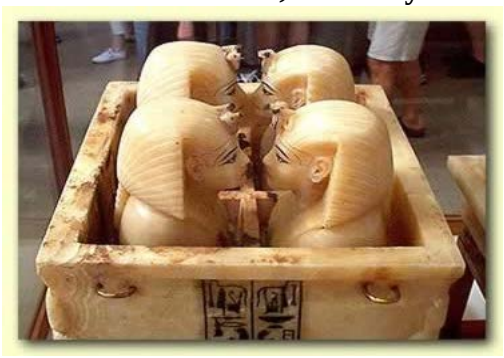
Furthermore, the sin could have been committed either by the man in a previous existence, or by his parents. This implies both that the sins of the parents are visited upon the children, which is a biblical doctrine, and that the soul exists and therefore pays for the transgressions of previous lives.

Notice if you will the Christ does not rebuff the apostles for asking such a question. If the doctrine had been alien to his mind, he would have told them that they were talking nonsense. He simply takes a different attitude. His answer: "Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him, (John 9:3)" implies that the doctrine of karma (and therefore its corollary, reincarnation) is not always understood rightly and that the calamities that befall humans should not necessarily be laid at its door.

Just as the earth is renewed so is the spirit or soul which knows no death. To many reincarnation is taught by nature herself. Some would say by the Mother Goddess. In the spring the trees give birth to new leaves, flowers bloom, new foliage springs up. In summer and fall the crops are harvested. In winter the earth rests, everything is dormant. This is the earth's life-cycle which many believe symbolizes the Spirit's. Reincarnation is a learning experience. Each reincarnation not only purifies the soul more, but this purification comes through opportunities to learn more in life if the soul is willing. The rationale of such a belief is that the soul has to experience all aspects of life. Western thought of reincarnation is that man just reincarnates to higher spiritual levels of life, but never returns as a lower life form. In Western philosophy it is also held if man does not reach a higher spiritual level he must repeat the cycle until he does.

With that as a short summary more to our point in this article is that some Egyptologists go on to maintain that the ancient Egyptians hoped by mummification of the dead to make reincarnation easier for the returning Soul, inasmuch as he would find his former body ready for him, and would not have to build a new one or enter the body of some animal.

Answer for yourself: Is this teaching true? No, not at all, at least not by what I uncovered in my exhaustive studies. Although some Egyptologists teach this in so doing they miss the heart of the truth behind this mummification of the dead and its relationship to the realm of the Soul in Amenta. Let us look at this most important teaching correctly and the secrets of the Soul connected to the mummification process of ancient Egypt.



How Egyptologists can read The Egyptian Book of the Dead and come away with some of the things they espouse to others who buy their books and trust their findings absolutely defies my understanding, having read and studied the The Egyptian Book of the Dead myself for years along with multiple commentaries by more enlightened scholars. The bulk of "explanation" of this sort which totally misses the mark of truth in the works of reputed scholars is indeed enough to not only deceive the unknowing but to anger those who do know the truth from fantasy. It has been suggested that such conclusions by such Egyptologists of both Christian and Islamic persuasions is done because their religious traditions demand conformity to the long established traditional dogmas of their creedal faith (like the physical body resurrection teaching). This has to be the reason for any 10 year old child could spot the errors they certain Egyptologists maintain if he had the ability or access to these ancient writings and artifacts themselves along with the "keys" to proper symbolic recognition. This is not rocket science, it is but comparative analysis where you group together similar concepts and examine the words the depict then and gather together similar thoughts as expressed through a variety of symbols. Honesty is required in all such studies but our prior religious indoctrination often makes such honestly most difficult to find let alone exercise, especially if your grant and monies are linked to validating the established religious tradition of the researcher as "unassailable".

Answer for yourself: How do we know that the current view of mummification espoused by the vast majority of Egyptologists today is incorrect?

In you think about it the profoundness of this next fact alone is enough to expose the many Egyptologists who have blundered in misconceiving the mummification motive. Let us not forget that mummification is believed by most Egyptologists today to have been purposeful for preserving "the same body" for "reanimation" by the descending Soul in another "incarnation". Thus they teach the "resurrection" of the physical body from this mistaken idea connected to the "mummification" process.

Answer for yourself: Beginning in the third dynasty, the internal organs of the deceased (lungs, stomach, liver and intestines) were removed, washed with palm wine and spices, and stored in four separate canopic jars made of limestone, calcite or clay. Prior to this, the abdominal contents were removed, wrapped and buried in the floor of the tomb. However, the heart was left in the body because it was considered the centre of intelligence. Tell me! How can a procedure performed for the alleged purpose of preservation of a body to be used in the next birth began with a gross mutilation of the body of the deceases that so badly disfigures and damages it irreparably? It simply does not make sense that they further mutilate, main, cripple, and dismember the corpse yet want to preserve it supposedly for the Soul's return to an further degraded and damaged body! Common sense would say otherwise; a commodity often lacking in many religious and related studies today.

You might not know but in the mummification process canopic jars were covered funereal vases, normally composed of clay, intended to keep the viscera and organs of mummified corpses. The canopic jars on the right were taken from the tomb of Pharaoh Tutankhamun. All the viscera were not kept in a single canopic jar, but rather each organ in its own jar. The Egyptians considered the heart to be the seat of the Soul, so it was the only organ not removed from the body. The brain was not preserved but instead was liquefied and completely drained from the corpse through the nostrils. The four canopic jars that the internal organs were placed in are also buried with the deceased. The viscera, the whole of the organs of the chest and abdominal cavity were first removed, and the entrails placed in the Canopic jars at the four corners of the coffin. It should appear at one to the "thinking believer" that a person does not mutilate what he wishes to preserve. If this be not conclusive that many Egyptologists have misunderstood the mummification process and got is all wrong then let me add that often that both the head and the feet of the corpse were cut off!

Answer for yourself: How could possibly a re-descending Soul profitably use this old shriveled, leathery and mutilated shell as its next living tabernacle when much of it has been lost, destroyed, or thrown away? Such an idea absolutely insults one's intelligence. To accept such an idea make the genius of the ancient Egyptian race and Religion appear stupid and thick-witted. We again are missing something.

Traditions are hard to break; especially religious traditions. Because we believed, under the domination of medieval Christian theologians, that Christ rose in his flesh and that we should do likewise at the last trump, we make assumptions about the past based upon "current religious beliefs" and read them "backwards" down through history and impose our beliefs upon the ancients when more often than not they never believed the same way about many of the religious dogmas ingrained in us by Roman Catholicism since the 2nd century. In all reality, we as Christians today have been so dumbed-down that we are like little children "religiously" where the most profound symbolism of the ancients are consistently taken as if "literal". We have been so mentally stunted by Christian theology that we choke on even the "milk" of the Word. It makes me want to laugh and cry. Here we are today imposing our "religious darkness" upon the most illuminated race of human history, the Egyptian People and their Great Religion. We should be ashamed and mortified by such statements by our unlearned Christian leaders. Such ignorance from the current religious establishment should motivate us to personally investigate everything about our Christian faith for ourselves because I learned long ago in doing these types of studies that I could not trust any Christian teaching since the 2nd century. Only if my studies verified what I was being taught in Church then could I be assured that it was true. Truth is the highest form of Religion known to mankind!

Objective study will prove to the reader that the practice of embalmment was nothing more than a mighty rite of symbolism and never intended to prepare the corpse of "reanimation" of the deceased's body. It was purely Symbolic as we shall see.

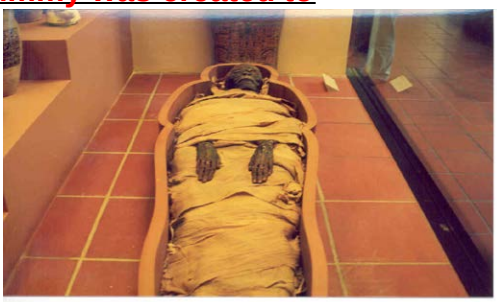
Answer for yourself: How can we know that this is true, that religious symbolism was the purpose of the mummification of the dead and not the preservation of the next vehicle for the Soul's reincarnation? First of all embalmment was performed for only a relatively few of Egypt's deceased, notably kings and functionaries. Embalmment was very costly and it required a hundred days, and so this limited its availability to most. Embalmment was indulged in only in the case of those who could afford such an elaborate funeral ritual.

Answer for yourself: Let me ask you. If the motive for mummification had been one arising out of universal philosophy or accepted universal religious belief as a necessity for the next life, then would it not have been practiced generally, with rich and poor alike? But we find that it was not. No enlightened and illuminated nation as ancient Egypt would continue for centuries a practice based on a theory which made the difference in worldly wealth critical for the whole future destiny of the great mass of its inhabitants.

Answer for yourself: If the hope of future evolutionary Spiritual growth depended on the performance of embalmment of the cadaver, then is not ancient Egypt guilty of a felonious neglect of her general population in favor of her overlords at the price of snubbing the poor?

Answer for yourself: And what do we do when we find out that early nations were superstitious in the extreme about the careful observance of funeral rites? The evidence is clear. Egypt could not have given the benefit of such a vital ceremony to only a limited class if it was the "only" vehicle for the "ascent and re-descent of the same Soul"!

It is time to set the record straight by telling the truth which escapes many for a host of reasons. There is a reason as to why I began the current studies by focusing on the words "death" and "the dead" because in this way by restoring the obsolete meaning of the words "death" and "the dead" it will leads us to the further study of "Amenta" which is so necessary if we ever hope of rightfully interpreting the whole of our Bibles correctly let alone "the Christ" the way he is to be properly understood by humanity. It is this age-old mystery which in our day is seeing the light of day once again. Glory to "god" in the Highest!



We have brought abundant evidence from the ancient Spiritual Wisdom as well as our Bibles that in the esoteric doctrine this present life on Earth was considered as a "death", and the living body was likened to the "Soul's tomb". As a quick summary let it be said: "The ancients believed that human Souls were confined in the body as in a prison, a condition was was called "genesis" or "generation"; from which Dionysus, or "the Christ", would liberate them. Herodotus tells us that the worship of Dionysus as "the Greek Christ" came from knowledge derived from Egypt which was later introduced into Greece with a few slight changes. When one studies this out the Bacchic ceremonies of Greece are nearly identical as the Egyptian beliefs of the Soul (Thomas Taylor, Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. xiii-xiv). Herodotus goes on to tell us that the "rites called Orphic and Bacchic are in reality Egyptian and Pythagorean (himself initiated into the Egyptian Mysteries)" (Ibid., p. xvi). Proclus states: "What Orpheus delivered in hidden allegories, Pythagoras learned when he was initiated into the Orphic Mysteries; and Plato next received a perfect knowledge of them from Orphean and Pythagorean writings" (Ibid., xviii).

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? There is an unbroken Spiritual tradition of the Soul and its "rebirth" into a reincarnated Earthly existence that can be traced from ancient Egypt to not only the Greek philosophers and Neo-Platonists but even into the earliest centuries of the Christian church. Important for our study is the fact that this body of the mummy was called by the ancient Egyptian "the Krst-Mummy" or "the Christ-Mummy".

The body (or the mummified body) was believed to have housed the Soul which was of a composite nature; linked on the one side with the Eternal World, emanating from God, and so partaking of Divinity. On the other hand, it was also allied to the phenomenal (mankind's natural 5 senses) or external world, and so liable to be subjected to passions, lust, and the bondage of the evils capable of human flesh. Evil is inherent in this condition; and the Soul was said by myriads to dwell in the body as in a prison or a grave. In this incarnational state of the Soul in "matter", and previous to the discipline of education and the mystical initiation, the rational or intellectual element, which Paul calls "the Spiritual", is asleep. The Earth-life is a dream rather than an reality (Ibid., p. xvii). The ancient Spiritual Masters for thousands of years taught in unison that our life is a discipline and preparation for another state of being; and resemblance to God in this Earthly existence is the highest motive of action that the Soul can ever aspire. Having done these researches to obtain this knowledge more than adequately, then we are ready to push on to recover more of the necessary "keys" to interpret our Bibles correctly.

Mummification was not for "re-habitation" of the former body as we now see, regardless of what some Egyptologist or Christian writer might maintain. Such an idea only shows the shallowness of one's understanding of this great ancient Egyptian Spiritual tradition. Rather, the body was mummified to serve as a powerful moving symbol of the "death of the Soul" in "matter". This is the whole symbol behind the mummification process of the dead body. Mummification was a Heavenly reminder! The mummy was created to symbolically teach about these "incarnated Souls in dead matter". It speaks to us that the whole ethic of human life is more than carnal existence and pleasures of the flesh for the body dies and decays but the Soul, which tabernacled within this "Hades and Hell on Earth" (incarnational existence) is immortal. To a deeply philosophical people, quite unlike us today, this lifeless mummified body became at once the most impressive symbol of the entire significance of life itself. The preserved corpse became the mute but at the same time it was a stark reminder of life and death, mortality and immortality, in one mighty symbol.

I never cease to be amazed at the genius of the ancient Egyptian religion. Take for example this mummification. The custom was an attempt to utilize the cadaver as the central object in a ritual designed to incorporate the essential features of their entire religious philosophy of life:

- The significance of a ceremony based on the pretended preservation of a thing which obviously could not be preserved for living purposes, was to implore upon all minds the truth that the mortal part of man could be immortalized!
- Along with this, the mummification was symbolic for the Spiritual message that the Divine part of man, the immortal Soul, though in this body, has gone to its "death" when incarnated in the darkness and denseness of "matter", yet it is immortal still. This same Soul will defy death and corruption, as will the physical mummy itself.

So Above, So Below. The mummy was central to the whole Soulish dogmas of the Egyptian Religion simply because the mummy was a dead thing just like the "incarnated Soul". The mummy was a perfect example that prefigured the nature of this human existence and life, which was, as we have seen, likened to "death". The dead mummy, once the "keys" are restored to its proper meaning, therefore became the emblem of immortal life itself. The "dead" (Soul) shall live and exist forever as will the physical mummy.

The mummy reiterated what we learned by the ancient meaning of the word "death" and "the dead"; the mummy symbolized "life (our Earthly existence and incarnational life) which was in reality a death", and amazingly this "death (incarnational life) was the gate to immortal life". The mummy was to remind the person that the symbol of the mummy (the physical body) was in reality the "gate to Amenta", the realm for the incarnated Soul. And the preservation or immortalizing of the dead mortal by the anointing and infusion of spirituous oils and balsams was to symbolize the raising of this mortal to immortality through the acceptance and adoption by the lower man of the Spirit of Eternal life from the penetrating Christ nature and incarnation into "matter" (like the penetrating and preserving and "saving" oils). The word "anoint" means to "rub with oil". And at the very center of the word "Messa" or "Messiah", in Hebrew (4886 mashach), we find that it means to "anoint with oil" or to "anoint with Krst/Karest/Christ".

Answer for yourself: What is this to teach us? The mummy was to remind us of "the indwelling Christ" that aids the Soul in its Spiritual transformation in this Earthly existence. That is why the mummy was called "the Krst Mummy, the Christ Mummy". This "Krst", symbolized by the anointing oils, was to penetrate the animal-nature to its very core in order to transform it into the image of God. Again there was to be no difference between "secular" and "Sacred"; all is to be holy in life!

Answer for yourself: What else are we being taught here in the mummification process?

It was the great Egyptian scholar Gerald Massey who made the connection between the letters "Krst" marked on Osiris' coffin, the Hindu "Kris" or "Kristna", and the Greek "Christos" or "Christ". "Kr" becomes "Chr" in Greek, "rux" in Latin, and "cross" in medieval English. Now hold on for this. The Karest Mummy was the prototypal Corpus Christi, the body of Christ.

Answer for yourself: Was this "Krst/Christ" in the body of mankind limited to but one person as Rome would have us believe as a "historical-literal" reality or did it apply to all mankind? It applied to all mankind.

The Christ was the dweller in secret in the Temple made without hands. The mysteries of Hindu Kristna and Osiris were continued by Gnostics and Christianized in Rome. In Matthew 26:12, Jesus says to Mary:

Matt 26:12 12 For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial ("into matter). (KJV)

The Egyptian goddess Neith applies the preservative oil to Osiris as the first man to be anointed and reborn as the Christos. When Mary (we saw that this word comes from "mud" or "matter") anoints Jesus she is symbolically reenacting the Egyptian rite of the Chrism. As St. Paul says, "sin is lying dormant until incarnation again brings the soul into the subjection to the body of sense." When the Sun ("the Living Energy") springs to life mankind is itself the Mummy dead on Earth but preserved for immortality by the infusion of the Christ nature.

Answer for yourself: And what about the resurrection?

The 1st chapter of The Egyptian Book of the Dead entitled, The Coming Forth by Day, is in itself a term for the resurrection which refers to a living entity coming out of the state of darkness into the light of day and liberation from the darkness and confines of "matter" which has been a prison and death to the Soul. The Egyptian Bible concerns all aspects of life on Earth and the resurrection of the divine human psyche (Soul) in this life which is called "a death". Now hold on for a second and take a breath. This incarnation and awaking of the Christ in us is the death and resurrection of the gods of all religions. The death and resurrection of the gods in ancient Spiritual Books around the whole world refers to this incarnation of the gods, this Living Energy" into the "death and darkness of matter" and return to spirit (both its awakening while yet "dead" and its release into unhindered Spiritual light and life as the demise of the Earthly body). The essential truth of the resurrection is the central theme of One Life Force, the one Soul of being the self sustaining power constantly renewing itself. The Christian version of the resurrection has been fatal to the Western world as the real meaning has been forgotten.

Answer for yourself: What is the implication of this erroneous teaching?

The history of the world over these last 2,000 years would have taken an entirely different direction if we had been told myths were not factual circumstance but the key to all circumstance. Myth and symbol are a summary of the essence of history itself as a prejudgment of an unfolding Spiritual evolution as it presents itself on the stage of history in universal terms which can reenacted time and time again and which were in the Mystery Religions what Rome persecuted out of existence. These drama plays in the Mystery Religions were all about the "incarnation of the Soul into matter, its dead, suffering, and final rebirth and resurrection while both in this life and after the demise of the body". All my life in Seminary I heard negative things about these Mystery Religions and had no reason to doubt what I was taught; however, once my studies of them begin in earnest when I started to read the original writings instead of Christian commentaries then my whole understanding and perspective changed because in them I found the highest understanding of the Divine God and His most glorious plan than man could ever hope to receive and understand. Conservative Christians may reject their mythos because the inner significance of the myths has been trivialized, misconstrued, distorted, literalized and historicized, as they get passed along and truth is irrevocably lost in subsequent translation. As most Christians, due to prior indoctrination by Spiritual authorities in whom the trust, they are only prepared to accept the dead-letter historical version of Jesus' life when individual personal study will prove to them otherwise. But there is even more confusion as St. Paul and his Gnostic message concerning the mythos of the Krst/Christ will be later merged with the Roman reinterpretation of this ancient Spiritual Myth of ancient Egypt and Rome's supposed historical life of Jesus so in effect today there is no way to know the truth before you did unless you study it out for yourself. Then you can know the truth and meet God prepared instead of being the fulfillment of being the foolish virgins of which we read.

Our lives on earth are meaningless if this is it and our perspective is reduced to one life as a prelude to an infinite eternity. What a limited view of reality. Returning here again and again the soul brings its own book of records for the next lessons it needs to learn. If we want to be successful in overcoming our spiritual shortcomings it is logical for us to listen to ancient wisdom. It truly is beautiful beyond imagination. It is a beific vision of God to mankind. What a gift. Now for more good news. True religion teaches us does not judge our behavior in the Spirit world for there is no heaven or hell as such. The Egyptians believed that Heaven and Hell is in fact earth. It is what we make of our incarnational existence. For ancient Egypt the scene of Spiritual life was in the inner arena of human consciousness. When much later religions turned from this Earth to Heaven to realize their dreams we were led to the dark ages. Life on Earth is where the action is; always has, always will. Now is the moment to clean up our act. God has given us the Laws of Noah and the Laws of Moses as a blueprint to the world to come, they are the stipulations of our very Covenant with the Creator. It is way past time we look beyond the forgery and corruption of our Roman New Testament and its hostility toward these Laws of the Cosmos and begin to be shape ourselves into the image of God by patterning out lives after them while we yet have time.

Now let us continue our study. Being but a religious symbol proper interpretation of the mummy and mummification process teaches the same ideas we have seen previously concerning the body being a prison and grave for the incarnating Soul. By the "incarnation" of the" Deific Mind of Christ", this Living Spark of Divine Thought, impregnates into "matter" which is best characterized as the abode of the "deadness" of the "animal-nature" in the body. This "animal-nature" is called in the Bible the Adamic nature which is born to sin. Yet in this body lies the possibility of this mortal life being raised to Eternal Life out of the realm of decay and corruption. This Spiritual Principle was captured for all eternity by the development of the ritual of embalming of the Egyptian dead and the mummification process. The idea of "immortality" was thereby connected to the created mummification ritual to express the Divine concept of the undying existence of that "Living Energy" or "Soul" which "fell" into its "burial" and "death" in "matter". It is this Soul, as a Divine fragment whose attribute is "life and everlastingness," which is to live Eternally and evolve Spiritually as it ascends the Ladder of Heaven to its long-awaited reunion with "the Father" as seen in the Prodigal Son allegory. Under the garb and swathings of death, as seen in Osiris in his mummified clothing and swaddling clothes (bound in white burial clothes), the purpose of the Soul was to impart "life" and "immortality" to humanity. The same can be said for the baby Christ of the New Testament which is born in "swaddling" clothes or burial clothes (symbolic of incarnation into the realm of death, this Earthly existence).

The embalming was not the enactment of a vague spiritual ideal such as is advocated in many world religions today. This mummification was never about the future resurrection of "the decayed body". Every detail of the mummification process was a typical performance with specific relevance that relates to the Spiritual nature of the Soul.

Answer for yourself: What is one example? The injection and anointing of preservatives into the dead body was designed to do for the corpse symbolically what the putting on of the Christ spirit would do for "the body of this death." Understanding now the importance and great symbolic message of the mummy as you might expect an elaborate ritual was built up about the mummy.

Answer for yourself: Why? Do you recall reading about the Law of Dismemberment? Let me refresh your memory in the fact that the majority of the religious myths surrounding the descending "god" or "Living Energies" into "matter" incorporate accounts of the "god's" being either "cut into pieces" or "torn into pieces" which we see done in the mummification process. This of course refers to the dismemberment and seeding of the "god" into "matter" in his "fall" down this Tree of Life into "matter"; otherwise known as the Ladder to Heaven. This is again repeated in the removal of internal organs from the dead mummy as well as the cutting off of the head and feet at times. This "Divine Energy" of God has emanated into all manifestations of "matter".

This dismemberment of the dead body in the mummification procedure, as seen in removing the "internal organs" or the removing of the head or feet, is nothing but a symbolic reminder of the "Dismemberment" of this "descending Living Energy" into all types of "material manifestation" as it was Emanated and "fell" down this Ladder of Heaven into the flustering chaos of human existence and "matter" where rages the battle between Set and Hours, Satan and Jesus, the flesh and the Spirit, etc.

Answer for yourself: The mummy was always provided with a facial mask. Why?

We must understand correctly the many symbols of the mummification process if we ever hope to understand this correctly.

- The facial mask of the mummy was the mask for the Soul. This facial mask carried the implication of the "false" nature of the physical man, the personality, which was the mask (Latin: persona, a mask) that the Soul had encased over its true self.
- The bound legs and arms, as in the picture of Osiris, symboled the limitation and motionlessness which "matter" ever foists upon active "Living Energy" or Spirit which found a home in this fleshly body as "the Soul".
- The four Canopic jars were always placed at the corners of the coffin and they symbolized the physical world, which is ever four-square as the base that upholds all higher planes of Celestial life.

- The mummy case itself was symbolic for the the body or Earth, which provides the physical house and habitat for the Soul.
- The coffin lid served as the table for the mortuary meal, or the partaking of the "bread of Seb" or food of Earth.
- The bandages which encases the mummy were symbolic of the material vestures or bodies which enwrapped the Soul. It was a picture of this "descending "god"" who had come to Earth in order to "die", or "incarnate" into a dense and dark environment as the home of the Soul. This, as stated before, was likened to "death" and it was appropriate for the body to arrayed in "swaddling clothes" as was the baby "Krst/Karest/Christ" in its incarnation into "matter" as well. Literally this was but the "coats of skin" that "god" gave to Adam and Eve of which we read in the Book of Genesis.
- Then there was the light, signifying of course the presence of the glowing power of Deity within the fleshly house.

Let us remember our symbolism which we too often read mistakenly in the Bible as if "literal". When we read that there was "darkness was over the land of Egypt" (now understood as a symbol for the incarnated body), it also says that "the Israelites had light in their dwellings" ("Living Divine god" in their incarnated bodies).

Answer for yourself: What is this meaning? Simply, we must first "go down into Egypt", meaning the "incarnational experience", before we can "come up to Canaan", or "Israel" (the promised land of Heaven once again).Not only does our Soul descend into Egypt but "the Christ" with us. This is a Spiritual metamorphosis of both the Soul, as well as the "animal nature" in humanity by "the Christ being formed in us". The metamorphosis from Egypt to Israel, from Egyptian to Israelite, is a "Spiritual Transformation" of Mind and Heart that is called being "born again" in the Scriptures. This has absolutely no connection to a supposed historic Jesus of Nazareth but everything to do with "God" who is the Deliverer of our Soul by the indwelling mediator who Himself is another manifestation of this "Living Energy" whom we call "the Krst/Karest/Christ".

Answer for yourself: Have you ever looked closely at our one dollar bill?

This old Egyptian symbol actually appears on the Great Seal of the United States, and on every United States dollar bill. The reason is because the original designers of the Great Seal were influenced by Freemasonry, which had adopted a number of Egyptian religious symbols, including this one. The eye within a pyramid originally represented the "God" enclosed, during his "dead" incarnational period, awaiting rebirth from this "matter of death". The Pyramid was but another example of the Cairn or stone entombment of the "Living Energy" in the "deadness of matter" (symbolic for humanity). This "god", this "Living Energy", was entombed in the underworld of material existence. Nevertheless, the Soul remained alive and watchful, as indicated by the open eye which look out from within these bodies of "death"!

Answer for yourself: Are you aware this is the Spiritual truth behind the original Hallow'en before it was corrupted as well? Now we let our children dress us as gooks and goblins never understanding the Spiritual import of the Divinity within humanity peering out this body of death and corruption; a body capable of the greatest horrors that can be inflicted upon our brothers and sisters of our race.

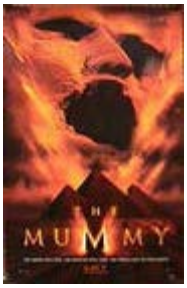
Answer for yourself: Why is the the Egyptian "Krst/Karest/Christ" imaged in the form of a man with a "hawk's head"?



It is this "hawk-headed Horus" which hovered over the mummy; for this was the figure of the resurrection, the Soul as a bird leaving the deceased body to return to the upper air of Heaven. This was symbolic of a "rebirth" or "future birth" of the Soul. The "god" Horus, who was the archetype for the pharaohs, frequently appeared in Egyptian art as either a hawk, or a man with the head of a hawk. The funeral ceremonies of pharaohs often included the release of a live hawk to depict the dead king's Soul flying away to the afterlife and up the Ladder to Heaven through the Duat (the Ladder to Heaven).

Gerald Massey in his Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 416, comes very close in one place to sensing that the mummy must be given a spiritual meaning: "Hence ...the introducing the mummy into the Tuat [Underworld] on the day of burial deals not with the earthly mummy, but the mummy of the dramatic mysteries as a figure of the living personality" (Soul).

And when we normally think of the mummy we have been conditioned to only think of the horror movies which has demonized the symbol for our Soul's immortality.

What a shame.

Let us continue our study of the Soul in Amenta, this Earth, in the next article in this series.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #4

We pick up where we left off from our previous study in the ancient meaning of the word "Amenta" as it relates to the word "death" and "the dead" and how it originally was used in the Sacred Books and religions of antiquity before their meanings were changed in the 2nd century and later. We have shown in earlier series of articles that the ancients described this descent of the Soul and the incarnation of the Deific Mind (Krst/Karest/Christ) and Soul into "matter" as a "death" and that this incarnation of the Divine into "matter" was likened by the ancient mystics as if "God had died" when He became "incarnated and entangled in the denseness of matter". God was said to have been "crucified on the cross of matter". This incarnation of the "Living Conscious Energy" of God we saw was called by the ancients religionists as the "dying and rising" of the gods in ancient Religions of mankind for thousands and thousands of years before the rise of Roman Christianity and its reinterpretation of the ancient Mysteries as well as the "crucifixion" of God. This "crucifixion" of God "into matter" is the very central mystery of world religions as well as Christianity.

Understand please that the Crucifixion has always been the outstanding, dramatic episode upon which the entire structure of Religious theologies (even Christian theology) have been founded. Upon this has the emphasis been laid. Millions of words have been written about it, and thousands of books and commentaries have attempted to elucidate its meaning and to explain the significance of its mystery. Down the ages a myriad points of view have been presented for the consideration of mankind. There has been much misinterpretation, but much also that is divinely real has been expressed. God has been misrepresented many times, and the interpretation of what Krst/Karest/Christ did has been travestied in terms of men's small views. A new world order came into being when Krst/Karest/Christ was born in Amenta, in Hell and Hades; when Krst/Karest/Christ came to Earth, and from that time on we have moved steadily forward towards a new age wherein men inevitably will live as brothers because Krst/Karest/Christ died, and the true nature of the kingdom of God will find expression on Earth. Of this, the past progress of humanity is the guarantee of humanity's salvation in the future. The immediacy of this happening is already faintly understood by those who, as Krst/Karest/Christ has said, have the eyes to see and the ears to hear. Inevitably we are moving forward towards greatness, and Krst/Karest/Christ have emphasized this in world religions since the beginning of recorded time. Humanity has not yet achieved this greatness, but the signs of it can be seen. Already there are indications of the coming of this new era, and the dim outlines of a new and more nearly ideal social structure, based on perfected humanity, are discernible. It is this perfection of the Soul and humanity which is of importance; for this is why "Krst/Karest/Christ died on the cross of matter". This is why the Krst/Karest/Christ was born (died in Amenta).

Phil 2:5-8 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

One of the first things that it seems essential to recognize as out studies advance is the fact, the definite fact, that Christ's Crucifixion must be lifted out of the realm of its purely individual application, into the realm of the universal and the whole. It may perhaps cause some alarm and consternation at first when we emphasize the necessity of realizing that the death of the Krst/Karest/Christ upon the Cross of Matter was not primarily concerned with each individual man who claims to profit by it. The crucifixion of Krst/Karest/Christ was and yet is today a great cosmic event for this same Krst/Karest/Christ is born daily in each baby boy and girl who takes their first breath. The nativity is played over in the millions day by day. The implication of the Crucifixion of Krst/Karest/Christ and its results concern the masses of humanity, and do not concern specifically the individual. It is through this Crucifixion of the Krst/Karest/Christ in "matter", through this "dying and rising of God" that a new age was inaugurated for mankind whereby humanity was given the opportunity to live as sons and daughters of God.

Now watch this. In the New Testament we see a similar "pattern" that was accepted as the very foundation for the Sacred Mysteries; an "Outer Mystery" for the non-initiated and an "Inner Mystery" for those who were "initiated".

Matt 13:11 11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. (KJV)

Luke 8:10 10 And he said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand. (KJV)

Matt 7:6 6 Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you. (KJV)

Now let us see Paul teach these very same things:

1 Cor 2:6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect (or initiated): yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought: (KJV)

1 Cor 2:7 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery (the Lesser Mysteries), even the hidden wisdom (the Higher Mysteries), which God ordained before the world unto our glory: (KJV)

Eph 3:3-4 3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, 4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) (KJV)

Eph 3:9 9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery (that we are all one with God), which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ (the Logos): (KJV)

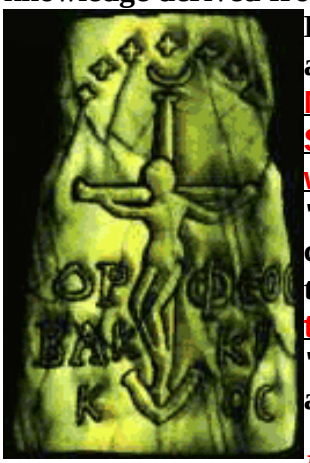
Col 1:26 26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: (KJV)

Col 1:27 27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: (KJV)

1 Tim 3:16 16 And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is going on there with all these Scriptures that mention the words "mystery" and "mysteries" in the New Testament?

We have just discovered the "two Pauls" of the New Testament; the Gnostic Paul and the later "reinterpreted"



Roman Paul. This gave me considerable trouble many years back when trying to figure out why in this same New Testament that the supposed writings of Paul often contradicted and opposed other things that this supposed "same" Paul was to have also written. Having later studied in-depth such areas as Gnosticism for several years as well as textual and manuscript evidences and the hundreds of alterations to these later New Testament texts from their earlier Egyptian and Gnostic existences, as well as the oral traditions which were later changed by Rome, it became very clear to me as it had to other scholars who had done these same studies; we have two different Pauls in the New Testament; the Gnostic and Mystic Paul of Gnostic Christianity and the later Paul of Roman invention which modern scholarship has come in the last ten years to detail magnificently.

It is this manifestation of God in the flesh of which Paul speaks which was designated by the ancients as far back as ancient Egypt and the Eleusinian Mysteries as the "dying and resurrection" of God on "the Cross of Matter". It is this incarnation of the Deific Mind of God as the "Krst-Soul" into "matter" and "fleshly humanity" which was termed a "fall" into Hell, Hades, Hell on Earth, Sin, the inferno, the infernal religions, perdition, the pit, the snake pit, the grave, Sheol, Purgatory, Amenta, Gehenna, Tartarus, the Underworld, the Netherworld, the Nether region, etc.). This earlier and authentic Gnostic Paul spoke only of the interior union with the Divine Essence which is capable within mankind. I would come to find out for myself that in spite of what Roman Christian writers would say about the Eleusinian Mysteries the earlier Grecian and Roman writes always considered these Eleusinian Mysteries with the deepest reverence because they contained the supremest truths of all Existence. I can remember reading in my earlier Seminary days from the pens of Christian authors that these Sacred Mysteries were often termed "orgies"; never realizing that these were never sexual in nature. It would be years before I would actually study these out for myself and see that such terms as "orgies" referred only to ecstatic Spiritual elevation of the initiates and the opening of their minds and Spirits to "Heavenly visions" beyond the natural realm of human existence on this planet of Earthly life and the limitations imposed upon our 5 senses. The Eleusinia were the most celebrated of all the sacred rites, and were called, by way of eminence, The Mysteries. And for good reason; one approached God in ways that defy Science as we know it today. These Mysteries were copied from the rites of Isis in Egypt, an idea of which, more of less correct, may be found in The Metamorphoses of Apuleius and The Epicurean by Thomas Moore. It was required of all candidates that they should be first admitted at the Mikra, or Lesser Mysteries...

1 Cor 2:7 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery (the Lesser Mysteries), even the hidden wisdom (the Higher Mysteries), which God ordained before the world unto our glory: (KJV)

...by a process of fasting and purification, after which they were called "initiates" or "mystae" (vailed ones). A year later the could enter the higher degree "Greater Mysteries" (again mentioned in I Cor 2:7 above). In this they learned the "aporrheta", or secret meaning of the rites, and were called "epoptae" (seers). These secret doctrines, it is supposed, were the same as are expressed in the celebrated Hymn of Cleanthes. The philosopher Isocrates thus bears testimony: "She (Demeter....a feminine Living Energy) gave us two gifts that are the most excellent; fruits, that we might not live like beasts (in Amenta, in Hell, in Hades, on Earth); and that initiation, -those who have part in which have sweeter hope, both as regards the close of life and for all eternity". In like manner Pindar also declares: "Happy is he who has beheld them, and descends into the Underworld (remember this is Hell, Hades, Amenta): he knows the end, he knows the origin of life" (Thomas Taylor, The Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries, p. vi-xii). Contrary to what Roman Christianity will characterize these Mysteries and "orgies" in my studies I found just the opposite or what Roman and the earliest Latin Fathers said in their writings. I found that the worshippers of God in these Mysteries did not indulge in unrestrained pleasure and frantic sexual licentiousness, but rather all effort was aimed at an ascetic purity of life. The worship of Dionysus (the Greek version of the Krst/Karest/Christ) was the center of their ideas, and the starting-point of all their understanding of the world and human nature. These Greeks believed, as had mankind since the beginning of time in ancient Egypt that human Souls were confined in the body as in a prison, a condition called by them "generation"; from which Dionysus (the Krst/Karest/Christ) would liberate them. Mankind's purification and enlightenment to his true identity as a captive of "matter" constituted the whole of the theme of the Orphic writers. Melampus, who was a sage, who became acquainted with the worship of Dionysus (in reality but another "neteru") through the knowledge derived from ancient Egypt, introduced it into Greece, with a few slight changes. This is why the Bacchic (another name for Dionysus) ceremonies in Greece are so similar to those of ancient Egypt. In all of these Spiritual Mysteries, the Lesser and the Greater Mysteries, the core of these Spiritual teachings revolved about the descent of the Soul into "matter" and they was called the "dying and rising (resurrection) of God who had been crucified on the cross of matter". The image on the left shows us this "Krst/Karest/Christ" as "Bacchus" crucified on the Cross of Matter; not an old rugged cross on a later Judean hill somewhere in the imagination of men who long lost the "keys" to proper interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Gnosis. Understand that these Bacchic Mysteries were in reality Egyptian. It is all about the birth of the "Krst" in you and me. It is all about God's love and helping hand in bringing His Souls and Children home who was "dead but now alive".

Luke 15:13-24 13 And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living. 14 And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. 15 And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine. 16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and no man gave unto him. 17 And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! 18 I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, 19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants. 20 And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. 21 And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. 22 But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: 23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry: 24 For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry. (KJV)

Herodotus asserts that "the rites called Orphic and Bacchic are in reality Egyptian and Pythagorean" (Herodotus: ii, 81). These ancient Spiritual Mysteries of the Soul are according to Porphyry later stated in Platonic Philosophy. At the core of all of these Mysteries is the teaching that our life is a discipline and preparation for another state of being; and resemblance to God is the highest motive of action that can be taken during our Earthly incarnation, in our Earthly existence in Amenta. I found upon serious study of these Mysteries and the writings of the earliest Christian before the rise of the Latin Fathers of the Church that many early Christian writers were deeply imbued with the Platonic doctrines. They very forms of speech were almost identical as we find in the authentic Paul. The profounder esoteric doctrines of the ancients were called "wisdom", and afterwards "philosophy", and also the "Gnosis" or knowledge. They all related to the human Soul, its divine parentage, its degradation from its high estate by becoming connected with "generation" or the physical world in which it "died in Amenta". The Soul's onward Spiritual growth and evolution and and restoration to God by regenerations (multiple incarnations), popularly supposed to be transmigration was at the very center and heart of all of these Mysteries (Clement of Alexandria (Early Church Father), Stromata, book iii). In December, 1945, early Christian writings containing many secrets of the early Christian religion were found in upper Egypt, a location where many Christians fled during the Roman invasion of Jerusalem. Undisturbed since their concealment almost two thousand years ago, these Nag Hammadi Gnostic manuscripts of Christian mysticism rank in importance with the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Answer for yourself: Why are these Nag Hammadi writings so important?

These writings affirmed the existence of the doctrine of reincarnation being taught among the early Jews and Christians. These Christian mystics, referred to as Christian Gnostics, were ultimately destroyed by the orthodox Church for being heretics. Their sacred writings were destroyed and hidden with the belief that they would be revealed at an appropriate time in the future. The discovery in 1945 yielded writings that included some long lost gospels, some of which were written earlier than the known gospels bearing the names of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John; Gospels by the way which cannot be found referenced or quoted from by any writer, Christian or otherwise, until after 180 A.D. when Irenaeus all of a sudden produces them along with the proto-Roman New Testament out of the thin air. Up until this time, 180 A.D., all that existed was the Gnostic "First New Testament" and oral tradition. This should give us cause for great alarm if we are at the same time told to believe that they were written "early" by the followers of some supposed historical Jesus.

Again at the heart of all of the Divine Mysteries of which Paul spoke we find the condition of the unpurified Soul invested with an Earthly body, and enveloped in a material and physical nature. This Soul in this present Earthly life was said "to die, as far as it is possible for a Soul to die; and that on the dissolution of the present body, while in this state of impurity, it would experience a death still more permanent and profound. That the Soul, indeed, till purified by Wisdom, Philosophy, Gnosis, and Knowledge, suffers death through its union with the body". This death of the Soul was nothing more than a profound union with the ruinous bonds of the body on this planet Earth, this Earthy existence which was termed by such designations as "Hell on Earth, Hades, the snake pit, the pit, the infernal regions, Sheol, perdition, the Underworld, the Netherworld, etc. Since the connection of the Soul with the body was considered a "death to the Soul", it necessarily follows that the Soul's punishment and existence hereafter are nothing more than a continuation of its state at present, and a transmigration, as it were, from "sleep to sleep", and from "dream to dream" until the Soul attained a necessary state of purification whereby it merited its next stage of Spiritual evolution outside of the confines and death of "matter" and the material nature. Heracleitus, speaking of Souls unembodied: "We live their death (incarnation into "darkened matter"), and we die their life (at the dissolution of the body we are Souls freed from our Earthly confines of "darkened matter"). Empedocles, speaking of the Soul's incarnation into "matter" said: "The aspect changing with destruction dread, She make the living pass into the dead". Plato, restating the ancient Egyptian Mysteries, considered the body as the sepulchre of the Soul and in Cratylus concurs with the doctrine of Orpheus, that the Soul is punished through its union with the body. Clement of Alexandria also states: "the Soul is united with the body as if for the sake of punishment".

Rom 7:24-25 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin. (KJV)

Plotinus, in Ennead II, book viii, stated: "When the Soul," says he, "has descended into generation (from its divine condition) she partakes of evil, and is carried a great way into a state the opposite of her first purity and integrity, to be entirely merged in which is, nothing more than to fall into dark mire". He goes on to say: "The Soul therefore dies as much as it is possible for the Soul to die: and the death to here is, while baptized or immersed in the present body, to descend into matter (matter is supposed to contain all the principles which are negative to life, order and goodness), and be wholly subjected to it, and after departing thence to lie there till is shall arise and turn its face away from the abhorrent filth. This is what is meant by the falling asleep in Hades, of those who have come there".

Plato said in Phaedo, 38, that "those who instituted the Mysteries for us appear to have intimated that whoever shall arrive in Hades unpurified and not initiated (into the Gnosis and knowledge of the Soul) shall lie in mud; but he who arrives there purified and initiated shall dwell with the gods".

> Important for us to note is the fact that "matter" was considered by the Egyptian as a certain mire or mud. "The Egyptians", says Simplicius, "called matter, which hey symbolically denominated water (Nun), the dregs or sediment of the first life; matter being as it were, a certain mire of mud" (Simplicius, The Physics of Aristotle).

Now watch this. This "descent of God" into "matter", this "descent of the Soul into Hell", this "descent of the Soul into Hades", this "descent of the Soul/Christ into Amenta" was often likened to a "birth in a dark cave". Virgil in his Aeneid describes such a scenario. He states that Pluto's gate (Hade's gate) stands open night and day (Hades again refers to the Earth thus the Soul's descent into "matter"): but to retrace one's steps (to ascend out of Hell as did the prior Krst-Souls) and escape to the upper regions (of Spiritual existence), this was described by Virgil as "a work, this is a task". You know it is. This passage from Heaven, called the Duat by ancient Egypt, a passage for the Soul leading to the abyss of the body, a passage into "matter" and into profound darkness and oblivion, is through the medium of the material nature and this medium of dense "matter" is the realm of characterized by the ancient writers as being a place of bitter weeping and gnashing of teeth and lamentations which is the necessary consequence of the Soul's union with a nature entirely foreign to her own.

Virgil goes on to describe this descent of the Soul/Christ into "matter" as a descent into a "cave":

"There was a cave profound and hideous, with wide yawning mouth, stony, fenced by a black lake and the gloom of woods (symbol for "matter"); over which none of the flying kind (ascension from the realm of incarnational "death") were able to win their way unhurt; such exhalations issuing from its grim jaws ascended to the vaulted skies; for which reason the Greeks called the place by the name of Aornus (without birds....indicating a difficult ascent). We already saw this idea once before if you remember as we looked at the burial of "Living Energy" into "matter"; masculine and feminine coming together for a "new birth" of life. We saw this same idea expressed in the architecture of the Nave of our Churches as being symbolic of the "cave" or "womb" of the Cosmic Mother.

Answer for yourself: Were all of the personifications of the "descent of the Soul" and the descent of the "Krst/Karest/Christ" told as a type of birth in a dark cavernous cave? Yes. Now watch this.

- Horus was born to a virgin (who remains eternally virginal), Isis-Meri, on December 25 in a cave or a manger. Isis, the goddess of motherhood and fertility, was called 'Mother of Heaven', 'Regina Coeli' (Queen of Heaven) and 'Stella Maris', as is Mary, the mother of Jesus.
- Dionysus was born of the virgin Semele; his father was the supreme god Zeus. Some sources say he was placed in a manger and reared in a cave (Zeus was also reared in a cave).
- Tammuz is a life-death-rebirth deity who is referred to in the Bible (Ezekiel 8:14). He was a sun god who, in his daily cycle, rose from his cave in the morning, travelled across the sky by day, before returning to his cave at night (the cycle of Divine birth, life, death and rebirth). He was known to the Greeks as Adonis, which is the Phoenician 'Adhon' (the same in Hebrew).
- Krishna's advent was heralded by a pious old man (Asita), who could die happy knowing of his arrival, a story paralleled in the Bible by that of Simeon (Luke 2: 25). Krishna was born in a cave, which at the time of his birth was miraculously illuminated.
- Sources differ: Some say Zarathustra was born to a 15-year-old virgin, Dughdhava the milk maid, in a cave. He received his prophetic calling at about 30 years of age the same which is said of Horus and Jesus.
- Every year in Rome, in the middle of winter, the Son of God was born once more, putting an end to darkness. Every year at first minute of December 25th the temple of Mithras was lit with candles, priests in in white garments celebrated the birth of the Son of God and boys burned incense. Mithras was born in a cave, on December 25th, of a virgin mother. God, in the form of light, entered a virgin, Anahita. "In Armenian tradition, Mithras was believed to shut himself up in a cave from which he emerged once a year, born anew. The Persians introduced initiates to the mysteries in natural caves, according to Porphyry, the third century neoplatonic philosopher. These cave temples were created in the image of the World Cave that Mithras had created, according to the Persian creation myth."

- Of royal descent, Jesus was born of a virgin, Mary (we have already seen the word "Mary" comes for "matter" or "mud") in a stable or cave. The Apocryphal Gospel Protevangelion says Jesus was born in a cave, and the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem is still located in a cave. The cave was illuminated so brightly Joseph and Mary's midwife could not tolerate the light. Jesus, the incarnated Christ, was born or placed in a manger, a container of animal feed. This tell us that mankind must eat the bread which come down from Heaven; this is the food of humanity (Source: the Apocryphal Gospel Protevangelion)

Answer for yourself: Did you notice a "pattern"? These personifications of births of "Living Energies" are but different nations teaching their peoples this "Hidden Mystery" of the Soul and its incarnation into "matter" through anthropomorphic language and symbolism that imparts to the finite mind infinite Spiritual and metaphysical ideas held sacred since the beginning of time. If taken "literally" then these stories are foolish; taken metaphorically and allegorically then these stories are Spiritual genius! This "religious myth" that captured the highest metaphysical ideas of the Divine Life of God in Earthly incarnation existed since the beginning of recorded time and can be found today on the pages of our Christian Bibles sadly distorted by a false Roman interpretation. Sadly we approach such important information with the wrong set of "interpretative glasses". This was never "literally" about somebody else; its "literal" application always and will always apply to "You"! The "death and "dying" of God occurred in "You". This "resurrection of the Christ" is to occur in "You"; never limited to but one person who supposedly lived some 2,000 years ago. This is the Eternal Myth for the whole mankind, yesterday, today, and forever in order for man to awaken from his "incarnational slumber" and realized a "born anew" experience in his Earthly life whereby he conquers the animal-nature and this "death" which impedes our Spiritual ascent and return Home. We, as Souls, are meant to leave Amenta and the Underworld.

In considering the story of Jesus upon the Cross, it is essential, therefore, that we see it in broader and more general terms than is usually the case. I found in my studies over these last 20 years that the real message in the crucifixion of "the Christ" along with its highest meaning have been lost to mankind over the last 1,800 years. One thing that I saw over and over again is that the he Gospel story is not unique, but has been paralleled in the lives of other Sons of God. No student of comparative religion will question the Christian parallels to earlier events. No man who has truly investigated with an open mind will deny that the Krst/Karest/Christ was an integral part of a great continuity of revelation of God to mankind since the beginning of time. God has never "left Himself without witness." And the salvation of mankind has always been close to the heart of the Father. To quote one writer who seeks to prove this continuity:

"At the time of the life or recorded appearance of Jesus of Nazareth and for some centuries before, the Mediterranean and neighboring world had been the scene of a vast number of pagan creeds and rituals. There were Temples without end dedicated to gods like Apollo or Dionysus among the Greeks, Hercules among the Romans, Mithra among the Persians, Adonis and Arris in Syria and Phrygia, Osiris and Isis and Horus in Egypt, Baal and Astarte among the Babylonians and Carthaginians, and so forth. Societies, large or small, united believers and the devout in the service or ceremonials connected with their respective deities, and in the creeds which they confessed concerning these deities. And an extraordinarily interesting fact, for us, is that, notwithstanding great geographical distances and racial differences in the details of their services, the general outlines of their creeds and ceremonials were - if not identical - so markedly similar as we find them" (Edward Carpenter, Pagan and Christian Creeds, pp. 20-21).

Answer for yourself: And why was there this uncanny similarity in the worship of these "gods" and "Christs" in these ancient world religions no matter how far you looked from nation to nation, from race to race, from dogma to dogma, from creed to creed, from ritual to ritual, from ceremony to ceremony? Why were they basically all identical with only basically changes of names? Why did they all fit a "Pattern"? Simply because they were all about the descent of the Soul and the Gnosis, wisdom, and knowledge concerning it and its "fall" into Amenta which has been preserved since the beginning of mankind on this 3rd planet from the Sun.

Know for certain that all or nearly all of these deities above had it common:

- They were born on or very near our Christmas Day.
- They were born of a Virgin-Mother.
- And in a Cave or Underground Chamber.
- They led a life of toil for Mankind.
- And were called by the names of Light-bringer, Healer, Mediator, Savior, Deliverer.
- They were, however, vanquished by the Powers of Darkness.
- And descended into Hell or the Underworld.
- They rose again from the dead, and became the pioneers of mankind to the Heavenly world.
- They founded Communions of Saints and Churches into which disciples were received by Baptism.
- And they were commemorated by Eucharistic meals" (Edward Carpenter, Pagan and Christian Creeds, pp. 20-21).

Edward Carpenter goes on to say, in the same book:

"The number of pagan deities (mostly virgin-born and gone to death in some way or other in their efforts to save mankind) is so great as to be difficult to keep account of"* (Edward Carpenter, Pagan and Christian Creeds, pp. 129-130).

The Crucifixion and the Cross of Krst/Karest/Christ are as old as humanity itself. The death of the Soul and the "Krst/Karest/Christ" in Earthly "matter" and "Amenta" are as old as the human race. Both are symbols of the eternal sacrifice of God as He immerses Himself in the form aspect of "matter" and "nature" and thus becomes God immanent as well as God transcendent.

We have seen that Christ must be recognized, first of all, in the cosmic sense. The cosmic Christ has existed from all eternity. This cosmic Christ is divinity, or Spirit, crucified in space. He personifies the immolation or sacrifice of Spirit upon the "cross of matter", of form or substance, in order that all divine forms, including humanity, may live. This has ever been recognized by the so-called "pagan" faiths since the beginning of recorded time. Ironically, compared to Christianity today they had this metaphysical Divine Truth that Rome did not want nor intended to bow to; acceptance of such a "Truth" brings with it the personal responsibility to live an ordered and Holy existence. If the symbolism of the cross is traced far back as humanly possible, it will be found that it antedates Christianity by thousands and thousands of years, and that finally, the four arms of the cross will be seen to drop away, leaving only the picture of the living Heavenly Man, with His arms outspread in space as in the image on the right. North, south, east and west stands the cosmic Christ upon what is called "the fixed cross of the Heavens." Upon this cross the Creator, God is eternally crucified. The Crucifixion in Space is pictured on the right as taken from Godfrey Higgins' Anacalypsis. First of all this is an oriental drawing and not a Christian drawing. That should grab your attention. J. P. Lundy has written, in his masterpiece Monumental Christianity: "It looks like a Christian crucifix in many respects, and in some others it does not. The drawing, the attitude, and the nail-marks in hands and feet, indicate a Christian origin; while the Parthian coronet (crown) of seven points, the absence of the wood and of the usual inscription, and the rays of glory above, would seem to point to some other than a Christian origin"

Krishna crucified

One thing needs to be said about this "cornet" or crown as seen on the right.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever noticed the golden halos around the heads of both pagan gods and Christian saints? Have you ever noticed that "both" pagan gods and Christian saints as well as "Jesus" have them? Is this similar symbolism a link between the "theology" expressed in both so-called "pagan religions" and Christianity? It sure is.

This golden halo refers to the entity being bathed in the glory of the Sun and also to the fact that a Spiritual Sun within their own natures is radiating its glow-ray and surrounding them with celestial splendor. We as Christians and followers of "the Christ" are most familiar with Christian images and the nimbus but other ancient religions knew of this idea and represented this idea of the "indwelling God" symbolically as well as seen in the image of Isis on the right. On the left is the central scene of the "Coronation of the Virgin", painted around 1444 by Filippo Lippi. Mary is being crowned as the Queen of Heaven, which is a title conferred on Mary by Catholicism.

Whenever the nimbus is composed of straight radiant lines, with solar significance; whenever curved lines are used for beams, it partakes of the lunar nature; whenever they are united, it symbolizes an harmonious blending of both principles. The circular nimbus is solar and masculine, while the lozenge-shaped nimbus, or vesica piscis, lunar and feminine. The same symbolism is preserved in the circular and lozenge-shaped windows of cathedrals. There is a complete science contained in the shape, color, and adornments of the halos of saints and martyrs. There is a complete science contained in the shape, color, and adornments of the halos of saints and martyrs. A plain golden ring usually surrounds the head of a canonized saint, while God the Father and God the Son have far more ornate aureole, usually adorned with a St. George Cross, a flowered cross, or a lilied cross, with only three of the arms visible.

Let we forget this "crucifixion of God" was accomplished by the incarnation of God, the "Krst/Karest/Christ" into "matter" and this same Celestial Event was pictured for us in almost every religion known to man one way or the other.

Phil 2:5-8 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

We looked at this passage previously.

This "making Himself of no reputation (nothing)" performed by God's Christ, the Deific Mind of God, the Son, is called in theology "the kenosis of Christ" (lit.="emptying"). It does not mean a subtraction of deity, but the addition of humanity with its consequent limitations. Although taking a human nature was a real humbling for God the Son, the Christ, it did not involve the giving up of any divine attributes. The doctrine of the kenosis involves the veiling of His preincarnate glory (John 17:5), taking on Himself the likeness of human sinful flesh (Romans 8,3) and the temporary nonuse of divine attributes during His earthly incarnation.

Before us we have the beauty and mystery of the Crucifixion Allegory. In his notes on the theology of Jakob Böhme, Dr. Franz Hartmann thus sums up the mystic symbolism of the crucifixion: "The cross represents terrestrial life, and the crown of thorns the sufferings of the Soul within the elementary body, but also the victory of the spirit over the elements of darkness. The body is naked, to indicate that the candidate for immortality must divest himself of all desires for terrestrial things. The figure is nailed to the cross, which symbolizes the death and surrender of the self-will, and that it should not attempt to accomplish anything by its own power, but merely serve as an instrument wherein the Divine will is executed. Above the head are inscribed the letters: I. N. R. J. whose most important meaning is: In Nobis Regnat Jesus (Within ourselves reigns Jesus). But this signification of this inscription can be practically known only to those who have actually died relatively to the world of desires, and risen above the temptation for personal existence; or, to express it in other words, those who have become alive in Christ, and in whom thus the kingdom of Jesus (the holy love-will issuing from the heart of God) has been established." One of the most interesting interpretations of the crucifixion allegory is that which identifies the man Jesus with the personal consciousness of the individual. It is this personal consciousness that conceives of and dwells in the sense of separateness, and before the aspiring soul can be reunited with the ever-present and all-pervading Father this personality must be sacrificed that the Universal Consciousness may be liberated.

But we can go deeper as we probe the depths of this "incarnation of the Divine into 'matter'", into this Hades and Amenta, the Earthly abode of Souls. George Faber declares the original name of the New Testament Jesus was Jescua Hammassiah. Godfrey Higgins has discovered two references, one in the Midrashjoholeth and the other in the Abodazara (early Jewish commentaries on the Scriptures), to the effect that the surname of Joseph's family was Panther, for in both of these works it is stated that a man was healed "in the name of Jesus ben Panther."

Answer for yourself: Why is the connection to "Panther" important to note?

The name Panther establishes a direct connection between Jesus and Bacchus--who was nursed by panthers and is sometimes depicted riding either on one of these animals or in a chariot drawn by them. The skin of the panther was also sacred in certain of the Egyptian initiatory ceremonials. The monogram IHS, now interpreted to mean Iesus Hominum Salvator (Jesus Savior of Men), is another direct link between the Christian and the Bacchic rites. IHS is derived from the Greek, which, as its numerical value (608) signifies, is emblematic of the Sun and constituted the sacred and concealed name of Bacchus. (Godfrey Higgins, The Celtic Druids).

Answer for yourself: Was early Roman Christianity confused with the worship of Bacchus because of the numerous parallelisms in the two faiths?

Answer for yourself: What lays behind this IHS? Unknown to most Protestants is the fact that the Catholic wafer used in the Eucharist is round with IHS engraved on it. This round disk again is symbolic of the Divine Spark of God incarnated in "matter" as it represents the "Sun"; the IHS symbol refers to Isis (Mother Nature, "matter"), Horus (the incarnating Deific Mind of God, the Krst/Karest/Christ"& Seb (the Earth neteru of ancient Egypt). This "wafer" is food for the Soul which is captive in this "matter" of Earthly existence.

One of the most profound doctrines of the pagan philosophers concerned the Universal Savior-God who lifted the Souls of regenerated men to Heaven through His own nature. This concept was unquestionably the inspiration for the words attributed to the New Testament Christ: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." In an effort to make a single person out of Jesus and His Christos, Christian writers have patched together a doctrine which must be resolved back into its original constituents if the true meaning of Christianity is to be rediscovered. In the Gospel narratives the Christos represents the perfect man who, having passed through the various stages of the "World Mystery" symbolized by the thirty-three years, ascends to the Heaven sphere, up the Ladder to Heaven, where he is reunited with his Eternal Father (again the Prodigal Son allegory). The story of Jesus as now preserved is but a badly misunderstood and distorted and grossly misinterpreted part of a secret initiatory ritualism belonging to the early Christian and pagan Mysteries which goes as far back as ancient Egypt.

It seems pretty clear the more that one studies that the Divine allegories and personifications of Cosmic activities were literalized into the supposed life of a "literal" person. Before this blatant mischaracterization of Divine Truth by 2nd century Roman religionists the Krst/Karest/Christos of the nations represented the Solar power reverenced by every nation of antiquity and this fact cannot be controverted. This nature and purpose of this Solar power had been revealed to humanity since time immemorial under the name and personality of the Krst/Karest/Christ from nation to nation. This prior personification of the Divine Sun, the image of the Comic God, enabled mankind to understand the abstract power that resided within himself for he was actually "the god-man". This teaching was not new; it followed a precedent set by all previous World-Teachers. This god-man, thus endowed with all the qualities of Deity, signifies the latent divinity in every man. Mortal man achieves deification only through at-one-ment with this divine Self. Union with the immortal Self constitutes immortality, and he who finds his true Self is therefore "saved." This Christos, or divine man in man, is man's real hope of salvation--the living Mediator between abstract Deity and mortal humankind. Attis, Adonis, Bacchus, and Orpheus were symbolic personages whom characterized as personifications this Divine power, so Jesus has been confused with the Christos, or god-man, as well. Since the Krst/Karest/Christ, or the Christos was the god-man imprisoned in every creature, it was the first duty of the initiate to liberate, or "resurrect, " this Eternal One within himself. He who attained reunion with his Christos was consequently termed a Christian, or Christened, man. We have lost so much; instead of realizing our Divine nature and goal of our Soulish incarnation we are taught to "wait" for the Savior to come and make things right when it is our goal and task for the whole of our Earthly incarnation. We, humanity, as the awakened and emerging Christs, are these Saviors and no Savior or Christ will come unless He "awakens in you and me".

Let us continue our study in the next article in this series.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #5

We pick up with our previous thoughts and previous study as we continue to investigate the ancient meaning and theological implications for the words "death", "the dead", and Amenta. We have been observing now that Amenta, the Egyptian realm of "the dead", is our Earthly abode where "Living Energy" as Souls and "the Christ" has impregnated and incarnated into "matter" and been, as the ancients characterized "crucified on the cross of matter". We dealt with this previously somewhat but we need a deeper look in order to see the fuller implications of this ancient understanding of the Soul's existence in material manifestation.

We have seen in previous studies that the category of "life-death & rebirth" deities, also also known as a "dying and rising gods", is a convenient means of classifying the many Divinities in world mythology or religion who are born, suffer death or other death-like experiences, who pass a phase in the Underworld (which we saw was an ancient term for the incarnation into "matter") among "the dead", and are subsequently reborn, in either a literal or symbolic sense. These "dying and rising gods" were characterized as both "male" and "female". Such male deities might include Osiris, Dionysus, Attis, Adonis, Mithras, Jesus, etc. And the list goes on and on. Let us not forget that God has always been expressed first and most anciently as a "Goddess"; thus we should expect and do find female deities who passed into the "kingdom of death" and returned as did the later males deities. These include Inanna and Persephone, the central figure of the Eleusinian Mysteries.

Let us now continue to investigate this "cross of matter" and "incarnational death of the Soul" as being but another synonym for the Egyptian "Amenta"; the fleshly incarnation of the Krst/Karest/Christ and Soul into humanity.

Looking at the greatness of the Egyptologist Gerald Massey and his study and scholarship let us hear what he says:

"Amenta as the place of graves is frequently indicated in the Hebrew scriptures (Sheol), as in the description of the great typical burial-place in the valley of Hamon-Gog (Gehenna). This was in the Egypt described in the Book of Revelation as the city of dead carcasses, where also their Lord was crucified as Ptah-Sekari or Osiris-Tat.

Answer for yourself: What is this? The Lord was crucified in Egypt? What about the Gospel accounts of a crucifixion in Jerusalem? What is going on? What does the Book of Revelation mean by saying that the Lord, "the Christ Jesus" (as we know him) was crucified in Egypt? Take a second and let this sink in deeply. Here is a "key" to understanding "the Christ" correctly and it is imperative that we recover the true meaning.

Before we go on we need to heed a most enlightening quote:

"In their hidden character the enigmas of the Egyptians were very similar to those of the Jews."* – Clement of Alexandria (Stromata, 7 iii p. 56).

Answer for yourself: Who was this Clement of Alexandria that is saying that the "mysteries" of ancient Egypt were "very similar" to those of the latter "Jews"?

Titus Flavius Clemens, d. c.215, was a Greek theologian. Born in Athens, he traveled widely and was converted to Christianity. He studied and taught at the catechetical school in Alexandria until the persecution of 202. Origen was his pupil there. Clement was one of the first to attempt a synthesis of Platonic and Christian thought; in this his successors in the Alexandrian school were more successful. Clement of Alexandria has been called a Christian Gnostic. Although Clement remained entirely orthodox, in his writing he strove to state the faith in terms of contemporary thought. This is very important for it again provides us with a "Kodak Moment" of Christianity as it existed in the early 3rd century before the rise of Roman Christianity and its "reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. He was long venerated as a saint, but Photius, in the 9th century regarded Clement as a heretic. Because of Photius's contentions the name of Clement was removed from the Roman martyrology.

This is an early Church Father speaking long before the rise of Roman Christianity and please notice the parallel he makes between the Egyptian Religion and Judaism! This is not only concerning a "Law based" religion of God but goes to the very core of Messianic concepts as well because the Horus of Egypt is the "messa"; the Messiah of the world that lives in the bosom of humanity awaiting his "resurrection".

In their first two centuries, the followers of "the Christ" had no particular images of their god. Emerging as they did from Judaism they disdained "idol worship." They were even accused of being atheists. But once the break with Judaism was complete the Christ worshippers rapidly made up the deficiency by adapting for Christian use pagan images, rituals, sacred sites, and symbols. This process occurred most energetically in Egypt, a land awash with religious iconography for thousands of years. From the 3rd century AD onwards, Egyptian Christian – 'Coptic' – art displayed a syncretistic and fused tradition – Roman, Greek and Pharaonic – with a Christian veneer. Such art faithfully reflected a deeper truth: the regurgitation of ancient religious belief in the new guise of "Christianity;" a Christianity which has lost the "keys" to the correct understanding of many of its religious dogmas which had age-old and venerable meanings.

Now back to our primary concern. Above I mentioned that Gerald Massey brings to our attention a little known passage from the Book of Revelation which mentions that the "Lord was crucified in Egypt". Massey of course is referring to little known Scripture from the Book of Revelation, chapter 11, verse 8, which says the Christ was crucified in Egypt. Here it is repeated from the KJV:

Rev 11:8 8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Again we have to ask about this very insightful verse. Where did Jerusalem go and that old rugged cross on the hill of Calvary? What does Egypt mean in this verse? Is it literal or symbolic? Is this verse related to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of antiquity and teaching likewise the "crucifixion of the Krst/Karest/Christ/God in matter"; the human body being always symbolized by "Egypt" in the Sacred Books of old as well as our Bible?

Answer for yourself: Could this one passage hold the "keys" to overturning 2,000 years of incorrect teaching concerning the "crucifixion" of "the Christ on the cross of Calvary instead of matter"? Could it just be we have misunderstood as important a Christian dogma as the "crucifixion" our whole lives and never known it? Has our Christian salvation message been preached and supported upon a gross travesty of ignorance of the texts from which we preach? Have we misunderstood the central act of the Gospels our whole lives in Churches? What about our past loved ones who died having faith in a "crucifixion" that never existed as they were taught? Have we studied to the level necessary to spot this gross misunderstanding of Biblical texts by Christian Spiritual Authorities we have been trained to trust?

Answer for yourself: Could our time have been spent better doing our own personal study into the Divine realm instead of allowing ourselves to be continually brainwashed by the Christian juggernaut of religious tradition and propaganda since the 2nd century which knows no longer the "truth" from "fiction"?

Seminary opened my eyes to a huge problems in my Christian faith; it would take me years to find the answers and fit the pieces of this puzzle together correctly in order to recollect long lost truths that brought once again the brilliance of God's light to my Soul as the Father had intended all along. For example, the four canonical gospels are supposed to record the events in the life of Jesus Christ. Since out study at present concerns Amenta as the realm of this "crucifixion" of the Soul and Christ "on the cross of matter" then we need to take a quick look at the supposed "literal" and "historical" Passion and Crucifixion of Jesus as "the Christ" as we have it recorded for us in our Bibles. In so doing please put your "thinking cap" on.

Answer for yourself: During Holy Week Christians are expected to devote time to the study of the passion of Jesus Christ: his suffering, his death, and his eventual resurrection which is commemorated on Easter. For something so important, it is curious how contradictory the gospel accounts of the "passion" and "crucifixion" actually are. How contradictory are they? Have you ever noticed?

- Did Jesus ride one or two animals into Jerusalem? Jesus' entry into Jerusalem had to adhere to prophecy, but which one? Mark 11:2-7, Luke 19:30-35 shares that following Jesus' instructions, the disciples bring him one animal yet Matthew 21:7 depicts Jesus riding on two animals at the same time while John 12:14 has Jesus riding a single animal when entering Jerusalem. Matthew 21:2-6 shares that following Jesus' instructions, the disciples bring him two animals yet John 12:14 shares that Jesus doesn't instruct the disciples at all and gets a single animal himself. Amazing to we is how Mark 11:7, Luke 19:35, and John 12:14 has Jesus riding a single animal when entering Jerusalem yet Matthew 21:7 has Jesus, as "wild Bill Jesus" riding "two" animals at the same time; not a very hard feat for a Circus Messiah.
- Jesus' cleansing of the Temple is regarded as symbolic of the overturning of Judaism, but the gospels differ on important details. Mark 11:15-17 has Jesus cleansing the Temple at the beginning of Passion week while Matthew 21:12-13 has Jesus cleansing the Temple during the Passion week, at the end of his career. Luke 19:45-46 has Jesus cleansing the Temple at the beginning of Passion week but yet in John 2:13-16 it has Jesus cleansing the Temple near the beginning of his career, well before the Passion (a span of one or 3 years since the Gospels disagree on the time for the ministry of Jesus; again a very difficult problem).
- Before entering Jerusalem, did Jesus curse a fig tree and cause it to wither because it didn't have any fruit? Luke and John don't mention this; Matthew and Mark do mention it, but don't agree on the details: Mark 11:20-21 shares that Jesus' disciples don't notice that the tree has withered until the next day yet Matthew 21:19-20 shares that Jesus' disciples notice that the fig tree withers immediately after being cursed and are amazed.
- Where was Jesus anointed with oil? Matthew and Mark agree, Luke does not. The Gospel of John doesn't mention it at all. Mark 14:3, Matthew 26:6-13 share that Jesus is anointed at the house of a leper named Simon, in Bethany Luke 7:36-38 shares that Jesus is anointed in Galilee at the house of an unnamed Pharisee. Again these accounts don't agree.
- What part of the body was Jesus anointed on? Matthew and Mark say one thing, Luke and John say another. Mark 14:3, Matthew 26:7 share that Jesus is anointed with oil is poured on his head but Luke 7:38 and John 12:3 share that Jesus is anointed with oil poured on his feet.
- Who does the anointing of Jesus? Matthew, Mark, and Luke all agree, but John doesn't. Mark 14:3, Matthew 26:7, and Luke 7:37 share that Jesus is anointed by an unnamed woman yet John 12:3 shares that Jesus is anointed by Mary Magdalene.
- Jesus was anointed with expensive oil, so not everyone was happy about the apparent waste. Matthew, Mark, and John all describe different people as upset; Luke doesn't mention this at all. Mark 14:4 says that "Some" reproach the unnamed woman who anoints Jesus. Yet in Matthew 26:8 it is the disciples that reproach the unnamed woman who anoints Jesus. Luke 7:39 mentions an unnamed Pharisee who thinks that this is wrong because the woman is a sinner yet John 12:4-5 has Judas Iscariot reproaching Mary for anointing Jesus.

- The Passion Week plays a central role in Christian beliefs, but why don't the gospels agree on the correct sequence of events? Mark and Matthew have it as the Triumphal Entry, Cleansing of the Temple, Anointing at Bethany while Luke has it as the Triumphal Entry, Cleansing the Temple, Daily Teaching in the Temple. John has it as the Cleansing of the temple (long before Passion Week), Supper with Lazarus, Triumphal Entry, and later no Cleansing of the Temple.
- Of course the soldiers who arrest Jesus take him to the authorities, but which authorities? Mark 14:53, Matthew 26:57, Luke 22:54 share that Jesus is taken to Caiphas, the high priest, after he is arrested but yet John 18:13-24 states that Jesus is taken first to Caiphas' son-in-law Annas, then to Caiphas (after an unknown time).
- Jesus has a hearing on the charges, but when? With whom? Mark 14:53-72, 15:1, Matthew 26:18-20, 57-68, 27:1-2 all maintain that Jesus is charged on Passover eve and taken to Pilate in the morning while Luke 22:13-15, 54-66 state that Jesus' first hearing occurs on Passover morning. John 18:28, 19:14 says that Jesus' first hearing occurs on the day before Passover.
- Jesus' trial is a central event of the Passion, but before whom was the trial held? Mark 14:55-64, Matthew 26:59-66 say that Jesus is tried by the whole Sanhedrin. Luke 22:66-71 says that the Sanhedrin hold an inquiry about Jesus, but no trial. John 18:13-24 says that the Sanhedrin don't even hold an official inquiry; Jesus just appears before Annas and Caiphas.
- Jesus is supposed to be interrogated as his trial, but why does the nature of the interrogation vary? Mark 14:61 states that Jesus is asked if he is the Son of the Blessed and answers "I am." Matthew 26:63, Luke 22:70 state that Jesus is asked if he is the Son of God and answers "You have said so." John says that Jesus is not interrogated by the High Priest.
- As the man in charge of Jewish affairs, what role did Herod play in Jesus' arrest and trial? Luke 23:7-11 says Pilate sent Jesus to Herod who questions Jesus then sends him back. In the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and John there is no mention is made of Herod at all.
- If Jesus was interrogated by Herod, what happened? The gospels disagree. Mark 15:2, Matthew 27:11, Luke 23:3 all state that Pilate asks if he is King of the Jews and Jesus says "You have said so." Jesus doesn't answer any of the charges. Yet in John 18:33-34 Pilate asks the same thing, but Jesus answers "Do you say this of your own accord?" and answers all the charges.
- The scene where Barabbas is released instead of Jesus is famous, but inconsistently described. Mark 15:11 states that the chief priests get the people to demand the release of Barabbas; his crimes are insurrection and murder. But in the Gospel of Matthew 27:20 the Priests and elders get people to demand the release of Barabbas; his crimes are unknown. Luke 23:18-23 states that the people demand Barabbas' release; his crimes are insurrection and murder. John 18:40 says that the people demand Barabbas' release; he is described as a robber. Rome never crucified "thieves" and never released political prisoners or people charged with insurrection or treason as the Gospel of Mark attests that Barabbas was charged.
- Who give Jesus the robe? Mark 15:17, John 19:2 state that Jesus is made to wear a purple robe by Roman soldiers as a sign of royalty (for which he is being mocked). Matthew 27:28 states that Jesus is made to wear a scarlet robe by Roman soldiers as a symbol of infamy. Luke 23:11 states that Jesus is given a robe by Herod and his soldiers, not by the Roman soldiers.
- In the Passion narratives, did Jesus carry his own cross or not? Mark 15:21, Matthew 27:32, Luke 23:26 all state that Jesus gets help from Simon of Cyrene yet John 19:17 states that Jesus carries his own cross the whole way.
- When crucified, Jesus' cross had an inscription — but what did it say? Mark 15:26 states that the inscription reads "The King of the Jews." Matthew 27:37 states that the inscription reads: "This is Jesus the King of the Jews." Luke 23:38 states that the inscription reads: "This is the King of the Jews." John 19:19 says that the inscription read: *"Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews."
- Some gospels say Jesus was crucified with two thieves, though the Romans never crucified thieves. How is this possible? Mark says that the two thieves are mentioned, but there is no conversation. Matthew 27:44 says that the two thieves taunt Jesus. Luke 23:39-42 says that one thief taunts Jesus and is criticized by the other. Jesus promises the 2nd thief that they would be in Paradise that day, though John and Acts say he did not ascend to heaven until 40 days after his resurrection. John says that the the two men aren't described as thieves.

Jesus is given something to drink while he is on the cross, but what? Mark 15:23 says that Jesus is given wine mixed with myrrh, but he doesn't drink. Matthew 27:48, and Luke 23:36 says that Jesus is given vinegar, but he doesn't drink. John 19:29-30 says that Jesus is given vinegar and he drinks.

- Romans supposedly witnessed Jesus' crucifixion, but what did they think? Mark 15:39 says that a centurion is cited as saying: "Truly this man was the son of God!" Matthew 27:54 says that a centurion is cited as saying: "Truly this was the son of God." Luke 23:47 says that a centurion is cited as saying: "Truly this man was innocent." John has no centurions say anything.
- The gospels describe several woman as having followed Jesus around, but what did they do when Jesus was crucified? Mark 15:40, Matthew 27:55, Luke 23:49 says that several women watch Jesus from afar. John 19:25-26 says that several woman are close enough that Jesus could talk to his mother, contrary to Roman practices.
- The crucifixion of Jesus is the central event of the Passion narrative, but why don't the narratives agree on when the crucifixion occurred? Mark 15:25 says that Jesus was crucified on the "third hour." John 19:14-15 says that Jesus was crucified on the "sixth hour." Matthew, and Luke do not state when the crucifixion starts, but the "sixth hour" occurs during the crucifixion.
- Jesus' last words before dying are important, but no one seems to have written then down correctly. Why not? Mark 15:34-37, Matthew 27:46-50 say that Jesus says: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (but they use different Greek words for "God" — Matthew uses "Eli" and Mark uses "Eloi"). Luke 23:46 says that Jesus said: "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit." John 19:30 says Jesus says: *"It is finished."
- Was there an earthquake when Jesus died? Matthew 27:51-53 states that at the moment Jesus dies, a massive earth quake strikes and opens tombs where dead people rise again. However in the Gospels of Mark, Luke, and John no earthquake is mentioned. No earthquake and no massive influx of formerly dead people is mentioned in any historical records, which is strange given how monumental such an event would be. Such an event as the graves of hundreds of people being opened and the dead walking should have gotten some "press" somewhere since it would have been the greatest miracle seen by humanity ever!

Answer for yourself: I could go on but what do all of these above inconsistences have in common and what do they teach us? They show that these Gospels that we have been taught to believe as "inspired, inerrant, and infallible" don't agree on any of these events surrounding this supposed "historical and literal crucifixion" of Jesus and find their origin in fiction and not Historical record. Basically, they are being "made up" as they were written over two hundred years from oral traditions in order to reinterpret the ancient understanding of the "Crucifixion of god in matter"; the descent of the Krst-Soul into you and me. Personal responsibility for one's Spiritual Life and Spiritual Evolution has been relegated to another; to a soon coming "Christ" from Heaven who will wash away all of one's sin when he comes having paid the price of our individual sin himself. Removed from mankind is the pursuit of Spiritual excellence with such a dogma; no need to reach for the "mark of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus"; "Jesus has already done it all for me". And we die and find out different.

One should expect better from a Book supposedly from God. In a Court of Law this above testimony to a supposed "historical and literal crucifixion" would be "thrown out of court" as laughable. Yet when we consult the Divine ancient Spiritual Wisdom of ancient Egypt and the many faiths of antiquity we have agreement whether in ancient Egypt or later Greece, or India or other continents like Mexico that "the Christ", called by many names, was "crucified in matter" that mankind "might live". This ancient understanding of the "crucifixion" of the Divine Mind of God "on the cross of matter" was at one time known world-wide. Before us is the depicting of this ancient Egyptian and Greek understanding of the incarnation of "gods" into "matter" as seen in Mexico. On the left we find the Crucifixion of Quetzalcoatl (From the Codex Borgianus) as depicted in Lord Kingsborough's Antiquities of Mexico. Like Osiris, Quetzalcoatl was both crucified, and as it were cut in pieces as was Bacchus and Dionysus. Notice if you will that in the image on the left we have a cross upon which Quetzalcoatl is hung or affixed.

One of the most remarkable of the crucified World Saviors is the Central American god of the winds, or the Sun, Quetzalcoatl, concerning whose activities great secrecy was maintained by the Indian priests of Mexico and Central America. This strange immortal, whose name means "feathered snake" (symbolic of ascending wisdom), appears to have come out of the sea (the Egyptian Nun), bringing with him a mysterious cross (the incarnation of "gods" into "matter"). The typology is the same the world over. On his garments were embellished clouds and red crosses (life is in the blood). In his honor, great serpents carved from stone were placed in different parts of Mexico. The cross of Quetzalcoatl became a sacred symbol among the Mayas, and according to available records the Maya Indian angels had crosses of various pigments painted on their foreheads. Similar crosses were placed over the eyes of those initiated into their Mysteries. When Cortez (1500's) arrived in Mexico, he brought with him the cross. Recognizing this, the natives believed that he was Quetzalcoatl returned, for the latter had promised to come back in the infinite future and redeem his people. In Anacalypsis, Godfrey Higgins throws some light on the cross and its symbolism in America: "The Incas had a cross of very fine marble, or beautiful jasper, highly polished, of one piece, three-fourths of an ell in length, and three fingers in width and thickness. It was kept in a sacred chamber of a palace, and held in great veneration. The Spaniards enriched this cross with gold and jewels, and placed it in the cathedral of Cuzco. Mexican temples are in the form of a cross, and face the four cardinal points. Quetzalcoatl is represented in the paintings of the Codex Borgianus nailed to the cross. Sometimes even the two thieves are there crucified with him. In Vol. II. plate 75, the God is crucified in the Heavens, in a circle of nineteen figures, the number of the Metonic cycle (the Metonic Cycle is a period of about 6939.6 days, the approximate length of both 235 consecutive lunations and 19 solar years. Knowledge of this cycle is important in determining when to assign intercalary months to lunisolar calendars). A serpent is depriving him of the organs of generation. In the Codex Borgianus, (pp. 4, 72, 73, 75,) the Mexican God is represented crucified and nailed to the cross, and in another place hanging to it, with a cross in his hands. And in one instance, where the figure is not merely outlined, the cross is red, the clothes are colored, and the face and hands quite black. If this was the Christianity of the German Nestorius, how came he to teach that the crucified Savior was black? The name of the God who was crucified was Quetzalcoatl".

The fact that a cross is formed by the spread wings of a bird in relation to its body is no doubt one of the reasons why the Egyptians used a bird to symbolize the immortal nature of man, and often show it hovering over the mummified body of the dead and carrying in one of its claws the sign of life and in the other the sign of breath.

Answer for yourself: Before we move on let us think for a second. Why do these Gospel accounts contain so many errors and contradictions in dealing with a supposed "literal" and "historical" crucifixion? Believers tend not to notice the problems because they blend the stories together as a single text in their minds and few do the comprehensive comparative studies to spot these inconsistences and incompatibilities. If you focus on the details, though, it's clear that they aren't compatible.

I presented the short Gospel summary above because space will not allow for a through study of a possible historical crucifixion. We have all read the Gospels which were written by Rome under "Jewish pseudonyms"; therefore, just looking at the above few accounts above, the whole of the New Testament is shown to be suspect when wanting "truth". Forgeries and inventions abound at the hands of Rome in creating their New Testament "literal" Jesus and his supposed literal crucifixion which had always been, up to that time, been understood around the world as a metaphysical reality that God has come as His Krst/Karest/Christ-Soul to dwell within humanity as a whole.

Now lets look at the Jewish Rabbis for a second. When one wants historical evidence that is more factual that that inherited by the Roman Latin Church fathers then they often turn to the Talmud and the Rabbis; after all it was a Jew in Jerusalem who was being supposedly "literally crucified" and witnessed by many Rabbis and Pharisees and Sadducees of the day. Before we look at what the Rabbis have to say about this supposed "historical crucifixion" of someone named "Yeshu/Yeshua/Jesus" it would do us a world of good to learn about the "practice of crucifixion" in ancient days as it is pivotal to the idea of "the Christ" in the New Testament being either "crucified in matter" or being "crucified on a wooden cross at Calvary". So let us learn.

Crucifixion is the act of nailing, binding or impaling a living victim or sometimes a dead person to a cross, stake or a tree, whether for executing the body or for exposing the corpse. Crucifixion was intended to serve as both a severe punishment and a frightful deterrent to others. It was unanimously considered the most horrible form of death. The procedure of crucifixion was subject to wide variation according to the whim of the executioner, but victims were often executed by being impaled on a stake. The cross (Greek stauros; Latin crux) was originally a single upright stake or post upon which the victim was either tied, nailed or impaled. This simple cross was later modified when horizontal crossbeams of various types were added. Scholars are not certain when a crossbeam was added to the simple stake, but even in the Roman period the cross would at times only consist of a single vertical stake.

From ancient Greek and Roman writers (such as Herodotus and Seneca) we learn of several forms of crucifixion. Some forms being impalement rather than what we would today describe as crucifixion ("Cross", in W. Smith (ed.), Concise Dictionary of the Bible, Its Antiquities, Biography, Geography, and Natural History, Condensed from the Larger Work, 1880, 5th Edition, John Murray: London). In many cases, especially during the Roman period, the execution stake became a vertical pole with a horizontal crossbar placed at some point, and although the period of time at which this happened is uncertain, what is known is that this simple impalement became known as crucifixion. Whether the victim was tied, nailed or impaled to the stake, the same Greek words were still used to described the procedure. Although in New Testament usage the Greek word "stauros" (cross) is said to refer to a crossbeam, the term actually has a much wider application, being used to refer to both a single stake and a crossbeam. The four most popular representations of the cross are:

- crux simplex |, a "single piece without transom";
- crux decussata X, or St. Andrew's cross;
- crux commissa T, or St. Anthony's cross; and
- crux immisaa or Latin cross upon which Jesus was allegedly crucified.

A primitive form of crucifixion on trees had long been in use, and such a tree was also known as a cross (crux). Different ideas also prevailed concerning the material form of the cross, and it seems that the word had been frequently used in a broad sense. The Latin word "crux" was applied to the simple pole, and indicated directly the nature and purpose of this instrument, being derived from the verb crucio, "to torment", "to torture." The practice of crucifixion was finally abolished in 337 by Constantine I out of respect for Jesus Christ, whom he believed died "literally" on the cross.

Answer for yourself: So what did we learn? The Latin cross, the "crux immisaa" did not have a horizontal cross beam as it is pictured today when idealized by the ancients or even by Rome until much later. Why is this important and how is it related to the crucifixion on impaling on a tree?

Pay attention to this. First of all up until the 2nd century with the rise of Roman Catholicism "the Christ" was recognized, first of all, in the cosmic sense. The cosmic Christ has existed from all eternity. This cosmic Christ is divinity, or Spirit, is crucified in outer space. The Christ personifies the immolation or sacrifice of Spirit upon the "cross of matter", of form or substance, in order that all divine forms, including the human, may live. This has ever been recognized by the so-called ancient faiths of the whole world. If the symbolism of the cross is traced as far back as possible, it will be found that it antedates Christianity by thousands and thousands of years, and that finally, the four arms of the cross will be seen to drop away, leaving only the picture of the living Heavenly Man, with His arms outspread in space. North, south, east and west stands the cosmic Christ upon what is called "the fixed cross of the heavens." Upon this cross God is eternally crucified "or incarnated". This is the Law of Incubation as described by the ancients.

Answer for yourself: Remember that the cross was often a "tree" which was called a "crux" or "cross"? The scholar Arthur Weigall describes that Osiris was crucified upon a tree, like many previous "man-gods", the cross was not unique, its an ancient symbol of the "incarnation and crucifixion of God in matter", or within humanity. The "tree story" and crucifixion of God "in matter" , or our "Jesus Story" and his crucifixion, was indeed plagiarized from the story of Osiris and Isis. The Popular and widespread religion of Osiris and Isis exercised considerable influence upon early Christianity, for these two great Egyptian deities, whose worship had passed into Europe were revered in Rome and in several other centres, where Christian communities were growing up. Knowledge of the Egyptian Religion was known in Jerusalem as well as in Rome in the time of the supposed historical Jesus. Osiris and Isis, so runs the legend, were brother and sister and also husband and wife; but Osiris was murdered, his coffined body (coffins remember in ancient Egypt was termed "the body of the living, the home of the Soul") being thrown into the Nile (the great river of Egypt which flowed from great heights from the snows of mount Kilimanjaror (19,000 feet high), this river being a symbol of Divine Life from "above"), and shortly afterwards the widowed and exiled Isis gave birth to a son, Horus (the Krst/Karest/Christ). The coffin containing Osiris, meanwhile, was washed up on the Syrian coast, and this coffined body (the Soul) became miraculously lodged in the trunk of a tree, so that Osiris, like other sacrificed gods, could be described as having been "slain and hanged (crucified) on a tree (cross)" (Arthur Weigall, The Paganism in Our Christianity, 1928, p118). Here we have in the "Osiris Story" the "Krst/Christ Mummy" crucified in "matter" and wrapped in the swaddling clothes which depicts the denseness and darkness of "matter". God had come to be crucified in "matter", God as His Krst/Soul, had descended to His "death" whereby he was "incarnated and died when Living Energy impregnated 'matter'". The "miracle" story of the great god Osiris and his life after death explains how the first Egyptian mummy came to be. According to the metaphysical religious myth Osiris, a beloved pharaoh, was murdered by his jealous brother Set, who spread his body across the Nile in fourteen pieces (the Law of Dismemberment). Isis, the pharaoh's wife, gathered up her husband's pieces and bandaged them together in linen cloth. With the help of Anubis, the god of the afterlife, Isis was able to bring Osiris back to life. Osiris couldn't come back to earth as a man, but became god of the Netherworld. Anubis became the god of preservation of the bodies, and Isis the protectress of the dead. Osiris's son, Horus, vowed to get revenge upon reaching manhood. Set and Horus fought a long and fearful battle. Horus won, but not without losing his left eye. His lost eye became a powerful symbol that enabled the dead to see again.

Many thousands of years later we find the same metaphysical idea repeated in the "Jesus Story", but we find this same "story" occurring down through recorded history from nation to nation under other similar religious myths concerning such characters as Dionysus, Bacchus, Krishna, Attis, Mithra, etc. But our main concern is the descent of the Krst-Soul that is the real story behind our "Jesus Story":

Phil 2:7-8 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient (to the Law of Incubation) unto death (descent of the Soul into "matter), even the death of the cross (as the ancients said God was crucified in "matter" [the dying and rising God). (KJV)

Having looked thoroughly at this it is now time that we look at the Rabbis and what they have to say about the "crucifixion" of Jesus.

First of all the Rabbis name this one who is going to be "crucified". Christians connect this idea in the Talmud to the New Testament Jesus by the name "Yeshu". We as Gentiles take for granted that this Yeshu, or Yeshua, or Jesus Christ of the New Testament was this same "Yeshu" who was a real "historical person". We believe that by faith, or at least we are taught to. But when we look at the evidence for the reliability of this New Testament and the Gospels which looks to this Talmudic account which Christians believe is a reference to the "Jesus of the New Testament" we are dismayed by the lack of historical evidence to many of the statements made in the New Testament. Even when we look for corroboration with the Rabbis we don't get it but yet we are taught by our Christian leaders and authors that the Rabbis mention the crucifixion of Jesus Christ in their Talmud. I found that they do not. Let us look at this now.

Answer for yourself: Is this "Yeshu" in the Talmud "THE" "Yeshua and Jesus of the New Testament" or some other "Yeshu" that is not connected at all with the Roman Jesus Christ"? Do the Rabbis in the Talmud really speak of this Jesus of Nazareth who was crucified on a literal wooden cross? Well lets see. And was it always said that the manner of Jesus' death was a literal and physical crucifixion? Is that true? Apparently not.

Here is what is written in Baraitha Bab. Sanhedrin 43a: "On the eve of Passover Yeshu was hanged. For forty days before the execution took place, a herald went forth and cried, "He is going forth to be stoned because he has practiced sorcery and enticed Israel to apostasy. Any one who can say anything in his favour, let him come forward and plead on his behalf." But since nothing was brought forward in his favour he was hanged on the eve of the Passover! - Ulla retorted: Do you suppose that he was one for whom a defence could be made? Was he not a Mesith [enticer], concerning him Scripture says, Neither shalt though spare, neither shalt thou conceal him? With Yeshu however it was different, for he was connected with the government for royalty [i.e., influential]".

Answer for yourself: When you read the New Testament does our Jesus Christ of Christianity and the Gospels appear to be connected with the Roman Government, a friend to Ceasar of Pilate? If real, and if he had been, then he would have been a "traitor" to his country and people like Josephus was later considered; surely not a "Messiah" to follow after his death with hope of salvation for anyone or anything.

Let us continue our look at this very important Talmud passage: "Our Rabbis taught: Yeshu had five disciples, Matthai, Nakai, Nezer, Buni, and Todah".

Answer for yourself: Ever heard of these disciples in the New Testament? How could anyone confuse this "Yeshu" with "Yeshua" since the man hanged on a tree in the Talmud only had 5 disciples and not 12 the way the New Testament attests? This just goes to show you how ridiculous and how far our early Christian Church Fathers were in grasping at straws to prop up their "supposed historical Jesus Christ".

But have yet a problem. Many come too quickly associate the word "hanged" in this passage as a euphemism for "crucifixion". But that cannot be; at least in the way we have been taught as Christians. The passage clearly states that this Yeshu (Yeshua or Jesus...maybe) is going forth to be stoned.

Answer for yourself: What is it that we are missing here? Well, we can begin with a through understanding of the Hebrew Scriptures and Jewish religion since after all the New Testament is supposed to be the "fruit" of it.

We find when we study that the prescription for those stoned included hanging after death; hanging only after they were dead from being stoned to death! There is no suffering or bleeding on the cross here. The body is already dead; the heart is not pumping. There is no cries to God to "forgive them for they know not what they do"! There is no conversation with thieves on the left or right. Few know that Rome "NEVER" crucified thieves; they got lashes according to Roman Law. Only political seditionists and the like were crucified. To read a bodily crucifixion into this passage is to Christianize a fully Jewish account of this Yeshu, one in which the poor man is stoned by Jewish authorities for violating Jewish laws and leading Israel astray. This is not the Roman Jesus of the New Testament. Josephus Flavius, the Jewish historian, lived as the earliest non-Christian who mentions a Jesus; but modern scholarship have concluded that Josephus' short accounts of Jesus (in Antiquities) came from interpolations perpetrated by a later Church father (most likely, Eusebius). Besides that, Josephus' birth in 37 C.E., well after the alleged crucifixion of Jesus, puts him out of range of an eyewitness account. But not only that Josephus wrote volumes denouncing the "failed Messiah" of Israel; there is not one "peep" about this Jesus of Christianity in all of his writings that is authentic to the historical Josephus. This is very troubling has Yeshua been a historical person. The conclusion for such serious study is that there exists as of today no credible record or any "unforged" later Christian account of any Jesus Christ being crucified in Jerusalem outside of the Roman New Testament. And if you compare the Gospel accounts of the crucifixion they all 4 disagree on multiple events in the crucifixion story; they cannot even agree on the same day no less. This is but a desperate attempt to cover over the "reinterpretation" of the ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom of the "crucifixion of God on the cross of "matter" as had been taught for over 10,000 years when Rome decided to change it!

Answer for yourself: Having lost this supposedly one reliable historical verification of the crucifixion of some "Yeshu" that is supposed to be in the Talmud as Christians profess (by the way the most common name for boys in Israel at that time was "Yeshu") then does it not appear again, as we have shown so often, that the ancient understanding of the "crucifixion of God" on the "cross of matter" is the original teaching of the ages which Rome will later "literalize" and "historicize"? The evidence for such a historical crucifixion of Yeshua as Jesus Christ simply does not exist; and abundant evidence to the contrary does.

Answer for yourself: In the Book of Revelation are we not speaking of the crucifixion of a supposed Jewish Rabbi named "Jesus Christ" and is this crucifixion in Egypt as it says? Common "literal" sense will tell you that according to Roman Christian Church tradition and the Roman Bible that Jesus Christ was crucified in Jerusalem according to the Gospels but evidently something other than a Christian interpreted crucifixion is being intended in our reading of the Book of Revelation. This is an important clue to lead us back to look at the ancient Spiritual Wisdom that teaches the crucifixion of the Divine in "matter" where the "Krst/Karest/Christ" was crucified and the Soul died when in impregnated "matter" in its "fall" from Heaven. This is the real "story" behind all these crucified Sungods and Christ like Osiris and Jesus and a host of others.

Answer for yourself: Remembering that the word "Egypt" is symbolic for this "body of matter" then is it possible that this "Jesus", as an anthropomorphic symbol for "the Christ", was crucified in this "body of matter", incarnated into every believer as the ancients have said since time immemorial? This story is told verbatim about Horus and all the other Sungods like Bacchus, etc., who are but personifications for the descent of the spark of God's fire, His Christ-Soul into "matter".

Look at the image on the left. We have here the crucifixion on the cross of a man, a crucifixion under 7 stars.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the 7 stars above the head of Bacchus "on the cross"? What is this and how in the world is this related to a supposed historical Jewish rabbi who was stoned to death and later hung on a tree? Or is it at all?

Answer for yourself: If we are to suppose as we have been taught so far that the Deific Mind and Krst-Soul is "fallen" and descended from Heaven only to be "incarnated" and "crucified on the cross of matter" where he "died on the cross" (Philippians 2 above) then what are the meaning of these 7 stars above the cross where "Living Energy" was imprisoned in "matter"?

What you find is that this original understanding of the "crucifixion of God on the cross" from thousands and thousands of years ago, long, long before any idea of a a supposed "historical Jesus" would ever surface, was lost and without the Gnosis and proper understanding of this metaphysical idea of God's incarnation into "matter" people lost the ability to see the truth in such a myth and fell into misinterpretation that ends with a supposed "literal-historical" death of a man on the cross that was to bring them "life" when all along it was a metaphysical religious myth that carried Divine wisdom intended to impact every child of God ever born on this planet.

Ps 82:6 6 I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High. (KJV)

John 10:34 34 Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? (KJV)

Time will not allow us to do an in-depth study of what I will say next but the ancient Mysteries and Mystics of antiquity had a knowledge that mankind today has forgotten. That being the case today we have lost the "Gnosis" or "knowledge of the Soul" as mankind once possessed. Through diligent efforts from archeological discoveries we have come to see that the ancients for thousands of years taught that these "seven stars" above the "cross of Spirit and matter" represented seven planetary spheres which Souls had to traverse in descending from the Heaven to the elements that envelop the Earth. These were actually seven gates that corresponded to each of the 7 planets through which these "Living Energies" passed on their way to incarnation as we know today is humanity; one was both representative of descent and ascent. Origen, an early Church Father quoted Celsus as saying that the symbolic image of the passage of the Souls among the stars, used in the Mithraic Mysteries, was like a ladder reaching from Earth to Heaven, and divided into seven steps or stages, to each of which was a gate, and at the summit an eighth one, that of the fixed stars.

One only needs to read the vision of Hermes to see this clearly. Here is a summary of the vision of Hermes. Being told to "raise thine eyes and look!" by Osiris Hermes then saw a wonderful sight. The starry Heavens, each "star" as manifestation of "Living Energy" stretching through infinite space, enveloped him with seven luminous spheres. In one glance, Hermes saw the Seven Heavens stretching above his head, tier upon tier, like seven transparent and concentric globes, the sidereal centre of which he now occupied. The Milky Way formed the girdle of the last. In each sphere there rolled a planet accompanied by a genius of different form, sign and light. Whilst Hermes, dazzled by the sight, was contemplating their wide-spread efflorescence and majestic movements, the voice of Osiris said to him: "Look, listen, and understand. Thou seest the seven spheres of all life. Through them is accomplished the FALL and ASCENT of Souls. The seven genii are the seven rays of the word-light. Each of them commands one sphere of the spirit, one phase of the life of Souls. The one nearest to thee is the Genius of the Moon, with his disquieting smile and crown of silver sickle. He presides over births and deaths, sets free souls from bodies and draws them into his ray. Above him, pale Mercury points out the path to ascending or descending souls with his caduceus, which contains all knowledge. Higher still, shining Venus holds the mirror of love, in which souls forget and recognize them in turn. Above her, the Genius of the Sun raises the triumphal torch of eternal beauty. At a yet loftier height, Mars brandishes the sword of justice. Enthroned on the azure sphere, Jupiter holds the sceptre of supreme power, which is divine intelligence. At the boundaries of the world, beneath the signs of the Zodiac, Saturn bears the globe of universal wisdom. "I see," said Hermes, "the seven regions which comprise the visible and invisible world; I see the seven rays of the word-light, of the one God who traverses them and governs them by these rays. Still, O master, how does mankind journey through all these worlds?" "Dost thou see," said Osiris, "a luminous seed (light being but "Living Energy") fall from the regions of the milky way into the seventh sphere? These are germs of Souls. They live like faint vapors in the region of Saturn, gay and free from care, knowing not their own happiness. On falling from sphere to sphere, however, they put on increasingly heavier envelopes. In each incarnation they acquire a new corporeal sense, in harmony with the surroundings in which they are living. Their vital energy increases, but in proportion as they enter into denser bodies they lose the memory of their celestial origin (the Law of Reminiscence). Thus is effected the fall of Souls which come from the divine ether. Ever more and more captivated by matter and intoxicated by life, they fling themselves like a rain of fire, with quiverings of voluptuous delight, through the regions of grief, love, and death, right into their Earthly prison where thou thyself lamentest, held down by the fiery centre of the Earth, and where divine life appears to thee nothing more than an empty dream." Then Hermes asks a bombshell of a question: "Can souls die?" asked Hermes. "Yes," replied the voice of Osiris, "many perish in the fatal descent. The soul is the daughter of heaven, and its (Soul's) journey is a test. If it loses the memory of its origin, in its unbridled love of matter (darkness), the Divine Spark which was in it and which might have become more brilliant than a star, returns to the ethereal region, a lifeless atom, and the Soul disaggregates in the vortex of gross elements."

This is why the incarnation was likened to a "death" for the Soul and the Deific Mind of God which became "trapped in Hades and Hell and Amenta" on the "cross of matter". The list of the deathless mortals who suffered for man that he might receive the gift of eternal life is an imposing one. Among those connected historically or allegorically with a crucifixion are Prometheus, Adonis, Apollo, Attis, Bacchus, Buddha, Krishna, Horus, Indra, Ixion, Mithras, Osiris, Pythagoras, Quetzalcoatl, Semiramis, and Jupiter. According to the fragmentary accounts extant, all these heroes "gods, Living Energies" gave their lives to the service of humanity and, with one or two exceptions, died as martyrs for the cause of human progress. In many mysterious ways the manner of their death has been designedly concealed, but it is possible that most of them were crucified upon a cross or tree. The modern world has been misled in its attitude towards the so-called pagan deities, and has come to view them in a light entirely different from their true characters and meanings. The ridicule and slander heaped by early emerging Christendom upon Krishna and Bacchus are excellent examples of the persecution of immortal principles by those who have utterly failed to sense the secret meaning of these ancient Divine allegories.

Here is another validation of what I have been saying all along. The Krst/Karest/Christ was crucified in Egypt, in the fleshly body of humanity. That is why the Book of Revelation says "the Lord was crucified in Egypt"! This "crucifixion of God on the cross" was depicted by the ancients long before a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus. It has always been taught they way under a host of different symbols the world over since the beginning of time. Look again at the Ankh and you will get the idea. The Christ-Horus has come to Amenta. The Christ-Horus has "fallen" from Heaven and incarnated into "dead matter" (the womb of material existence has been impregnated by the Solar Fire of God in order to birth "the Christ-Soul"). The Christ-Horus has gone down into Egypt, has been incarnated into Egypt and "died" and is being formed and "resurrected" in us!

The ancient Spiritual Wisdom taught that the human's Soul has to experience the entire creation eventually to return to God. In all there are seven Cosmic levels, which have to be completed successively. These seven spheres of "Living Energy" corresponds with the different types of Heavens. I am sure you have heard of the term the 7th Heaven. They were understood to be the celestial orbs of Spiritual habitation in our Solar system. The New Testament refers to this same ancient Spiritual Teaching. Paul says:

2 Corinthians 12:2 I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago---whether in the body I do not know, or out of the body I do not know, God knows---such a man was caught up to the third heaven.

Answer for yourself: What is Paul speaking about? Paul is not speaking about the Christianity we have come to know today. Paul is describing the Mystery Religions. The "real Paul" is a Gnostic Chrestian and his Christ is the "Cosmic Christ"; not the later invented "literal-historical Christ" of Roman imagination. Paul is teaching us the ancient Mysteries of ancient Egypt and we never knew it; that is until we receive a little "Gnosis" and "keys" which open the Bible for us as a repository of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which has been twisted to an almost unrecognizable state by Roman Christianity.

It was this experience of experiencing the third Heaven that caused Paul to claim in another letter that he had seen the risen Christ (Gal 1:12).

Gal 1:12 12 For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. (KJV)

Paul never saw the Christ on Earth; nobody did. This Christ exists only in the Spirit realm. It is the Cosmic Christ and always has been and always will be.

Answer for yourself: So let me ask you again: What did these mysteries of the ancient world have to teach about the "crucifixion of God in matter" and the "God on the cross of matter" as it was connected to 7 stars in the image above along with a crescent moon where we see the image of mankind on this cross symbolizing the crossing of "Living Energy" into "mother matter"? Without a doubt it was the descent of the Soul into "matter" as it "fell from Heaven". This was the "crucifixion of God in matter" which is "you and me".

There is an object today that escaped the Roman purge of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The object in question is a third-century amulet, a picture of which was found tucked away in the appendices of an old academic book. The dating of the amulet is important, because it pre-dates the Council of Nicaea, which saw the establishment of modern Christian doctrine under the auspices of the Emperor Constantine. It shows a crucified figure which most people would immediately recognize as Jesus. Yet the Greek words name the figure "Orpheus Bacchus", one of the pseudonyms of Osiris-Dionysus.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? Not only is Paul teaching the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the "Descent of the Soul into Amenta" and the descent and incarnation of "the Christ" into "Amenta" (Hades, Hell, Earth) but as late as the 3rd century we still find that this ancient Spiritual Wisdom was being taught in the ancient world before the rise of Orthodox Roman Christianity which gets its real blast off with the Nicean Council in 385 A.D. under the power of the Emperor Constantine. This amulet and its symbolism seems to confirm much of what has been said about the original interface between the Messianic tradition of Judea and its earlier version in Egypt and elsewhere. Looking closer above the crucifix is a crescent "moon" facing downwards, surrounded by a semi-circle of 7 stars which again speaks of the 7 celestial spheres in the descent of the Soul and its incarnation into the realm of "fleshly death in matter" which we have seen is called Amenta" (Earthly existence which is called Sheol, Hades, Hell, etc.). This again is the death of God on the cross of "matter". Let us not forget what we have learned about this "cross"; it is the symbol of the union of Heaven and Earth ("matter"); the highest expression of which is found in the incarnation of mankind with the Deific Mind-Soul. This image depicts for us the passage we earlier looked at again from the authentic hand of Paul, Philippines 2:6:

Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #6

We continue our study of the descent of the Soul and the "incarnation of the Soul into matter" (humanity) which we have seen previously was characterized by the ancients sages and Spiritual Masters as the "death of God on the cross of matter".

We have seen that behind such an ancient phrase as "God being crucified on the cross of matter" that it referred to both the Soul as well as the "Krst/Karest/Christ-Soul" (Deific Mind of God....called "Nous") as it "descended through 7 celestial spheres or the 7 Heavens".

Answer for yourself: What is this "Nous"? "Nous" is a Greek word that corresponds to the English words intelligence, intellect, or mind. It signifies a search for order by the part of the Soul or mind that knows and thinks. In some forms of ancient Egyptian and Greek mythology, this "order" was imposed by an anthropomorphic or personified father of all things, which is later called the Demiurge (Creator of material existence). Homer used Nous to signify mental activities in general. Anaxagoras's Nous was a mechanical ordering force, power, or energy that formed the world out of an original chaos. It began the development of the cosmos. Plato described Nous as the immortal, rational part of the Soul. This section of the Soul of the world is the component that brings reasoned order to the universe. It is a godlike kind of thinking in which the truths of conclusions are immediately known without having to understand the preliminary premises (celestial intuition). Aristotle asserted that Nous was the intellect, as distinguished from sense perception. He divided it into an active and passive Nous. The passive is affected by knowledge. The active is an immortal first cause of all subsequent causes in the world. To the Stoics, it was the same as Logos, the same concept that we see in John 1:1 This is the whole cosmic reason. It contains human reason as a part.

John 1:1 1 In the beginning was the Word (THE LOGOS), and the Word (THE LOGOS) was with God, and the Word (THE LOGOS) was God. (KJV)

Plotinus described Nous as just one of the emanations from divine being. It is a "neteru"; the same Living Energy and celestial concept that we find in ancient Egypt in the beginning of recorded time.

Answer for yourself: So what did we learn? Along with a "Divine Spark" of "Living Energy" which "fell" into "matter" (the Soul) comes a "co-laborer" with God; His "Deific Mind" and "godlike thinking" in the form of the "Krst/Karest/Christ" (the Logos), who like the Soul, "falls" to its "death" as well since both are "crucified on the cross of matter" (humanity). This "fall" of both Soul and Krst/Karest/Christ occurs celestially and is described by the ancients as the "fall from Heaven" through the 7 Heavens. This is the "passion" and "crucifixion" on the "cross of matter" described by the ancients long before Christianity every thought of emerging as a rival expression of the ancient Spiritual Gnosis and Knowledge that was held sacred from thousands and thousands of years.

We find the idea of the 7 Heavens extensively in the ancient Wisdom. We find it not only in the Jewish Kabbalah but the notion of the 7 Heavens appears in The Testament Of The Twelve Patriarchs and other Jewish apocrypha, and was familiar to spiritual concepts taught by the ancient Persians and Babylonians as well as the ancient Egyptians. The idea of 7 Heavens was at one time on this planet universal. The Persians pictured the Almighty in the highest of the 7 Heavens, "seated on a great white throne, surrounded by winged cherubim." In Jewish Mysticism there are four worlds in Kabbalah: In ascending order, they are the world of doing (where we live our day-to-day lives), the world of formation, the world of creation, and the world of God's absolute presence. The second highest contains seven Heavens (which are higher than the Heaven we see); each of them is commanded by a particular angel (neteru, "Living Energy"). Even the Koran also speaks of 7 Heavens. Even Paul mentions this concept in the New Testament.

2 Cor 12:2-4 2 I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven. 3 And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) 4 How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. (KJV)

Here again we see the "secrecy of the ancient Mysteries" in our own New Testament; Mysteries that once possessed great Heavenly knowledge for our Souls that would be later snuffed out by Rome.

Back to the "7 Heavens" thus we see the number seven was considered sacred not only by all the cultured nations of antiquity and the East, but was held in the greatest reverence even by the later nations of the West. The astronomical origin of this number is established beyond any doubt.

Man, feeling himself dependent upon the Heavenly powers, ever and everywhere made Earth subject to Heaven. The largest and brightest of the visible luminaries from Earth thus became in his sight symbolic for the most important and highest of powers; such were the visible planets as seen from Earth which the whole antiquity numbered as seven. In the course of time these were transformed into seven deities since all things were believed to consist of God in various manifestations. Thus the Egyptians had seven original and higher gods (neteru); the Phoenicians seven kabiris; the Persians had seven sacred horses of Mithra; the Parsees, seven angels opposed by seven demons, and seven celestial abodes paralleled by seven lower regions. To represent the more clearly this idea in its concrete form, the seven gods (neteru....think archetypes) were often represented as one seven-headed deity. The whole Heaven (sky) was subjected to the seven planets; therefore, in nearly all the religious systems we find seven Heavens. In the mysterious worship of Mithra there were "seven gates," seven altars, seven mysteries. The priests of many Oriental nations were sub-divided into seven degrees; seven steps led to the altars in most temple and in the temples candles were burnt in seven-branched candlesticks. The menorah in the First and Second Temples had seven branches. After the Jewish Temples were destroyed, a tradition developed not to duplicate anything from the Temple and therefore menorah's no longer had seven branches but we see in the Jewish Menorah this "hidden wisdom" of the "7 Living Energies" that we find expressed in the ancient Sacred Wisdom of antiquity. Let us not forget that in the Temple of Solomon there was 6 steps leading up to the throne; itself being the "7th level". Several of the Masonic Lodges have, to this day, seven and fourteen steps.

Answer for yourself: So what do we see? The ancients saw that the seven planetary spheres served as a model for state divisions and organizations here on Earth (So Above, So Below). China was divided into seven provinces; ancient Persia into seven satrapies. If you read the articles on the uranograph then you see how Earth is a picture of Heaven both physically and architecturally as seen by the ancients. In reality the ancients tried to construct "Earth the mirror of Heaven". According to the Arabian legend seven angels cool the sun with ice and snow, lest it should burn the earth to cinders; and seven thousand angels wind up and set the sun in motion every morning. The two oldest rivers of the East--the Ganges and the Nile--had each seven mouths. The East had in the antiquity seven principal rivers (the Nile, the Tigris, the Euphrates, the Oxus, the Yaksart, the Arax and the Indus); seven famous treasures; seven cities full of gold; seven marvels of the world, etc. Equally did the number seven play a prominent part in the architecture of temples and palaces. To begin with the astronomical and religious calculation of old of the pagan Romans who divided the week into seven days, and held the seventh day as the most sacred, the Sol or Sunday of Jupiter. Thus Sunday for Christians is this special day. Yet, it is not from the pagan Romans but from the monotheistic Jews that we have the idea of the "7th day", and it was the ancient Egyptians who were responsible for this concept that was later inherited by the Hebrews. That should make you wonder why Saturday is not the real "Sabbath" and that it should be observed and kept instead of the Sunday, or Sol's day. Let us not forget the the ancient Egyptian who observed this day were not "Jewish"; many "Jewish ideas and customs" can be found to have originated with "non-Jews" long before the origin of the Jewish nation. It appears this is the original instruction given the Human Race in our beginning!

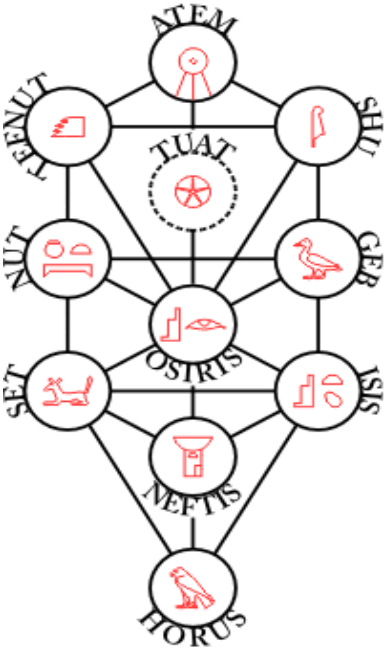
The seven planets ever remaining at an equal distance from each other, and rotating in the same path, hence, the idea suggested by this motion, of the eternal harmony of the universe. In this connection the number seven became especially sacred with them, and ever preserved its importance with the astrologers. The Pythagoreans considered the figure seven as the image and model of the divine order and harmony in nature. It was the number containing twice the sacred number three or the "triad," to which the "one" or the divine monad was added: 3 + 1 + 3. As the harmony of nature sounds on the key-board of space, between the seven planets, so the harmony of audible sound takes place on a smaller plan within the musical scale of the ever-recurring seven tones. I could go on but you get the point. "So Above, So Beneath" and Egypt got it right!

Important for our study is then the fact that these 7 Heavens were likened to our Solar System and its planets and orbs like the Sun and the moon. Most of us have never looked up the word "Heaven" to see what it actually means. The word "Heavens", which appears in many verses in the Bible and Sacred Books of the world , is used to refer to the sky above the Earth, as well as the entire Universe.



{short description of image}

The pre-Copernican concept of the universe was geocentric, i.e. they thought that the Earth was flat and was located at the center of the universe. The ancients believed that the Sun and the Moon along with Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Mercury that made the seven known objects of the Heaven were themselves manifestations of "Living Energies" hidden within "matter". Understand that the names for these "Living Energies", or "neteru" as ancient Egypt were to call them, were different depending upon the various nations and their languages but the underlying ideas is that they were the same concepts, the same "neteru" or "deities" in their own being. The ancient understood that the whole of he Universe was "alive" as all things consist of the First Cause, this intelligent-thinking "Living Energy" we call God. These 7 orbs of Heaven in our Solar System were the only objects people could observe with their naked eyes moving in the sky while the stars appeared to be fix and immoveable. They believed that these planets or “gods” and "goddesses" each had its own fixed sphere of existence, influence, and responsibility within the Universe. These layers of "being" and "existence" are not the same as the orbits of the planets to which we are familiar today. At the earliest of times the ancients believed that the planets did not orbit the Sun but they all revolved around the flat Earth as seen on image above. One theory goes as follows: If you order the "planets" according to either their presumed distance from Earth (assuming the Earth to be the center of the universe as was once done) or their period of revolution around the Earth, you arrive at this order: Moon, Mercury, Venus, Sun, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn. The closest to the Earth was the Moon and the farthest, was Saturn.

Answer for yourself: What does this teach us?

We see then that the concept of the 7 layers of Heaven is based on ancient astronomy, where each celestial body occupied a crystal sphere one placed on top of the other like layers of an onion. Sun, Moon and five Planets each moved along their own paths and this started the belief that there were 7 levels of reality. Then at some stage the Earth itself was included and the fixed stars and the number of levels became 9 hence the Sefirot being arranged in a hierarchy of levels resulting in the nine steps as a ladder, the Ladder to Heaven (the Ayn Soft residing on the tenth level). The Sefirot are a channel, ladder or tree through which one can "climb" and approach the Infinite First Cause of all. Note that of the ten Sefirot, creation refers to only 7 Sefirot even though the Kabbalistic Tree of Life comprises 10 Sefirot. This is because the first 3, sometimes the Supernal Triad, are beyond our state of manifestation.

Ancient Egypt envisioned this in the diagram on the left and Israel later in the diagram on the right. You should expect this since the Hebrews living in ancient Egypt received much of their religious and Spiritual instruction at the hands of the Egyptian Priesthoods and Moses. But behind these charts is the Heavens themselves, the Ladder from the Invisible God to the smallest material manifestation known to mankind. Know that Gnosticism originated in Egypt. The neo-platonic Gnostic school of Alexandria became its centre in the first century A.D. From it sprung Christian, Gentile and Jewish Gnosticism. The latter survived in the Jewish Kabbalah.

Both Judaism and Christianity make reference to these layers of Heaven. For example Dante in his Divina Comedia refers to it and Paul the apostle, in 2 Corinthians 12:2 says: "I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third Heaven. Whether it was in the body or out of the body I do not know–God knows." Some time if you find the time do a Concordance search on the word "mystery" or "mysteries" in your New Testament; you will be amazed at what you find. Again, it was through these 7 Heavens that these "Living Energies" of God "fell" and "descended" from the uppermost Heaven to be "crucified on the cross of matter" on Earth; this was their "incarnation" into material existence. It is through these 7 Heavens that the Soul must make not only Her descent but Her ascent as well.

Thus you see that the number seven was so ingrained in the mind of the ancient man that you can find it everywhere. Seven planets or gods had been identified and the phases of the moon changed every seven days. The Bible states that God rested on the seventh day after he completed his Creation. And every seventh year was sabbatical and that the seven times seventh year ushered in the Jubilee year.

The ancients divided their weeks in seven days each day representing a deity or "neter" (the "Living Energy" responsible for each of these Spiritual realms. The first pages of the Bible explain how God created the world in six days and rested on the seventh. This seventh day became the Jewish day of rest, the sabbath, Saturday. But more common for most of us is the fact that the seven-day week was established as in imperial calendar in the late Roman empire and furthered by the Christian church for historical reasons. Sunday is the 7th day of the week according to Rome who disregards the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the ancient Spiritual traditions of mankind since the beginning of time!

- Saturday was dedicated to Saturn (Dies Saturni),
- Sunday to Sun (Dies Solis),
- Monday to Moon (Dies Lunae),
- Tuesday to Mars (Dies Martis),
- Wednesday to Mercury (Dies Mercurii),
- Thursday to Jupiter (Dies Jovis), and
- Friday to Venus (Dies Veneris).

Out of this order come the familiar seven Archangels which include Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel, Raguel, Sariel, and the "fallen" Lucifer (the "light-bringer").

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word "fallen" in the description of Lucifer which means "light bringer"? We don't have the time or the space to devote now to the in-depth study of the re-interpretation of the "Lucifer Story" but let me ask you something:

- Could the idea behind the word "Lucifer" and the tradition of the "fall of Lucifer" only refer to the "fall" of God's light or intellect, this Nous, this Logos, this Deific Mind, this "thinking part of God", this intellect and intelligence of God into darkened "matter"?

- Could it be that the idea of Lucifer was corrupted by its identification with its "fall into matter" since "matter" is the realm of potential death and potential sin to the incarnated Soul? [Don't forget that it does not have to be that way].
- Is this the same mistake we made with the "fall into sin" being nothing more than the "fall or descent of the Soul into "matter" in its incarnation?
- What have we got right?
- What do we believe right?
- What do we know "for sure"?
- Have we learned anything right in Church or has Rome deceived the whole world?

Here are a few quick facts.

This may be a surprise to you but the word "Lucifer" appears only one time in the King James translation of the Bible. First of all that is a huge problem. Also surprising is the fact that in other Christian translations it does not appear even one time! The verse in which the King James Bible uses the word "Lucifer" is found in the Christian Old Testament translation of Isa. 14:12, which states: "How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How are thou cut down to the ground, which did weaken the nations!"

Answer for yourself: What does this verse say in the Hebrew?

12 How art thou fallen from heaven, O day-star, son of the morning! How art thou cut down to the ground, that didst cast lots over the nations!

There is no "Lucifer" in this text at all. The passage in the Hebrew Bible refers to the King of Babylon, a man! But our Christian KJV text put the word "Lucifer" in the text and church tradition over 1,800 years has made a whole dogma out of Lucifer fighting God over the Souls of mankind out of it when it never existed in the first place. Be sure and finance this non-existent battle. This is just plain wrong. We known more about false traditions in our Churches and fake texts than we do the true Hebrew texts from which our religious beliefs and Bibles should have come! This again is just plain wrong. There is no fear today of "adding to or taking away from the Word of God". Where is truth?

Now if you spoke or studied in Hebrew (let us not forget that is the language originally used in the Hebrew Scriptures from which this verse is supposed to be taken in our Christian Bibles) you would find that the Hebraic translation of the verse reads differently. Let me give you another Hebrew translation: "How you have fallen from the Heavens, shining star (O day-star), son of the morning! You who weakens the nations are cut down to the ground."

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that the word "Lucifer" is not in the original Hebrew text of the Bible and the true Old Testament at all! We find it only in our false Christian Old Testament and few ever notice this adulteration of the word of God their whole lives. In fact, Isa. 14:12 is the only place in the entire Christian King James Bible that the word "Lucifer" appears. The word "Lucifer" never appears in the Hebrew text; only in the falsified Christian "interpretation" of the Hebrew.

The word "Lucifer" is Latin for:

- 1) Phosphorous
- 2) Venus - as the morning star
- 3) The light-bringer which announces the dawn of the Sun (the light of God dawning upon and within mankind).

Answer for yourself: Could the whole concept of "Lucifer" but nothing more than an allegory for the planet Venus rising before the Sun at dawn? Yes, but on a metaphysical level is says much more. Lucifer is connected to the descent of the Soul into "matter" and its "crucifixion on the cross of matter" that refers to its incarnational existence as we shall see in just a second with Ishtar, Inanna, and Ninsianna, etc. But a few facts are needed first.

The name "Lucifer" is sometimes applied to the planet Venus as the evening star as well. Interestingly enough, the passage in Luke 10:18 ("I saw Satan fall like lightening from Heaven") was thought by Christians to refer to the Isa. 14:12 passage in which the "star" was used metaphorically for the king of Babylon. That is right. The Isaiah passage to which "Lucifer" has been added in Christianity is about a man, a King of Babylon, that great nation, who is to be a "great light" for his people but who failed in that endeavor.

According to the Funk and Wagnalls Dictionary of Folklore, Mythology, and Legends of 1984, this "Lucifer" would become the chief of fallen angels and the name for Satan before his rebellion. "Lucifer", as a name given to the Devil, comes from this passage, which the early Catholic Church Fathers interpreted, without any corroborating evidence, as relating to the apostasy & punishment of angelic leaders. Such an application was tied to the King of Babel according to Keil & Delitzsch in their Commentary on the Old Testament. Thus we now find that the Devil is become the chief of the fallen angels or evil spirits. But when we look at the text behind what we hear preached in Christian theology today that his personal name was originally "Lucifer" or "light-bearer" (Isa. 14:12) and the term is applied to the human king of Babylon; it was a metaphor and allegory only. "Lucifer", in religion, is a name that was thus given to Satan by early Christians and was adopted without question in the middle ages because no one sought to study the Scriptures in Hebrew. If they had they would have seen what you saw. It is not there. Believe me Christian clerics knew this but fear is a great motivator of religion and salvation was dispensed only by the organization that created that fear in the first place, Rome! "O day-star, son of the morning" never referred to a Devil or Satan or some "Living Energy" that was fighting against God or any war in Heaven. The only war being fought was in the heart of the King of Babylon; the text referred to a King, a human being, who had strayed from the way of God and the position he was given by God to lead his people to Heaven. Being the "King" he was God's "light" for his people as the Pharaoh was God's representative before his people as well. Kings and Pharaohs were God's representatives to the people. Tragically, after this connection between "light-bearer" and "Satan" the truth behind the word "Lucifer" and "O day-star, son of the morning" is lost when all along it referred to the descent of the Deific Mind of God into mankind; in particular the King. Simply said the King has "fallen into matter" and was living more like an animal than a Heavenly Soul.

Answer for yourself: Why do you think that this same king was imaged in a dream given Daniel as if an "animal". According to Daniel while boasting over his achievements, King Nebuchadrezzar is humbled by the God of the Jews. The King loses his sanity and lives in the wild like an animal for seven years. After this, his sanity and position are restored. Neither the illness, nor the interval of such a "literal" event was ever recorded in Babylonian annals. Again, a metaphor and allegory is before us and not a "literal-historical" account. Plato said we are "gods in the bodies of animals" and "matter is capable of evil works of the flesh". Having lost his incarnational purpose for some part of his live, King Nebuchadrezzar was pictured as the animal he was and not as the Soul he should be.

It was this descent of Heavenly Wisdom given to the King of Babylon which was negated by the works of the flesh. In reality "the Krst/Karest/Christ", as the "Deific Mind" of God which has "fallen into matter", into flesh, into King Nebuchadrezzar to instruct his descended Soul, this "light bearer", had been hidden under a bushel by the King. Such is the "key" to the story and legend but behind it is a metaphysical reality. This is the same for most of our Bible.

John 8:12 12 Then spake Jesus (the Christ) again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. (KJV)

The "Christ" is "Lucifer", the "light of the world"; the "light-bringer". It is "ok" to set down and catch your breath and this truth dawn upon you as well as the fact of just how far from the truth we have strayed in Christian theology and in our Churches!

This celestial "fall" into matter of the Soul and the Deific Mind of God we saw was depicted by the ancients as a "crucifixion" of this "Living Energy" on the "cross of matter" as it fell from Heaven through 7 spheres or 7 layers of Heaven. We now look deeper into this metaphysical concept as our knowledge of the Soul as well as ourselves as incarnated Souls increases.

Let us continue in the next article in this series.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #7

We concluded the earlier article by stating that this celestial "fall" into matter of the Soul and the Deific Mind of God was depicted by the ancients as a "crucifixion" of "Living Energy" on the "cross of matter" as it "fell" from Heaven through 7 spheres or 7 layers of Heaven. We saw that the ancients understood that "Divine Thought" interacted with "Primordial Substance"; "Divine Thought" thinking out the plan upon which the cosmos will be constructed, and out of which Substance is to be fashioned. This "Divine Thought", the "Word", is the "Spirit of God" of which we read in our Bibles and which "hovered" over the "waters" din the book of Genesis. Water, let us remember, in every religious system, is the same as "matter", or this "Primordial Substance". It is this "Spirit", this "Living-Thinking Energy" which knows active life because of its opposite, this "substance" of material life in which is comes to reside and develops a "consciousness" on various levels of existence. Quantum Physics today has shown us that all "matter" is "alive" and "thinks". This "active life", from subatomic particles that are "alive and thinking" to the grosser manifestations of material existences like stars, planets, the mineral kingdom, the animal kingdom, and even the human kingdom possess, like our Creator, various levels of "thinking" and "Divine Though" and has a "consciousness of self". In the cosmos no matter where we look or investigate this Creator is always in a state either of "thinking" and "becoming" which is balanced by a state of "rest and sleep"; metaphysical ideas at appropriate times materializing later as is permissible in the descending scale (Heaven's Ladder) of thought and subsequent material manifestation and it is here we approach our own state of consciousness which we were given. This coming into manifestation and self-awareness (God) and subsequent consciousness of "self" is the very purpose of this dual principle of Spirit-Matter of which we have been speaking. The universe comes into existence in order that it many "understand itself". In this universe life gives place to death and decay, death again replaces life; the unending cycle continues "above and below". Our universe has birth-periods, living and dying like any other entity. Mother Nature and the starry night Sky (Heaven) is but a picture of "pattern" of this "Divine Thought" of this "awakening of Divine Thought, Cerebration, Deliberation" and its opposite "rest" and "sleep" of which we read in Genesis. Everywhere you look, without exception, whether in Space, or in Mother Nature, we see the underlying law of cycles, alternation, and periodicity operating in the whole of the cosmos. Such is the immutable "law of being". The universal tendency of everything is to complete a cycle of manifestation, returning eventually to the point from which it originally started. The universe itself as a whole is also subject to this same law of alteration and periodicity, and has its periods of "sleeping" and "waking". Not only do we see this operating above our heads in the night sky with the birth and death of stars and galaxies, but the Sun as it "rises" from death and sleep to dawn every morning only to set and "die" at dusk where it "rests" speaks to us of this Divine Cycle of "being". The same can be said for the phases of the Moon as it is "birthed" only to "die" and reappear the following month as it reflects the "Living Energy" of the Sun (symbol for God). Nature and our 4 seasons of Spiring, Summer, Fall and Winter follow this celestial dance with its cyclical seasons and responds in manifestation in like kind to the effects of the Sun, this symbol of the ONE true "Living First Energy" and "Divine Thought" which we call God. Life on this planet follows this same law as seen in the evolution of species on our planet since its very beginning. The ancients taught that Spirit-Matter exists as a unity in duality from the dawn of this "period of awakening" (called the Day of Brahama, Manvantara) and its "periods of sleeping" (Pralaya). That is why Nature must alternate between "awakefulness" and "sleep" like the Cosmos; we are all "united" in "kind" and "source"; I speak of course of this multiple manifestation of "Living Energies" in this hierarchy of life we see described before us in the Kabbalah (this Ladder from Heaven). Thus you can better now understand that during Manvantars, periods of "awaking" and "manifestation", the whole of the universe awakens into existence in order that it may "understand itself" and experience itself, rest and contemplate, only to expand again when awakening again to further its self-realization. It is no different with mankind. The myriads of individual lives thrown into being as "sparks of Divine Though" incarnated into "matter" as a result of this dual existence of "Spirit-Matter" have each to experience and to understand the whole of "being". We are all but a "spark" or "flash" of this "Divine Living Energy" of this one Universal Mind or "the Over-Soul" which incarnated itself in material existence and been "crucified on the cross of matter" in order to gain experience of material life, so as to experience and understand "itself"; in which sense "God goes to school" and learns of himself. Again, this "Divine Thought" has no outlet of life in order to "know Himself through experience" without "material existence"; unembodied Living Spirit-Energy and "Divine Thinking existence" only knows active life because of its opposite, "matter" and substance, the root of material objective life. Simply said God, the Creator, enriches His self-knowledge of Himself through the individualized incarnated experiences of all of His parts; mineral, vegetable, animal, and human. The ancient sages possessing this Spiritual Wisdom taught that each Soul, once separated as a spark and "fallen" from its Heavenly fountain-head, has to act its part in this Divine Cycle of "incarnation" and "crucifixion in matter" during the whole adversity of the "fall" into human life. We as humanity with this higher consciousness are to experience this duality of "life and death" on this "cross of matter" on Earth and in so doing allow the God inside of us to experience vicariously Consciousness of Himself and all that is included in the cycles of "awaking" and "sleeping" of the whole cosmos, which is God as the "Divine Though" manifested. This is why "incarnation" and the birth of the Soul into humanity was called "death" to the Soul and described as Hades, Sheol, Hell, the inferno, the pit, and Amenta by the ancients. This whole cosmic process regards us as "Pilgrims" journeying our way around the cycle of "necessity" or incarnational experience, who, having passed through the mineral, vegetable and animal stages, have issued into the human kingdom, with many before us high up on the road of Spiritual evolution, many others following behind. With this as a short introduction let us now look deeper into this metaphysical concepts surrounding our knowledge of the Soul as well as ourselves as incarnated Souls.

Ancient Egypt as well as the later Greeks taught that creation was an ongoing universal happening; a constant "becoming". The later Greek expression of the former ancient Egyptian cosmology and religious ideas were clothed in a more modern description of the creation as we find in Ptolematic and post-Ptolematic Greeks. In the Poimandes text of the Hermetica we find the description of mankind's sevenfold composition, each quality contributed by a Deity (Egypt called these "neteru"); themselves "Living Energies" or Cosmic principles. We find described in the ancient Spiritual Books this descent of the Soul and its "after-death" (after the Earthly incarnation and demise of the biological body) ascent of the Soul as described as a "stripping" metaphor or a "shedding of clothes" or of its various Heavenly attributes as well as a later a reclothing or "putting on of the same clothes", one by one, as the Soul makes its relevant 7 planetary stops (both in its descent and ascent) until reaching the necessary purification which is necessary before its later re-incarnational return to Earth where its re-descends once again into the Underworld of Amenta to continue its Spiritual Evolution. If one consults the ancient myths of the descent and ascent of the Soul one finds that at each gate of the Netherworld, as in the descent of Inanna or Ishtar, the Soul has to take off one piece of her clothing until She, in the end, arrives at the Netherworld (Hades, Hell, Underworld, Sheol, Earthly incarnation, etc.) completely naked, stripped of all here Heavenly virtues, powers, and knowledge that She once possessed before Her "fall" into "Hell" and "matter". Ishtar is the Assyrian counterpart to the Sumerian Inanna and that of the Semitic goddess Astarte. Under these myths Ishtar, Inanna, Astarte, and many others like Aphrodite and Sophia are but personifications of the descent and ascent of the Soul (usually pictured in the feminine). The Soul's later ascent is expressed by reversing of this metaphor; at each of the seven gates, She gets back a piece of Heavenly clothing in like order thus mirrowing that of their removal in the prior descent. This metaphor of "stripping" was used to portray the eternal cycle of "becoming" as the Soul was "crucified on the cross of matter" in its descent until the Soul achieved a sufficient level of Spiritual Evolution that would allow it to move beyond this Earthly plane of existence whereupon She would be re-clothed in Heavenly attire in the ascent back to the Father.

The oldest mythological occurrence of the iconography mentioning this "stripping of the Soul" in its descent into "incarnational existence" is found in the Sumero-Akkadian account of The Descent of Inanna first written down in 1750 B.C., but undoubtedly believed to be much older by numerous scholars. Inanna is the most important goddess of the Sumerian pantheon in ancient Mesopotamia. This Sumerian account the reader should know come from a period of time that is before ancient Egypt. Inanna is a goddess of love, fertility, and war. Inanna figures prominently in various myths, such as "Inanna's descent to the underworld". In this particular myth she travels to the realm of the dead and claims its ruling. Again, as we have seen, the words "death" and "the dead" were used of Earthly incarnation since the beginning of recorded time and will remain so until the later revolutionary re-interpretations of the ancient Sacred Wisdom and Gnosis by 2nd century Rome. However, Inanna's sister Ereshkigal, who rules the place, sentences her to death. With Inanna's death, however, nature died with her and nothing would grow anymore. Through the intervention of the god Enki she could be reborn if another person took her place. She choose her beloved consort Dumuzi, who would from then on rule the underworld every half year. A variation of her name is Ninnanna, which means "queen of the sky" or "queen of Heaven". She is also called Ninsianna as the personification of the planet Venus.

Answer for yourself: Why is this connection with Venus so important? Venus is often called the "morning star". Actually, "evening star" or "morning star" nearly always refers to Venus, which is by far the brightest celestial object in the sky after the Sun and Moon. Lucifer makes his appearance in the fourteenth chapter of the Old Testament book of Isaiah, at the twelfth verse, and nowhere else:

"How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!"

Answer for yourself: The word "Lucifer" is a Latin name (Roman name). So how did it find its way into a Hebrew manuscript, written before there was a Roman language? Since the word "Lucifer" is not in any Hebrew text then did Rome forge our Bibles in hundreds of places of which we are not aware? I have teaching the readers and students of Bet Emet Ministries this for over 15 years. It is sad that in church we take a verse of two and build a sermon out of it; often wrenching the texts out "of context" to make the sermon fit our inherited religious Christian traditions and legends. In the original Hebrew text, the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah is not about a fallen angel, but about a fallen Babylonian king, who during his lifetime had persecuted the children of Israel. It contains no mention of Satan, either by name or reference. it is obvious today as modern scholars will tell us that early Roman Christian scribes, writing in the Latin tongue used by the Church, had decided for themselves that they wanted the story to be about a fallen angel, a creature not even mentioned in the original Hebrew text, and to whom they gave the name "Lucifer." Creating their own salvation doctrine in spite of what the Hebrew texts have taught let alone the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the world for over 10,000 years, Rome, in order to control mankind through fear and ignorance, changed the sacred texts about our Soul and tied mankind's only salvation to themselves and the Roman Church. The light of "truth was hidden under a bushel" due to a forged text now for over 1,800 years and counting.

Answer for yourself: Why use the word Lucifer?

In Roman astronomy, Lucifer was the name given to the morning star (the star we now know by another Roman name, Venus). The morning star appears in the heavens just before dawn, heralding the rising sun. The name derives from the Latin term "lucem ferre", "bringer, or bearer, of light." Now listen to this. In the Hebrew text the expression used to describe the Babylonian king before his death is "Helal, son of Shahar", which can best be translated as "Day star, son of the Dawn." The name evokes the golden glitter of a proud king's dress and court (much as his personal splendor earned for King Louis XIV of France the appellation, "The Sun King").

The scholars authorized by King James I to translate the Bible into current English did not use the original Hebrew texts, but used versions translated ... largely by St. Jerome in the fourth century. Jerome had mistranslated the Hebraic metaphor, "Day star, son of the Dawn," as "Lucifer," and over the centuries a metamorphosis took place. Lucifer the morning star became a disobedient angel, cast out of heaven to rule eternally in hell. Theologians, writers, and poets interwove the myth with the doctrine of the Fall, and in Christian tradition Lucifer is now the same as Satan, the Devil, and --- ironically --- the Prince of Darkness. And it is all a Lie!!!

Here again we find the connection to "Lucifer" as the "light-bearer" who "falls" from Heaven into the Underworld of Earthly incarnation connected to the earliest of the descent Stories" of the ancients. Lucifer is the name for the "descent of the Deific Mind of God" into humanity as "the Christ" and Christian theology believes that this is Satan or the Devil. Oh how great is the darkness of our Christian beliefs who have so long ago lost the "keys" so necessary for proper interpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Sadly Christianity, for the most part, refuses to consult this ancient Spiritual Wisdom for the correct interpretation of the symbols in their Bibles which they so tragically misunderstand in their preaching of untruths.

So "Lucifer" is nothing more than an ancient Latin name for the morning star, the bringer of light from Heaven! That can be confusing for Christians who identify Christ himself as the morning star, a term used as a central theme in many Christian sermons. Jesus refers to himself as the morning star in Revelation 22:16:

"I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star."

When restored to its proper meaning in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom then this "light-bringer" from Heaven, this "Lucifer" refers to the "crucifixion of the Christ Soul on the cross of matter" in order to be the Bishop of our incarnated Souls in these bodies of animals. Such is mankind. Such was believed to the authorities given by God to rule over His people like kings and Pharaohs. This whole passage in Isaiah 14 concerning "the fall of Lucifer", the "light bearer" refers first to the fall of that earthly king who failed his people as well as God.

Answer for yourself: How did the translation "Lucifer" arise? This word comes from Jerome's Latin Vulgate. Was Jerome in error? Not at all. In Latin at the time, "Lucifer" actually meant Venus as a morning star. Isaiah is using this metaphor for a bright light, though not the greatest light to illustrate the apparent power of the Babylonian king which then faded in the view of his people as well as God. Therefore, Lucifer wasn't equated with Satan until after Jerome.

The concept of Satan has evolved over the years and the early Bible writers didn't believe in or teach such a doctrine as we hear preached from our Christian pulpits today. It is truly ironic that those who believe that "Lucifer" refers to Satan is don't connect this term when used elsewhere in the New Testament.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the same title ("morning star" or "light-bearer") is used to refer to Jesus, the personified Christ, in 2 Peter 1:19, where the Greek text has exactly the same term: "phos-phoros" or "light-bearer" which is used in the Hebrew of Isaiah 14? Now we have Lucifer connected with Christ Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the same term for "Lucifer" is also the term used for Jesus as "the Christ" in Revelation 22:16? You should begin to see that the descent of the Christ-Soul is the very "light-bringer" for the Soul in Hell, in Earthly incarnation. This is what was taught for thousands of years and why the Hebrews, who were schooled in ancient Egypt, used this term to express a "fallen light bringer"; the Soul of the king which was to lead his people to God's will and failed by yielding to his animal nature instead of his Spiritual nature.

Matt 4:16-17 16 The people which sat in darkness (crucified on the cross of "matter") saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death (Earthly incarnation) light is sprung up (the incarnation of the Christ-Soul in "matter").

Answer for yourself: How can I be sure that I am right in my interpretation? Well first of all I now possess the "keys" to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom that allows me to read the Bible the way the ancient Sacred Books of old told this same story for thousands of years. It is really simply when you learn the truth for the same Divine Message is repeated over and over again. Besides that the next verse describes the purpose of the Bishop of our Souls, the incarnated and crucified Christ:

17 From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. (KJV)

Here we see the Christ teaching us how to ascend the Ladder of Heaven and to extricate ourselves from this incarnational "death" in these "bodies of death" as Paul called them.

Rom 7:24-25 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin. (KJV)

David Grinspoon comments on the historical aspects of the word Lucifer as follows: "The origin of the Judeo-Christian Devil as an angel fallen from Heaven into the depths of hell is mirrored in the descent of Venus from shining morning star to the darkness below. This underworld demon, still feared today by people in many parts of the world, is also called Lucifer, which was originally a Latin name for Venus as a morning star" (David Grinspoon, Venus Revealed, p. 17). Actually, Grinspoon makes a big mistake in this above quote. He should just refer to the "Christian Devil" since the Jews never believed in such a creature and still don't to this day. Nor should they, it never existed "historically" or "literally" in ancient Egypt either from which the truest understanding of God and the cosmos in which we live can be found today!!!

Let us now return to further our study in the descent of the Soul.

In this myth, the Goddess Inanna, the personified descending Soul that is to be "crucified on the cross of 'matter'" prepares for her descent to the underworld and incarnation into "matter" by donning the seven royal pieces of clothing and attire which are symbolic of her royal power.

Answer for yourself: Why 7? Remember the 7 Heavenly spheres in which the Soul is believed to "descend and "ascend"?

Gatekeepers at each level of this descent force her to remove a piece of clothing as she passes through each of the seven doorways leading into the Earthy incarnation, where Ereshkigal, her evil sister goddess of death, awaits her. At the first gate the Soul met the guardian of the gate, and he let her pass, but only after removing the crown from her head. At the second gate the earrings were removed from her ears. At the third, the necklace from her neck. At the fourth, the ornaments from her breasts. At the fifth, the girdle from her waist. At the sixth, the bracelets from her hands and feet. And at the seventh, the cloak from her body. Each successive article of apparel was taken from her. Finally, when Ishtar reached the domain of the Underworld, the realm of death, the Mistress of Hades, inflicted all manner of disease upon her and "imprisoned" her in Hades, the Underworld which we have already seen was our "Earthly incarnation". If this is not a perfect description of human existence amidst disease and sorrow then I don't know what is. This story of the descent of Ishtar, Inanna, Astarte, Aphrodite, etc., is but the ancient allegory of the Ancient Astral doctrine of the descent of the Soul through the 7 planets in its descent into the Underworld and Hell, Hades, Sheol, and Amenta (Earthly incarnation). It has been told everywhere because it was understood by the observation of both the Cosmos and Nature. The "pattern" of this cosmos and its cyclical "death and decay, and again death which replaces life", this "descent and ascent of Living Energy" is this immutable law of being and is unbreakable and will always be such. It again is modeled for us above our heads in the Sky and Heaven and around us in Nature.

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

Just like Ishtar and Inanna we find the same story again. Let us not forget that in such a "descent of the Soul into matter" one becomes as if "dead". In the "fall" and discovery of the Spiritual knowledge Astarte makes her descent down through the Seven Gates of the Tree of Life to revive the dead Prince Baal at Autumn Equinox.

Answer for yourself: Why does this occur following harvest time at the Autumn Equinox? The onset of the lean season begins for mankind after the harvest, and this time brings out not the life found in God but the death that is inherent in God as well. This was personified again as the "descent" of the Soul into Earthly incarnation as seen the "descent of the goddesses". This time of the cycle of necessity was described by the entry of the Goddess, the personified Soul into the "death" of the "underworld"; in reality Earthly incarnation. This we find in the male Sungods as well; no better example can be found that the Summer Solstice at the zenith of the "Jesus Christ Story" and his transfiguration where his face "shines like the Sun" where at such Spiritual heights he uncharacteristically out of the blue says:

Matt 17:2 2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. (KJV)

Matt 17:9 9 And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead. (KJV)

The above verses describe the "incarnation" of the Soul into "matter" and its "ascent" as the demise of the biological body "be risen from the dead". Of course astronomically this "descent" of the Soul as seen in the myths of the descent of the goddesses are at this time of the Autumn Equinox that our Sun, the symbol of the "ONE Living Energy" of all Life, falls from its zenith in the Heavens/Sky at the Summer Solstice (the mount of transfiguration) and begins it descent in the Heavens into "death" as it approaches the Winter Solstice where it symbolically "dies" only to be "reborn" after 3 days. Again we see the recurring "pattern" of "descent and ascent" of "Living Energy" which is everywhere in the ancient Sacred Wisdom and Sacred Books of the world let alone our Bibles. In the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, above our heads in Heaven and the Sky above, and reflected in Mother Nature all round us we see the "pattern": "So Above, So Below". God is teaching us this Divine Truth "above" as well as "below" in the Laws of the Cosmos; the story of our Soul is before us everywhere so than mankind might not miss his incarnational purpose. But of course you need "eyes to see" and "ears to hear"; such a rare commodity today! Again let is be said over and over again:

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is there a "crucifixion" motif in this myth of the descent of Ishtar-Inanna-Astarte? Well yes there is. In the descent of Inanna, the Soul is stripped finally naked at each of the 7 gates of descent and ascent, Inanna is then killed as if "dead" and hung up on a peg on the wall to rot for three days and nights until she is brought back to life. This is the crude representation of "the cross of matter" in which the Divine Thought and Deific Mind of God has incarnated and "fallen". In one translation, Inanna is frequently referred to as "the pure Inanna" (Henderson & Oakes). Yet she, the Soul was in "Hades", in "Hell", but note her purity which the myth recounts by saying "she is a child of light" (the Lucifer or "light-bearer" motif, the "fall of the Krst-Soul along with the Soul into "matter"; here it is again).

She before incarnation into "darkened matter" lacks the experience of darkness which come through Earthly incarnation. This is to be part of her learning and Spiritual Evolution. She much overcome. The Christ speaking says:

John 16:33 33 These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ("in Krst/Karest/Christ) ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world. (KJV)

We are to defeat Set and bring peace to both the animal-nature and the Soul within this animal body. Inanna is regarded as a daughter of the sky-god An, but also of the moon-god Nanna. In descending into the depths, the weapons of consciousness of Inanna become impediments. The work of descent cannot be done by the well fortified, but only by the vulnerable, by the helpless and disempowered. At the first gate, she must leave her intellectualizing behind. At the second gate, she must quit relying on her cleverness and creativity. At the third gate, her niceness must be surrendered. At the fourth gate, her armor; at the fifth, her ability to do; at the sixth, her critical judgement; and at the final gate, her persona is stripped away from her. She enters the underworld naked and helpless as the day she was born. In this vulnerable state, she faces her sister, her shadow self. Unprotected in the depths, she finds herself judged and crucified, left putrefying hanging from the wall (crucified).

This glorious hymn establishes motifs of crucifixion and rebirth which underlies almost all if not all of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and their Sacred Books. Inanna's, or Ishtar's descent and return also has an astronomical corollary which survived in the hermetic and Gnostic traditions: the naked Soul descends from its celestial home in the Heavenly realm by passing through each of the seven planetary spheres, to assume its appropriate material element before becoming fully incarnate on Earth. When it returns at the moment of death at the biological demise of the animal body, the Soul sheds each material element at each of the seven planetary spheres until the body is transfigured into pure Spirit once again.

Answer for yourself: Where have we seen this "clothing motif" before?

Clothing also becomes a symbol of incarnation in Genesis, as we see in the stories of Adam and Eve and of Joseph with the "coat of many colors". After "the Fall" of the Soul into "matter" and "potential sin that dwells in darkened matter devoid of Spiritual Light", Yahweh prepares Adam and Eve for their own descent and existence into the Underworld of human life by clothing them in "coats of skins" as they pass through the eastern gate of the garden, which is guarded by the Cherub with the "flaming sword" (Genesis 3: 21-23). This is the metaphor used in the Bible to depict the physical incarnation of the Soul in "matter". In the prelude to Joseph and His Brothers, Thomas Mann noted the Gnostic tradition which attributed a body of "pure light" to "Adam qadmon" before the Fall, which of course becomes a body of skin afterwards. This again is the "fall of light" or the "bringer of light" or "Lucifer" (intellect and wisdom) to humanity; this is nothing more than that later story of Prometheus that steals "celestial fire" and the "light from the gods" and gives the gift of Solar fire to humanity, this is the "fall of Lucifer" into "matter". Look at the next verse:

Gen 3:22 22 And the LORD God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil:...(KJV)

This same metaphor of "dressing and undressing" is found in Jewish mysticism, where the Torah reveals herself by a process of undressing, while man ascends to a higher world through a process of dressing. A student of the Torah aspires to become the bridegroom of the Shekhinah, and one who diligently studies the Torah clothes the Shekhinah, for She is naked in Her exile in this world of "matter". This is the goddess once again, the Holy Spirit, Shekhinah, again in the feminine and we find this same idea expressed over and over not only in Proverbs but in the goddess stories in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the Mystery religions of antiquity where the hidden truths behind our Bibles lay. Conversely, every sinner is thought of as one who disrobes the Skekhinah, and in doing so only prolongs Her exile in "matter" and Earthly incarnational existences. Again we find this same teaching around the world and even in Judaism and all of this lies behind the "crucifixion of God" on the "cross of matter" as the Soul and Krst "fell from the 7 spheres or 7 Heavens".

To understand the Descent of the Soul (told in myths like that of the descent and Fall of Inanna, the descent and fall of Ishtar, the descent and Fall of Persephone, the descent and Fall of the Sophia, the descent of Astarte and Aphrodite, etc., and the multiple descents of the male Sungods) correctly, it is essential to realize that it has nothing to do with "fertility" or "seasonal growth and decay" but rather addresses the question of man´s salvation from bondage of matter and Earthly incarnational existence as a Soul that has been imprisoned in the Spiritual darkness of "matter". In these multiple descents, falls, and ascents religious myths of the ancients the protagonist is always the the "Neoplatonic" Cosmic Soul which is personified by multiple examples. The first half of these religious myth presents the Soul's Heavenly origin and the defilement in its fall and "crucifixion on the cross of matter" in the Netherworld, i.e. the material world, and the latter half of these descent and ascent myths outlines Her way of salvation and enlightenment into the knowledge of God that is guarantee and ticket for Her trip home. This is the real story of the "Ladder to Heaven" told over and over again from nation to nation under different examples.

We will continue our study in the next article in this series.

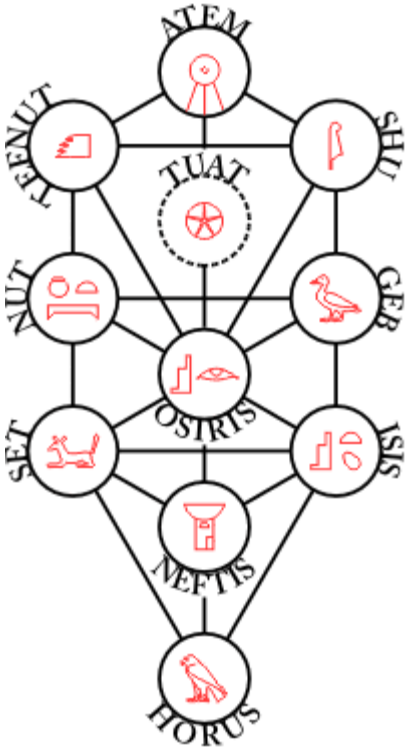
THE SOUL IN AMENTA #8

We continue our study of the Soul in Amenta as we left off with the various descents of the goddesses or Souls into "matter".

For many years mankind was unaware to the correct understanding of these descent and ascent myths; the greatest mistakes being made of course by Christian writers to characterizes anything not "Christian" as pagan. But with the discovery of the Nag Hammadi Library in Egypt we discovered a treatise entitles the Exegesis of the Soul which rather than hide these mystical meanings of these prior mysteries and descent and ascent stories in problematic and ambiguous symbolisms unknown today comes right out and plainly declares the meaning of these most ambiguous myths. Had Christian writers possessed sufficient knowledge before they wrote about what they don't know then the world would not have been mislead as bad at it has. In contrast to most Gnostic texts, the Exegesis of the Soul is written in easily comprehensible language, clearly meant to reveal rather than conceal.



Answer for yourself: Why is this important? Such a clear and concise document which defines its symbols for the reader offers a most valuable interpretive parallel to the Descent of the goddesses myths, whose heavily metaphorical and allegorical language served just opposite purpose. We find when consulting this Exegesis of the Soul that as long as the Soul was alone with the Father, She, the Soul, was virgin in form and androgynous (having both female and male characteristics; hermaphroditic, being neither distinguishably masculine nor feminine). Be that as it may wise men of old gave the Soul a feminine name and nature. But when She fell down into a body and came to this Earthy life and was crucified on the cross of "matter", She fell into the hands of many robbers and adulterers. Some made use of Her by force while others did so by seducing Her. In short, they defiled Her and She lost Her virginity. And in her body she prostituted herself. Such made Her sigh deeply and She repented before God for the errors in Her judgment since begin deceived for a long time. All Her husbands in this Earthly word abandoned Her and let Her go. Repenting of the prostitution in which She engaged the begins to cry out to God for help; help needed if She was ever to ascend to Her Father once again.

Now this is very important. Interesting for us to note is that the 7 gates through which Inanna, or the Soul has to pass on Her way back from the Netherworld, corresponds in the Kabbalah to the 7 gates of the Sefirot, through which the Soul must pass in order to reach the Father, the Divine King.

Answer for yourself: What is so special about these 7 gates, Sefirot, 7 planets, etc?

If you recall the seven Sefirot are considered the "lower" ones and are associated with Creation and the world and impact man in his Soulish incarnation in this world of "death" and possible "life" (being Spiritually born again in Hades).

But even earlier ancient Egypt gave the world this concept through the "neteru" as the first "Ladder to Heaven" in which we find today. Very important for us to note is that in Gnosticism and in the Mysteries, like those of Mithra, these 7 gates of the Sefirot correspond to the seven planetary Heavens or spheres which we mentioned previously in which the Soul passes, descends, and re-ascends in it "pilgrimage" in material existence. In each case, they are implicitly linked to a clear-cut doctrine of salvation of the Soul in one way or the other.

Answer for yourself: And what is this way for the Soul's salvation? In the Exegesis of the Soul, the way to salvation is opened up not by the way that Christianity teaches, "faith alone in a dogma decided upon by Roman clerics", but by the way that ancient Egypt and Judaism and the ancient Sacred Spiritual Wisdom and the Sacred Books of the nations long before Rome has always taught for over 12,000 years: by repentance that brings the Kingdom of Heaven near, obedience to the Laws of God, mourning over Spiritual failures, a contrite heart, prayer and mercy. It is all about "faith" in operation; not mental ascent to some creed or doctrinal statement. Christ said:

Matt 7:20-21 20 Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. 21 Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. (KJV)

But before that a very long time ago, Tuthmose III, Pharaoh of Egypt during the 18th Dynasty, otherwise known by the pen of Persian clerics such as Ezra as "King David", wrote:

Ps 34:18 18 The LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit. (KJV)

Ps 51:17 17 The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise. (KJV)

This is the mind not of Hebrews, it is the mind of ancient Egypt who taught them and who instilled these Divine Truths in them during their stay in Egypt. This, the mind of Pharaohs, of Moses, again known today as Akhenaten, himself a Hebrew Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of ancient Egypt, as well as others like the Pharaoh Ephraim and Jacoba, tell us the truth like never before. We were told the "rocks will cry out"; they are screaming at us today due the exhaustive efforts of archeologists and not Pastors who sadly know little about what they misrepresent!

In the Exegesis of the Soul, recognizing her miserable condition, the Soul begins to call out with all her heart upon the name of her father: "Save me, my father, for behold I will render an account for thee, for I abandoned my house and fled from my maiden´s quarters.

Answer for yourself: Since the Soul, although represented as feminine has "male characteristics" as well, then understanding that this Christ-Soul, the Krst, is also represented in the feminine as the Sophia, the feminine Christ (see Proverbs), then is it any wonder the same story of the Soul crying out to the Father is told in the Prodigal Son parable, the Son who went into a far country and "died" but who now is "alive"? THINK!

In the Exegesis of the Soul it states: Restore me to thyself again."

Answer for yourself: Sound familiar? Look at what the "incarnated Christ" says:

John 17:5 5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. (KJV)

The Exegesis of the Soul further adds: "When the father, who is above, sees her in such a state, then he will count her worthy of his mercy upon her". The Soul cries out for mercy to be shown to Her since now repentant. She cries out for mercy since abandoning here house and home above just the way the Prodigal Son had done. You can thank the patriarchal Roman Church for deleting the feminine aspect of God from the Scriptures they decided to give us. The Old Testament teaches this but we never seem to see it. One only has to look at Jeremiah 3:1-4, Hosea 2:2-7, and Ezekiel 16:23-26.

The Exegesis of the Soul clearly states that the Soul prostituted Herself to the sons of Egypt, Egypt again being a symbol for the fleshly body. "The sons of Egypt, great men of the flesh" means the domain of the flesh and the perceptible realm and affairs of the Earth, by which the Soul has become defiled here after its "crucifixion in matter". Now what I say next is very important. Let us not forget that like Israel, Egypt was divided into both an "Upper Egypt" (Spiritual nature) and a "Lower Egypt" (a carnal animal nature). Egypt is the image of Heaven and its "pattern" for the cosmos and for mankind. Even in the Kabbalah there are the division of 3 and 7 Sefirot thus making 10; a "higher level" and a "lower level" of material existence. Again we see "So Above, So Below". This applies to mankind as well and his two natures; one Spiritual and one animal; one "higher" and one "lower". Man is the microcosm of God's cosmos and Divine Thought which is the Macrocosm. Our Souls on the "cross of matter", our incarnation, is nothing more than the opportunity for our personal pilgrimage from "Lower Egypt" to "Upper Egypt" or ascension of our Souls up the Ladder of Heaven.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that all the Pharaohs of all times were given credit for "unifying Egypt" when it in reality only happened once with Menes? Almost all of the Pharaohs of ancient Egypt were given credit for "unifying Egypt"; bringing harmony between "flesh and Spirit" in the people of their nation. That is the "key" to this repetition of the myth of the unifying of the "Lower nature of man" with the "Higher Spiritual nature of man's Soul". Space will not allow for a more detailed teaching on this matter but we well address it more thoroughly in the 10th article in this series.

Egypt is the "pattern" for the world and for mankind. Let us explain this somewhat for the reader as it is very important to grasp this idea in our studies since the ancients knew that Egypt is the "Spiritual Pattern" for humanity and the entire world; in fact Egypt has been called the "Image of Heaven"; it was "Heaven's Mirror". Hermes has said:

Art thou not aware, O Asclepios, that Egypt is the image of heaven, or rather, that it is the projection below of the order of things above? If the truth must be told, this land is indeed the temple of the world.

Having discussed the goddesses and their "descent" and "ascent" in summary fashion then let us not forget the male "gods" who descended into Hades and Hell and are likewise "crucified in matter" as are the "goddesses". God, if you recall, is expressed in the Sacred Books of the world in both "masculine" and "feminine" names and it is this God who was "crucified on the cross of matter" and this Celestial Event was described in both aspects of the Divine; both feminine and masculine which we might expect when looking at mankind. The cyclical cosmic cycle of the path of the Sun, as pictured in the similar lives of the Sungods, is the picture and "pattern" given mankind of the "birth, life, death, and rebirth" of the Soul who was "crucified on the cross of matter".

- The Autumn Equinox portrays the "death" and "descent of the Living Energy" into "matter".
- The Winter Solstice is the picture and "pattern" of this "incarnational death" in "matter".
- The Vernal (Spring) Equinox speaks of the resurgence of life "from the dead" and has been celebrated by all peoples who have inherited from remotest antiquity the meaning of what occurs in nature at that special period of time.
- The Summer Solstice is the harvest and the fruit that is born at the zenith and greatest height of the Soul's Spiritual growth "in matter".

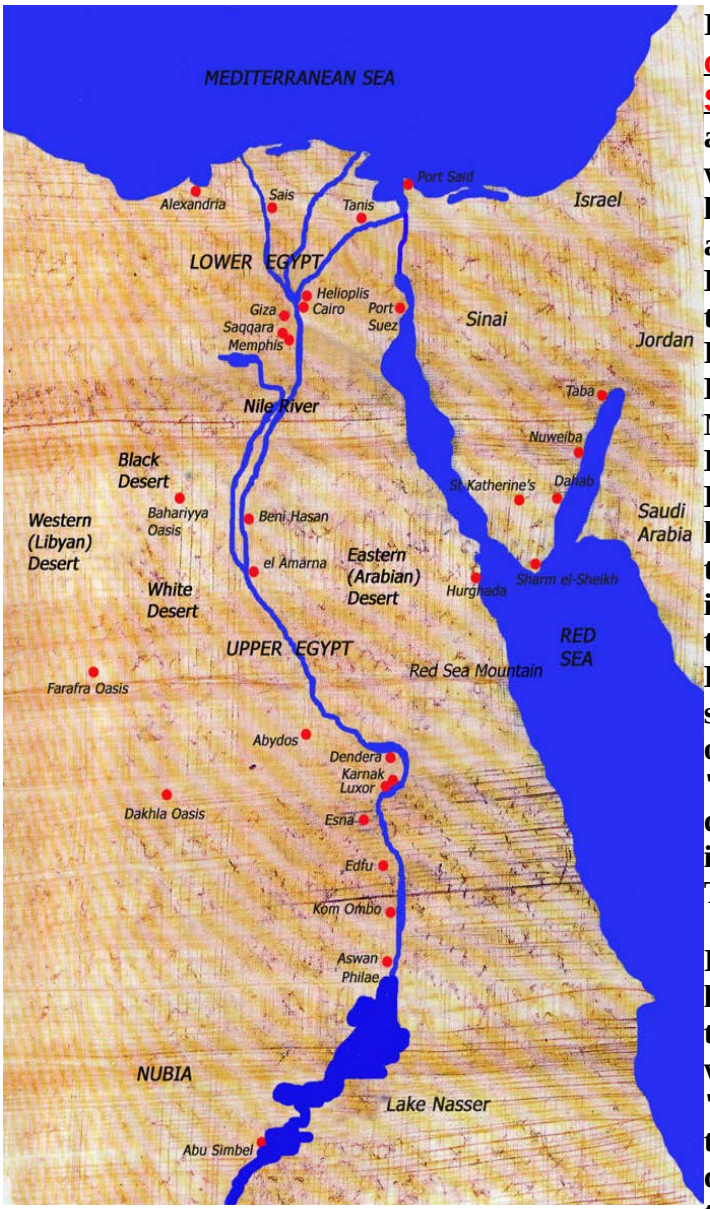
The many Saviors associated with the legends that have come down to us embody the myths of the cosmic Spirit incarnating into "matter" where they impart something of their essence to the entities slowly evolving there, and then returning to its Divine state. In the ancient Mysteries, symbolic geography was often used to teach both cosmic and human values. An example of this practice is the system of the ancient Egyptians with their "Upper and Lower Egypt" mentioned above as well as their "Winged Disk" myth.

The ritual adventures of Horus of Edfu, known also as the Winged Disk myth, dramatizes the Soul's descent into "matter" and, through purification and self-conquest, its re-ascent to its Heavenly home. As the Soul "fell from Heaven" it was given the task after accomplishing its mission Spiritual evolution here in Hades to "fly or ascend to Heaven" in its ascent. Hardly any emblem from ancient Near-Eastern art and architecture is more widely known than the winged disc. The winged disc is essentially a circle of "Living Energy" (symbolic of the Sun) to which two outstretched wings are attached. The winged disk is a religious symbol representing the Living Energy which the ancients regarded as the supreme god of the sky. The symbol is found in Egypt, Mesopotamia, Anatolia, and northern Syria and comes in a number of local variations; the Egyptians often attached two coiling uraeus or serpents to its sides or placed two little horns on top of the disc, whereas the Assyrians typically portrayed the disc as a ring containing the upper part of the god in human form as seen on the left image. The iconography and the textual evidence reveal that the disc tended to be placed atop some tall landmark, such as a pillar, a gateway, or a tree. On the right side of the above image we have the winged disk hovering above the "Tree of Life" which looks remarkably like the DNA helix; the Ladder to Heaven. The iconography and the textual evidence reveal that the disc tended to be placed atop some tall landmark, such as a pillar, a gateway, or a tree, as in the archetype of the "Tree of Life". It is now clear that a coherent underlying layer of world mythology and symbolism can be identified through cross-cultural comparison from nation to nation, from religion to religion.



Answer for yourself: Who exactly was this deity represented as a winged disc? The short answer is that this particular god or "neteru" was envisioned as a giant bird. Egyptologists have long acknowledged that the Egyptian form of the image could represent Horus the falcon or hawk god, the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ. Horus, the Egyptian Krst, accompanied the Sun God Ra on his daily journey across Egypt (Egypt being symbol for the fleshly body and the incarnation of God as "Living Energy" into "matter" once again). The symbol of the winged disk, understood as symbolic for Horus, the Egyptian Krst, was believed to ward off evil and help the Soul defeat evil (as in the battle between Set and Horus).

Here is some more "keys" to Egyptian symbolism which are so important:

Horus typifies the Soul, (the Krst/Karest/Christ) and

- The country of Egypt, its towns, terrain, and the river Nile, the field of activity of that Soul ("matter, the human body of flesh").

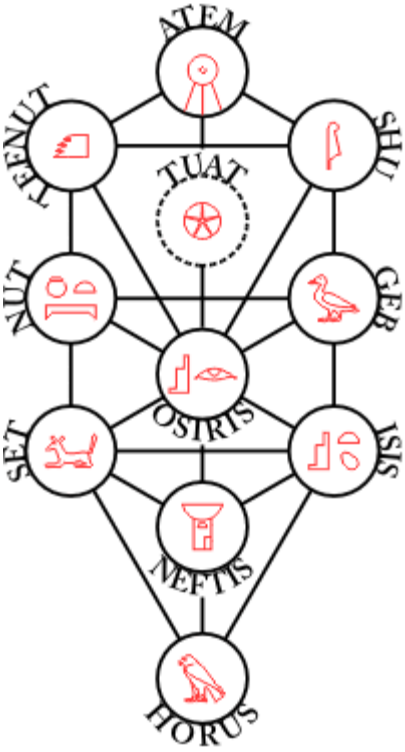
Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us? We should by now begin to visualize the mystical history of Egypt, the deeds of its gods (Horus as the Krst) and heroes as standing for mans Spiritual and Soulish qualities in conflict with Typhon-Set or materiality (the animal nature in the flesh).



If we study ancient Egypt you will find as I did that the land of Egypt was a picture and "pattern" of the "incarnated Soul into "matter", into humankind. When read this account of what ensues in the arena of life in conjunction with a picture of the country of Egypt, we should be able to look at the map of Egypt and face South, the position assumed by the Egyptian novice, and then we will see the Delta as a triangle with point uppermost, suspended from a thread, the Nile. Imagine the Nile river as a picture of the River of Life (see the uranograph article and the Nile in Heaven [Eridanus]), with its source high in the snows of Mount Killamanjiro representing the highest ranges of Divine Heavenly consciousness, with the Divine ray of God's Deific Mind and Krst-Soul falling downwards through the hierarchy of Spiritual, mental, emotional and Energy levels, to the Delta, the material realms and "matter" and "matter" of incarnational existence). Now know that "Upper Egypt", that areas closest to the "fall" of this "Living Energy" of Life from the Mount of Heaven, symbolized by the melted snows of Killamanjiro, represent Nun, the primordial waters or neutron soup as well as "matter" which is pictured as "water" in the Book of Genesis. There was a celestial Nile, distinct from the terrestrial and we deal with this extensively in our articles on the Uranograph elsewhere on this website. The "pattern" remains unbroken.

It is over this "matter", this "water" that the Divine Mind hovers and imprints its "pattern" for all existence. If is from this "fall" of the Divine Intellect into "matter" that all life will manifest. Thus we see Upper Egypt closest to Heaven "above" which is closest to the potential for all Divine Life that will flow down or "fall" from Heaven through descending levels of "Living Energy" and manifestation in its task of incarnation into "dense matter" and "humanity". As this "fall" of the Soul as well as the Krst-Soul continues we see that they "both fall" through Heavenly realms only to be lodged in Lower Egypt which is the area of operations of the lower part of the mind, the "place of thick darkness," while Upper Egypt is the higher or more refined mental plane impinging on the intuitive level, called the "country of light," with the Nile as the stream bringing "from above life", light and vitality to the Soul, mind and body. It is in this "Lower Level" of "material existence", in our "Lower Egypt" of humanity that "we (as Souls) were crucified with Christ" as Paul states.

Gal 2:20 20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. (KJV)

Because we as Souls "died" as we descended into "matter" with no way to ascend back to Heaven and since Spiritually asleep, it was necessary that the Krst/Karest/Christ come and descend into Hades and Hell as we had in order to "awaken us from our deadness and Spiritual slumber". In so doing we are therefore "crucified on the cross of matter" as well. Thus, we as incarnated Souls are "crucified with Christ" as the passage says.

It is important to keep these symbols in you mind because they are "key" to the correct interpretation of our "Jesus Story". Keeping this image in mind, we can see how the adventures and actions of Horus in each particular locality symbolize and conform with the idea of Soul's development within the flesh of mankind as "the Christ" and Bishop of our Souls instructs us as Souls and helps in our Spiritual development and evolution. Indeed, the whole of the legend of Horus with all its details of place names, localities, whether on the hills or the water, even the very weapons used, conveys to the student of symbolism the following story: Horus, the offspring of Osiris, the Divine element and "Spark" in the universe and ourselves, and of Isis, goddess of wisdom, and the spirituality contained in that Godspark, sails down River of Life, the river of "becoming", (think Kabbalah on the left), after bidding farewell to his father, and does battle with Typhon-Set (the material life and the egoism it engenders) in order to develop latent Spiritual powers within himself which is to be of value in sanctification of the animal nature to the will of God and bring harmony between the "god in us" as well as the animal body in which this "Living Energy" abides.

Now we better understand why the New Testament says so often to guard ourselves against such prostitution; not only of the body but the Soul as well. But as to this prostitution, the apostles of the Christ commanded (Acts 15:20, 29; 21:25; 1Th 4:3; 1 Co 6:18; 2 Co 7:1): "Guard yourselves against it, purify yourselves from it," speaking not just of the prostitution of the body but especially that of the Soul which we saw in the decent of Inanna and other goddesses. For this reason the apostles write to the churches of God, that such prostitution might not occur among us; first spiritually and then physically which is the fruit of spiritual laxness.

Yet the greatest struggle has to do with the prostitution of the Soul. From it arises the prostitution of the body as well. Therefore Paul, writing to the Corinthians (1Co 5:9-10), said, "I wrote you in the letter, 'Do not associate with prostitutes,' not at all (meaning) the prostitutes of this world or the greedy or the thieves or the idolaters, since then you would have to go out from the world." - here it is speaking spiritually - "For our struggle is not against flesh and blood - as he said (Ep 6:12) - but against the world rulers of this darkness and the spirits of wickedness."

As long as the Soul keeps running about everywhere copulating with whomever She meets and defiling Herself, She exists suffering Her just deserts. But when She perceives the straits She is in and weeps before the Father and repents, then the Father will have mercy on Her and he will make Her womb turn from the external domain and will turn it again inward, so that the Soul will regain Her proper character. For it is not so with a woman. For the womb of the body is inside the body like the other internal organs, but the womb of the Soul is around the outside like the male genitalia which is external. This is what we learn from the "descent myths".

So when the womb of the Soul, by the will of the Father, turns itself inward, it is baptized and is immediately cleansed of the external pollution which was pressed upon it, just as garments, when dirty, are put into the water and turned about until their dirt is removed and they become clean. And so the cleansing of the Soul is to regain the newness of Her former nature and to turn herself back again. That is Her baptism and Her repentance that prepares for the ascension home to Heaven "above".

In the "descent myths" the Soul begins to judge and rage at Herself like a woman in labor, who writhes and rages in the hour of delivery. But since She is female, by herself She is powerless to beget a child. From Heaven the Father sent her her man, who is her brother, the firstborn (remember Osiris and Isis, the "original pattern" were "brother and sister", "man and wife"). That is why Isis married her brother Osiris. That is why the Pharaohs married their sisters. Then the bridegroom came down to the bride as the Krst-Soul to aid in the ascent of the Soul once again to Heaven. In the Exegesis of the Soul it is said that She, the Soul, in repentance and with a contrite and broken heart, She gave up her former prostitution and cleansed Herself of the pollutions of the adulterers, and She was renewed so as to be a bride. She cleansed herself in the bridal chamber; She filled it with perfume; She sat in it waiting for the true bridegroom. No longer does She run about the market place, copulating with whomever she desires, but she continued to wait for him - (saying) "When will he come?" - and to fear him, for She did not know what he looked like: She no longer remembers since the time She fell from her father's house. But by the will of the father she dreamed of him like a woman in love with a man. When the "Krst" likewise "died on the cross of matter" in coming for the salvation of His bride, the Soul, he came that they might be "one flesh". For they were originally joined one to another when they were with the Father before the woman led astray the man, who is her brother. This marriage has brought them back together again and the Soul has been joined to Her true love, Her real master, as it is written (cf. Gn 3:16; 1 Co 11;1; Ep 5:23), "For the master of the woman is her husband." Then gradually She recognized "the Krst", and She rejoiced once more, weeping before Him as She remembered the disgrace of Her former widowhood. And She adorned herself still more so that He might be pleased to stay with Her.

And the prophet said in the Psalms (Ps 45:10-11): "Hear, my daughter, and see and incline your ear and forget your people and your father's house, for the king has desired your beauty, for he is your lord." For he requires her to turn her face from her people and the multitude of her adulterers (repent), in whose midst she once was, to devote herself only to her king, her real lord, and to forget the house of the Earthly father ("matter" and the lures of the flesh and animal nature), with whom things went badly for her, but to remember her father who is in Heaven. Thus also it was said (Gn 12:1) to Abraham: "Come out from your country and your kinsfolk and from your father`s house." The "pattern" is again complete over and over again.

Now it is fitting that the Soul regenerates herself and become again as She formerly was. The Soul then moves of Her own accord. And She received the Divine nature from the father for Her rejuvenation, so that She might be restored to the place where originally She had been. This is awakening of the Soul and its resurrection that is from "the dead" (its Earthly incarnation into Hades and Hell). This is the ransom from captivity. This is the upward journey of ascent to Heaven. This is the way of ascent to the father.

It is therefore fitting as "awakened Souls" to pray to the Father and to call on Him with all our Soul, not externally with the lips, but with the Spirit, which is inward, which came forth from the depth, sighing; repenting for the life we lived on Earth; confessing our sins; perceiving the empty deception we were in, and the empty zeal; weeping over how we were in darkness; mourning for ourselves, that God might have pity on us; hating ourselves for how we are now and how we have prostituted our incarnational purpose and procrastinating our Spiritual evolution of our Soul since being born "dead in matter".

Again the savior said (cf Mt 5:4, Lk 6:12): "Blessed are those who mourn, for it is they who will be pitied; blessed, those who are hungry, for it is they who will be filled." Again he said (cf. Lk 14:26), "If one does not hate his Soul he cannot follow me." For the beginning of salvation is repentance. Therefore (cf. Acts 13:24), "Before Christ`s appearance came John, preaching the baptism of repentance."

The Soul is meant to ascend, and will do so praising the father and Her brother (the Krst/Karest/Christ), by whom She was rescued. Thus it is by being born again that the Soul will be saved. No wonder we read: (Jn 6:44), "No one can come to me unless my Father draws him and brings him to me; and I myself will raise him up (ascend to the Father) on the last day."

All of the above lies hidden behind the crucifixion of the Soul and "Krst-Soul" on "the cross of matter". This is the long lost "key" to understanding the crucifixion of the Christian Jesus and the Christian Christ; himself but another personification of the "fall of the gods into matter" which is the "central" depiction of the ancient Spiritual religious metaphysical beliefs that existed from the beginning of mankind which was sadly distorted and misinterpreted by Rome during the 2nd century and following. This is what lies behind the multiple stories of the "crucified Sungods"; they are all personifications and allegories of the descent of the Soul and its crucifixion on the "cross of matter".

In the Descent of Ishtar, the same idea is expressed through the penitent figure of Papsukkal, who weeps before Ishtar´s father, and through the creation of the affeminate assinnu, who releases Ishtar from Ereshkigal´s bondage (the dark and violent Goddess of the Underworld/Netherworld, or Earth). The assinnu, a eunuch, corresponds to the Gnostic helper sent by the Father to the suffering Soul to comfort it, awaken it, and to provide it with the food and water of life, the word (logos) of salvation. Called by many names in many different nations this is "the Krst/Karest/Christ" who was never married or appears sexless in the religious texts like our Bible. The sprinkling of Ishtar with the water of life corresponds to the baptism which in Exegesis of the Soul effects the rebirth (being "Born Again") and cleansing of the Soul which prepares the Soul in its Earthly existence for its later ascent to Heaven.

In the Exegesis of the Soul, the ascent of the Soul and Her restitution of Her original unity with God is presented in terms of a wedding allegory. The Soul is a bride adorning herself for the arrival of the bridegroom, her man and her brother, to whom She was joined when she was with the father. The Soul is to be the "bride of Krst/Karest/Christ" who comes to "save here" from the death of the cross, the incarnation into "matter".

Answer for yourself: Is this represented by Osiris and Isis, both Heavenly "neteru" and "Living Energies"? It sure it for both were "brother and sister" and "husband and wife" and from their union come the Deific Mind of God, the Krst/Karest/Christ, the Horus as the Egyptian Krst.

The text from the Exegesis of the Soul then explicitly states: "This is the ransom for captivity (the captivity being the imprisonment in the matter of the carnal body). This is the upward journey of ascent to Heaven. This is the way of ascent to the father.... Then when She will become young again She will ascend, praising the father and Her brother, by whom She was rescued

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that in the ascent of Ishtar that a ransom is required as well in order for her to be saved from Hell (Hades and Hell being the realm of "dead" and the repetitive cycles of Earthly incarnations)? Could this have been the "sacrifice of Tammuz as the Sumerian Christ" that parallels the sacrifice of Jesus as the Christ in our New Testament? Has the incarnation of Christ always been on the "cross of matter" in order to be the Bishop of our Souls who "died" as well when they "fell into matter"?

Tammuz, ancient Sumerian deity, or as Dumuzi who originated as a Sumerian shepherd-god, the consort of Inanna in his Akkadian form, parallel that of Ishtar's consort. As I said every nation has this "mystery" of the "descent of the Soul" which was told in both "masculine" and "feminine" accounts and narratives. The Syrian Adonis, who was drawn into the Greek pantheon, is believed to be another counterpart of Tammuz. Tammuz, again another "pagan Christ", Ishtar's brother and the husband of her youth, must be given to the Netherworld as her substitute. Tammuz must die in order for Her to "live" again. He must be sacrificed and likewise "crucified on the cross of matter" and descend to the Underworld (Earthly incarnation) if the Soul is ever to be "saved from death" and ever again "ascend to Heaven and regain the glory that it had before".The sacrifice of Tammuz on the "cross of matter", himself a "pagan Christ", a metaphor for the death of the king as Son of God who is comparable to Inanna and Ishtar is likewise "incarnated in matter". This idea of "descent" and "falling" into incarnational existence constitutes the culmination of the whole myths of crucified gods and goddesses and must be regarded as a functional equivalent of the redemptory death of Christ we see in the New Testament as well.

We hear of the vicarious atonement of Christ crucified for our sins in our Christian Churches and in our Roman Bibles. We have already seen that this "descent of Christ" into "matter" is also called the "descent into sin" or the "fall into sin" in our Bibles. We have already seen that this "fall" of the Christ "into sin" or as better stated "into matter" was likened to the "fall of Lucifer" from Heaven as the "light-bringer" to the Souls who find themselves living in darkness of "matter" who had forgotten their previous illumination and "light of Heavenly knowledge" since having drunk of the waters of "forgetfulness" in their descent through the 7 Heavens.

Answer for yourself: Let me ask you now that you possess sufficient knowledge of the descent of the Soul into "matter". Is it possible that the "descent" of the "Krst/Karest/Christ" into "matter" in order to come and rescue and "seek and save those (Souls) who are lost" are none other than the Souls trapped in these "bodies of death" and that this ancient idea is all that this "crucifixion of Christ" is about in the first place (no matter what nation we find this Celestial idea expressed?

Now here is the mystery so long overlooked about the sacrifice of Krst/Karest/Christ. For if the Soul in Earthly incarnation is ever to be "saved", "revived", and "awakened from Earthly sleep and rise from the dead", death again being a metaphor for Earthly "incubation" and "incarnation", then this Deific Mind of God as the Christ, must in like manner, "descend" into Hades, Hell, Sheol, Amenta, the Underworld, the Netherworld, the pit, the abyss, etc.", and die and be "crucified on the cross matter" as was the Divine Soul previously when it was incarnated. Christ must be crucified and die in this Earthly incarnation for only in this way can the Son of God, this Christ be the Shepherd and Bishop of our Souls and shepherd of our Souls that enables us as the "living dead" to grow Spiritual since trapped and imprisoned in these bodies of darkened "matter". This Krst/Karest/Christ must die and in so doing help us fight the Set within us (our animal nature), the adversary of the Egyptian Krst.

I hope you are beginning to see the whole "pattern" of the crucifixion of God on the "cross of matter" in the form of His Krst/Karest/Christ. All life depended upon the sacrifice and "descent of the pagan Christs (both masculine manifestations of the Mind of God as well as the feminine manifestations of the Mind of God into matter) and upon their "return from Hell" (Hell being Amenta and the realm of Earthly incarnation).

Answer for yourself: And how as this salvation accomplished? In was in the death and crucifixion of the Mind of God, this Divine Living and Thinking Energy into "matter", that the Soul was to be awakened from its Earthly death and experience a Spiritual resurrection while yet "dead in these animal bodies" that was preparation for its ascent at the demise of the biological body. Only by instruction from the indwelling Krst could the Soul be shown how to subdue this animal nature within the body in which it dwelled that impedes its very ascent back to the Father and Heaven where it had once "fallen". This ancient Mystical and Spiritual understanding of the Soul and its incarnation and crucifixion on the "cross of matter" will later be lost and re-interpreted erroneously primarily after the 2nd century C.E. and in so doing cripple and blind mankind to his incarnational purpose. This tragic loss of Gnosis and Spiritual knowledge was accomplished primarily by Rome in the 2nd through the 5th century. Burning the libraries of the world only aided in the concealment of such ancient Spiritual dogmas and in the course of a few generations the light of this Divine Truth was lost to mankind in the West. Instead of nurturing the formation of the Christ in us we as Christians wait on the sidelines for one to come from Heaven and "fix our mess" when it is our Soul's job all along. The "Krst/Karest/Christ" is already come; He lives within us. We shall experience no more of the Krst than what we have been given; it is our responsibility to feed and help nurture the Christ from Heaven in us by consuming the Bread that comes down from Heaven which is the Word and Laws of God. Sadly, we cannot always find this much needed Spiritual truth or diet in our Churches of today. Being intelligently immobilized and blinded by corrupt dogmas billions have gone to their deaths only to repeat their birth into darkness because the glory of their incarnational opportunity to be co-labors with the Christ within them was taken from them and relegated to an old rugged hill outside an Earthly Jerusalem where it was limited to but one person when the crucifixion of Krst/Karest/Christ has always and will always be within the bosom of mankind.

The image of the right of a man crucified on a "cross" (Bacchus, Dionysus, the prototype for the crucified Christ in the flesh of mankind) was for many years believed to be a prototype of the assumed "literal" and "historical" crucifixion of Jesus of Nazareth as "the Christ". How ironic that when one does the studies that one sees the hypocrisy of a "literal" and supposed "historical" interpretation as espoused by Roman Christianity, but at the same time such studies, when done in-depth, reveal the "keys" to the proper understanding of the "crucifixion of Christ on the cross of matter" which has already happened to every child of God who took their first breath. When one possesses these "keys" to the mystical understanding of the "crucifixion of God on the "cross of matter" then and only then can he know for sure that either a "man crucified on a cross" or the image of a "Christ crucified on a cross" has noting to do with a "historical or literal" crucifixion of some sole individual on a cross on the hill of Golgotha supposedly some 2,000 years ago. Having gained this ancient Gnosis and knowledge then one can be certain that this crucifixion was not one limited to but one person; rather it is about you and me and the God that came to dwell in both you and me. Only now can we come to truly understand the passages in our Bibles which read like this one:

Phil 2:8 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

Metaphorically and allegorically there is no higher truth that mankind can ever know than the one I just shared with you concerning the crucifixion of Krst/Karest/Christ on the "cross of matter". But a "historical-literal" crucifixion of another other than the crucifixion of Krst/Karest/Christ in the whole of humanity at large is the greatest misrepresentation of truth that has ever befallen mankind.

Look once more at the 7 stars and the crescent moon above the "cross" on the left image. Lets look again at these 7 stars in the image which is connected to this "crucifixion of Living Energy" on the "cross of matter" as it fell from Heaven through this one cell in the body of Ra, our Solar System, to where it came to be lodged on Earth. Nowhere do we find 7 stars connected to Jesus' crucifixion but we sure do when we look at the ancient understanding of the incarnation of the Soul and its incarnation "into matter". These 7 stars refer as stated above to the seven celestial spheres/planets/stars that symbolize the seven different states of "matter" and "Spirit" or 7 worlds which each Soul is forced to pass through in its Spiritual evolution across this solar system. These 7 levels are often described as 7 levels of consciousness. Hidden within this "crucifixion in matter" of the God in mankind we find that the "cross of crucifixion" is really a depiction of the descent of the Soul; a descent that promised followers of "the Krst/Karest/Christ" absolution from sin (Earthly contamination), Spiritual rebirth (the Soul being "born again" while it was yet dead, being awakened while in incarnational darkness), and true "resurrection from the dead" while we yet live. You need to read this last statement a hundred times. For a Spiritually pure person, union with God was believed to be possible not only in death but in life as well. Such was necessary in order for self-purification that is a prerequisite for later ascent to higher levels of our Soul's Spiritual evolution.

Scholars will tell us today that these Mystery Religion of old were depositories of All ancient knowledge, although the main thrust of their knowledge dealt with the origin and destiny of mankind. The major role played in the Mysteries by the doctrine of the Ancient Astral Mysticism was most apparent in the Chaldean Mysteries of Tammuz, and the Persian Mysteries of Mithra.

We will continue with our studies in the next article when we will look at the connection between the descent of the Soul and the Chaldean Mysteries of Tammuz and the Persian Mysteries of Mithra.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #9

We continue with our study of the Soul and Amenta.

In earlier articles we have seen that behind the religious myths of the Soul that provide the substance for our Bibles that ancient mankind developed a religious synthesis of various religious myths that explained for them the whole of creation, who mankind really was, where they had come from and where they believed that they go at the demise and biological death of the body. At the heart of it was the Creator-God and Goddess and from this comes the myths of creation, the shadows of which we find in our Bibles today. In each of these various myths, a Great God and a Great Goddess personified the powers which had brought the Universe into existence (symbolized by a duality pictured in nature symbolism as "male" and "female"). In reality these were but Cosmic Forces and Powers; I have called them previously "Living Energies". In the beginning in Eridu, the God was called Enki (or Ea); in Ur, the God was called Nannar (or Sin) and the Goddess was called Ningal; in Lagash, the God was called Ninurta (or Ningirsu); in Uruk, the God was called An (or Anu) and the Goddess was called Inanna (or Ishtar); in Nippur, the God was called Enlil and the Goddess was called Ninlil; and in Sippar the God was called Utu (or Shamash). The Sumerian myth of creation begins with a cataclysm in the Sky as do most of them found in subsequent nations. The God or the Goddess, portrayed as a Great Mountain, explodes into fragments and rains down upon the primeval Earth. As a result, the Mountain of Heaven, personified by the God, impregnates the Mountain of Earth, personified by the Goddess. Later we find a further and deeper understanding of creation which was captured and told through other religious myths where we find God descending from Heaven to take up residence in the Underworld (Amenta, Hades, Hell, the pit, Sheol, Earth), or the Goddess descending from Heaven to take over the mantle of the Earth. The "pattern" is established and followed over and over again down through history and even repeated in our Bibles.

The descent of the God or Goddess from Heaven to Earth is often portrayed as a Deluge – the forerunner of the Hebrew myth of the Great Flood. In some myths, the descending God ejaculates a great flood of water from his body, thus filling up the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. In other myths, the descending God brings a great flood of stone, which he piles up in 'heaps and mounds' upon the face of the Earth.

When the God or Goddess disintegrates in the Heavens, the result is the emanation of gods - with a small 'g' (ancient Egypt called these Living Energies of the cosmos the 'neteru'). Each symbolic representation of these "Living Energies", many of which "fell from Heaven to Earth" were but archetypes of a higher Spiritual reality that goes unseen by mankind today which is limited by his 5 senses. This multiplicity of gods, who collectively make up the former body of the God and Goddess have come down from Heaven to Earth and are to be found since ancient antiquity in the various manifestations of the religions of mankind. The Great God and Great Goddess personified the cataclysm of creation and the formative Universe.

This the "pattern" of the "fall from Heaven" of these manifestations of "Living Energy" of God that creates all. This archetypal myth of descent and return found expression in almost if not all of the ancient religions of the world. Hades, otherwise known as the Underworld, was the abode of the dead or, more accurately, of departed souls. Hades, if we recall, comes from a Greek root meaning "unseen," "hidden," or "unknown." Relevant comparisons can be found in the Egyptian religion, where the equivalent of Hades is Amenti, meaning "hidden place" or "place of the hidden god," and in the roots of the word hell, which had a sense of "hiding" or "concealing."

Answer for yourself: And where is this God hidden? In the heart and Soul of mankind.

More to our point in the previous article we looked at the descent of the Soul (our Divine Mind and consciousness) as it was "crucified on the cross of matter" in some of the various goddess myths; in particular Inanna and Ishtar. We saw that the "pattern for the descent of the Soul" which was represented as "feminine" was paralleled in a host other nations down through recorded history from nation to nation in the religious myths of Aphrodite, Persephone, Demeter, Astarte, Venus, Magna Mater, the Great Mother Cybele, etc. We also looked in previous articles to the descent of the male gods, the counterpart to the Goddess, which are personified in the accounts of Jesus, Attis, Dionysus, Enoch, Herakles, Krishna, Orpheus, etc. The "story" is the same and central to all of them is that they were all "crucified on a cross" which we have seen is "matter" or "Mother Earth". This is the death of god as "the Krst/Karest/Christ and the Soul which incarnated into material existence.

We also looked at a very important Gnostic Text entitled The Exegesis of the Soul which, unlike most Gnostic cryptic texts comes right out and plainly defines the ambiguous symbolisms in the descent of the goddess myths, whose heavily metaphorical and allegorical language usually makes these most difficult to unravel and interpret correctly. We saw that basically these "descent of the Soul religious myths" as applied to the Goddesses are following the same "pattern" of the descent of the male Sungods who, like the Goddesses, are similarly "crucified on the cross of matter" as well.

Most importantly we touched on the "key thought" of "vicarious atonement" which underlies Christian theology as applied to a "literal-historical Christ" and saw that unlike its supposed and "assumed" literal and historical portrayal that is limited to but one person by Rome, this "substitution ransom" for the Soul which has previously "crucified on the cross of matter" in its descent into human flesh, a body of death, was followed by the saving "descent of the Krst/Karest/Christ" into incarnation where he, like Philippians 2 says, "emptied himself" and likewise "dies on the cross of matter" in his similar "descent into matter" as He comes to "seek and save those who are lost" who had previously "fallen" into carnal material existence. This saving "fall and death on the cross of material existence" was, by the Christ and according to Eph 2:11, in order to "quicken those who were 'dead" in trespasses and sins" (a symbol for the condition incurred in the Soul's incarnation into "matter"). This "fall" and "crucifixion into matter" was also symbolized by these "Living Energies" being born by the virgin goddesses of matter (Mary-matter") since as we saw such incarnation was termed a "death" (a crucifixion on the cross) for the Soul as well as "the Krst/Karest/Christ) in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom who come to save "the Soul).

Now we focus upon a deeper understanding of the descent of Soul; in particular in the Mysteries of Mithra which was one of the greatest opponents and challenges to emerging Roman Christianity for 500 years. But first a key thought.

In the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, the way to salvation of the Soul begins with awareness and knowledge (Gnosis) of its true identity; an awareness that the Soul is a "part of God" who has "fallen" into a "far country" (Earth and into "matter") and is "dead in trespasses and sins" of the animal and mortal nature of "matter". The way of salvation of the Soul is opened up according to how the Gnostics writings and the ancient Spiritual Wisdom has taught us since the beginning of time.

Answer for yourself: And how was this? One began the road of salvation with truth and knowledge of himself. The Soul was told:

"Know who they art, know from where thou has come, and know to where thy goeth when you die" (the demise of the prison of the biological body).

Now "faith" and "knowledge" without "works" is vain. The Soul, once coming to awareness of the above, then must merit salvation by faith, repentance, mourning for sin, prayer and petition for mercy. In the Exegesis of the Soul we saw that the Soul must recognize Her miserable condition, and in doing so the Soul begins to call with all Her heart upon the name of her father: "Save me, my father, for behold I will render an account for thee, for I abandoned my house and fled from my maiden´s quarters. Restore me to thyself again."

Answer for yourself: Addressed in the feminine here, does this remind you somewhat of the Prodigal Son allegory which is narrated in the masculine gender? It should since it is the same "pattern"!

Now we move to Mithraism. The Mysteries of Mithra which came from ancient Persia and from the religion of Zoroastrianism and the teaching of the Magi who come to honor "the Christ". Notice the connection! It is in the Mysteries of Mithra we are confronted with an eternally opposing pair like we have found before since Sumer and Egypt: Ahura-Mazda, and Ahriman, also known as the Serpent, who was the God of Darkness and Evil ("matter"). From each of these came Celestial principles, or gods (neteru):

- From Ahura-Mazada the principles of Light and Good;
- From Ahriman principles of Darkness and Evil.

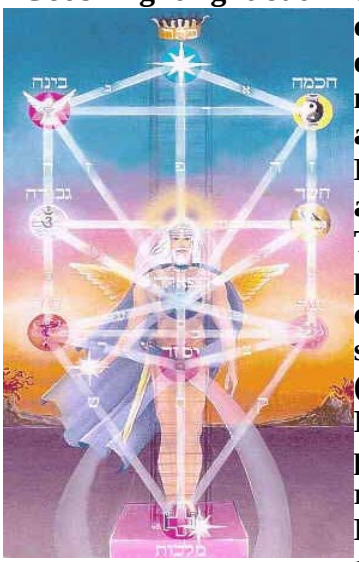
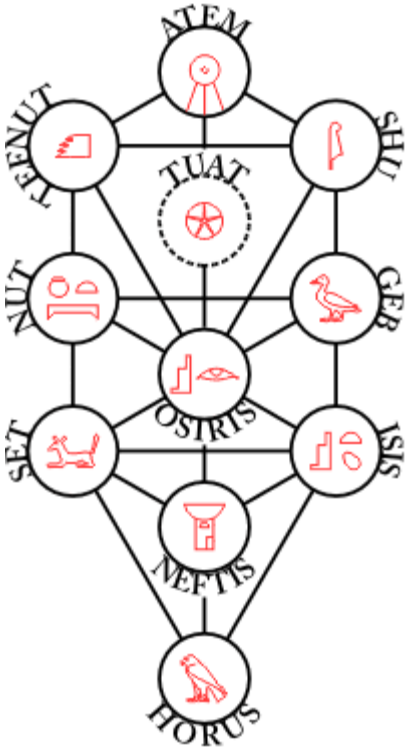
At the very heart of the religion of Mithra lay the opposing forces of Light and Darkness (again expressed in the religious myth of other nations in the contending between Set and Horus, Satan and Jesus, etc.) entered into all universal natures in "the fall" so that their strife created an eternal war in their nature (Spiritual and animal), a war which would range from the beginning until the end of creation. It is here since being "crucified on the cross of matter" that the Soul "goes to school" and Spiritually evolves in its Earthly incarnation. It is all about "choices" that teach us about ourselves and God. This is why we are here in this realm of "incarnational death" in order that we inherit a higher life when ascended and that depends on our choices now; choices that are based upon "love" or the "lack of love" for our father and the lives we subsequently live based on those choice we make here in "Hades" and "Amenta".



In order to fully understand the religion of Mithraism it is necessary to look to its foundation in Persia, where originally a multitude of gods were worshipped. Amongst them were Ahura-Mazda, god of the skies, and Ahriman, god of darkness. In the sixth and seventh century B.C., a vast reformation of the Persian pantheon was undertaken by Zarathustra (known in Greek as Zoroaster), a prophet from the kingdom of Bactria. The stature of Ahura-Mazda was elevated to that of supreme god of goodness, whereas the god Ahriman became the ultimate embodiment of evil.



In the same way that Akhenaten, Abraham, Heliogabalus, and Mohammed later initiated henotheistic cults from the worship of their respective deities, Zarathustra created a henotheistic dualism with the gods Ahura-Mazda and Ahriman. As a result of the Babylonian captivity of the Jews (597 B.C.) and their later emancipation by King Cyrus the Great of Persia (538 B.C.), Zoroastrian dualism was to influence the Jewish belief in the existence of HaSatan (Satan), the malicious Adversary of the god Yahweh, and later permit the evolution of the Christian Satan-Jehovah dichotomy. Persian religious dualism became the foundation of an ethical system that has lasted really until our generation today.

Answer for yourself: Was the Persian interpretation of "Spirit" and "Matter" a deviation from the earlier understanding of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom? Yes it was. How?

Up to now the "pattern" has been kept intact and it conforms to and overlaps with the original metaphysical ideas that began with ancient Egypt and Sumer. However, Zoroaster will depart from this "ancient pattern" and take the "Living Energy" within "matter" and separate it from its origin with the First Cause or God and thereby give it, this "potential evil force of the cosmos", its own separate origin and beginning and thus make it a separate power that finds its existence outside of One God, the First Cause. No longer was there a duality to be found within the ONE Absolute God, no longer was there a tension between Divine Thought and "matter" that provides for the expression and life of this "Divine Thought" through mankind's choices. Now thanks to Zoroaster there were two separate and waring forces, each with a different origin, who are in conflict and contest for the Souls of mankind. Instead Zoroaster, by deviating from the ancient Divine Pattern, gives the world a misrepresented version of Persian Dualism which was a grievous departure from the ancient Spiritual Wisdom that had remained intact for over 10,000 years. Zoroaster, deviates from a pure concept of Monotheism and the subjugated and emanated "neteru" found not only in ancient Egypt, but expressed in nation after nation as expressed through. We now we have two separate "Gods" fighting it out in the universe for the Souls of mankind. Emanationism, accepted as the "pattern for all cosmology" since the beginning of time, explained creation as a gradual process of emanation and descent from a transcendental Absolute God and First Cause to mundane material reality. Thus all of creation was seen as a series of stages of down-grading of Consciousness-Being, by means of which the Absolute principle actually becomes the multiplicity of entities and objects. Thus, applying this in an emanationist perspective, the process of creation, in the emanationist cosmogony and cosmology, proceeds through a number of distinct stages. First the Absolute produces the Spiritual reality (or "God"). The Spiritual reality in turn produces the Psychic reality. And finally, the Psychic reality produces the Physical reality; the material world. Each reality constitutes a specific stage of manifestation. Emanationism understands the more subtle and spiritual realities as preceding and generating the grosser and more material ones, and not vice-versa as materialism assumes; and that moreover those grosser realities are the result of an out-flowing from the subtle. Emanationism avoids the dilemma of how to reconcile Unity (the Absolute) and Multiplicity (the World) by recognizing that both the universe and the Absolute are "equally" real and valid, but they simply have a different position or status in the spectrum of being. Like the Neoplatonists, and the ancient Egyptians, the Kabbalists held a strongly emanationist position. Thus they teach that the En Sof ("the Infinite"; i.e. the Absolute or Godhead) emanates the first Sefirah, Keter, which in turn emanates the next one, Hokmah, and so on, down to the lowest Sefirah, Malkhut. To quote Rabbi Levi I. Krakovsky, a contemporary Kabbalistic writer:

"...Ain Sof is considered as Spirit to Adam Kadmon and Adam Kadmon is the vessel for that Spirit, symbolizing matter..." [Rabbi Levi I. Krakovsky, Kabbalah - The Light of Redemption, Research Centre of Kabbalah, 1970, p. 19)

And because each lower world contains the same Sefirotic configuration as the one which preceded it (the "Divine pattern" is reproduced in each level of manifestation according to a "Heavenly Blueprint"), each lower level is a lower image of the preceding World. No wonder ancient Egypt has as the very central idea of it whole religion: "So Above, So Below". The ten Sefirot, the ten archetypal attributes of God, are thus repeated in each World or plane of existence, thus producing a fractal cosmology wherin each part mirrors the whole. According to the Jewish occult system of Kabbalah, everything in existence can be classified in terms of, and reduced to, ten fundamental archetypal principles or essences, called Sefirot.

We find this same "pattern of the Kabbalah" in ancient Assyria and many other nations of antiquity. Dr. Simo Parpola, a researcher at the University of Helsinki, has made some suggestive findings on the matter, particularly concerning an analysis of the Sephiroth. Noting the general similarity between the Sephiroth of the Kabbalah and the Tree of Life of Assyria, he reconstructed what an Assyrian antecedent to the Sephiroth would look like. This same understanding of creation, the "pattern of emanationism" as found in the later Kabbalah, appeared some 5,000 years ago in Mesopotamia, the cradle of civilization, as did all ancient teachings. Common to all of these religious systems is the idea of the "fall of God" into "matter"; a Celestial event often characterized as a "crucifixion on a cross"; a cross of "matter".

As stated before Zoroaster made a big mistaken separating the "force of opposition" from the One God of the cosmos and giving its own separate creation apart from God; thus making it the enemy of the Creator. One, according to this theology today, will end up destroying the other whereas before as we see in Judaism and ancient Egyptian religion the "animal nature" was to be sanctified and brought into a unity between "Divine Thought" and "Primordial Substance". No longer, instead of having the animal nature submit to the life and will of God through the Spiritual evolution of the Soul we find that the "animal nature must die" and asceticism is born (extreme self-denial and austerity, the doctrine that through renunciation of worldly pleasures it is possible to achieve a high spiritual state). The life of asceticism sometimes produces such evils as ruin the next life also as well as this one, and such an individual proves to be the true picture of "the looser in this life as well as the next." Ancient Egypt as well as Judaism, along with the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, teaches that when natural impulses are not satisfied in the lawful and legal according to the Laws and will of God the mind of man turns into a centre of evil-ideas and becomes incapable of performing worship with peace and concentration; and sometimes passions so overcome the ascetic that breaking all moral fetters, he devotes himself completely to their satisfaction and consequently falls in an abyss of ruin for which it is impossible to extract himself. That is why religious law accords a greater position to the worship performed by a family man than that by a non-family man, because the former can exercise mental peace and concentration in the worship and rituals. Asceticism, like self-indulgence, is selfish; what we need is a Godly balance and the Torah provides that instruction for mankind. Asceticism asks, "What shall I do to be saved?" rather than "What shall I do to serve?" Endlessly preoccupied with the endeavor not to do wrong, the ascetics of history as well as those in Christianity have failed to do the positive good they ought. The emphasis upon freedom from taint of sin tends to produce a scorn of others who do not thus deny themselves, a self-righteousness and Pharisaism, a callousness to others, which distorts the judgment as well as dries up the sympathies. We have both positive as well as negative commandments expressing the Laws of God that bring this necessary balance needed for our Soul's Spiritual journey. One example should suffice for all.

Zoroaster made a big and bad mistaken when he changed the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Rome will do the same. The separation of this Cosmic Duality within God leads not only to the denial of emanationism and the Spiritual tenants of the Tree of Life and Kabbalistic concepts, but an overemphasis upon self-denial sacrifices unnecessarily the sweetness and richness of life, stunts it, distorts it, robs it of its natural fruition. The denial of any satisfaction is cruel except as it is necessary. Purity, carried to a needless extreme, became celibacy; the virtue of frugality became the vice of a starvation diet, producing the emaciated and weakened saints; the unworldliness which can be in the world but not of it was transformed into the morbidly lonely and futile isolation of the hermits. These are abnormal and undesirable perversions of human nature.

But not only that. A reaction from needless repression is almost inevitable as the fruit of this denial of emanationism and the separation of the Duality within Monotheism. The attempt radically to alter and repress human nature is nearly always disastrous. Most of the ascetics had to pass their days in constant struggles against their temptations, and many of them recurrently lapsed into wild orgies of sin, the result of pent-up impulses denied their natural channels. Morality should be rather directive than repressive, using all of our energies for wise and noble ends, and overcoming evil with good. A merely negative morality implies the continual dwelling of attention upon sin and the continual rebellion of desire. It keeps the soul in a state of unstable equilibrium, and defeats its own ends.

It never ceases to amaze me that sex is often the main target of asceticism down through history and such self-denial lauded in the highest regards but yet without it for mankind as a "pattern" the species of humanity moves to extinction and nullifies God's creation; not to mention that the first Commandment in the Book of Genesis, the first positive mitzvah and God's Law in the Hebrew Scriptures is the command to have sex. God only wants it done in a way He bless it and it be a beautiful expression of creation in the microcosm which is symbolic of love shared between two; in this instance God and all living entities which come from Him; it is that simple.

Back to Mithra for a moment, according to Persian traditions, the god Mithras was actually incarnated into the human form as the Saviour expected by Zarathustra. Of course all of the "pagan Christ" were "incarnated into matter" to save the Soul.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? It is the "pattern" continued since Sumer and ancient Egypt.

Like all other "pagan Christs" we find here the exact same myth that explains the descent of the Krst/Karest/Christ or Deific Mind of God into "matter"; it is the Christ within who is the vehicle for God's salvation of the Soul as the "Light-bringer" from Heaven (God's Lucifer again...dealth with earlier). It is the same myth that expresses this Divine Cosmic event of the descent of the Goddess of Heavenly Wisdom as the Sophia into "humanity" as well which we see in the allegories of Proverbs and the Wisdom of Solomon. The most prominent feature in the development of theological Wisdom is the personification of Wisdom. The personification of Wisdom is always to be understood as a Divine being that is never separate from Yahweh (God). Wisdom could never fully become more than a personification or a Divine attribute; rather, it expressed the active power of Yahweh, recognizing it as the embodiment of Yahweh's communicative power. Wisdom is the Logos in the feminine aspect. The personification of God's Wisdom is to be found in the goddess of antiquity; it is always a female personification whether it be an unnamed Assyrian or West Semitic goddess, the Canaanite goddess Astarte or Asherah, the Egyptian Ma'at, the Hellenistic Isis, or a pre-gnostic deity. It is always the same Divine Idea and Concept. A consensus has formed about the background role of Ma'at, the goddess of Egyptian justice and truth is the later personified female Wisdom figure in Proverbs. As I studied I realized more and more than ancient Egypt is behind almost all later theologies and religious ideas of the nations in one way or the other.

As stated above it is said that the god Mithras was actually incarnated into the human form as the Saviour. Like Horus and Isis, like Jesus and Mary, Mithras was born of Anahita, an immaculate virgin mother who was once worshipped as a fertility goddess before the hierarchical reformation. And like the other Christs who "ascend" up the Ladder to Heaven Mithra's ascension to Heaven was said to have occurred in 208 B.C., 64 years after his birth. The "pattern" is intact.

Worshippers of Mithra used caves and grottos as temples wherever possible, or at least gave temples the internal appearance of caves or of being subterranean by building steps leading down to the entrance.

Answer for yourself: Why caves? What have we learned about caves already? They were symbolic for the "incarnation into a material body" which was equated with "darkness" and "death". The ancients, from nation to nation understood that the descent of the Soul into "matter" as well as the "its incarnation and simultaneous crucifixion of on the cross of matter", as well as the descent of the Krst/Karest/Christ" into Hades and Earthly incarnation was always best likened to a "death" of a cross. Thus the cave symbolism which we find expressed often in the architecture of our churches.

Unknown to most Christians who read other Christian writers parrot that the religion of Mithra was "Pagan", thus suggesting "evil" or "corrupt", during the rituals of Mithra the evolution of the universe and the destiny of mankind within this cosmos was explained. The Avestan word "Mithra" means "pact, contract, covenant". Mithra was understood to be the guide towards the right order to all life. Egypt called this "Ma'at"; the Divine Harmony. Mithra was symbolic for the God who controlled the cosmic order - that is, night and day and the change of seasons - he was associated with fire and the Sun, and thus eventually became known as the Sungod in both Iran and India. Let us not forget what we have learned; the ancients viewed the Sun as a symbol for the Uncreated Fire of the Cosmos, this Living Energy we call God. The Sun was but one "cell" in this Comic body of God. Even our Christian Scriptures teach us that God "Our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29 in the KJV) The Mithraic religious service consisted chiefly of contemplating the Mithraic symbolism that hid the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, all the while praying while kneeling before benches, and chanting hymns to the accompaniment of flutes. Hymns were sung describing the voyage of Mithras' horse-drawn chariot (symbolic for the Sun as symbolic for the "Living Energy" of God which descends from Heaven) across the sky. Egypt had long understood that the Creator speaks to mankind through the Sun and its movements through the Heavens. Invokers and worshippers of Mithras prayed, "Abide with me in my soul. Leave me not [so] that I may be initiated and that the Holy Spirit may breathe within me." This does not sound "Pagan" and "evil" to me. Again, we have fallen into the trap of believing everything that Christian authorities say which so often they know so very little about if anything at all. I have always said for years now that it is a shame that the only requirement that one needs to preach the Word of God is to have fifteen or so dollars to buy a Bible. Animal sacrifices, mostly of birds, were also conducted in the Mithraeums.

Answer for yourself: Why?

This should make you think of what we learned before about the winged disk previously and the ascent of the Soul to Heaven let alone the sacrifice of "the Krst" in his descent into "matter" in order to "seek and save the Soul". Let us not forget that the winged disk is a picture of "descent" as well as "ascent". Here we have again the symbolism of the "fall of the Soul" into the darkness of "matter" and its "death" as well as the "sacrifice of the Krst" in his similar descent into "Hades/Hell/Tartarus, Avernos, Amenta, Sheol" is seen here in order to be likewise "crucified on the cross of matter". In such a way the ancients said that God was crucified on the cross and gave His "life" for mankind in order that we might experience life. They even went so far as to connect "life" with the "blood".

Answer for yourself: Can you guess what comes next? God poured out "His blood on the cross" that man might live and have life abundantly; not only in an Earthly incarnation but in our later "ascent as Soul" in our return to our Father's House in the Heavens.

Amazingly this understanding of the Soul in its descent and ascent was at one time Universal in the world. Look at the relief on the right and notice if you will the winged disk image from Neo-Assyrian Mesopotamia which incorporated the Egyptianizing figures on either side of a tree (the Tree of Life-their depiction of the later "Kabbalah Tree" as the "Ladder to Heaven" as taken from the 8th or 7th century B.C. according to scholars. This plaque, once part of a piece of furniture, is carved in high relief in a typical Phoenician style with Egyptian themes and motifs. Two pharaoh-like figures, standing on either side of a branching tree, wear a version of the double crown of Egypt with the rearing cobra, or uraeus, emblem in front. Framed above the scene from Assyria is Egyptian winged Sun disk surmounted by a horizontal panel with ten uraei supporting sun disks. Again without the "keys" to the symbols of the ancients we would never know that this depicts not only the awaking of the Soul "in matter" but its later resurrection from the dead"; the deadness of this body of death and darkness found in "matter" which was a prison for the Soul. We find the same symbol in Iran, in fact almost everywhere in the ancient world. In Iran it was called the "Faravahar". The Faravahar or Farohar is the Spirit (or Soul) of the human being that had been existed before his/her birth and will continue to exist after his/her death. It is to remind one of the purpose of life on this Earth, which is to live in such a way that the soul progresses spiritually and attains union with Ahura-Mazda (the Wise Lord). Ahura-Mazda is God in the Christian faith; different terms but the same concept. The Faravahar's face resembles the face of human being and therefore, indicates its connection to mankind. There are two wings which have three main feathers. These main feathers indicate three symbols of 'good reflection,' 'good words,' and 'good deed,' which are at the same time the motive of flight and advancement. The lower part of the Fravahar consists of three parts, representing 'bad reflection,' 'bad words,' and 'bad deed' which causes misery and misfortune for human beings. There are two loops at the two sides of the Fravahar, which represent Sepanta Minu, and Angra Minu. The former is directed toward the face and the latter is located at the back. This also indicates that we have to proceed toward the good and turn away from bad. The circle in the middle of the Fravahar's trunk indicates that our spirit is immortal, having neither a beginning nor an end. One hand of the Fravahar points upwards, showing that we have to struggle to thrive. The other hand holds a ring. Some interpreters consider that as the ring of covenant, representing loyalty and faithfulness which is the basis of Zarathustra's philosophy. The Hebrew Scriptures tells us the truth:

{short description of image}

Eccl 1:9 9 The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun. (KJV)

Well, that is until the rise of Roman Christianity during the 2nd through the 5th century when they radically reinterpreted this age-old Spiritual Wisdom since the beginning of time held sacred from nation to nation and gave the world the first "new religion" since the beginning of time! It is called "Replacement Religion" today.

While Mithras was worshipped almost exclusively by men, most of the wives and daughters of the Mithraists took part in the worship of Magna Mater (meaning "matter"), Ma-Bellona, Anahita, Cybele, and Artemis. These goddess religions practiced a regeneration ritual known as the Taurobolium, or bull sacrifice (connected to the constellation of Aries at the Vernal Equinox), in which the blood of the slaughtered animal (symbolic for the life of the Heavenly God) was allowed to "fall down upon the initiate", who would be lying, completely drenched in a pit below. As a result of their association with practitioners of this rite, Mithraists soon adopted the Taurobolium ritual as their own. The "blood of the bull" (the life and "Living Energy" of God as connected to the cosmos and the constellation of Taurus fro 2,160 years which ruled the Vernal Equinox, the time of the Earth's "resurrection from the dead of winter) would later be changed to the "blood of the lamb" with the changing of the Equinoxes some 2,160 years later when the constellation Taurus was replaced at the Vernal Equinox by the constellation Aries 2,160 years later. The Precession of the Equinoxes (the Constellation of Taurus being replaced by the Constellation of Aries at the Spring Equinox) is really at the heart of all religions as God is truly the Comic Mind, the Over Soul, that speaks to mankind from Heaven and Earth; the Laws of Nature on Earth only confirming this "Word from Heaven". This is the testimony of God's "two witness". Behind all the symbolism, Celestial and in Mother Nature, we find the "Story of the Soul" as told in the "descent" and "ascent" of this "Living Energy" of God as it "falls from Heaven" and is "crucified on the cross of matter" and later is "resurrected from the dead" at is "ascension". The "Story of the Soul" is the "Jesus Story"; but before that it was the "Osiris Story", the "Horus Story", the "Bacchus Story", the "Dionysus Story", the "Mithra Story", the "Inanna Story", the "Ishtar Story", etc. The Prodigal Son returns Home. Inanna, Isthar, and Persephone returns Home. This is "us"!

Answer for yourself: What lays behind this "drenching of blood" or the "baptism of blood" of the God?

This baptism of blood became a renewal of the human Soul, as opposed to mere physical strength. Mithraic baptism wiped out moral faults; the purity aimed at had become Spiritual. But that is the role of all baptisms; whether of blood or water. It is the "birthing again" of the Soul. We call it in Judaism "receiving the Soul that comes down from Heaven" or being "Born Again". Christianity will later adopt this ancient concept and alter its meaning?

Answer for yourself: How so? There is no "birthing again" unless the Soul in mankind repents of his animal-nature lived on Earth and begins to obey the Laws of God and accept God's Torah of the nations as the blueprint for his life. The religion in America in which I was born prides themselves at not being "under the Law". How great is our "darkness" and the fruit of such folly meets us daily on our television news programs and the front pages of our papers. It is a horror story and our prisons are full of "Christians" who were not taught the Laws of God are necessary; instead we get "I get away with it theology" due to Rome's later tragic reinterpretation of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom which stressed progressive righteousness. The Mysteries were stigmatized by Rome who knew no Law to obey nor wanted any. As you are beginning to see they were all about the Soul and its obedience to the "Divine Patter"; it is our "ticket Home".

Answer for yourself: Have we not seen that another name for this "death" of "incarnation into matter" and "crucifixion on the cross of matter" is the "pit"? Is this the reason why this renewal of the Soul in Mithraism was connected to the initiate being "descended" into a "pit" in the Mithraic Taurobolium? Was this "pit" of the Taurobolium symbolic of Hades/Hell/Amenta and this Earthly incarnation to which the person symbolically needed the very "blood" and "life" of God poured over him? Have we forgotten that the "life (the Hebrew word here is "nephesh" or "Soul") is in the blood")?

Answer for yourself: Is this descent into the pit of the Taurobolium regarded as the symbolic burial of the Soul into "matter" and Earthly incarnation which rendered the incarnated Soul as if "dead" and "asleep", from which the initiate would need to "awaken" from Spiritual slumber and emerge reborn, purified of all his crimes and regarded as the equal of a god? It sure was! Those who made it through the Taurobolium were revered by their brethren, and accepted in the fold of Mithraism.

"The Taurobolium had become a means of obtaining a new and eternal life; the ritualistic ablutions were no longer external and material acts, but were supposed to cleanse the soul of its impurities and to restore its original innocence; the sacred repasts imparted an intimate virtue to the soul and furnished sustenance to the spiritual life"* (Franz Cumont, Les Mystères de Mithra).

The bull has been exalted throughout the ancient world for its strength and vigor. Greek myths told of the Minotaur, a half-man half-bull monster. The Minotaur was a "bull-headed man"; a perfect symbol for the "animal flesh" in which the Soul had come to live.

Answer for yourself: Again, is this "Minotaur" symbolic for the Soul that had descended into an "animal body"?

This "animal nature" had to "decrease" in order for the "Spirit/Soul" within mankind to "increase". The ritual sacrifice of the Mithraic bull symbolized the penetration of the feminine principle by the masculine. The slaying of the bull represented the victory of man's Spiritual nature over his animality; parallel to the symbolic images of:

- Marduk slaying Tiamut,
- Gilgamesh killing Humbaba,
- Michael subduing Satan,
- St. George slaying the dragon,
- the Centurion piercing Christ's side,
- Sigourney Weaver slaying the Alien.

Again, everywhere we look, not only in antiquity and the ancient Spiritual Gnosis and Knowledge and Wisdom, not only in ancient Egypt and subsequent nations, and not only in the Mysteries and the later Greek philosophers and Neo-Platonists, no matter where, up and until the rise of Roman Christianity in the 2nd through the 5th century, we see this same repetitive "Divine picture", "Divine image", "Divine pattern", and "Divine template" regarding the Soul! Everywhere we look from ancient Egypt to Assyria to Mesopotamia, to India, to Iran, to Iraq, to Israel, to Persia, and even across the globe to Mexico, as well as the native Indians in the Northern America, we find this same "Celestial teaching" over and over again. Ancient mankind seemed to know that this "Divine Spark" of Deity (the Soul) along with "Deific Intelligence" (the Krst Soul) had "fallen" from Heaven to its "death" into "darkened matter" and had made a pilgrimage from the mineral, vegetable, animal, and finally into the human kingdom. This was likened to the death of God and his "death" since being "crucified on the cross of matter" as we explained previously.

An inscription in the Mithraeum under the Church of Santa Prisca in Rome referred to Mithras, the Persian Christ, saving men by shedding the eternal blood of the bull. It was this "blood" once again that we must see as the "life" of God, this Deific Mind of Christ, this "Living Energy", that "fell" and "descended" from Heaven into "matter" in order to be the Bishop of our Soul in order to help its Spiritual evolution and prepare it for its ascent home. No wonder the ancients looked at the Sun and its path in the Heavens as a message from the One Invisible God Atum/Amen concerning mankind's Soul and very existence. No wonder dusk and the setting of the Sun was "likened to a death" of the Soul and God; no wonder the Sun had to "die" in order that mankind might live. No wonder the Krst had to "die" on the "cross"; the "cross of matter". No wonder God was believed to have "died" when He "emptied Himself" and descended to His death on the cross of matter; in particular humanity and the darkness of the flesh. Such a humbling. It is all symbolic, it is all allegorical, it is all metaphorical. It always has been since it is pure metaphysics. It is only "literal" and "historical" when you apply this Divine Pattern to YOURSELF!

On the very spot on which the last Taurobolium took place at the end of the fourth century, in the Phrygianum, today stands the Vatican's St. Peter's Basilica. How ironic. The "truth concerning" the Soul of mankind and His "crucified Krst/Karest/Christ" is buried and gone to is death under the substructure of a false replacement religion.

The Babylonian clergy assimilated Ahura-Mazda to the god Baal, Anahita to the goddess Ishtar, and Mithras to Shamash, their god of justice, victory and protection (and the Sungod from whom King Hammurabi received his code of laws in the 18th century B.C., 500 years before Moses and his Torah). As a result of the solar and astronomical associations of the Babylonians, Mithras later was referred to by Roman worshippers as "Sol invictus", or the invincible sun. The sun itself was considered to be "the eye of Mithras". The Persian crown, from which all present day crowns are derived, was designed to represent the golden Sun-disc sacred to Mithras. Again, it is all symbolic for the Invisible Living Energy we call God in our Christian Churches.

As the final "pagan religion" of the Roman Empire, by the way I detest that word "pagan" invented by Rome to characterize "the truth", Mithraism paved a smooth path for Christianity by transferring the better elements of paganism to this new religion. After Constantine, Emperor from 306-337 A.D., converted on the eve of a battle in 312, Christianity was made the state religion. All emperors following Constantine were openly hostile towards Mithraism. And they should be; Mithraism, as all the ancient Sacred Wisdom and its religious expressions maintained, the Laws of God were the "blueprint" for building Heaven on Earth and transforming Earth into "Heaven's Mirror". The religion of Mithraism was persecuted on the grounds that it was the religion of Persians, the arch-enemies of the Romans.

The absurdity with which Christianity enveloped Roman paganism was characterized by the early Church writer Tertullian (160-220 A.D.), who noticed that the pagan religion utilized baptism as well as bread and wine consecrated by priests. He wrote that Mithraism was inspired by the devil, who wished to mock the Christian sacraments in order to lead faithful Christians to hell. They had lost the "keys" to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom or else refused to acknowledge them since according to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom mankind was "born in Hades in the first place". Pagan critics of Christianity, such as the satirist Celsus, complained that this recent religion of Roman Christianity was nothing more than a pale reflection of their own ancient teachings. Early "Church Fathers," such as Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and Irenaeus, were understandably disturbed and resorted to the desperate claim that these similarities (between the Pagan Mysteries and Early Roman "literalistic" Christianity) were the result of diabolical mimicry. Using one of the most absurd arguments ever advanced, they accused the Devil of "plagiarism by anticipation," of deviously copying the true story of Jesus before it had actually happened in an attempt to mislead the gullible! Comparative religion shows us that there is nothing new about the "Jesus Story" except it was presented to the world as a "literal" and "historical" event when in fact it was not. These Church fathers were no less devious than the Devil they hoped to incriminate. Nonetheless, Mithraism survived up to the fifth century in remote regions of the Alps amongst tribes such as the Anauni, and has managed to survive in the near-east until this day. In Iran, up until 1979, traditional Mithraic holidays and customs still continued to be practiced. These celebrations were encouraged under the Western-style cultural liberalism of the 1963 Revolution of the Shah, until exiled Islamic fundamentalist Ayatollah Khomeini returned to Iran in 1979 to impose strict Islamic codes of behavior and dress on all Iranians. Khomeini immediately reversed the Westernization movement and proclaimed Iran to be an Islamic republic. Finally, all traditional Mithraic rituals were suppressed in the land that was once Persia, birthplace of the religion of Mithras.

Answer for yourself: What do all of these forces of "Light" and "Darkness", like Ahura-Mazada and Ahriman as found in Mithraism, or Set and Horus in the ancient Egyptian religion, or Jesus and Satan have to teach us? They teach us of the polarity, conflict, and tension that exits between Divine Thought and Primordial Substance or "matter". There is a war of opportunity, a war of purification, that is so necessary to win for the ascent of the Soul back to Heaven.

In Plutarch's Isis and Osiris this conflict between Divine Thought and Primordial Matter is called the "doctrine of the two opposing principles" which is a basic tenant of the most secret mysteries, having been handed down by the ancient theologians and law-givers. Porphyry in his Cave of the Nymphs said that the Mithraic Mysteries were celebrated in caves (the cave pictured the dark incarnation of the Soul in matter), where the gates were marked at 4 equioctial and solstitial points of the Zodiac; and the seven planentary spheres were represented, which Souls had to traverse in descending from the Heaven of the fixed stars to the elements that envelop the Earth; and seven gates were marked, one for each planet, through which they passed, one in descending and ascending. This is the "ladder to Heaven" which Origen quoted Celsus saying was the image of the passage of Souls among the stars which was used in the Mithraic Mysteries; a ladder from Earth to Heaven (Egypt called it the Duat), and it was as well divided into sevens steps or stages, to each of which was a gate, and at the summit an 8th one, that of the fixed stars.

We mentioned this before but it bears repeating as out study into the "cross of matter" and "incarnation of the Soul" in Amenta continues. The most famous of all the Ancient Mysteries were those of Eleusis, a small village about 14 miles from Athens, celebrated in honor of Ceres and her daughter Persephone, or Kore. As Albert Pike remarked, these swallowed up all the others, and neighboring nations began to neglect their own Mysteries to celebrate those of Eleusis. According to the myth, Dionysus (the Christ-Soul), was born twice, both time as the son of Zeus, but his first birth was the result of union of Zeus with the Goddess Persephone, and his second with a mortal woman Semele. Thus Dionysus was called "bimatter" because he had two mothers (natural and Spiritual).

Answer for yourself: Do you remember reading our articles on "Did Jesus Have Two Mothers"? It again is the same story, the same "Divine Pattern" repeated with Dionysus, about the descent of the Soul; first a "natural birth" that is in need of a "second Spiritual birth" (Virgo, Pisces)? If you have not read the article, then it will benefit you to read them now.

In this religious myth Dionysus was slain by titans, who then began to devour his body.

Answer for yourself: What does this mean? They ate and consumed the god, they "internalized" the god, they internalized God's "Krst/Karest/Christ". Dionysus was "crucified on the cross of matter" as had almost all the "Sungods" before him. God had "fallen" into "matter". The same story, the "same Divine Pattern" is repeated again here in Dionysus. Zeus looked down with his all seeing eye and saw what was taking place. He immediately dispatched Athena who swooped down from Heaven, but managed to save only the heart of Dionysus before it was consumed, and brought it back to Zeus. In his anger then, Zeus hurled great bolts of lightning at the titans, nor did his wrath subside until only ashes remained of their bodies. From the ashes of the titans, who had consumed the god and His "Krst" arose the race of mankind.

Answer for yourself: What are we missing here? Within mankind therefore was a portion of the Divine Dionysus (the Krst/Karest/Christ) along with the elements of the titans (the Soul). (THINK)

Answer for yourself: What else are we missing here? We have the testimony of Plutarch, himself a priest of Delphi. Speaking of Bacchus or Dionysus in his treatise, On The Eating of Flesh, Plutarch declared that the whole story of Dionysus being torn into pieces by the titans (the Law of Dismemberment), and their subsequent destruction by Jupiter, was "a sacred narrative concerning reincarnation."

The myth of the Rape of Persephone and the descent of Persephone (incarnation into "matter") into Hades, Hell, and "incarnation" on the "cross of matter" in this Earthly existence also contained the same ideas as the Dionysian myth. She was abducted by Hades the Lord of the Underworld (Amenta). Her mother, Demeter, discovered that Zeus had abetted Hades in the plot to abduct her daughter. Angered and saddened she went into seclusion into her temple, and nothing grew on Earth. By the terrible famine she would have destroyed the whole race of men, had not Zeus sent Hermes down to the Underworld to lead Persephone to ascend back again to her mother. However, Hades, by trickery prevailed upon Persephone to eat a sweet seed of red pomegranate, and because of this, even though Persephone was able to abide with her mother in the Upper world (Heaven) for two thirds of the year. She had to spend the remainder of each year in the Underworld with Hades (incarnational existence). Demeter allowed the Earth to become fruitful again and instigated the rites at Eleusis. Again this shows us that as Souls our existence is "not always" to be in the prison of "matter"; we do "ascend" back to our Father.

The meaning of the myth of Persephone was given by Sallust, as well as by others. In The Gods of The World, Sallust said that the rape (brutality) of Persephone signified, "the descent of Souls." And Olympiodorus, in his commentary on the Phaedo of Plato, supported the statement of Sallust in more detail. The myth was another version of the ancient Chaldean myth of Ishtar and Tammuz.

Answer for yourself: What are we seeing? Can you see it? Over and over and over again, behind myth after myth, behind religious story after story, we have behind parable and story, over and over again, this "same story" of the descent of the Soul and the saving "Krst" into "matter" in which both of these Divine "Living Energies" of God "are crucified on the cross of matter".

No wonder the Gnostic Paul would write:

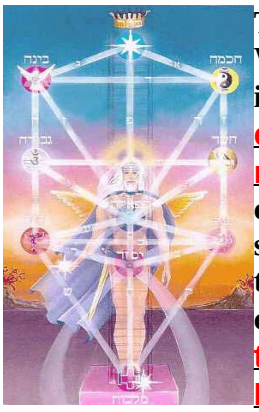
Gal 2:20 20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: (KJV)

It is the same story from nation to nation, from Sungods to goddess, over and over again. Regardless of time, regardless of nation, regardless of terminology, we have the same story over and over again preserved for mankind. The last of these "same stories" is our "Jesus Story" which is wrenched out of its typical allegorical interpretation and given a totally false and misleading "literal" and "historical" rendering in which the Divine Truth behind this "Divine Patter" is lost to humanity now for almost 2,000 years thanks to the efforts of Rome during the 2nd through the 5th century.

In these Sacred Mysteries, the sacred discourses explained to the candidates and initiates that they should look within themselves for the meaning of the myth, that what was represented was the descent of the Soul to the Underworld; its fall into matter, where due to the contamination received in "matter", it must remain trapped until, through a long process of purification, it might once again regain its celestial estate, is the "key" behind all the "Christ myths". It is the secret of the Sungod myths as well as the Goddess mythologies.

The Greater Mysteries of Eleusis were celebrated around the autumnal equinox.

Answer for yourself: Why was this?



The reason for this was that prior to their "fall" through the rings of the planets to the Earth, the Souls gathered together, after having come along the track of the galaxy, at the northern gate of Cancer, the place of entrance into the solar system, and, only afterwards, from this part of the Heavens did they begin their descent. It is at the Autumn Equinox that the Sun, the visible representation of the Living Energy of the Cosmos, God, begins its "descent" to its "incarnational death on the cross of matter". It is at the Winter Solstice where the Sun, as a symbol for God as "Living Energy", was believed to die for 3 days in darkness and is resurrected and "reborn" and begins its ascent once again on December 25th. The Sun was "born again". Again, the message of reincarnation of the Soul and progressive Spiritual Evolution pictured for us in the Heavens "above" and in Nature "below" is cyclical, repetitive, and ever continuing in hopes that all of mankind might know the truth.

Rom 1:20 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: (KJV)

No wonder Egypt taught "So Above, So Below". Before us every day is the "Divine Pattern"!

This described above to the "unlearned" reader seems impossible that the Soul is made up of "Living Energies" collected throughout the Solar System in its "descent" into "matter" through these 7 spheres of "Energy" and then is divested of them in its "ascent" to enter the next plane of its Spiritual evolution and existence or its return descent into "material existence" once again to finish its uncompleted Spiritual evolution which the ancients called the "death of the Soul in Amenta" (Hell, Hades, Sheol, the pit, the Underworld, etc.). But be advised that the Gnostic Paul of the New Testament, in I Corinthians, an epistle that no scholar doubts is an authentic Pauline writing, is teaching this same thing as the ancient Mystery religions that Rome will later persecute and exterminate from the face of the Earth as best they can beginning in the 2nd century. Each of these 7 levels which the Soul ascends and descends was equated with the Sun, the moon, the planet Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn by the ancients around the world. Let us not forget that these planets and stars are, according to ancient Egypt, but various manifestations of but one cell in the body of God (Ra). This whole solar system is but one cell in the totality of God and all that exists are but varieties of this "Living Energy" which make up the totality of God. The ancient Egyptians and Greeks like Plato, Plotinus, Proclus, Socrates, Iambilicus, had a higher metaphysical understanding of cosmology and this cosmos that that of the vast majority of religious mankind today. We have lost so much.

Answer for yourself: Where have we seen these 7 spheres illustrated to us before?

These 7 levels of "Living Energy" is symbolized in the seven Sephirots of the Kabbalah. When studying the Kabbalah we are told that the 10 Sephiroth are represented as divided into the three higher, or the spiritual Triad, and the lower seven Sephiroth which are called the Septenary. It is these lower 7 levels of descent and ascent which are referred to as the 7 levels which the Soul descends and ascends. But we see this same concept repeated the whole world over in the the seven genii of the vision of Hermes, the seven Devas of India, the seven Amshapands of Persia, the seven great Angels of Chaldaea, the sever Archangels of the Christian Apocalypse, even the 7 days of the week (each day is connected to a planet/god), etc. This at one time was the whole world's understanding of the true identity of mankind as "Immortal Souls"; a doctrine no longer believed by a Roman Christianity.

By means of reincarnation on Earth the Spiritual development of our Souls grow and so the attaining of harmony between Spirit and "matter" within mankind. The human Soul continues to be incarnate till he/she is attuned to the sphere of current existence. This process also means that humans on Earth have different spiritual developments. Every human will eventually reach the light. The "one new man" in Christ will grow. Subsequently we gradually grow to a better world of Light, Love and Peace; a process by which the Soul is ultimately liberated and diffused back again into First Cause. This once was common knowledge. In the first centuries of Christianity there was a movement called Gnosticism. These earliest Gnostic Chrestians emphasized the inner knowledge. In the first period of Christianity, really Chrestianity, there was no distinct separation between the orthodox and the Gnostic Christians. Within this (Christian) Gnosticism reincarnation and karma were quite familiar. For these earliest Chrestian Gnostics their inner knowledge and their own development were far more important than the regulations of the ecclesiastical authorities. The Christian Gnosticism, therefore, was especially rejected by popes and bishops because of their Spiritual and intellectual independence. It's remarkable, certainly for those days, that within Gnosticism men and women were completely equivalent. When the young Christian church wasn't persecuted herself anymore, she fanatically persecuted and exterminated the Gnostic Christians. All Gnostic writings were destroyed. Thanks to the scriptures found in 1945 near a small Egyptian village called Nag Hammadi, we dispose of a great number of more or less unknown Gnostic writings from the first few centuries A.D. At the council of Constantinople in 553 reincarnation and karma were definitely labelled as non-Christian. These views were exterminated in a very cruel way. New Gnostic movements arose. For instance: The Cathars in the south of France in the 12th and 13th century. They were not tolerated because of the inner knowledge and because of the fact that they did not recognize the authority of the Roman Catholic Church. From 1209 more than a 100.000 Cathars were tortured, burnt and murdered by order of the church. The Cathars themselves stayed non-violent in accordance with their principles and accordingly paid the ultimate price for Spiritual Truth.

To fully understand the Gnostic and ancient Mystical view of the "Krst/Karest/Christ" as well as "the Jesus" involves a radical reappraisal of how we see Christianity and Judaism. For the Gnostic, Gnosis is not the knowledge of the masses, but a secret wisdom - a comprehension only available to those who "know". It is esoteric and results from a direct experience of the divine - exoteric Christianity is at best, its outer core or form, at worst, it's corruption. The major stimulus for the rebirth of the Gnostic worldview was the discovery of the Nag Hammadi texts, these texts discovered in 1945 comprise a veritable library of esoteric wisdom, it comprised some fifty two texts in either part or whole. You cannot just pick these Gnostic writings up and read them and understand them without some time devoted to the study of ancient symbols of the ancient religions. Having done that, then let me say that their importance cannot be underplayed, for example, Elaine Pagels in the Gnostic Gospels states "Now for the first time we have the opportunity to find out about the earliest Christian heresy, for the first time the heretics can speak for themselves. The importance of these Gnostic texts is that they educate us regarding the teachings of the early Gnostics and from these we can re-construct what could probably be considered as "the first form of Christianity". Now hear this, it seems from available evidence likely that the modern forms of Judaism and Christianity are various levels of heresy that developed from this early Gnosis, rather than the other way around. Judaism yet today contains within the seeds of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom scattered within, the same cannot be said for Orthodox Christianity which is truly a complete "Replacement Religion". When we begin to consider this paradigm, then the find at Nag Hammadi becomes of prime importance.

Let us continue our studies in the next article in this series.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #10

Our studies concerning the Soul in Amenta continue as we look into the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the Soul and its Earthly incarnation.

We have covered a lot of information and introduced ourselves to many ideas that were foreign to us in our traditional Christian upbringing. But at the same time we have discovered a "Divine Pattern" that was revealed from Heaven and from Mother Nature by the Creator; a "pattern" that was recognized and cherished by the ancient Spiritual Sages from nation to nation since the beginning of time. We have seen for the first time what really lies behind the allegories and metaphors that are mistaken interpreted today as if "historical" and "literal" events that lay behind our "Jesus Story" and "the Christ Stories" of many nations but we are not through yet. There are many exciting Spiritual Truths that yet lay before us.

Let us begin with a statement first of primary importance. Many a scholar who has undertaken oriental research has come to the conclusion that at one time on this planet that there existed a world-wide Spiritual "Gnosis" and knowledge, a philosophy from which all later religious creeds sprung, a Divine Truth that linked all of mankind in the beginning: "The records of the eastern esoteric schools of Philosophy state that there was at one time such a universal system, and the evidence of their statement point to a fact that all doctrines entitled to be called 'religions', in contradistinction to mere ethical associations, maintain the tradition of mankind as at one time pure, but since fallen and degraded; and to underlying similarity of all creeds (faiths). Cleared of their dross of public error, all religions will be found to embody in essence precisely identical teachings: Brahmanism, Buddhism, Taoism, Christianity, Gnosticism, the Hebrews, the Babylonians, the Assyrians, the Greeks, and all the systems, both ancient and modern, are more or less portions of the one arcane (ancient) Secret Doctrine (Claude Wright, The Outline of the Principles of Modern Theosophy, p. 11).

Max Muller, a German philologist (one who specializes in classical scholarship) and Orientalist who wrote around 1880 A.D., virtually created the discipline of comparative religion. He wrote both scholarly and a popular works on this subject and brought this knowledge before the British reading public well over one hundred years ago. He helped create the Sacred Books of the East, a massive, 50-volume set of English translations prepared under his direction which stands as an enduring monument to Victorian scholarship. He said "that there was a primeval preternatural revelation granted to the fathers of the human race and this this primeval revelation still exists today".

In my personal studies over these last 20 years I found these above statements to be accurate beyond belief and likewise discovered and recognized the existence of this "Divine Pattern" and knowledge concerning the Soul expressed to mankind from the Divine Mind of the cosmos in almost every nation and every religion to which I looked. But sadly not everyone knows this or can recognize this "ancient secret Spiritual teaching" when reading our Bibles today simply because we have been indoctrinated incorrectly to approach everything in our Bibles with a "literal-historical" perspective; never studying intently this ancient of ancient Books. Even our Bibles alludes to this truth:

Matt 13:11 11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. (KJV)

Matt 13:13 13 Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. (KJV)

Hidden and cloaked behind these parables and simple stories in our Bibles lay the greatest metaphysical realities as to the true identity of mankind, his true identity origin, his responsibility and task in this Earthly existence as well as his destiny. At one time early expressions of Christianity had access to this "hidden" Wisdom but that was to change. Here is a short summary of how that happened.

There were three main movements within early Christianity:

- the Jewish Christians,
- Pauline Christians and
- Gnostic Christians.

Notice they were all called "Christians" in that they had a belief about "the Christ". The problem for us is if they believed in a "literal and historical Christ" or a "mystical or metaphysical Christ". Needless to say they are not the same. Among these different expressions and beliefs about "the Christ", there could be found on the order of fifty gospels, probably hundreds of epistles (letters), and many examples of apocalyptic literature similar to the Book of Revelation. All were considered authoritative by various early Christian groups at various times over these last 2,000 years. When the Bishops of the late Roman Catholic Church fixed the official canon, they selected the Hebrew Scriptures, and 27 books: four gospels, Acts, 21 epistles, and Revelation. The concept of inerrancy requires and demands that they did not err in their selection: that the authors of precisely these 27 books were inspired by God and wrote without error. The concept of inerrancy requires and therefore implies that their selection process must have been guided by God so that fraudulent books were not chosen. But this I found upon serious study is just a fantasy and wishful thinking on the part of those ignorant of the selection process. The Gospel of John was almost rejected by the early Church because of its Gnostic content yet its appeal to the heart of mankind stands out among the other 3 assumed "only Gospels". All you have to do is read the Gospel of John and see for yourself how it stands head and shoulders above the other 3 Gospels. The Book of Revelation almost did not make it into the Bible either, because it described God in angry, hateful terms that seemed incompatible with the loving Abba (Dad) that this supposed historical and literal Jesus supposedly prayed to. When Emperor Constantine ordered 50 copies of the Bible to be copied, they included The Letter of Barnabas and The Shepard of Hermes -- two books that do not appear in today's Bibles. Richard Nicholson states: "The Canon evolved obscurely (deviously) over many centuries. Books were accepted by some and banned by others. Books accepted for centuries were rejected later. Rival church factions excluded each other's scriptures. Personality clashes and rival ambitions were responsible for the disappearance of much that scholars would like to read today" (Richard Nicholson, Constantine, Eusebius and Jerome). This is the true story that few if any Christians ever encounter or study deep enough behind the "accepted tradition of the Church" to find. The combination of source ambiguity, intentional translation errors, copying errors, symbolic vs. literal interpretation, multiple authorship, multiple versions, interpretation conflicts, internal conflicts, the nature of truth, etc., make it quite impossible to prove that a particular passage in an English translation of the Bible is inerrant or that our current approach of a "literal" and "historical" interpretation of this ancient Bible and its texts is the correct way to understand the message of this great Book. The only way to know for certain the "truth that lies behind these Spiritual Concepts" comes from exhaustive study today of the origin of these Spiritual concepts expressed in these Biblical texts we inherited and how they were understood and taught in their origin settings. Only then when comparison are made between the ancient Spiritual Concepts and Beliefs in their original settings and compared to the same ideas expressed in our Bibles today can we be certain that we have the right "understanding" of these Divine Truths expressed to us in our Churches and Christian books. You will find upon your own personal study as I did that it is much better to read "outside the Christian mindset" if you want the truth and read the ancient Spiritual documents and texts for yourself as much has changed, destroyed, and "forged" down through history; especially when Rome gets behind the controls of this Christian Religion. You will find as I did when you study outside the Christian mind-set that the proper interpretation of similar religious concepts that existed in the beginning of time in the ancient Egyptian Religion and earliest Mystery Religions of the world, religions concepts such as the Immortality of the Soul, Amenta and Hades, Heaven, Purgatory, Hell, Resurrection of the Dead, Re-Incarnation and Transmigration of the Soul, the Trinity, the Messiah, the Logos, the Millennium, the Sabbath Day, Baptism, the Eucharist, the Last Judgment, etc., all change in "meaning" once Rome took control of the ancient "Christian Faith" that had existed since the beginning of time. This might be hard to understand so let us see that the early Church Father Augustine knew this as a fact.

Answer for yourself: Could there have be a "Christianity before the Roman Christian view of 'Christ'"? There have been many down through history that have struggled as I have with the facts and undeniable evidences that exist behind such a question. One such great man of religious history is the great African Church Father, St. Augustine who studied this problematic question and answered as follows:

That which is known as the Christian religion existed among the ancients, and never did not exist; from the beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, at which time the true religion, which already existed began to be called Christianity. (Retractt. I, xiii, cited by Dr. Alvin Boyd Kuhn in his Shadow of The Third Century, Elizabeth N.J.: Academy Press, 1949, p.3.)

Answer for yourself: What are we missing here? Before Rome would later "literalize" and "historicize" the ancient Religious Concept of "the Christ", the "indwelling incarnated Krst/Karest/Christ within matter", the whole world understood the descent of "the Mind of God" into "matter" whereby it was "crucified on the cross of matter". Rome will do everything within its power between the 2nd through the 5th century to obliterate this pre-existing ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Gnosis and in its place present the world the "one Christ" whose access was now limited only through the Roman Christian Religion.

There are many inconsistencies and inaccuracies in the Bible which cannot be resolved without excessive pseudological contortions unless one does not take them literally. Augustine said: "It is a disgraceful and dangerous thing for an infidel to hear a Christian, presumably giving the meaning of Holy Scripture, talking nonsense on these topics; and we should take all means to prevent such an embarrassing situation, in which people show up vast ignorance in a Christian and laugh it to scorn".

Until the time of Constantine, Alexandria blossomed as the second city of the Roman Empire, after Rome itself. It took pride in its famous library and its reputation as the center for Greek philosophy and learning. We have seen that Philo strove to integrate Greek philosophy with Judaism; early Christians followed his lead, as they worked to integrate philosophy with Christianity. Around A.D. 200, Clement of Alexandria (a Church Father, c. 150-215) taught that just as God gave the Law to the Jews, so he gave philosophy (the love of Spiritual Wisdom) to the Greeks--as an instrument to lead them to Christ. God's eternal Word (Logos) was the source of both. Clement believed the truth was to be found in Scripture, but sometimes it was "hidden", and such truth could only be discovered through allegorical interpretation of the Scriptures. Clement did insist, however, that the Scriptures had a literal and historical sense since these "Divine Truths" were seen and recognized through the eyes of historical nations and that each nation's expression of this ancient Divine Spiritual Truth had to be respected. But allegorical reading of these ancient Scriptures could find further "spiritual" meanings containing universal and eternal truths; this being an idea reflecting Plato and the later Neoplatonists. Listen carefully. Clement's idea of God as transcendent, beyond all knowledge or definition, is also Platonic, For Clement the Christian faith affirmed God's Word (Logos), the source of all creation and all knowledge, especially the knowledge of God. But "interpretation" was critical. The Logos was incarnate in mankind; the Christian Jesus as the Son of God in Christianity being our personification of this "hidden Spiritual Wisdom" in the flesh of mankind. This "hidden Spiritual Wisdom" having been "crucified on the cross of matter" in its "fall" from Heaven into "matter". The Holy Spirit functioned to attract the believer to God, to seek true knowledge. Such knowledge of God was the true Gnosis, characterized by faith that responds in proper behavior and actions. Let us not forget that these were some of the earliest ideas and understandings of "the Christ"; Clement of Alexandria being born about the middle of the 2nd century, and is believed to have died between 211 and 216 C.E. Notice if you will that these are some of the earliest understandings of "Jesus as the Christ" before the rise of Roman and Latin Christianity later. He travelled in Greece, Italy, Palestine, and finally Egypt. He became the colleague of Pantaenus, the head of the catechetical school of Alexandria, and finally succeeded him in the direction of the school. One of his most popular pupils was Origen.

Clement of Alexandria's teaching and theological work was given to the young scholar Origen (185-254), who presided over the Alexandrian school in Egypt for the next thirty years. Origen's writings were some of the most influential in the early church. He developed more fully Philo's and Clement's ideas of allegorical interpretation, understanding three levels of interpretation within a text that corresponded to three aspects of the human being. Literal, moral, and spiritual meanings corresponded to the body, soul, and spirit, in ascending order of importance.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the 3 levels of interpretation of Scripture and that the highest and most important level of Scripture interpretation is "Spiritual" and the lowest level and lowest level of importance of Scriptural interpretation was "Literal"?

The literal meaning of the historical events was the least important for the Christian, just as the body was less important than the Soul or Spirit (two different things, psyche (Soul) and pneuma (Spirit), in Greek). More important were the underlying meanings of Scripture which could only be perceived allegorically. Origin recognized and taught that the New Testament texts are best understood when allegorized since at all time they teaches and symbolizes the progress of the human Soul which was personified in the character of a "human Jesus" (our example for our Souls). The "Jesus Story" again, if you recall, progresses from "birth, life, death, and rebirth" as does the whole of the cosmos and "Living Energy". The "Divine Pattern" is again once overlapped with what we are mistakenly taught today which is a unique "historical" and "literal" story when in fact it is but a "picture", a "model", to help us "live out our own 'Jesus Story'". Origen held that the Scriptures were the Word of God, not locked in the past but addressed to people of the current time as well through allegorical meanings. Scriptures were divinely inspired--they "were composed through the Spirit of God"--but in them "all has a spiritual meaning, but not everything has a literal meaning." The divinely-inspired meaning may not lie in the literal meaning and be recognizable to everyone, but instead will be perceived by "those gifted with the grace of the Holy Spirit in the word of wisdom and knowledge" (Gnosis).

Enter the "Mysteries" and secrets that lie behind simple parables which carry the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of which we alluded above. The philosophy of Plato, we are assured by Porphyry of the Neoplatonic School, was taught and illustrated in the ancient "Mysteries" and "Mystery Religions". Behind all of these "Mystery Religions" lie the Spiritual genius of ancient Egypt. Behind these later "Mysteries" lies the beauty and Divine truths captured in the beginning of mankind by ancient Egypt. To properly understand our Bibles and its stories is to grasp the truth of these Divine Mysteries, both "Lower" and "Higher" which were imparted to the Spiritual Divines of the human race in its beginning of time and the creation of the human species. Proper understanding and interpretation of our Bibles, since they are a legacy of this ancient Spiritual Gnosis and only later "reinterpreted and perverted by Rome", is mandatory in our Earthy incarnation. We, as Souls, have come to Earth to learn, to experience life on this plane in order to both "know" and thereby Spiritually grow and conform ourselves to these "Heavenly truths" and "Divine Pattern" that exists and which we are to follow in our incarnation in this world. This "Soulish enlightening", as we are seeing, is impossible without the correct understanding of the ancient art of symbolism and Gnosis of the ancient Spiritual religionists that gave us these parables and both the "Lower" and "Higher Mysteries" in the first place, mysteries which line the pages of our Bibles.

We have seen in our prior studies that the very core of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom held that the concept of the Divine Spark or seed of God as "Living Energy" was buried within each person ("matter"). We have seen previously that there are many levels or planes of existence or manifestation of created "Living Energies" that stretch from the highest "Heaven" of this cosmos and universe to "Earth". There are terrestrial and celestial worlds as Paul says. Paul goes on to call these two "worlds" first "noumenal" or worlds of thought and Mind and then "phenomenal" or worlds known through the 5 senses instead of the mind. Paul goes on to describe realms, physical and ethereal.

Answer for yourself: What are these "ethereal realms" of which Paul speaks?

Paul is speaking of the Celestial Spheres of which we have spoken before. These are "Heavenly realms" which are not of this world). Paul is speaking of Spiritual planes, material and spiritual bodies, heavens, fairy-lands, underworlds, hells, limbos, Isles of the Blessed, Elysian Fields, mansions, the meadows of Aarru-Hetep and homes on high. All of the ancient religions of the world describe this Heavenly hierarchy and Heavenly "Ladder" of "Living Energies". We see this Celestial idea even in our Bibles:

John 14:2 2 In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. (KJV)

All of this is detailed in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the nations and in the sacred Books of the world. And the beings on these various levels of "existence" range from high divinity at the "top" of this Heavenly Ladder and "fall" into a step-by-step descent down to mankind and even below to the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms. These "Living Energies" are the gods, goddesses, and "neteru" of ancient mythology. These "neteru" were archetypes of the reality which mankind cannot see with his 5 senses. The ancients viewed all life as being not static, immobile, or unmoving, but generative, reproductive, and forward-moving as "Living Energy" moves on down, step-by-step, down this "Jacob's Ladder", down the line from the Invisible to the Visible realms like a "Ladder to Heaven". This "Divine Life" surges further and further out from its One Source as an emanation from the First Cause. This is represented to us distinctly in the form of a "ladder" in both ancient Egypt and in Judaism.

The broad outline of Man's nature, history, and destiny according to the Mystery teachings is simply this: that Mankind and Humanity as a whole is one of a Hierarchy of Celestial Beings, emanated "in the beginning" from the ONE, the Absolute One, the First Cause. That having to play his part in the great Cosmic Process, Spiritual Man (Mind) "descends into matter" and is "crucified on the cross of matter", thus becoming the physical race of beings as we now know him; ourselves. But the whole Cosmic Process of this "Divine Life" and "Being" is but an outgoing "from" and a "return" to the ONE. Mankind must inevitably return to his Source; he must re-become that spiritual Being or Race which he was "in the beginning," but something is different.

Answer for yourself: What is it? Mankind returns to his Heavenly origin plus the knowledge gained by his great pilgrimage through the manifested worlds of "matter" in the Cosmos.

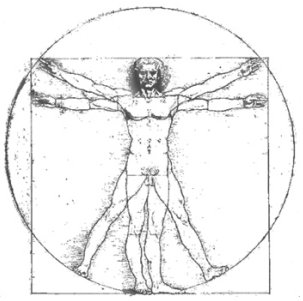
This grand conception of the, origin and destiny of Mankind, that is to say of the Race as a whole, is the keynote of that Ancient Wisdom or Gnosis which we shall later endeavour to trace in the Christian Scriptures, but which is not special to those Scriptures, and indeed was taught ages before the Christian Scriptures came into existence. These Christian Scriptures, when interpreted correctly through obtaining the ancient "keys" to unlock the symbolism therein, then and only then re-affirm the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and betray the later Roman radical "literal" reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom as a farce and mockery of Heavenly Truth. Obtaining these "keys" to correctly interpret both the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and "Lower and Higher Mysteries will reveal the historical Roman Christian interpretation of its Bible to be a grotesque mistaken interpretation of the sacred ancient Spiritual allegories and metaphors which explained this metaphysical world in which the Soul finds its current existence.

The Race of mankind as a whole has thus "fallen into matter" and physical generation, and has thereby entirely lost sight of its divine origin, nature, and powers. According to the myths of the ancients that mankind, on his descent into "matter", drinks from waters of Lethe, the "waters of forgetfulness". This prepares mankind for his new incarnation by blotting out sufficient memory of the Soul's past so that we enter Earth life with a clean slate on which to inscribe the thoughts, emotions, and deeds that will determine the quality of the life to be.

It is through gaining knowledge of one's true identity, his origin, and Spiritual destination that the individual might be led to enter the real path of knowledge which would enable him to become an Initiate of the Mysteries of Heaven, and to realize step by step his own Divine nature and powers thus enabling his return to his Heavenly origin. This is true Gnosis. Now although the Race as a whole accomplishes this return process only through cycle after cycle of effort and renewed effort, extending over millions of years, in which, as we clearly see, even in the short period of a few thousands of years of which we have any records, nations and races have their birth, maturity, and death. Yet there is always the possibility for the individual to step out in advance of the Race and achieve that real knowledge of his own nature and powers which liberates him from the "fate" of this lower world of physical life. Indeed, it is only by such actual knowledge that he can be liberated. Until he has achieved that knowledge he is the helpless sport of cosmic laws which he can no more command than can the ignorant savage those physical laws which the civilized man utilizes to produce phenomena absolutely incomprehensible to the savage. Yet the "civilized" man, with all his modern science, has no real saving knowledge. He does not even know enough to save his fellows from the scourges of disease. His knowledge of physical laws is a mere surface knowledge, derived solely through his physical senses, and necessarily limited thereby. True, mankind today is beginning to have some apprehension of the vast power of mind over matter, and a certain science of psychology is beginning to assert its importance in pathology and therapy; but here again he is only touching the fringe of a knowledge which has been taught in the Mysteries and in Eastern Religions for for untold ages.

This great Cosmic Cycle of manifestation in which Mankind has thus to play his part is known in Eastern philosophy as the "Outbreathing and Inbreathing of Brahma". This cycle of "incarnation" of "descent" and "ascent" was earlier recognized by ancient Egypt and termed the "Duat". We discussed this in detail in the articles on the Uranograph. The Old Testament calls this "Outbreathing and Inbreathing" of God "Jacob's Ladder". Astrophysics today call it "worm holes" or "black holes". It is the same. The Bible has other terms for this but no matter what they are called today the "concept is the same". Yet the Old Testament designation other than "Jacob's Ladder" for this "inbreathing and outbreathing" of God is surprising.

Answer for yourself: Can you guess what it is? Have you seen enough clues yet? I bet you already know it but might not make the connection yet.



It is the "fall" of the book of Genesis. It is called many things and abundant synonyms exist for it. Here come another "key". This is "fall into "death", the "fall" into "matter", the "fall" into "sin", the "fall" into "Hades", the "descent into Hades", the "descent into Hell", the descent into the "Underworld", the descent into the "Pit", whether described as a "descent" or not it is the same as the "inferno", "Sheol", "Tartarus", the "Abyss", etc. These are all parts of the same "becoming"; the "Outbreathing and inbreathing" of God, of Brahma, of Atum. It is here that the "Soul" as well as the "Christ" was "crucified on the cross of matter". The "Christ" comes to impart "Gnosis" to the imprisoned Soul in the darkness of matter in order to preach to the Spirits/Souls "in prison"; this prison being another metaphor for "matter" and the "flesh".

In the history of the Cosmos, the life-drama is opened with the coming into action of two principles; Spirit or "matter". Think of these different if possible; "Divine Thought" and "Primordial Substance". Divine Thought, the Deific Mind, the Logos, thinks out the plan or "Divine Pattern" upon which the Cosmos will be constructed, and out of "Matter" and Substance it is fashioned. Spirit, or Mind, this "Divine Thought", only knows active "life" because of its opposite-substance ("matter"). Thus the need for the Cosmic Mind, the Cosmic Soul to be "incarnated" into "Matter" in order to experience His own "Thought". Divine Thought, Cosmic Mind is in the eternal quest of "becoming" and "self-awareness" through this evolving universe. Metaphysical ideas of this Invisible Conscious Living Energy manifest and are materialized later in a descending scale (ladder) of "Divine Thought" and we as humans have our own level of consciousness and unique position in this ordered Cosmos. Everywhere around in which we "see" and "perceive" by our "senses" and "consciousness" that functions "in matter" shows us the "Divine Pattern" of constant cycle of "birth, growth, life, decay, and death, and rebirth". This "Divine Pattern" and "everlasting cycle of change" is seen "Above" us (in Outer Space and the Sky/Heavens) and "Below" and around us (Mother Nature). Therefore this "Divine Pattern" is inherent in all things that "exist". No wonder "So Above, So Below" was the central idea as expressed in the ancient Egyptian Religion. Thus this cosmos was "born, lives, and will die". Mankind, a microcosm of the macrocosm, awakes and sleeps like the cosmos, lives and dies like the Cosmos, then re-awakens. This cosmos teaches us the underlying Law of cycles, alternation, and periodicity of this God that operates in all "matter". Such is the immutable Law of Being; nature reveals herself to us only though the unending sequence of ebb and flow. The universal tendency of everything is to complete a cycle of manifestation, returning eventually to the point from which it originally started. These self-same laws apply equally to nature. Look at our Earthly cycles, the Equinoxes and Solstices, the rising and setting of the Sun and phases of the Moon that come and go in a never ending "pattern". Cosmos, Earth, and Mankind is the expressed "image" of this Deific Mind that has "no end" but only a perpetual "being". This is called the "Outbreathing and Inbreathing of Brahma" (the First Cause). At other times this has been called "the Days and Nights of Brahma" or "Manvantara" (Day/awaking-outbreathing) and "Pralaya" (Night/sleep-inbreathing) of God. This is the eternal cycle of "birth, life, death, and rebirth" that manifests in all "matter" from the "Divine Thought".

The ancients taught that God, in this period of Manvantara, or period of manifestation, this period of awakening, "comes into material existence in order to understand and experience Itself/Himself/Herself". Pure Living Energy, devoid of "material existence" or "matter" without the ability to "sense" and "feel" cannot experience itself. It is pure "thought" devoid of "experience". Thus mankind is the fruit of the Universal Mind which has "fallen into matter" (Hades) and "incarnated" in order to gain experience of material life, so as to understand and experience "Itself"; in which sense "God goes to school".

Answer for yourself: Now can you understand why the Bible and Sacred Books of the nations always stressed that mankind live by the Laws of God so that God experiences in and through us, His creatures, the "beauty of His material creation" and not the "evil and potential ugliness that is inherent in matter"? We as incarnated Souls have the obligation to not "misrepresent God to Himself in us"! THINK!

In modern language we should call this whole cyclical Cosmic process of "life and death" evolution and involution; and, looking at it from the more material point of view, it is the evolution of a vast Cosmos out of some homogeneous Primordial Substance, to which it ultimately returns. God "breaths out" and God "breaths in". God "gives" and God "takes away". We see this perfectly today in Black Holes in this Cosmos when looking at the macrocosm which only teaches us that this "cyclical pattern" of "birth, life, growth, decay, death and "rebirth" goes on in the microcosm; the cosmos is but a picture of God....a "Living Energy".

The study of ancient Egypt and their metaphysics along with Gnosticism gave me the information that I needed to understand this "Divine Pattern" and its connection between all of the nation's Divine Myths that teach this very same principles to "those who have ears to hear" concerning our smaller "Living Energy" (the Soul); the myths of the ancient nations all tell the same story when correctly understood (the fall of God as Universal Mind (Soul and Krst Soul into "matter" in this graduated Cosmos). It is in these Divine Myths of these Mysteries that this "Divine Pattern" of "birth, life, death, and rebirth" of "Living Energy" was personified in the birth, lives, and death of their Sungods and Goddesses; almost all of which had to "descend into matter" and be "crucified on the cross of matter" and later "rise from the dead" in a "new birth". This "descent" and "ascent" of "Living Energy" into "matter", its "fall, death, rebirth, rebirth, life, fall, death, and rebirth, etc.) was parallel with the Equinoxes and Solstices but this is natural and should be expected when you realize that "Mother Nature" dances in symphony with the Celestial Heavens and the path of the Sun (itself but a picture of the True Living Energy of the cosmos). The "cycles" and "patterns" of Heaven affect "matter" and "Mother Nature" and this cycle of "birth, life, death, rebirth" became the very foundation for our Seasonal Biblical Festivals and observances of the ancient Spiritual Nations previously. This explains why there is always an agricultural connection between the Sungods and Goddesses, Nature, and the path of the Sun in the Heavens and this "pattern" is seen quite clearly in the lives of the Sungods and Goddesses when "personified". If you think about it the lives of the Sungods and Goddesses, all "Living Energies", all "crucified on the cross of matter", are but expressions of cosmic Black Wholes where "life and Living Energy was once expressed in matter" and now has "gone back and reabsorbed back into pure Energy (God)". That is why there was one primeval religion among the whole of mankind in the beginning of the species of humanity. These ancient Spiritual Myths almost all describe the "fall of God/Living Energy" and His "Divine Intellect" into "a darkened matter" and its "crucifixion on the cross of death" and its ultimate "resurrection from its incarnational death in matter" and final return to the "Living Energy" from where it was generated and "fell" in the first place. In this "fall of God and Mind" into "matter"; no wonder we are admonished to not hide this "Promethium fire" under our bushels of material existence but allow the light and revelation of God to permeate all of created existence through each Soul's existence and Spiritual growth while in this "matter"; "matter" capable of giving expression to this Divine Living Energy. And the cycle goes on; this cycle of "self-awareness" and "becoming" of the Divine Thought through "material incarnation" continues eternally and at all levels and mankind and this, mind you, is but one expression of this Ultimate God/Living Energy which is expressed on innumerable levels throughout the cosmos.

Mankind, then, as one of the great Hierarchies of Spiritual Beings differentiated from the ONE, had to evolve with the evolution of the material universe. He, as the Soul, had to descend or “fall” into physical matter and generation through the mineral, vegetable, animal, and finally the human kingdom; he had to play his part in the great Cosmic Process of Manifestation and "Becoming". In doing so he, as the Soul, had not merely lost sight of his Spiritual Nature and Spiritual origin, but He becomes enamored with “the things of this world of 'matter',” and being thus smitten he becomes subject to the works of "matter" (flesh) instead of ruling over them, and thereby sin, sickness, and death begins to reign in his mortal body.

The “fall” of man into physical nature and generation is represented in the first instance in the second chapter of Genesis as:

- The “deep sleep” of Adam which is symbolic for the Soul's loss of his Spiritual Consciousness when incarnated into "matter" and
- The physical separation of the sexes by the formation of Eve.

There is every reason to believe that the earliest races of mankind were hermaphrodite. One only has to look at the male of the human species and wonder why he was given breasts. On Mankind's return journey up this Ladder of Heaven, and as he regains his original Spiritual nature, he must again combine both the father and the mother principle once again in himself in his ascent, or, as Jacob Boheme says, he must re-become that which he was "before his Eve."

" They that are accounted worthy to attain to that world and the resurrection from the dead (from their present spiritual deadness in "matter") neither marry, nor are given in marriage : for neither can they die any more: for they are equal with the angels; and are Sons of God" (Luke 20: 35).

This is pure Gnosis.

Answer for yourself: If as the orthodox theology teaches, everyone has to rise from the dead at "the last day," why, should Jesus here say that it is only those who "are accounted worthy" who thus rise? Clearly the spiritual resurrection from the deadness of the carnal nature which Paul taught and which is accomplished while we are yet prisioners in this body of death, and this is but one more proof that the teaching of the Christ was the Spiritual doctrine of the Gnosis, whereas that of the Church is the carnal doctrine of a crude and false literal realism.

As with the individual, so it is with the Race, simply because the Race is made up of the individuals. The child is both ignorant and innocent of good and evil, but he learns the nature of these as he grows. Reaching manhood he becomes absorbed in material interests and pursuits; and, having constantly before him the choice between good and evil, he only too often turns a deaf ear to the promptings of his inner Spiritual nature, the "descended and incarnated Christ within", which always overshadows the individual and he sins by choosing the evil rather than the good.

" For all have sinned, and fall short of the glory of God (the god as the Christ within) (Rom. 3:23).

But mankind has to play his part in the great Cosmic Drama; his return to his Source is as certain as his outgoing therefrom. Mankind "falls" into this "grave of matter" and is "mummified" in order that he may rise. Thus Paul says:

"Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. 4:17).

And again:

" For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to usward. For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God. For the creation was subjected to vanity not of its own will, but by reason of him who subjected it" (Rom. 8:18,19,20).

Answer for yourself: Why did Paul state that creation is "waiting" for the revealing of the sons of God?

Because every individual is a potential "Son of God," a "potential "Daughter of God", a potential Soul which can obtain the Spiritual Evolution to obtain "the Mind of Christ"; that potentiality being represented in the Gospels as having been actually manifested in the prototypical physical embodiment of the Soul which was "personified" and depicted as the person of "Jesus Christ"; and Paul here anticipates the time when Mankind having returned to his "first estate," "the earnest expectation of the creation", will be realized in deliverance "from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children (or sons) of God."

We can link this up with statements in other Scriptures and with similar

statements in the wonderful Sacred Books of other nations from antiquity.

Sadly, Christian theology finds no room for the evolution of either the individual or the Race; indeed, the very term "evolution" is anathema for it. Christian dogma states that one either "believes" that he is either "saved" through the atoning work of a "literal" and "historical: Jesus on a wooden Cross on the hill of Golgotha, or he is for ever "damned" and "lost," even if not as some would still maintain eternally damned to the torments of a burning and torturous Hell.

- Answer for yourself: What, then, becomes of the cave man, of prehistoric man, of the present-day primitive man, not to speak of the untold millions of individuals of pre-Christian ages who had a more or less highly developed religion in some cases, indeed, quite the equal if not superior to the concepts of "Christianity"?
- Answer for yourself: If the individual is only "redeemed by belief in an assumed and supposed particular "literal" or "historical" event or rather by belief in the "accepted interpretation" which Orthodox Roman Christian theology gives to that assumed and supposed particular "literal" or "historical" event after the 2nd century, then what is the fate of the countless millions who, if they are only granted one life here on earth, lived and died hundreds, thousands, or, millions of years before that particular event? What about those who were alive during this time of the Roman "radical reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom who would not accept this "changed Revelation" from God and who died at the hands of Rome refusing to believe what they knew at that time was a "lie" in order to supposedly saved according to Rome? Who really is "saved" here (using the Roman term)?
- Answer for yourself: Setting aside the horrible Christian doctrine of the old theologians as to the fate of the "heathen" and the "unbeliever," have our modem theologians any answer to that question? Were not all these pre-Christian individuals human beings, many of which lived righteously and spent their lives in acts of loving kindness to others? Were they not a part of humanity? Are they not part of humanity? Is it only the individual who luckily just happens to be born after the said assumed and supposed "literal" and "historical" saving event of Jesus who can have any chance of "eternal life"? What does this say about the God who we love who appears to not love all of His Children? I hope Calvin is happy since we get these idea from him.!

One of the most fundamental axioms of the Ancient Wisdom is, as already stated, that all things return to their Source. Perhaps the clearest statement of this from the Cosmic point of view which is to be found in the New Testament is the statement by Paul that:

" When all things have been subjected unto him, then shall the Son (the Logos) also himself be subjected to him that did subject all things unto him, that God may be all in all" (1 Cor. 15:28).

Answer for yourself: Is not God, then, "all in all" now? As the Absolute One the answer is a resounding "yes". But viewed from the point of view of the time-process, "no". In the time-process of the manifested universe it is the "Son," the Cosmic Logos, the "Deific Mind" who is the "Informing Active Principle, and who thus has to be considered as differentiated from the "Father," the ONE. This Cosmic Logos, this "Deific Mind" is the creative power who speaks forth the "Word" which by the power of "sound" and "vibration" of this "Divine Thought" that rings into existence the objective worlds. This is quite clearly stated in the opening verses of St. Johns Gospel:

" All things were made by (or through) him (the Logos; the Krst/Karest/Christ); and without him was not anything made that bath been made."

Paul also states the Logos doctrine in Colossians 1:15...

" (the Logos) Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation; for in him (the Krst/Karest/Christ) were all things created, in the heavens and upon the earth, things visible and things invisible, whether thrones or dominions or principalities or powers, all things have been created through him, and unto him; and he is before all things, and in him all things consist."

Now the practical application of this to our "fallen" nature is clear enough. Humanity, like everything else in the universe, must return to its source. It is right before us all along; "dust to dust". This simply means humanity must regain, individually and collectively, that Spiritual nature which belonged to it when it was first brought into being by the Cosmic Logos who, as the inner divine Self of each individual, is still an active principle...the "light that lighteth every man coming into the world," and the "Christ in you" of St. Paul.

This fact of mankind's "outgoing and return" is stated by the New Testament Christ in the parable of the Prodigal Son. The parable is applicable both to the individual and to Humanity as a whole. But the Prodigal Son parable is not new; it is but the rephrasing of the ancient Religious Myths of "Descent of Inanna" and other "gods" and "goddesses" who, as pictures for the Soul and the Krst-Soul, likewise "fell into matter" only to struggle in their "awaking" and subsequent return home of their Spiritual Father. Like all, they, in their "fall" from their "home in Heaven", were as if "dead" only to be "alive" and "resurrected from the dead" once again when they returned to Heaven. It is they who were rewarded for the humbling of themselves when they, like the great Kenosis passage in Philippians 2, were "crucified on the cross of matter" in their "incarnation".

Phil 2:8-9 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross (crucified in matter). (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is Humanity to-day in bulk but a Prodigal, wasting his substance in riotous, lush, opulent living, in attachment and in fidelity to the "things of this world," in wars, battles, and rebellions, in tyranny, despotism, greed and oppression? Is it not the very husks of life on which the great majority of Mankind feed today in the feverish rush for excitement, or in the struggle to obtain these?

Well, that is the lesson which mankind, pictured in the Prodigal Son allegory, has to learn, both individually and collectively through bitter experience. And it can only be learn collectively as it is learned individually.

Answer for yourself: Has not the experience of Humanity been bitter enough these millions of years past in which he has sunk from his spiritual estate into physical matter and generation?

Yet there are perhaps today more individuals than ever before who have perceived the possibilities of their Spiritual nature, and have girded up their loins for the return journey to their "Fathers home." It is not merely to the Christian religion that these belong; but all religions of mankind for all have some "kernel of truth" no matter what they are called. They existed thousands of years before what is known as Christianity ever took form or shape in history; and by re-incarnating these ancient Religions carry forward both their own evolution and that of the Race.

One thing I noticed that you, the truth seeker, must understand as well. Mankind is a necessary part of this great Comic process. He has " come out from the One", and must inevitably return thereto; and we have seen that this "outgoing" is allegorically set forth in the Genesis narrative where it is represented as a "Fall". Let us not forget that this "Fall into matter" is called by Christianity today as the "Fall into Sin"; let us as well forget that "matter" has the potential to hinder the Spiritual awaking and the rise of these descended Souls. This opposition to Spiritual evolution and maturity is in reality our true "opposition", call it the "adversary or Satan" if you like. This adversary can be called Sin, but the "incarnation" does not have to be a bondage to "Sin". Paul says it best:

Rom 7:9-10 9 For I was alive without the law (the Law of Incubation....the Law of incarnation) once

(before the descent into "matter"): but when the commandment came (the Law of incubation...the Law of incarnation), sin revived, and I died (incarnated into "matter"). 10 And the commandment, which was ordained to life (incarnational experience need not be a life of sin but of righteousness in order to "ascend"), I found to be unto death (choosing sin over righteousness). (KJV)

Thus the need for the Torah, the Hebrew word for "instruction", in order to train the Soul for life's test whereby at its completion the Soul can graduate and move up the Ladder and Tree of Life "home". All though the Old Testament then, we have a representation in a more or less allegorical or semi-historical form of Mankind in his "fallen condition". So we see the need for this "instruction" for our Soul in this great Cosmic Cycle of manifestation in which Mankind has thus to play his part; in this "Outbreathing and Inbreathing of Brahma" and this "crucifixion of our Souls on this cross of matter". Looking at it from the more material point of view, it is the evolution of a vast Cosmos out of some homogeneous Primordial Substance (Egypt called it Nun), to which it ultimately returns. Now we see and understand that Joshua, the cognitive word for Yeshua in Hebrew, is the "son of Nun"; the Deific Mind, the Logos, the Divine Thought, is birthed from this "Nun".

Answer for yourself: Who or what is "Nun"?

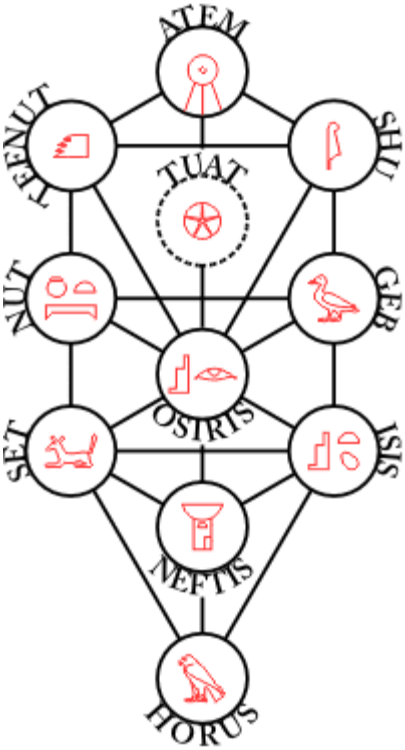
THE SOUL IN AMENTA #11

We left off the earlier article stating the need for the Torah, the Hebrew word for "instruction", in order to train the Soul for life's test whereby at its completion the Soul can graduate and move up the Ladder and Tree of Life "home". All though the Old Testament then, we have a representation in a more or less allegorical or semi-historical form of Mankind in his "fallen condition". So we see the need for this "instruction" for our Soul in this great Cosmic Cycle of manifestation in which Mankind has thus to play his part; in this "Outbreathing and Inbreathing of Brahma" and this "crucifixion of our Souls on this cross of matter". Looking at it from the more material point of view, it is the evolution of a vast Cosmos and Consciousness out of some homogeneous Primordial Substance (Egypt called it Nun), to which it ultimately returns. Now we see and understand that Joshua, the cognitive word for Yeshua in Hebrew, is the "son of Nun"; the Deific Mind, the Logos, the Divine Thought, is birthed from this "Nun".

Answer for yourself: Who or what is "Nun"?

The Egyptians believed that before the world was formed, there was a watery mass of dark, directionless chaos.

Nun, an Egyptian god, "neteru", and one of the many "Living Energies" that make up the One God, was portrayed as a bearded man with a blue or green body, symbolizing water (the idea of potential "matter") and fertility (the idea of potential life). From the beginning there was nothing but a water chaos called Nun, and from that came the god Atum, who had created himself. He made the earth-god Geb ("matter", no longer an idea or potential) and his sister (and wife) Nut, goddess of the sky ("Living Energies" now manifested). To hold up and fill the Sky they had two children, the boy Shu, the god of the air, and a girl Tefnut, goddess of moisture and rain. This family of four was the very foundation upon which the world existed as they represented: earth, water, air and the sky.



The "Mind of Krst", the "Mind of God's Christ", the "informer" to "matter", is the "Son of God"; the "Son of the cosmos". No wonder Joshua, is the son of Nun. No wonder the "Savior of the Soul" is the "Son of Nun". No wonder the "Mind of Christ" coming to "seek and save the Soul which had "died in matte" had to happen. No wonder Jesus as the Krst/Karest/Christ, the personification of the Deific Mind of God "imprisoned in matter", is this same "Son of Nun". It truly is amazing just what a little knowledge behind the words in our Bibles will enlighten our minds to these high Metaphysical Spiritual concepts. Even physical science is now teaching that physical matter, the physical atom is evolved out of the Ether, and will presently "return" to that etheric state. This "Ether" is the active substrate of the entire cosmos. This "Ether" are energy potential fields that form the basis of all "matter" and energy in our universe. The operation of these "Ether" reactions causes wave-like field gradients (spatial concentration patterns) to emerge and form the observable quantum level structures and physical phenomena (e.g., subatomic particles with mass, charge, spin, and force field effects and electromagnetic waves) .But "Ether" is an antiquated word that needs to be updated. The root to the concept of atom in ancient India is derived from the classification of material world in five basic elements by ancient Indian philosophers. These five elements in all Creation and such served as a classification existed since the Vedic times, around 3000 B.C.E. and even before in ancient Egypt. These five elements were the earth, fire, air, water, and "Ether" or Outer Space (aksha). These elements were also associated with human sensory perceptions: earth with smell, air with feeling, fire with vision, water with taste and ether/space with sound and vibrational "energy".

Some of our more philosophical modern scientists having had to abandon the concept of indestructible physical matter are even beginning to postulate that the Primordial Substance is not even the "Ether"/"Space", but may be in the nature of "mindstuff" - "Cosmic Thought"! The activity of this primordial mind-stuff- or, as I should prefer to call it, Cosmic Consciousness and Thought very well be called ideation (Consciousness); and it is only one step from this to the Gnostic concept of the Logos as the creative principle, the active word, or Demiurgos, speaking forth or "thinking forth" the whole of the manifested universe. Science today and Religions of antiquity are thus "tied together" today. The idea also embodies a concept of the occult power of sound (vibrational energy). This is a whole study in itself. I refer to "thought" which is "spoken" through movement and vibrational waves and energies at various levels that bring "creation into existence". Like the characters in our dreams and our dreamworld altogether, what are they made up of but our mind. The substance is the Great Mind, this "Living Energy". In every atom lies the substance, this "Living Conscious Energy", not part of the substance but the entire infinite substance of "Living Consciousness" is in every atom. Yet its not actually in the atom because the atom is not real at least not in the ultimate material reality of things. The atom and every form whether physical, spiritual or whatever is the manifestation. The substance, this "Living Invisible Conscious Life and Energy" vibrates, but it doesn't actually vibrate; it is the Vibration. Vibration causes the manifestation. Sound is the effect of vibration, Sight is the effect of vibration. Thought is the effect of vibration. The same vibration causes different perceptions, and different ways of perceiving the one vibration, and even gives the perception of perceivers outside of the substance which is the vibration. This vibration, this substance never had a beginning; it always "was" and "is". Now off to the psych ward or at least on with this study.

Life is not static; it is generative, reproductive, forward -moving. It creates anew, in its turn, at its level, and passes the stream of these vibrational creative forces on down the line. Thus the succession of waves of projection runs down the scale, each one carrying the formative force one surge further out. Such is the "Fall" into "matter" which is terribly mischaracterized in the Christian Bible as "Sin". On and on it goes, this "fall" of "Living Consciousness" and "Divine Though", establishing the kingdoms of nature and the living citizens being on each level and plane of them. The contiguous planes form a link or connection from top to bottom of the series, and this is the golden chain of life. And each level bears a definite relation to its neighbor on either side. This is termed the Law of Incubation or "incarnation" which we have seen before. As you can see each plane of "Living Energy" and "existence" is a "mother" to the life on the plane above it and a "father" to that of the plane below it. This is symbolized in the Ankh where the womb of "material existence" on eachplane is "impregnated" with the "fire" and "Living Energy" of the "father" on the plane above it and so on it goes in its "descent". Each plane of "existence" receives from above the seed germs of higher life and implants them in the womb of its soil, or "matter", gestates them and eventually gives them their new birth to the "plane below". This is the function of motherhood. And "matter" (Latin mater, mother) is the universal mother. But, having received from above, it also gives the impulse to the order below; and as giver it is active, aggressive, generative and serves as the father function. Feminine to life above, masculine to life beneath, it is the link and bridge between two worlds. This event was termed by the ancients the "crucifixion of God on the cross of matter" and thus was the gods crucified in Space.

Precisely on this intermediate line, sharing the inclinations of the lower and capabilities of the upper, and "cultivating the crops on both sides of the horizon" as stated in The Egyptian Book of the Dead, stands the conscious mind of the human. This is the Soul in man. It is not his highest Spirit, but it is the ray or fragment of that spirit that is projected downwards and linked with the animal sensorium and the thinking mind. It is the Christ that is crucified on the cross of matter in us. Being the resultant combination of the "Living Energies of Spirit" unified with those of sense, it becomes the "one new man" of St. Paul's description, born of the wedlock of the two. It is thus born out of the blending of the two natures in man. It is the Christ coming to his new birth in our experience and in our nature. Paul states that he groans and travails with the Christians until "Christ be formed within you." Our life of combined Spirit and flesh on Earth is to give birth to the Christ consciousness in us. This is the radical fundamental principle in all religion. This Christ Selfhood in us is generated by the friction between the two natures! This "Mind of Christ in us as animal natures is born out of the struggle between Soul and body, it is produced by the tension between the two poles of being, positive and negative, or Spirit and "Matter", in the constitution of man. The animal in us, the "Gentile", is to become Israel since Israel means "one who struggles with God" (the indwelling Christ and Deific Mind of God incarnated in this animal body and "crucified on the cross of matter"). The Greek philosopher Heraclitus said "War is the father of all things." All things are the resultant of the struggle of two opposite forces, which are everywhere ultimately Spirit and "matter". At the point of conflict between the two values are brought to conscious recognition. Life itself becomes conscious only on the horizon line between these two elements. It is the function of matter to bring Spirit to an awareness of itself. Spirit is consciousness, but it is not self-consciousness until, by the mystery of life, it is made aware of itself by material limitation. In humanity the Christ nature is to be made conscious of its own divine Selfhood. It is to be brought by human experience from merely potential divinity to divinity actualized, that is, made aware of its Deific being. It is the struggle to inform matter with its living energies, the struggle against the inertia of matter, that calls forth the latent faculties of spirit to self-recognition. Matter causes soul to exert its unused powers, and so evolves them through exercise. Thus Spirit comes to know itself.

All values in life on any plane are born as the result of the union of male and female natures, be it in physics, chemistry, psychology or spiritual love. Knowledge itself is born of the union of subject and object in an equation. The word "know" comes from the Egyptian ANKH, meaning "life" and "tie." I speak of the birth of "new life" which we have seen symbolized in the Ankh and the intersection and impregnation of two planes of "Living Energy" thus producing a "3rd life form" which we spoke of "ascending " up this "Ladder of Heaven". Thence "knowing" is an act involving the tying together of two things, subject and object, in a living relation. Again there is a birth at the borderline where Spirit, or conscious subject, and "matter" or known object, meet in harmony. A poet has said that "heaven and earth have kissed each other" while others have likened this to a marriage of the body and mind of mankind. The Holy Spirit and the virgin Maria ("matter") came together to give birth to the Christos (the Mind of Christ in "matter"). This is all that the legend of Joseph and Mary meant in scriptural allegory. For Joseph is the original Egyptian-Hebrew name for the divine counterpart and in Hebrew means "Yahweh has added", and Mary is the personification of the Universal Mother, "matter". Matter ever has mothered the rebirth of Spiritual Consciousness. This is the function of matter as mother ("mother" being mater in Latin) to which Paul refers when he says: "For the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain until now," laboring to bring forth "the Sons of God," who are elsewhere "the sons of mind." The Christly principle of intellect was being gestated in the womb of mother nature, and the evolutionary office of matter was to bring it to birth in the fullness of time. Nature, which had created the animal, was next to create man, the human, whose mark of differentiation from the beast was the faculty of mind.

The wedding of the two cosmic elements and the birth of their Son, the Christos, could take place only where the two parents could have vital communion with each other. It could therefore occur only where Spirit could impregnate "matter" and "by crucified in matter" with its virile power, only where it could stamp its image upon pliable substance. This opportunity was provided by life only at one place on this planet, - in the physical body of man. Only here do Soul and flesh have affective intercourse, for only here is there the condition of exact equilibration demanded and provided for the birth of the "Krst Mind" and furthering of the self-awareness of the Divine Consciousness of Self. This was accomplished in the "fall" of the gods from Heaven.

A few statements about this "descent" before we go on. In ancient knowledge, we have mentioned this before but the law of seven was often introduced in very brief discussion of the seven ancient planets as we have seen. In this usage, the term planet had a somewhat different meaning than it does today in that it included the Sun and Moon. The word planet meant wanderer, and there are seven objects in the sky, as seen by the naked eye, that wander against the background of the fixed stars of our galaxy. These seven ancient wanderers are the Sun, Moon, Mars, Venus, Mercury, Jupiter, and Saturn. In general, but not always, the seven planets were arranged in the order: Moon, Mercury, Venus, Sun, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, going out from the Earth. This is the same as the clockwise circulation on the enneagram we saw above, with the crucial addition that the Sun is seen as lying between Venus and Mars. The planetary paths were imagined as taking place on great spheres, included one within the other, so the seven planets were often called the seven spheres, and references to an eighth sphere, for example, referred to the level above the planetary domain, the sphere of the fixed stars. The enneagram represents a cosmos, and the following enneagram shows the seven of the Mesocosmos, with the higher cosmos, the Sun or Deuterocosmos, in the center, representing its origin or birth.

"Cosmos" is a Greek word meaning something like "world order", and is used to refer to a self-perfecting whole. Seven cosmoses are specifically mentioned in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom, ranging from the largest, the Protocosmos, to smaller cosmoses, with names such as Deuterocosmos, Tritocosmos, and Microcosmos. The human being is said to be one of these cosmoses, but, an unfinished one: a cosmos capable of completion or perfection but not completed without personal efforts of a certain kind. In this view, the Sun itself forms a cosmos, called the Deuterocosmos, and the planets of our solar system form another cosmos, called the Mesocosmos. "Mankind" forms another cosmos, called variously Microcosmos, etc.

In the ancient Spiritual Wisdom there existed a general teaching from nation to nation, from Sacred Book to Sacred Book, that the human Soul, a part of this "Living Energy" and "Divine Thought" of the whole cosmos, at birth had descended and "fell" to the Earth from beyond the seven spheres, or the 7 planets, acquiring the qualities and part of each of the "Living Energies" from each of these spheres and planets in turn as it approached and "incarnated" into Mother Earth. The Soul therefore is a "microcosm" of the "macrocosm". This "crucified Soul in matter" carried the "image of the parent Living Energy" of the whole cosmos; yet an "unfinished image" of the Logos was incarnated in Earth's clay and "matter". Thus also the need for the "formation of the Mind of Christ" in the Earthly incarnation of the Soul. At death of the biological body, the Soul takes the reverse trip as we saw in the descent of Inanna myth, shedding the qualities of each sphere in turn until it emerged free of the planetary world and fate. This is the "stripping metaphor" which we mentioned earlier in the descent of Inanna into "incarnation" and her "descent into Hades/Hell/Amenta/pit/Sheol/Tartarus/inferno, etc." So at death of the biological body it was believed that in the ascent of the Soul that it ascended to the Moon first, then Mercury, and so on up the "Ladder to Heaven".

Answer for yourself: But what are the qualities ascribed to these planetary spheres in ancient writing? How are we to make sense of all of this?

One way we can determine them is to find the descriptions of the various qualities of each planetary sphere as these qualities are acquired or dropped by the descending or ascending Soul. One description of the descent of the Soul in the ancient writings goes like this:

In the sphere of Saturn it obtains reason and understanding, called logistikon and theoretikon; in Jupiter's sphere, the power to act, called praktikon; in Mars' sphere, a bold spirit or thymikon; in the sun's sphere, sense-perception and imagination, aesthetikon and phantastikon; in Venus's sphere, the impulse of passion, epithymetikon; in Mercury's sphere, the ability to speak and interpret, hermeneutikon; and in the lunar sphere, the function of molding and increasing bodies, phytikon.
(Macrobius, Commentary on the Dream of Scipio*)*

And one description of the ascent of the Soul goes like this:

Thus a man starts to rise up through the harmony of the cosmos. To the first plane he surrenders the activity of growth and diminution; to the second the means of evil, trickery now being inactive; to the third covetous deceit, now inactive, and to the fourth the eminence pertaining to a ruler, being now without avarice; to the fifth impious daring and reckless audacity and to the sixth evil impulses for wealth, all of these being now inactive, and to the seventh plane the falsehood which waits in ambush. (Corpus Hermeticum, Book I)

It is interesting to note in the examples given here that the Soul acquires the positive characteristics of the spheres in its descent, and drops the negative characteristics on its ascent. To summarize the characteristics we've encountered so far:

	Positive Attributes	Negative Attributes
Moon	molding and increasing bodies	growth and dimunition
Mercury	ability to speak, interpret	evil, trickery
Venus	impulse of passion	covetous deceit
Sun	sense–perception, imagination	eminence, avarice
Mars	bold spirit	impious daring, reckless audacity
Jupiter	power to act	evil impulses for wealth
Saturn	reason, understanding	falsehood in ambush

In the classic works attributed to Hermes Trismegistus, collected under the title Corpus Hermeticum, we come across a creation myth in which the seven types of humanity are created with respect to the seven planets:

Poimandres said: "This is the mystery which has been kept secret until this day. For Nature, united with Man, has brought forth a wonder of wonders. Man, as I told you, was of the Father and of spirit and had the nature of harmony of the seven spheres. So Nature did not wait, but immediately brought forth seven men corresponding to the natures of the seven powers, beyond gender and sublime."

Answer for yourself: Can we find this "explanation" of the Soul and types of personalities in our New Testament? Yes we can. Watch this.

A curious episode in the Acts of the Apostles, seems to indicate that Paul was a Mercury, Barnabas a Jovial (Jupiter), and that the people encountered had a general knowledge of type at that time, even the author of Acts.

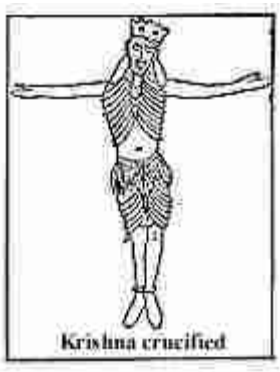
And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker. Acts 14:12



Here in our own New Testament is proof positive of what I am saying was the "religious beliefs" of those who were associated with the New Testament some 2,000 years or longer ago which we read today without "Gnosis" or "knowledge" in our Bible. It appears that the understanding of the Soul by those who lived in this day and even wrote these ancient writings is completely different from the beliefs of the Soul which we inherited by Rome who officially does not believe in the immortality of the Soul as did mankind since its beginning up and until the rise of the nightly Roman Empire. THINK!

Now back on tract. At each stage of descent of this "Living Energy" (Soul) into "material existence" (termed Hades, Hell, the inferno, Sheol, Amenta, or Earth) the primal impulse weakens in its force. Each lower level of this descent is more dense than the one above it, so the "energy" and "power" must be lowered. The living bodies and entities at each level act like electric transformers, changing a high current into lesser currents. The Greek philosophers say in this connection that "the gods distribute divinity", scattering its higher units abroad from plane to plane, the units multiplying in number, but diminishing in power, as the stream flows on". This is what the ancient theology connotes by "the river of life". The gods poured out their life (the ancients connected this idea of "life" to the "blood") for the vivifying of all lower beings and planes of existence, and the lower planes partake of this bounty or "grace" to the measure of their receptivity.

Answer for yourself: Now for a big, big question. As seen, the gods and goddesses, these "neteru", these manifestations of "Living Energies", in their "fall" down the Ladder of Heaven, were believed to have "poured out their lives" and parts of their "Energies" for the lower levels of existence and since the ancients likened this pouring out of these Energies to the very "blood of the gods and goddesses" then when "crucified on the cross of matter" can you see that this is where the ancients obtained their idea that the "God of all collective Living Energies and Energetic manifestations of the cosmos shed His blood" them (for you and me) on the "cross of matter" As the Sun, a symbol for God, was seen shedding its light and warmth upon mankind in order than man might "live" and have "life and life abundantly" so likewise the Sun, recognized by the ancients as but a symbol for the "ONE Living Energy" of the cosmos, pours out equally His "life" for mankind and did so in the "fall" from Heaven thus humbling himself and in so doing suffering a "death" of sorts in material manifestation on various levels of the cosmos. This "incarnation and impregnation" of God into "matter", this "vibration of Divine Thought" that culminated in material existence, was termed by the ancients as God "shedding His life" and "shedding His blood" upon the Earth, and as blood contains the vital principle, no wonder we find when we look that all the ancient esoteric schools taught the symbol of pouring out blood signifies "in picture form" this God pouring out His vitalizing energy for all life forms, mankind included. There you have it! The mystery of the "cross" and the "crucifixion" of the Divine Thought, this Mind of God, this Logos as God's Christ, solved (W.J. Coleville, Kabbalah and the Harmony of the Opposites, p. 38-39)! The "Jesus Story" solved; it should never have been this hard to find the truth but Rome destroyed all of this precious knowledge in their domination of the minds of mankind and the world from the 2nd through the 5th century.

Luke 22:20 20 Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you. (KJV)

Now we see the truth of the statement never before realized in its fullness. This descent of "Living Energy" into "matter" is all that ever been meant by the "shed blood" (or life) of the gods, given for the life of the worlds. All old theologies of the world attest that the blood of the gods, or of God, mixed with the clay of earth, makes the "red earth" which is given as the etymological signification of Adam in Hebrew, i.e., mankind....Deity mixed together Spirit ("Living Energy" which fell into "matter" to make mankind). We speak of the birth of the baby Soul in "matter" wrapped in swaddling clothes of material death and incarnation.

"For I have heard from one of the wise that we are now dead; and that the body is our sepulchre."* (Plato).

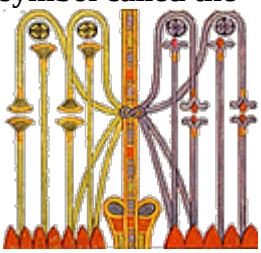
The Soul of man is the seed of Divinity which as "fallen" or gone to its "death" in the soil and "matter" of the human kingdom. The "Christ" has followed in search of the Soul. We are "crucified with Christ" for certain; but not in the way that you have been taught. It is much greater than that; we have been robbed for Divine Truth that should bring tears to your eyes when awakened to the divine love of God to created and live within us thereby sharing His Consciousness with us. What a gift, what a joy, what a responsibility to grow the "Christ within us" and unite all of Egypt within our being (Spiritual and animal nature). Such was the reason for the crucifixion of "the Krst" in the first place; self awareness of God and our Souls of our very selves thereby bringing the "material existences" of the cosmos with us to a Divine Harmony. It is about time; but impossible without knowledge of the truth.

1 Tim 2:4-6 4 Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. 5 For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; 6 Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. (KJV)

2 Tim 3:7 7 Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. (KJV)

It is time that the lion lay down with the lamb; that Divine Harmony between animal and Mind be established and the "one new man" be birthed thanks to the "crucifixion of the Christ in you and me". The greatest truth that can be told to you and me is that our bodies are each functioning to gestate a god "within". As said by Paul, the Krst/Christ is being "formed within" each mortal body.



Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

It is mankind's responsibility in this Earthly incarnation, as Souls that carry that "Divine Spark/the blood of God", to weave together of his natures into one in this Earthly incarnation; both his mortal and immortal nature.

Eph 2:15-16 15 Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, ...; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; 16 And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross (incarnation and death in "matter"), having slain the enmity thereby: (KJV)

Let us again learn from ancient Egypt. On the left notice if you will the ancient Egyptian symbol called the "Sema". This was a rendering of the lungs attached to the windpipe. As a hieroglyph this symbol represents the unification of Upper and Lower Egypt. Other symbols are often added to further illustrate unification. Often the Sema was bound together with two plants as seen on the right.

Answer for yourself: Why did ancient Egypt bound the symbol for the lungs (breath and Spirit connected to the body and "matter") together by two plants? Why not one or three or four or twenty? Why two?

The "two" plants were chosen specifically because one (papyrus) represents Lower Egypt (the animal nature) and the second lotus plant represents Upper Egypt (the Spiritual nature). Here before us we are seeing symbolically represented the Divine Concept later repeated in Ephesians 2:15-16. There truly is nothing "new under the Sun"; expect of course when Rome comes along and radically reinterprets this precious Spiritual Revelation "bound intact" by mankind the world over for over 15,000 years or longer. In a short 300 years almost all traces of this ancient Spiritual wisdom vanished and was burned out of existence or driven underground. The bodies of millions of people who would not bow to this purge of Divine Spiritual Truth litter the history of the emerging Roman Church. Millions feigned and appeared to be "Christians" in order to not be put to death but at the same time were "closet believers" in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. The Knights Templars are but one great example among hundreds.

In other representations and depictions of this Spiritual goal, this Divine Harmony between Spirit and "matter", we find two gods, Set (the animal nature) and Horus (the Spiritual Nature, the Krst-Soul) binding the Sema (the Soul, breath or "wind" [lungs remember?] of "God-Spirit" & "animal-matter "together using again the papyrus and lotus as seen below on the left. In other representations we find two gods binding the Sema together using papyrus and lotus plants. Thus we see Set and Horus "making peace" thus creating this "one new man" of which Paul or a Pauline writer speaks about in Ephesians. In Plato's Timeaus and other ancient documents twelve junior gods, who were sparks of the eternal Flame of cosmic mind, came to earth to lift up humans from their animal nature to realize their divine Souls. In the Pauline literature in the New Testament we find that this is the same Spiritual concept only retold some 450 years later. Our Earthly task, according to Paul, is to link together the two natures in "one new man", bringing to an end in a final "reconciliation", "the battle of Armageddon", the perpetual warfare between the carnal mind of the animal and the Spiritual mind of the god." Paul said

1 Cor 3:16 16 Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? (KJV)

1 Cor 6:19 19 What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? (KJV)

2 Cor 13:5 5 Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? (KJV)

The Divine Truth is that a fragment of Divinity had been "buried" and lodged in the holy of holies of the temple of each human body. Thus the "cave" symbolism used so often by the ancients in describing the "incarnation of God into matter" as well as the birth of "the Christ Mind" in humanity. Emanuel had come to dwell with mankind; never limited to but one supposed historical person as Rome has maintained. God has come to live in the "matter" of humanity, born to "die" and be "crucified" on the "cross of matter" and in so doing gave His "life" that we might "live abundantly" even when we abide in Hades/Hell/Amenta/Earth. The allegory of the birth in the stable or cave (symbol for the darkness of "matter") was devised to keep mankind in triumphant memory of his own divinity. That is why "the baby Christ" was wrapped in swaddling clothes in our Bible and why his life was sought to be destroyed by Herod and other Kings in the other mythos of the nations concerning their "incarnated Sungods"; He like the Soul has come to "die" in material incarnation; only to later "resurrect" and "ascend" once this Heavenly task is completed satisfactorily. But this glorious truth has been lost.

The concept of the god within is well stated in The Litany of the Sun, inscribed on the Tombs of the Kings of ancient Thebes: "The Kingly Osiris [the Christ] is an intelligent Essence. His Limbs conduct Him; His 'Fleshes' open the way for Him. Those who are born from him create Him (the Christ being formed in us in our Earthly lives). They rest when they cause the Kingly Osiris to be born (the Christ being formed in you and me). Bridging thousands of years nothing has changed in the religions of mankind; that is until the persecution and destruction of the earliest Chrestian Gnostics by Rome and the "light of Spiritual truth is extinguished" by the Roman Christianity.

The myth of Christ's birth in a manger read each year at the Winter Solstice (the time of the death of the Sun, a symbol of the "Living Energy" of God which has gone to its "death" (incarnation into "matter"), at Christmas. This event speaks no more of the Divinity of humanity; it praises the godly nature of but one person who is himself but a Divine Allegory, Godly Symbol, Deific Metaphor, and a timeless representative picture for the whole of humanity. That is why ancient Spiritual Wisdom and the Mysteries depicted the Sungods and Goddesses "crucified". What a great loss for mankind to have lost his "roots" in Heaven above and the purpose of his Soul's incarnation.

There exist various accounts from the ancient world of the god being dismembered (the Law of Dismemberment). Osiris is the prototype and "pattern" for all others that follow. He was cut up into fourteen pieces by Typhon or Set (the destructive force, "matter", animal nature which houses the Soul), to allow for his entry into "matter". Isis, the great mother, gives birth to Horus, son of Osiris and the god (the Krst/Karest/Christ) risen into our earthly human life. Following the "pattern" Dionysus was torn apart then made whole by Demeter. There were many other gods dismembered as well. When seen in this light, the meaning of the crucifixion is obvious. It was not an historical event, but a retelling of the age old story of the death of the god to allow it to enter the human plane of existence. The crucifixion of god into "matter" is "your story", "my story"; not the story of but one person who supposedly lived some 2000 years ago but which no unforged and uncontested evidence exists today, but it is the story of all of humanity. In fact, the crucifix only came into being with Pope Gregory late in the 6th century. For their first 500 hundred years Christians used the cross as their major symbol. The cross is an ancient symbol depicting the union and infusion of Spirit (Living Energy) and "matter" and originally applied to every person; not just one person to the exclusion of the many. The "cross" depicts the marriage of God and "matter" where they become "one flesh". It was common for bread to be used as symbol of the god's body and Divine powers to be transferred to humans. The bread has to be broken (the gods cut up and torn apart and often eaten) and then multiplied in order to reach all humans. This is the hidden truth behind the Eucharist. Here is the fragmentation of the god announced at the heart of the Christian Eucharist! The body of the god in the form of His Son, Horus, the "Messa", the Messiah broken for us, the Messiah who is "formed in you and me"! The main symbol in all Christian ritual is the breaking of a piece of bread into fragments and distributing them out among the communicants! This is the hidden symbol behind the crucifixion of God "in matter on the cross of matter" and his body being "broken" for us and "falling" into "matter" (us).

It was the purpose of the ancient mysteries to bring to life this Divine Spark in these animal bodies so that it would illuminate life on this earth and bring peace between the animal and Spiritual nature of mankind as seen when Set and Horus came to peace between themselves. The war was over and the Divine Harmony realized. We have seen that this Divine Spark and "Living Energy" which was "crucified on the cross of matter" was symbolized by various figures at different times and in different places. Their names were Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules and so on. They were all "pagan" Christs but Divine Truth told through each of these religious myths. Regardless of how negatively they have been represented or terribly misunderstood by Christianity the important thing to remember is the Heavenly Truth behind these personifications and Divine allegories and metaphors which gave man the "key" to his true identity, his existence, and his future. The philosophers of the ancient world knew that these figures were symbolic, and not historical men; it is we today in Christianity who misunderstand these "dying and rising gods". We have seen that some 2,000 years ago in the area of the eastern Mediterranean, the Divine Soul or Spark within was called the Christ (from Karest or Krst, Egyptian for the anointed mummy) which was the "tomb for the Earthly incarnation of the Soul". We have seen that early Gnostic Chrestianity (Christianity) was a re-statement of this same ancient wisdom which would have remained the dominant understanding of the Divine Realm had not Rome emerged with their plan of world conquest and control. We have seen that Christians of any intelligence during the first two centuries at least did not regard their movement as the bearer of the first light into the heathen darkness, but only the republication of very ancient truth.

Alvin Kuhn says it so eloquently in his Lost Light: An Interpretation of Ancient Scriptures: "The indwelling god is himself being brought to birth within the womb of humanity. Each individual is gestating a divinity within the deeps of his own nature. Christianity has fervently exhorted us to look into the empyrean to find the unapproachable God. All the while the infant deity slumbers unheeded within the heart. Christianity has largely nullified the force of St. Paul's almost frantic cry to us: 'Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is within you?'"

We have seen previously in our studies that the ancient scriptures talk about the Soul being trapped in the prison of the body; having symbolically "died" therein. We have seen that the ancient believed that the way out of this Earthly tomb and prison of the Soul was not to despise the body and seek a life of pure Spirit; asceticism was never the answer. Mankind was to recognize that the had an obligation to the animal who was lending the Soul his body for the Soul's advancement. The Soul was to recognize in its Earthly incarnation and "fall into matter" that it had come to transfigure and transform these animal natures. According to the ancient Egyptians and Greek thinkers like Plato, Proclus, Plotinus, and many others, Hades, Hell, and Amenta was not a place of punishment for departed human Souls. It is this planet Earth, which is the death and "cross of crucifixion" of the Divine Soul. The gods, the Christs, both male and female, descended into "flesh" and in so doing came to die on the "cross of matter" so that we mortals might live. "Death" is a transition from one state to another. When humans gain the truth about their very existence and come to the knowledge of their true identities, Souls trapped in "matter", then they can birth the god within them and thus uplift Earthly existence. As long as people are ignorant of their Divine purpose, the gods are dead and in need of "resurrection" within these animal bodies. These gods are in need of a "second birth" and a "resurrection" from the "living death" of Earthly incarnation and imprisonment in these bodies of death. Thus many of these gods were depicted as born and placed in caves in swaddling clothes, burial clothes, which depict the need for rebirth. This Earth has become Hades, Hell, Amenta, or the Underworld to the gods. This incarnation into "matter", this "crucifixion on the cross of matter" was the "descent into Hades" which many of these gods were shown to take in various religious myths the world over. When mankind awakens to the Divine Soul and the Krst/Karest/Christ within, we bring it to life, and in the words of Paul "Death is swallowed up in victory." Hell as a place of punishment in an after-life is simply a teaching of repression, widely used by the Churches to bolster their authority over mankind through fear and ignorance whereby they repressed the ancient teaching of reincarnation. We have already seen that the Early Church Fathers can be seen to believe in reincarnation before the rise of the Latin Fathers of the later Roman church. A just God does not deal out eternal punishment. The worst "punishments" we face are in this life. If we do not nurture the Divine Soul here and now, we punish ourselves by not achieving our true potential and the goal of our incarnation.

An understanding of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom gives a correct understanding of Judgement. Judgement occurs here and now on this earth plane of existence.

"Neither above man with the angels, nor below him with the beasts, does moral responsibility reside. It inheres solely in the kingdom of man, who is poised, the only creature in evolution so placed, on the two arms of the balance between mind and matter. Mankind on the horizon is not only nailed on the cross of matter; he is being weighed on the scales of the balance, to see if his heart is so spiritualized as to be light as a feather! Man's heart against a feather, and his fate hanging thereon" (Alvin Kuhn, The Lost Light: an interpretation of ancient scriptures, p. 481).

Before we begin with new information let us recap one more thing. We have previously shown that the Divine Soul and God's Deific Mind (Krst/Karest/Christ) "falls" to Earth and incarnates in human beings. We saw that this was called by the ancients "Lucifer", the light bringer, coming to Earth. The Divine Soul becomes trapped in the animal body, and it is very easy for it to be overwhelmed by the animal nature. When then happens it becomes brutish and beastial or "satanic". This is the true meaning of the Beast 666 or Satan (the Adversary). But Christianity created a being of pure evil called "Satan" and gave it a life of its own apart from its existence within this Divine Thought. It's has been a perpetual puzzle to Christians why the all powerful God tolerates absolute evil. But it is a problem created by Christians themselves. God is absolute, beyond good and evil. "Good" and "evil" are terms that apply to the human plane of existence. This view does not advocate moral relativism or an "anything goes" attitude. Killing, stealing, lying and so on are wrong and not to be advocated. Holding a view of the existence of absolute evil leads to the persecutions and intolerance that are all too prevalent in Christian history. We showed in prior studies that up until the advent of Zoroastrianism that absolute "good" and "evil" consisted solely within the One God "only"; only later with Zoroaster was "evil" separated from this One God and given a beginning entirely apart from the One True God. This was a gross travesty of mischaracterization of Divine Truth and a grievous error. The Divine Soul needs the animal nature in order to progress. It needs sin as an opponent to wrestle with so that it can develop its powers and overcome the trials of life in the purification of itself. Sin is a necessary evil that man as a "Living Soul" was put here to "overcome"; it serves as necessary purpose for the Soul's Spiritual Evolution. William Blake wrote: "Without Contraries is no progression" (William Blake, Marriage of Heaven and Hell). Christianity does not understand this dynamic process, and thereby makes it virtually impossible for the Divine Soul to achieve its evolutionary task as long as mankind is allowed to set in the bleachers and be a spectator to Creation instead of being in the "game of life".

Now we move on to new exciting knowledge of the Soul and its existence in Amenta.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #12

Our studies concerning the Soul in Amenta continue as we look into the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the Soul and its Earthly incarnation.

It is claimed by some respectable schools of Occultists (Hidden Knowledge) that a large portion of Kabbalistic teaching is traceable to Egyptian sources and that the treasures which the Israelites took out of Egypt at the time of the Exodus were "Spiritual" and "Intellectual" far more than material. Be this as it may, a study of comparative language and philogoy soon rewards the impartial student with the welcome discovery that all systems of religion and all languages have largely a common origin. The Kabbalah deals with cosmology rather than with cosmogony. Thus the Kabbalah attempts to explain and deal with the operation of distinctly Spiritual forces and "Living Energies" working behind the screen which veils the Divine workshop and the workers therein from physical observation. The various Sephirot, by whom the worlds are brought into existence and perpetually maintained are variously regarded by different interpreters as simply distinguishable attributes of One Supreme Creator and as distinct hierarachies or companies of Celestial Intelligences all working out the plan and purpose of the Supreme One Creator. The arrangement of this hierarchy is imaged on the left. It is through such "energies" that the "fall of the Soul and the Deific Mind of God" was accomplished.

The reader needs to know that ancient Egypt for thousands and thousands of years taught intricately that the the numerous "neteru" and "Living Energies" of the Cosmos, called the "gods" of their pantheon, were emanations from the First Cause of all life which, before the moment of the new creation of the universe, rested or existed in a state of "passive potential" in the primeval Waters of Space (Egypt called this "Nun", which we saw was the father of Joshua/Jesus, the personified Deific Mind of the Creator which was later incarnated into "matter"). It was through these individual gods that the qualities of the Divine essence were manifested. Before and behind all these supposed polytheistic concepts lies the primitive idea of a single Absolute One who is in no way dependent upon those varies hosts of lesser lights, but all depend upon the Supreme Unity. They had their own name, figure and special share and duty in the management of the Universe, presiding over the production of their particular orders of phenomena and ensuring their regularity. Each of these deities was represented in the vignettes (various images) and hieroglyphs in three forms by the various nations:

- the purely human figure with attributes peculiar to the god;
- a human body bearing the head of an animal dedicated to the deity because of some symbolic or biologic resemblance to the powers possessed or expressed by the god; and
- the same animal depicted with the attributes of the god.

Life, proceeding through the phenomena of birth, death, rebirth or resurrection, and immortality, was the thread connecting many of symbolic stories of the gods, goddesses, and "Living Energies" that enriched the mythology of Egypt. At the very heart of the this cycle of descent of the First Cause of all life into "matter" and "material existences" we have different levels of "descent" and "ascent" of these Divine Living Energies, or "Sparks of Divinenes", which "fell" into various levels of "becoming". We see the schematic understanding of this Celestial Event by Egypt above as they explained how this First Cause created the Cosmos, how this Absolute Intelligent Living Energy, this Atum, performed upon Himself a birth, life, death, and rebirth and "descent" from the "invisible realm" of His existence into the "visible realm" of "material existence" in all of His manifestations. This is understood as the "fall" from Heaven into physical existence, into "matter", or into "sin" ("matter" has the capability of both good and evil). This was called in the ancient religions of the world the "dying and rising" of God" and the "crucifixion of God on the cross of matter where he shed his 'life' and 'blood' for other forms of life". This birth, life, death, and rebirth was all accomplished by the impregnation or incarnation of this "Living Energy of the Father" (a death and a "fall" from Heaven of "light/Energy") into the lower planes of latent and potential "matter". The Egyptians thought of manifestation as taking place in 3 gradations of crystallization that they called "worlds." These 3 levels are symbolized on the left in the Egyptian Ennead (prototype for the later Jewish Kabbalah):

- There was the celestial world or heaven, the domain or condition of being of the Neters, the inherent qualities in nature.
- The second sphere was the Duat or Dwat (the Ladder), intermediate between the celestial realm and our more tangible earth. It has been described as the "moment between night and day." It is the condition when causal forces are in transition (descent) from the abstract phase to the material aspects of nature. Because of this it is really a duality, representing the state of an entity's "becoming" into and "emerging" from different sets of qualities or levels of experience.
- The third world is the concreted, material globe. "It is the world of Ptah -- the innate fire of terrestrial matter -- who created it, who is its secret motive force and the agent of its future development" (Schwaller de Lubicz, The Temple of Man, p. 341).

The Ankh on the right was used by ancient Egypt to picture and be symbolic of this intersection and "crossing" of "Living Energies" into "matter" that results in "rebirth" of the "lower planes of existence" which is necessary for their later "ascent" from this "dense matter" which became for a little while the home for this "Living Energy/Soul". This being the case the ancients described this as if the animal has lent mankind his body for the gestation and Spiritual growth for his incarnated Soul.

Answer for yourself: What has this ancient Egyptian symbol of a "cross" have to do with a "crucifixion" if at all?

This whole process of "descent of the First Cause of all life", this "life, death, and incarnation of the First Cause into "dead matter" was called the "Crucifixion of God on the Cross"; on the "Cross of Matter" (think of intersection Living Energies into "a darker and denser matter" that is further removed from the First Cause). And since this unknowable First Cause sent only a "Spark" of His "Intelligent Living Energy" into "matter" as the Deific Mind of God, this "Krst/Karest/Christ", then it does not take a lot of imagination to see that the ancients described this Celestial process as if God, the Divine Life-Giver, was "crucified on this cross of "matter". It was the Krst/Karest/Christ and the Soul who was "crucified" on the "cross of matter". It is from this ancient teaching, thousands and thousands of years old, this teaching of the death of God when incarnated into "matter" and later into "human flesh" to dwell with mankind, that a perverted and gross "literalization" of a highly mystical metaphysical ancient Egyptian religious concept will be "literalized" in the 2nd century and afterwards by a Rome who wanted nothing to do with an ancient religion of humanity that was built upon becoming the "likeness of God" in Earthly experience which was accomplished by obedience to the Laws of God in the Cosmos which just happens to be so necessary for the later "ascent" of the Soul.

The Egyptian myths of creation presented the many entities of the Cosmos (neteru as archetypes), world and man as being emanations from the one High God who was and is formless, concealed, unrevealed. In the Osirian cycle, he was the Dark Face of that god, so brilliant with light to lesser beings that he seemed dark, for they could not perceive or comprehend it. Creation thus was seen as a continuing process, and while the main myths dealing with it seem to derive from four rival religions based on the cities we know through their Greek-given names -- Memphis, Heliopolis, Hermopolis and Thebes -- there is enough internal evidence to suggest they were really phases of one grand ongoing theme.

This is explored in the creation "myths" of Egypt earlier on this website which if the foundational material for the later Mesopotamian and even later Hebrew accounts of creation. Gerald Massey goes on to say about this "descent of the Soul" into "Amenta", or Earthly incarnation:

Amenta had been converted into a cemetery by the death and burial of the solar "god" (the Krst/Karest/Christ in "matter"), who was represented as the mummy in the lower Egypt (lower nature) of the nether Earth (underworld as the body of "matter"). The Manes (Spirits of the Dead/Soul) were likewise imaged as mummies in their coffins (bodies of "matter"). They also rose again in the mummy-likeness of their Lord, and went up out of Egypt in the constellation of the Mummy (Sahu-Orion), or in the coffin of Osiris that was imaged in the Great Bear" (Ibid., p. 644).

Answer for yourself: How many times have we read the Book of Revelation over and over again and attended prophecy seminars on the Book of Revelation and never noticed that the "Christ" was crucified in Egypt? How could this happen? Did you ever notice this?

Rev 11:8 8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. (KJV)

This just goes to speak to our Spiritual blindness and erroneous indoctrination which has blinded us and brainwashed us to the very clues and "keys" to this truth which lay right before our eyes in our own Bibles. The clues are there, you only need the "keys" to make your Bible a completely new book that will lift your Soul to new height unimaginable. Today the world is giving up the truth like never before. Almost daily more convincing evidence surfaces to the light of day that proves the account given by the Western Church, and still accepted today, is inadequate; that in fact it is built on a literal interpretation of mythic allegories never originally intended as history, enforced by sectarian propaganda and the systematic destruction of conflicting writings and sects (like the Gnostic "Chrestians"). While biblical researchers and seminary students have long been aware of problems in the traditional accounts of Jesus and the New Testament, this information did not often reach the laity until the last few decades, which saw a resurgence of scholarly and popular interest in the birth of Christianity and the historical Jesus. In the meantime as this information slowly, way to slowly, is making its way into the minds of Christians, we are suffering in American Churches today from a famine of the true Word of "God" simply because Rome has "reinterpreted" everything and told a lie for so long and we are caught as children by these Spiritual authorities and told to believe the Church's interpretation of this ancient Sacred Book or go to Hell. I got news for you all; we are already there. Nothing that the Church teaches about our Soul could be further from this Divine truth which can be shown to have been taught and expressed in the same way over and over again for 10,000 years or more in almost every nation that ever existed. The Earth has given up her secrets and finally the "truth" about the Soul due to the diligent efforts of dedicated archeologists and truth-seekers in religions the world over. Just over 55 years ago we had the discovery at Nag Hammadi, Egypt, where the earliest Gnostic "Chrestian" writings were uncovered and they verified the hieroglyphs of Egypt thousands of years older and the original teachings about the "Krst/Karest/Christ" within all humanity. The picture they present is not a "Krst/Karest/Christ" who is limited to one person as some supposed "historical person" Rome as done. This discovery of the early Gnostic Chrestians (Christians) literally has shaken the world and Christianity wobbles today on shaky ground. Either Christianity as we know it will have to repent before the world in light of this Divine Knowledge which exposes their gross and horrible deception and purposeful destruction of Divine Truth accomplished by the "Father of the faith" or else lapse into a faded memory in the century to come. Now let us continue.

Notice again these Spirits of the dead, these Souls incarnated into "matter" and material bodies, these Manes, were imaged as mummies in their coffins!

Answer for yourself: Why is this?

Amenta (this Earth, our incarnational existence) serves as a cemetery for the descending Souls. Earth is the Soul's cemetery. We, who are living and breathing beings and Souls and "Living Energies/Consciousness of God) on this Earth, are in reality mummies in our sarcophagi as we live and breathe. Hence we see conclusively that the grave and tomb of all ancient theology is the living physical fleshly body of mankind!

Massey states:

"There is no possibility of the Manes (Souls) coming back to Earth for a new body or for a re-entry into the old mummy. As the Manes says, his Soul is not bound to his old body at the gates of Amenta" (Chs. 26, 6) (Ibid., 198).

The proper understanding of the word "death" and "the dead" as well as the word "Amenta" is of utmost importance that we as Christians and followers of "the Christ" since it undergirds almost all Christian dogmas one way or the other. I hope you are beginning to grasp the truth that if we have misunderstood such terms as "death", Hades, Sheol, Hell, Gehenna, Amenta, the pit, the Great Mother, Magna Mater, Satan, Tartarus, Tophet, infernal regions, inferno, limbo, lower world, nether world, perdition, place of torment, purgatory, shades below, the abyss, the bottomless pit, the grave, Underworld, and the list is almost endless in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the World and in our Bibles, then we are believing a lie and not the truth about our very existence and what happens to us when we die. This goes to the very core of our Salvation doctrine and the truth behind the teaching of the supposedly bodily resurrection in Christianity, Judaism, and Islam.

The Soul after the demise of the physical body does not re-enter or descend again into the old mutilated mummy nor was it ever to be this way. There was never a belief in a resurrection of a "dead physical body"; not until organized Christianity got its hands on the Ancient Gnosis. Egypt mummified their dead but they never believed the Soul was to return to the former corpse or dead biological body which was now lifeless. The ancient Spiritual Wisdom who gave mankind this earliest understanding of the "incarnation" of the Soul and its "ascension" at the demise of this "body of death" never taught it this way in spite of what some misinformed authors might say. Proper understanding of the Soul and its original dogmas as held sacred for 10,000 years is vital and of such an impact that it has the capability to overthrow the whole "bodily resurrection" teaching of Christianity. How quickly we forget I Corinthians in which Paul says there are "terrestrial" and "celestial" bodies and that we rise in a "celestial body" and not a "physical body". We just don't know the texts of our Bible very well but yet we sure don't want to miss Church. Better you stayed home and studied on your own. We don't need any more homiletical sermons in our Churches, we need hard-nosed study "outside our Bibles" in order to properly understand our Bibles and to find out what our Bibles are really saying to us and what lies behind the symbols in it which are so badly misunderstood today and preached in error over and over again from our pulpits.

It is said from ancient Egypt on down through the great Greek fathers that the Soul would not return to enter the "former body" but a new body. On the surface of such a statement there appears to be a contradiction that flies in the face of all ancient and universal belief in reincarnation but even this needs to be clarified. The Soul descends, only to re-ascend, and again "falls" and returns from "life to life" to be re-clothed in new garments, since it assuredly does not take up life again in the mutilated and decomposed old hulk. The Manes, a term for the Soul, positively states that he is not bound to the old body; but a score of times he says he will construct, or reappear in, a glorious new vesture. This of course is the spiritual body of the resurrection; this is the goal of the true resurrection once our Earthy incarnation cycle is completed satisfactorily. But "this Spiritual Body" is the "goal" of repeated incarnations and is not built up in one brief life on Earth. It is the product of many successive lives, each in a new physical body as described over and over again from nation to nation in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of antiquity. As seen in an earlier article let us not forget the testimony of the pre-Latin Fathers of early Christianity which taught this reincarnation of the Soul. Take time to acquaint yourself with the earliest of the Church Fathers and how they believed and professed "reincarnation". Later, only with the Latin Fathers, will again this truth be lost.

Now we go a little deeper to continue our correct understanding of "Amenta" as the realm of the "mummified Soul" incarnated into Earth exposing Hell as not the realm of some "afterlife" or torment in a burning and tormenting fires of Hell as taught by Roman Christianity.

When consulting the Egyptian religion and The Egyptian Book of the Dead, the Egyptian Bible, we find that the God of Egypt, personified often as Ptah, Atum and finally Osiris, are described at different stages as the Solar god in "mummified" form "in Amenta". This statement if of the greatest interest because it states that these gods and "Living Energies" are described as residing in Amenta, a place that is often sadly equated as a burning and tormenting "Hell" by Christian theology and by some Egyptologists. But notice if you will that these "Living Energies" are "mummified" (look at Ptah and Osiris and their mummified forms) and restricted in activity and being (since mummified they are entombed and bound in "matter). We saw this quickly in an earlier article. Normally God is not thought of as living in a burning and tormenting Hell of burning flesh but in Heaven or in the Spirit realm. Lets look at Ptah, Atum, and Osiris and get somewhat familiar with them as this will help us in identifying the true location of "Hades, Hell, and Amenta" and the truth about our very Souls and its future.

Answer for yourself: What does this "mummified" form of God describe? Why is God pictured as "mummified"? How is this related to "darkened matter" and the "incarnation" if at all?

Again and again we find that central to the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Gnosis is the concept of the Divine Spark or seed buried within "matter"; it is bound up or "mummified in matter". In reality this Divine Spark of "Living Energy" is buried in each person, a living being of "clay" from Mother Earth but possessing a small Divine Spark of Solar Fire (the intellect of God). It was the purpose of the ancient mysteries to bring to life this Divine Spark so that it would illuminate this Soul, this intellect of God which has incarnated into a carnal and animal life on this earth. This Divine Spark was symbolized by various figures at different times and in different places.

Answer for yourself: How again was this Divine Spark in "matter" or "mankind" represented? Can you figure it out? By the gods and goddesses, the neteru. Their names were Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules, and so on. They were all, and please forgive the term negative Christian term; they were all "pagan" Christs.

Answer for yourself: What does "pagan mean"? Well, first of all it was defined as Christians as one who "is not a Christian"! Next, it is one who was defined by Monotheistic Christianity as a "polytheist" but as I have over and over showed the reader the ancient Religions of the world were NOT polytheistic, but a Monotheism that understood "Diversity" in "Unity". Until I came to understand the concept of the "neteru" I never understood the "many in the ONE" correctly or this essential Unity of the "All in the One". The writers of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom were NOT Polytheists, they were Monotheists when properly understood. The term "pagan" also refers to one who has no religion but again the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and religions were anything but that; it fact making Jesus Christ "God" as Christianity has done and making him "Equal" with God and not a "neteru" self-defines Christianity as Polytheistic and not the ancient Spiritual Masters. I can remember years ago reading the Rabbis that say that a Muslim is not a Polytheist but Christianity is characteristic of such a term as defined by Judaism. Now, one more meaning. The term "pagan" only means "country dweller" or a "civilian" or a "rural person". And if you are a typical Christian reading any pro-Christian book and you encounter this Christian "buzz word Pagan" you are automatically "turned off" by such a term and are steered away from important knowledge by such an ignorant characterization by the author of which he does not understand properly. He needs to study more and quit "parroting" other who like himself possesses only pieces of the puzzle; thus not seeing correctly of which he speaks or writes. These Sacred Mysteries of the Soul have been "branded" as if "pagan" in the eyes of the author who represents Christianity to you the reader. And he is terribly wrong and in need of further instruction. How ironic!]

It is not until I read the original sources of the Egyptian Religion and the Mystery Religions for myself and quit listening to Christian writers call them "pagan" that I found they they represented the highest Spiritual Illumination that my mind had ever encountered in my Earthly existence up until that point in my life and studies. I had been misled and deceived, but as I would find in my studies over these last 20 years that was nothing new since I grew up a Christian. Such labeling of ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Gnosis as "Pagan" achieved its purposes in my life for many years; it prevented me from looking into these "selected areas of study for myself" because many know what lies there; Spiritual Freedom from mental manipulation and mind-control by a system of interpretative darkness that today controls the minds of 2.5 billion people on this planet.

Dear ones, our "Jesus Story" is a replay of the same "Divine Story" repeated now for over 15,000 years. The ancient Egyptian Priests and heirophants and great Greek philosophers of the ancient world knew that these figures were symbolic, and not historical men. It is we Christians and followers of "the Christ" who do not know the truth about this matter; at least not yet but that is changing as you read these articles. Dear ones, properly interpreted and understood our "Jesus Story" is the greatest story every told; but told as a historical-literal story confined to but one person it is the most egregious thief of Spiritual Truth ever given to mankind!

Some 2,000 years ago in the area of the eastern Mediterranean, the Divine Soul or Spark buried within "matter" and in the "matter of humanity" was called the Christ (from Karest or Krist, Egyptian for the "anointed mummy"). That's right, Egypt called their "Krst" the "Krst Mummy" (the Christ Mummy). As you might expect this "material existence" and "humbling of God in taking up the likeness of mankind" and this "incarnation into death on the cross of matter" is a severe limitation to a God who knew no boundaries and limits since being Omnipresent and Omniscient. This is expressed in our New Testament in the Book of Philippians. Speaking of the emanation of "the Christ", this Deific Mind of God into "matter":

Phil 2:6-8 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Have we not already seen abundant testimony that the ancients described the Law of Incubation and the impregnation of the Divine Mind of God into physical incarnation as a "death" depicted by the "crossing" of the Divine into "dead matter"? Have we not see this Philippians passage symbolized by the Cross of Egypt, the Ankh? Have we not already seen abundant evidence to the fact that the first use of a "cross" by ancient humanity was to depict God dying on a "cross" whereby this "Living Energy" of God became immersed into coarse and darkened "matter" and a "lesser existence"? Yes we sure have, abundantly even.

There are various accounts from the ancient world of the "incubated and incarnated God" being dismembered (the Law of Dismemberment). Osiris is the prototype and "pattern" for all later sungods and goddesses who were "crucified on the cross of matter". Osiris was cut up into fourteen pieces by Typhon or Set (the destructive force), to allow for his entry and widespread incarnation into "matter". Isis, the great mother, gives birth to Horus, son of Osiris and the god risen into our earthly human life. Like Osiris, Dionysus was also torn apart and distributed and "eaten as a Eucharist" among his followers then later reconstituted and made whole by Demeter. When seen in this light, the meaning of the crucifixion is obvious. It was not an historical event, but a retelling of the age old story of the death of the God to allow this God to enter the human plane of existence.

Now hear this well! We find in historical study that the crucifix only came into being with Pope Gregory late in the 6th century. For their first 500 hundred years Christians used the cross as their major symbol but there was no "man on it". But when one reads the "descent of the gods and goddesses" into "Hades" one is impressed to find, as we do with the Descent of Inanna, that when "incarnated" She, the Soul, was "hung up as dead" for 3 days as a corpse as we find in similar stories of the "dying and rising Sungods" (Jonah 3 days, Jesus 3 days; "Jesus" and "Jonah" being the same word really). The cross in the earliest centuries of the Chrestians and later the Christians was originally an ancient symbol depicting the union of Living Spirit/Energy into matter. One only needs to look at the solar sun burst behind the Cross to see the correct symbolism of God's "Living Solar Energy" which intersects and penetrates into "matter"; the clay of humanity whereby God has become incarnated in you and me We see this same thing, this Solar incarnation into "matter", in pictures of "the Christ" which a halo or nimbus behind his head, either the Pagan Christ or the Christian Christ. This signified that the image in question had hidden within him this "Divine Spark" of God behind hidden the "cave of the body".

On and on it goes when you do such comparisons in the study of Comparative religions and Christianity. As you study you find that the earliest Gnostic form of Christianity was nothing more than a re-statement of the ancient Spiritual wisdom. That is why the earliest Christians we know today were "Gnostics" and not "literal-historical" Christians which would come later. I came to see very clearly in my studies that Christians of any intelligence during the first two centuries at least did not regard their movement as the bearer of the first light into the heathen darkness, but only the republication of very ancient truth.

Now, back to ancient Egypt.

> Ptah was the chief god of the ancient city of Memphis. He was a creator god who brought all things to being by thinking of them with his mind and saying their names with his tongue (think of "the Word" in the Gospel of John). He was unique amongst Egyptian creation gods in that his methods were intellectual, Divine Thought, rather than physical. According to the priests of Memphis, everything is the work of Ptah's heart and tongue: gods are born, towns are founded, and order is maintained. Ptah (Pteh, Peteh) was also the predynastic god of craftsmen, pottery and creation (God is the potter and we are His clay). The Egyptians believed that he was a "god" or "Living Energy" (also called a Neteru) who created everything from artifacts to the world egg to the other Deities themselves. Let us not forget that the word "neteru" was by a concept for a Divine archetype that expressed a metaphysical idea to the minds of mankind. Ptah was a god of creation and rebirth and here we find that he abode in Amenta. Anthropomorphically, Ptah was usually depicted as a bearded mummiform man, wearing a close fitting skull cap. Only his hands come out of his shroud, and he was usually shown holding a staff that incorporated the djed pillar (on the right, symbolic of the resurrection, the djed was considered necessary to aid in the transformation of human flesh into the spiritual form assumed by the deceased in eternity), the ankh symbol (below on the left, the symbol of Divine Life and intersection of "Energy/Matter") and the "was" scepter (symbolic of dominion). Here in the Ankh we see clearly once again the teaching of the impregnation of "Divine Energy" into the womb of "nature" or "matter" as it intersects the Divine plane that separates Living Energy/Spirit from "matter". The fruit of such impregnation of "dead matter" with "Living Energy" was a "resurrection" as symbolized by the djed pillar on the above right. Thus the Ankh is the symbol of life.

Ptah also represents the Sun ("Living Energy") at the time when it begins to rise above the horizon (sunrise/birth) and or right after it has risen. As early as the Second Dynasty, he is regarded as a creator "god". Ptah was believed to have created the Heavens and the Earth. Often Ptah was represented anthropomorphically as a man wrapped as a mummy as we should expect (bound "Living Energy" in "matter", like Osiris) with a shaved head and beard. All of this symbolism is an anthropomorphic representation of an invisible concept that bespeaks of the "incarnation of the God in fleshly matter". It speaks to us of the Soul and Intellect of God being "bound in matter". Behind such symbols lies the metaphysical concept that exists in the invisible Spirit realm which manifests itself in this physical plane in which we live. Ptah was never thought to be historical or "literal"; only an allegory for the unseen reality which is evident to humanity in this plane of his existence; that mankind is the fruit of the intersection of "Living Energy/Spirit" and "matter".

Answer for yourself: Are you beginning to see that these "Living Energies", these "Neteru", were all "bound in matter" where they accomplished their Divine tasks? These "Neteru" and "Living Energies", when incarnated into deadened and latent "matter", became "mummified" and "bound" by the resistance of "matter" to the descending Spiritual principle. A "new birth" is required. That is why often these "gods", these "descending Living Energies" which fell into "matter" were characterized by being wrapped like a "mummy". We see this example not only with Ptah but Osiris in detail as well in a second.

One more thing now about Ptah. Hanging from the neck of Ptah is the Menat, a symbol of "happiness"! In the depiction on the left you see clearly the "mummified form" of Ptah, again a symbol of the "incarnation" and "bounding" of "Living Energy" in "matter".

Now we focus on "Amenta", the supposed counterpart of the Christian Hell and its relationship to the creator God Ptah, a "god" of "happiness". I want to mention again that "Amenta" is the same word for our "Hades", "Hell", "inferno", "pit", "bottomless pit", nether region", "underworld", "Sheol", "Gehenna", "Hellfire", Tartarus", etc. According to Christian theology then all these words carry the typical Christian idea of suffering, excruciating pain in flames, a place of torment with weeping, gnashing of teeth, a place of fire, and brimstone, a place of punishment and eternal torture in unquenchable fire. That about says it.

Answer for yourself: Then don't you find it rather strange that Ptah would be a symbol for "Creation", "Life", and "the God of happiness" and dwell in eternal suffering, pain, punishment, torment, and fire? When has a preacher ever told you that you will be "happy" in the Christian Hell? What kind of God have we been taught by the Christian Church? Have we understood anything correctly in Christianity as inherited by Rome or is most of it a ugly radical reinterpretation of Divine Truth given us by a Law-hating and Jew-hating religion (don't forget the the Jewish people are the children of intermarriages with Egyptians, that is why the first century Jews were "black skinned").

Answer for yourself: Is it possible that over a long time, some 1,800 years presently, that these above terms, terms like "Amenta", Hell, Hades, "death", the "dead", etc., have been "reinterpreted" and changed from their original meaning as first used in the most ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books and lore of ancient humanity in its beginning? Have their original meanings been lost either by accident or on purpose?

That is exactly, exactly what I found in my 20 year study of my Christian faith as I traced slowly its origins from the 5th century C.E. back to ancient Egypt. There has been a horrible and unthinkable corruption of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom which was first imparted to mankind in the beginning of our existence which lays today in shambles at the hands of Rome. I would find in my studies that in the 3rd century the rubbish set in when Christianity discarded it Jewish Roots (in reality its Egyptian Roots). People didn't rush to Christianity in droves as they tell you in Sunday school. There was a terror campaign to eliminate the ancient wisdom and force people to become Christians. Thousands of temples and sacred groves were destroyed. Ancient worship was outlawed, often on pain of death. Millions of people were put to death by Rome over the Dark Ages in order to keep suppressed this ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Some conservative scholars estimate over 18 million people were murdered by the Roman Church in order to maintain their dominance in world and religious affairs. In 529 Emperor Justinian closed down the last school of philosophy and Sacred Philosophy and Wisdom (Gnosis). The Church of Rome ruled for over a thousand years. It was the Church which instigated the Dark Ages. We still have the legacy with us today in a totally distorted view of life but we sure don't want to miss the next installment from our Churches as this legacy of intellectual death continues.

There is still much discussion over the origins of Christianity. Little wonder, as some of the early fathers made things as murky as possible in order to hide the origins. Serious study will show the reader than Christianity, in its infancy, began as a restatement of the ancient wisdom, then the teachings were terribly distorted between the 2nd through the 5th century. The official four gospels were written by many hands, and the first time they were quoted was c.185 A.D. by Irenaeus. That is almost 150 years after a supposed historical Jesus. Justin Martyr in 145-149 A.D. gives no names nor names of the supposed existing gospels in any of his writings. This is totally amazing if they had existed in that time if at all; especially with his famous "debates". One can only wonder what were his sources then. Only after 180 A.D. do the Gospels appear with "names" as titles. Only after 180 A.D. does Romans 9-11 appear. Only after 180 A.D. do the infancy gospels appear. It would appear to the "thinking believer" that the "infancy narratives of the baby and child Jesus" had to be created due to the embarrassment of the Church when such nonsense was ridiculed by the Chrestian Gnostics since they knew that there was never a "historical Jesus"; only the "indwelling Christ within". As you can see the need for a child Jesus was extreme and Irenaeus was able to the task to produce them out of thin air in 180 A.D. Many works of Origen, an early Christian, himself an allegorist and teacher of the Divine Spiritual Wisdom, were destroyed and later he was anathematized (i.e. cursed and excommunicated) long after his death. In 391 A.D. Christians burnt 700,000 scrolls from the 700 year old library at Alexandria. The Christian Bible was closely guarded by the Church for 1,000 years and if you were found to have parts of it in your possession you were put to death by the Church. Even the Church of Rome today claims to possess sole truth and the gullible line up; I once was one of these blinded sheep until I began my own serious studied and "awakened from the dead".

The decisive change undertaken by Rome in the ancient Mystical and Spiritual teachings was to banish the concept of the Divine Soul within all of mankind, and replace it with a sole supposed historical figure called Jesus by Rome. People were taught to worship this non-existent Jesus instead of nurturing their own Divine Soul. In one fell swoop the Church of Rome took the Divine out of everyday life and this world .It turned a philosophy of liberation into a religion of repression and bondage. Noble and uplifting teachings were turned upside down and thoroughly perverted. Humans were turned into abject sinners who had to grovel for forgiveness instead of focusing within for Spiritual transformation. In spite of Rome's efforts to cloud the truth the true ancient Spiritual Wisdom can still be deciphered in the Bible, using the "keys" supplied by these articles as well as many other good writers today as William Kingsland, Gerald Massey, Alvin Kuhn, Helen Blavatsky, Thomas Taylor, J. W Coleville, Godfrey Higgins, G. dePurucker, and others. Whatever strengths Roman Christian religious dogmas have today, such as the death and rebirth of the god, they are due to its Church defined "pagan" roots. We must seriously reconsider what is "pagan"; you will be surprised to find that you are "in it" and not know. A total need of repentance in our thinking and a serious attempt to obtain such Spiritual Knowledge is needed in order to convince yourself that what I am sharing is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Such is Bet Emet; Hebrew for "the House of Truth".

Now lets look at the impact of early Christianity for a second and see what they did to the ancient wisdom concerning "Amenta"; the realm of incarnational experience for our Souls on a mission from Heaven. Instead of a burning tormenting fire and gnashing of teeth we find otherwise if we study. But without study on our parts we all fall victim ignorantly to the following babble:

"Abandon hope, all ye who enter here!" --Inscription over the gates of hell, according to Dante

"It would be dreadful to suffer this fierceness and wrath of Almighty God for one moment; but you must suffer it for all eternity." --Jonathan Edwards, Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God (1741)

Fear, not love, is a more powerful motivator in Religion. Man has always known this. But "love" is a choice. In Christian theology, Hell is the place or state into which unrepentant sinners pass after this life. Hell is generally thought to be eternal, and to include both punishment and separation from God. The doctrine of hell has been a significant part of historical Christian theology throughout its history. Hell was a strong incentive to lead a righteous life in the early church. It was the setting for Dante's literary masterpiece The Inferno. It was fear of hell and judgment that terrified Martin Luther before his spiritual enlightenment. The doctrine of hell was central to the Jonathan Edwards' famous sermon "Sinners in the Hands of An Angry God" and many others like it. For some, however, especially since the Enlightenment, Hell has also been a major stumbling block to acceptance of Christianity. Some Christian groups no longer believe in an eternal hell, or at least regard belief in it as unnecessary.

The word "Hell" in English Bibles is used to translate the Hebrew word Sheol (and its Greek equivalent Hades) and the Greek word Gehenna. The English word derives from the Anglo-Saxon meaning "to conceal" or "to cover," which is similar to the meanings of Sheol and Hades.

Answer for yourself: What is being concealed, what is buried, what is obscured? Where is it buried? Where is it hidden"?

In the Old Testament, Sheol (which is also sometimes translated "grave" or "pit") denotes the Underworld or the place of departed Spirits.

Answer for yourself: Could this "place of departed Spirits" be our Earth where the Souls "fell" into incarnated existence? Whoo Nellie! Could the "matter" and "flesh" of mankind be in reality the "concealing and covering" of the Soul who "fell" into "matter" according to the Law of Incubation? Think! Could this animal body capable of such great evils be yet the hidden grave for the Soul and the Divine Spark and Deific Mind of the cosmos? The ancients sure thought so and taught this until Rome's persecutions and destruction of them and their Sacred Books.

Gehenna ("the Valley of Hinnom") is the Greek translation of a Hebrew word that seems to refer to an actual place on earth. Notice I said "On" Earth!

Lets put some of these ideas together for a second. We have a place of "concealment" that is "on Earth" and is a "place of departed Spirits" which is again is "on Earth".

Answer for yourself: Could this refer to humanity? This is, once we consult the original writings from which our current Christian dogmas find their origin, as plain as the nose on your face and theologians for over 1,800 years have either accidentally missed the obvious or else purposely misled the "ignorant" for selfish motives and in so doing changed the ancient Spiritual dogmas of the elders of our Race and changed the course of the world in so doing and not for the better.

The idea of Hell (as understood in Christianity) is virtually absent from the Old Testament, which has very little to say about the afterlife at all. In the Church Fathers (post-New-Testament Christian leaders and theologians), the doctrine of Hell quickly becomes more well-defined as a place of eternal torment, which is generally seen as physical in nature.

- "[The martyrs] despised all the torments of this world, redeeming themselves from eternal punishment by the suffering of a single hour.... For they kept before their view escape from that fire which is eternal and will never be quenched." (Martyrdom of Polycarp, c. 135)
- "Those who have not known God and do evil are condemned to death. However, those who have known God and have seen his mighty works, but still continue in evil, will be chastised doubly, and will die forever." (Shepherd of Hermas, c. 150)
- "We believe...that every man will suffer punishment in eternal fire according to the merits of his deed. ... Sensation remains to all who have ever lived, and eternal punishment is laid up." (Justin Martyr, c. 160)
- "Hell [Gehenna] is a place where those who have lived wickedly are to be punished." (Justin Martyr, c. 160)
- "Some are sent to be punished unceasingly into judgment and condemnation of fire." (Justin Martyr, c. 160)
- "Eternal fire is prepared for sinners. The Lord has plainly declared this and the rest of the Scriptures demonstrate it." (Irenaeus, c. 180)
- "We [Christians] alone make a real effort to attain a blameless life. We do this under the influence of... the magnitude of the threatened torment. For it is not merely long-enduring; rather, it is everlasting." (Tertullian, c. 197)
- "Gehenna... is a reservoir of secret fire under the earth for purposes of punishment." (Tertullian, c. 197)

Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Scandinavia, and Greece sure did not think so. Somebody is wrong here; either the ancient Spiritual Masters of the whole world who stand in agreement or Rome and its radical reinterpretation of this ancient Spiritual Knowledge in the 2nd through the 5th century!

It bears noting again that Ptah is shown holding a staff that is a combination of three symbols. An ankh, a djed, and a "was" scepter. This staff of Ptah represents life, stability, and longevity. And here we find Ptah residing in Amenta with "life and longevity". And this is all the more amazing since we have been taught that Amenta is the Egyptian Hell that corresponds to the later Christian Hellish literal furnace. This just goes to show you how we "read backwards" into ancient religions and religious mythologies our "current" religious beliefs and when our current religious beliefs, like the one surrounding the Christian Hell, are wrong and they are read backwards into the ancient religions, then we totally miss the grand ideas of these ancient Spiritual Masters let alone the truth they cherished and bequeathed as their legacy to mankind. This has happened to almost all of our current Christian dogmas because they were radically reinterpreted and mutilated almost beyond recognition during the emergence of Roman Christianity and its gift to the world of its replacement religion during the 2nd through the 5th century.

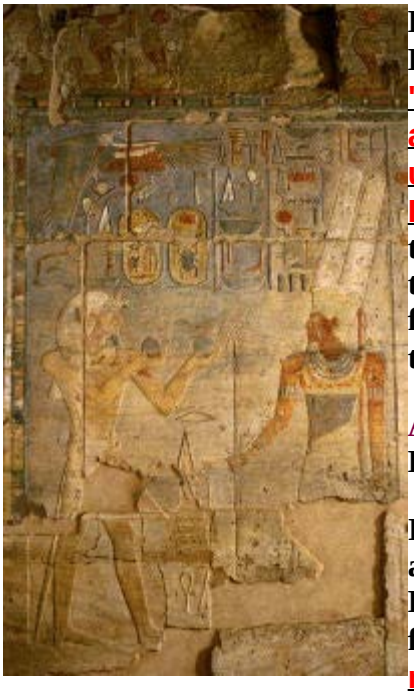
Ptah, as Creator, abides in "mummified" Amenta because in Amenta we find our Earthly existence; we find that Amenta is the Earthly abode of Soulish incarnation, an incarnation that is often called in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom by such terms as the "grave, death, Hell, Hades, Sheol, the underworld, pit, etc." It is this Soulish incarnation and "fall" into "fleshly matter" that is the "concealment" that is "on Earth" and is the "place of departed Spirits from Heaven" which "fell" into "matter" or "Earth".

Answer for yourself: Since Ptah is residing in "Amenta", the realm of the dead (the realm of mummified and restricted "Living Energy", and since he was believed to be a representation of the "Creator", the God of "clay" (the creation of mankind being clay and Spirit) then can you see that Amenta, if believed to be equated with the Christian concept of a burning Hell, is a gross perversion of the truth intended by those who gave us the Spiritual concept of the Soul in the first place? I hope so. That means that we need to better understand "Amenta" let along other religious concepts such as "Hell" if we ever want to have the truth about our Bibles as well as ourselves as "incarnated Souls" who have gone into a "far country" of "incarnated existence". God has projected a ray of his own life into humanity; His Intellect resides within us. In man the Divine seed is the Krst/Karest/Christos; the Savior of our Souls which have fallen into "death" and Hades of Earthly incarnation.

One of the aspects of Ptah, also the name of Osiris in Memphis, especially in his character of Lord of the Underworld (the realm of the dead, the incarnated Souls in physical "matter" on Earth), is Ptah-Seker-Asar, the triadic god of the resurrection. Ptah-Seker is the personification of the union of the primeval creative power ("Living Energy"/fire/symbolized by the Sun) with a form of the inert power of darkness ("matter"), or a cosmic rendering of the very mystical thoughts around the term the "Night Sun". If you think of "hidden Living Energy" in "matter" (the Soul hidden in an animal body, the idea of concealment again we see in Sheol) then you get the idea. The Seker-boat represents the second half of the daily journey of the Sun through the Underworld (the hours of darkness during the day; symbolic of the descent of "Living Energy" into the darkness of "matter"...humanity). The Sun rises and sets, is born and it dies, only to be "reborn"; the Sun being the symbol for the One Absolute Living Energy of the cosmos which "fell into matter". In so doing this "Living Energy", picture as Ra in his Solar Boat, dies in "incarnation" into "matter"; it was likened to being crucified on the cross of "matter" and equated with the "setting of the Sun" below the horizon which again is symbolic of "darkened matter" into which the very "Living Energy" of God has "fallen". The "stars" of the Duat, the path of the Soul, is before Ra into which "He descends" to His death and "incarnation on the cross of matter". The harmony is astounding; over and over again we see the same Divine Story which later is personified in the Sungods and Goddesses who were "crucified on a cross"; the "cross of matter".



As you begin to see how all of this fits together so perfectly then looking at our day and Christianity and its preachers, teachers, seminaries, and writers and authors of its books then you should see that just because someone writes a book or stands behind a pulpit and preaches and attempt to do good does not mean that he knows anything truthful about what he is speaking about!!! Sadly, they mean well, and they should be applauded for their love, but sadly due to the great loss of knowledge to humanity at the whim of Rome 1,800 years ago too often those who mean well tragically miss the mark by thousands of mile. And the darkness continue for humanity.

Next we look at Atum who is said to abide in Amenta as well. Atum was one of the most ancient personifications of god in Egypt and was part of the Heliopolitan cosmology. Originally an "Earth god" (he abides in Amenta=Earth), he later became associated with Re, the Sun god. Like Ptah he is placed "On Earth".

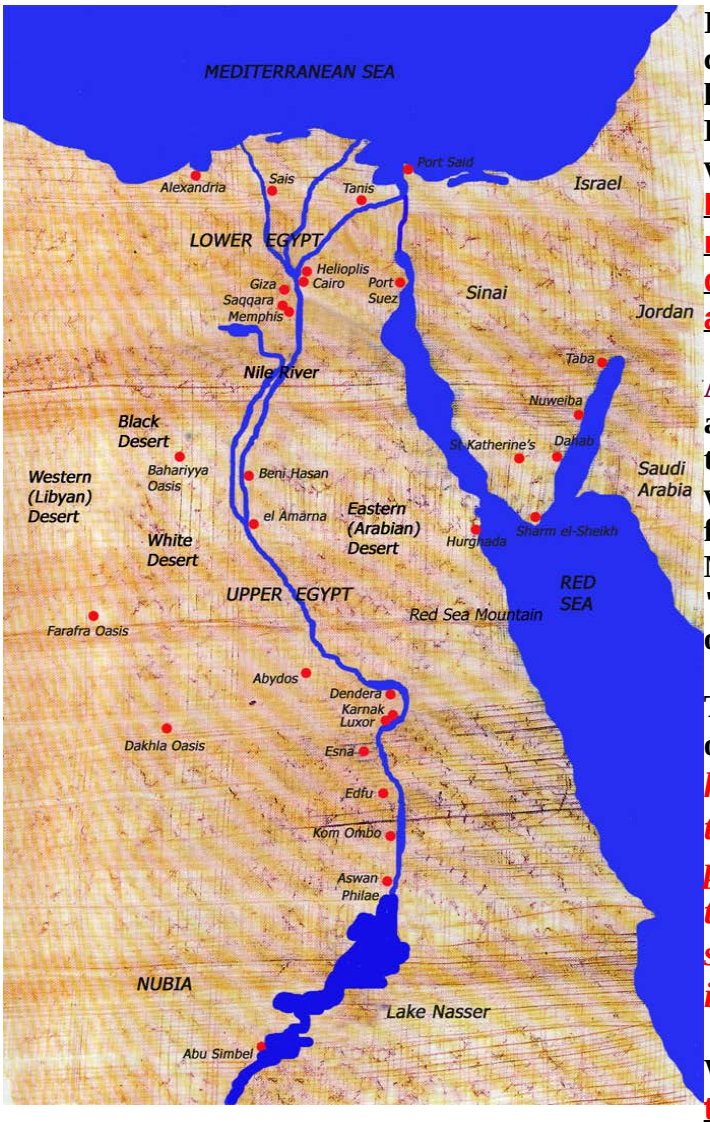
Answer for yourself: What did you notice? Did you notice that Atum is again related to Earth, right here where we live, as was Ptah?

Here we find again this same association of "matter"/Earth and "Living Energy/Sun". Specifically, Atum was considered to be the "setting Sun" (the "fall" into "matter" of God as "Living Energy"). In later times he became associated with Ptah and eventually Osiris (resurrection coming from the union of "Living Energy of the Sun" and "Living Energy of Mother Nature, Earth). It is the same story told over and over again; only the symbols change but the Divine Message does not. Only later with Rome will the message change. Grasp the concept as it is played over and over again throughout the Egyptian Religion for thousands and thousands of years. Atum was depicted in art as a man wearing the Double Crown of Upper and Lower Egypt.

Answer for yourself: What lays behind this double crown of Upper and Lower Egypt? Have we seen this before?

It is representative of the two natures in mankind; one Spiritual (Upper Egypt) and one animal-carnal, (Lower Egypt). The resurgence of life during the Vernal Equinox (Spring Equinox) has been celebrated by all peoples who have inherited from remotest antiquity the meaning of what occurs in nature at that period. The many Saviors associated with the legends that have come down to us embodied the myth of the cosmic Spirit incarnating into "matter", imparting something of its essence to the entities slowly evolving there, and then returning to its Divine state. This imparting was equated with the Spring Equinox and Sunrise when again the "Living Energy" of God is "awakened in dead matter" and all Earth comes alive as the energy of the Sun pierces through the darkness of the Vernal Equinox night; a true picture of the Soul in Amenta (a picture of Spiritual Awaking of the Soul and Krst from the dead and mummified state in the prison of the body.. Our "Jesus Story" is a perfect example if left and told in an allegorical manner the way it was intended. I speak of the awaking of "the Christ" and the Soul in the "matter" of humanity. It is the "new birth".

In the ancient Mysteries, symbolic geography was often used to teach both cosmic and human values. An example of this practice is the system of the ancient Egyptians. As we saw in the studies on the Uranograph many of the ancient nations divided their country into two areas; an upper and lower area that was symbolic for the "Spiritual nature" and the "Lower animal nature". We see this in Upper and Lower Egypt and in Northern and Southern Israel as well as other nations. They understood this "pattern" of the Divine; they understood "So Above, So Below"; it is us as Christians who do not.



The ritual adventures of Horus of Edfu -- known also as the Winged Disk myth which was mentioned in passing dramatizes the Soul's descent into "matter" and, through purification and self-conquest, its re-ascent to its source. Horus (the Egyptian Christ) typifies the Soul, and the country of Egypt, its towns, terrain, and the river Nile, the field of activity of that Soul which is our fleshly body of humanity.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

We can thus visualize the mystical history of Egypt, the deeds of its gods, goddesses, and heroes stand or mankind's qualities in conflict with Typhon-Set or materiality and the animal nature. They are all allegorical and metaphorical. All of these gods and goddesses teach us of the Cosmic tension between "Living Spirit" and "matter"; the battle between Set and Horus (Jesus and Satan) being a perfect example. Every nation had their own "Set and Horus" story and battles.

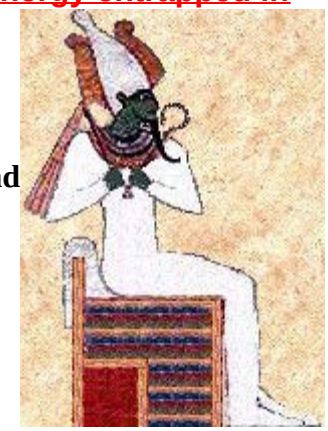
If we read this account of what ensues in the arena of life in conjunction with a picture of the country of Egypt, we should look at the map facing the south, the position assumed by the Egyptian neophyte, and then we see the Delta as a triangle with point uppermost, suspended from a thread, the Nile. Imagine the Nile's source as representing the higher ranges of consciousness, with the Divine ray falling downwards through the spiritual, mental, emotional and energetic levels, to the Delta, the material realms.

Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us? This is an important clue that all comes from "Above" and lays at the very heart of the Egyptian Religion; really in all major world religions. The Nile flows with the rains from Heaven, falling down from great heights from the mountain of God, Mount Kilimanjaro. The symbolism is perfect and fits the "Divine Pattern" in Egypt; the land of Egypt being an image of Heaven.

Thus, we read in another Hermetic document, the Asclepius, of Hermes upbraiding a pupil called Asclepius: "Do you not know, Asclepius, that Egypt is an image of heaven, or, to speak more exactly, in Egypt all the operations of the powers which rule and work in heaven have been transferred to earth below? Nay, it should rather be said that the whole Kosmos dwells in this our land as in its sanctuary." (Hermetica, p. 136).

We now see "Lower Egypt" as the field of operations of the lower part of the mind, the "place of thick darkness," while Upper Egypt is the higher or more refined mental plane impinging on the intuitive level, called the "country of light," with the Nile as the stream bringing from above life, light and vitality to the Soul, mind and body. There was a celestial Nile, distinct from the terrestrial Nile.

Answer for yourself: How is this related to "the Krst/Karest/Christ"?



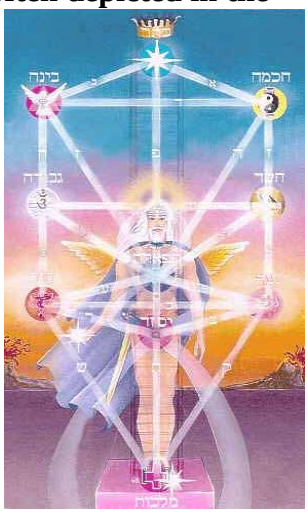
Keeping this image in mind, we can see how the adventures of Horus, the Egyptian Christ, in each particular locality of Egypt, symbolize and conform with the idea of the Soul's development. Indeed, the whole of the legend with all its details of place names, localities -- whether on the hills or the water, even the very weapons used -- conveys to the student of symbolism the following story: Horus, the offspring of Osiris, the Divine element (masculine/Divine Spark/Soul/Spirit) in the universe and in ourselves, and of Isis, goddess of wisdom and the spiritual chalice of that godSpark (feminine/"matter"....also in ourselves), sails down river (Ladder to Heaven), after bidding farewell to his father, and does battle with "Typhon-Set" -- material life "matter" and the vanity, self-love, and egotism it generates.

Important, very important, is that we find in the records of Egypt the work of the Pharaoh in war whereby he received credit for "joining Upper and Lower Egypt". In the "literal" this did not happen; in the Spiritual it "did". Every Pharaoh was given credit for winning the "war" and unifying both the animal nature and Spiritual Nature thereby creating the "one new man" of which Ephesians later speaks. This is nothing more than symbolic again for the battle between Set and Horus.

In case you have not noticed the whole of the Egyptian Religion is centered around the Descent of the Soul (us) into "the darkness of matter" (fleshly animal bodies) and the Soul's transformation of this animal body and the Soul's eventual resurrection and reascension to the "Father" in Heaven.

In the creation myths, Atum (Atem in the image) is the primal creator. He created Himself (or arose out of nothing) and created the first gods, Shu (upper Sky) and Tefnut (moisture), from His spittle. The Memphite creation myth puts Him as the first creation of Ptah, who simply said His name and He came into being (the Word again we see in the Gospel of John). Originally associated with the Earth, Atum gradually became considered to be the Sun, as it passes the horizon (ascent and descent, representing birth and incarnation of "Living Energy" into "matter/Earth". This should make you think of the Descent of the Soul down this Ladder of Heaven once again or of the Egyptian Kabbalah as seen on the left. Take time to study the Egyptian Kabbalah on the left and notice the names carefully. Look them up and then you will see the Genesis creation story before your very face. Of course behind this "nature symbolism" is the same idea as applied to the "impregnation of this Living Energy" into "matter" that brought forth humanity (lower and upper natures in mankind) which is represented at the bottom of the Ladder on the left with the "incarnation of Hours/Christ into matter/humanity". The separateness of the two instances affecting the Sun, this "Living Energy" twice per day (ascent and descent of the Sun, this "Living Energy), led to the aspect of Atum that was young, namely the Rising Sun (birth/rebirth), becoming considered a separate god, named Nefertum (literally meaning young Atum), and consequently Atum became mainly understood as the Setting Sun (incarnation into "matter" as a type of "death" for this "Living Energy". Once you get the symbols down then these ancient myths are absolutely marvelous for what they teach. But if we are ignorant of the "keys" for this ancient Symbolic Religion then we grope in darkness never coming to the truth of the matter and such religious myths are termed by the "ignorant" as "ignorant".

Lastly we close with Osiris. Often Osiris is depicted in a mummified form ("Living Energy entrapped in "matter") where he is all in white with Osiris' body wrapped in swaddling clothes (burial clothes, think "incarnation of Living Energy into the deadness of "matter"). This is the same with Ptah, Amun, Osiris, and many other "gods" and "goddesses". The same could be said for the birth of the baby Jesus Christ who was wrapped in swaddling, or burial clothes (the descent of the Christ into dead "matter"). It is the same story as Horus. These "gods" and "neteru", these "Living Energies" are said to be "mummified" and "entrapped in matter" in a place called "Amenta" a place of "happiness". Since these are "neteru" or Emanated "Living Energies" with different "tasks" in the creative process then we should stress the importance that they all were "bound in swaddling clothes" in Amenta or this "body of carnal death" which is home the for the Soul. If as we maintain that Amenta is this "body of matter" then we can better understand:



"He was the buried life on earth, and hence the god in matter, imaged in the likeness of the mummy. . . . Such was the physical basis of the mythos of the mystery that is spiritual in the eschatology" (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, p. 211).

Massey gives us even greater insight as he continues:

"In the Osirian mythos, when the sun-god ("Living Energy...as Christ-Soul) enters the underworld (the dark body of fleshly "matter"), it is as a mummy or 'coffined one' upon his way to the great resting place" (ascent back up the Ladder to Heaven).

Answer for yourself: What is this "resting place"? Just think of the Tree of Life which is often depicted in the Jewish Kabbalah. As "Living Energies" and as Souls we have "descended" in order to "ascend" and in so doing we take the composite of all our incarnational experiences with us that help mold our Soul and it evolving Spiritual experience on our way back "up" this Ladder to Heaven on our way to "the Father". We are Prodigals going home, the Promised land of Milk and Honey.

Very illuminating for us at this stage of our study is the next quote by Massey:

"The mummy-Osiris in Amenta is the figure of the sleeping deity. He is the god inert in matter, the sleeping or resting divinity" (Ibid., p. 416).

We now continue in the next article in this series.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #13

Let us continue our study on the Soul in Amenta. Our studies in Amenat are winding down; only a few more to go so let us continue to learn truth that has been kept from us.

Let us begin by some reflection. We have seen repeatedly the admonition Paul in the New Testament to "awaken" to the sleeping Deity or "Krst-Soul" or the "ChristSoul within" mankind. We have at length discussed why this is necessary since the Soul, this "Living Energy" of God has "fallen" into its grave and "death" in human incarnation and existence. Since likened to being "dead" the Soul is in need of a "resurrection from this "death in "matter"; not only taught by Paul and the Gnostics in the first New Testament and Gnostic writings found at the Nag Hammadi Library, but the great Greek Philosophers like Plato, Plotinus, Proclus, Iambilicus, and many others who taught the same identical things concerning the Soul. You might be amazed to see that our Hebrew Scriptures, called sadly today the Old Testament, has the same admonitions:

Ps 17:15 15 As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness. (KJV)

Dan 12:2-3 2 And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. 3 And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever. (KJV)

More parallels to this ancient Spiritual Wisdom from the New Testament can be found in the very Gnostic New Testament Gospel of John. The Gospel of John is a gospel document quite unlike the earlier 3 "synoptic gospels" which are found in the canon of the New Testament. Like the three synoptic gospels, it contains an account of some of the actions and sayings of Jesus, but these sayings of "the Christ" differs from them in ethics and theological emphases. The text itself states only that the Gospel was written by a follower of Jesus referred to as the Beloved Disciple, traditionally identified with John the Apostle, "believed" by many to have lived at the end of his life at Ephesus. The dating is important since John is agreed to be the last of the canonical Gospels to have been written down and thus marks the end-date of their composition. Scholarly research starting in the 19th century has questioned the apostle John's authorship, arguing that the work was written decades after the events it describes. The differences in the composition of the Greek within the Gospel, such as breaks and inconsistencies in sequence, repetitions in the discourse, as well as passages that clearly do not belong to their context, suggest redaction and a much later construction than believed my most Christians today.

A recent critical method for the study of the Bible, especially the Gospels and other books whose contents have overlap, is called "redaction criticism". Redaction criticism is a historical discipline which is concerned to discover the intended purpose of the final author or editor of a book. All of our gospels have undergone a lot of "editing" before finally finding their "rest". Unlike its parent discipline, Form Criticism, redaction criticism does not look at the various parts of a narrative to discover the original form. Instead, it focuses on how the author or editor has shaped and molded the material in his sources to express his literary goals for the work, i.e., the reasons he is writing his work. Redaction criticism sees the author or editor not as a mere "cut-and-paste" collector of stories, but as a theologian who is trying to meet his theological agenda by shaping the sources he uses.

There are several ways in which redaction critics detect editorial activity, including:

- The repetition of common motifs and themes (e.g., in Matthew's Gospel, the fulfillment of prophecy).
- Comparison between two accounts. Does a later account add, omit, or conserve parts of an earlier account of the same event?
- The vocabulary and style of a writer. Does the text reflect preferred words for the editor, or are there words that he rarely uses or attempts to avoid using? If the wording reflects the language of the editor, it points toward editorial reworking of a text, while if it is unused or avoided language, then it points toward being part of an earlier source.

Be that as it may let us look at a passage.

John 11:11 11 These things said he: and after that he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus (really Osiris, the "sleeping Living Divine Energy in "matter") sleepeth; but I (the Christ desceds into "matter") go, that I may awake him out of sleep. (KJV)

Rom 13:11 11 And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. (KJV)

1 Cor 15:34 34 Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Could this apply to us? What have we spent our whole lives "believing"; a "lie", a horrible misinterpreation of the truth about the "God within us, the Christ within us"? This applies to us dear ones!

Eph 5:14-15 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. 15 See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is there a connection between all of these above "texts"?

The above are but a few samples of examples of "the inert Christ who has 'fallen' asleep" in the "darkness and prison of matter" and materialism of the human body and the human life-style so frequently found in the world today.

Another corroboration of this Divine Concept as expressed above comes from the depictions which we have already seen of the gods being "mummified". This same idea of "Living Enerigies" that emanated from the One Absolute God confined to the limitations of this incarnational existences comes from the fact that the mummy was but a ritualistic figure and symbol for the human Soul which was considered as if "dead" while incarnated in the body of "dark matter"...."our flesh". This idea of the humbling of God and His death on the "cross of mattter" is found expressed in the following from Massey, (Ancient Eygpt, Light of the World, p. 648).

"And just as Ra, the Holy Spirit, descends in (into) Tattu (the fleshly body of dead "matter", ie., the fleshly and human body as a sepulcher and grave for the Soul) on the mummy Osiris (the bound and imprisoned 'Living Energy' that lies latent as "matter"), and ...as Horus (the Egyptian Krst/Karest/Christ....Mind) places his hands behind Osiris in the resurrection (awakening of Spiritual potential in "matter"....the "Mind and Intellect of God"), so comes to his body, the mummy in Amenta. Those who tow Ra along say, 'The god comes to his body; the god is towed along toward his mummy.' (Records, Vol. X, p. 132.) The sun-god, whether as Atum-Iu (Aiu or Aai) or Osiris-Ra, is a mummy (the bound and imprisoned 'Living Energy') in Amenta and a Soul (unbound) in Heaven. Atum or Osiris, as the sun (imprisoned 'Living Energy') in Amenta, is the mummy buried down in Khebt, or lower Egypt" (lower Egypt being symbolic of the lower animal nature of the physical body of darkened "matter")

Answer for yourself: Why is the above quote so important, so important, so important? Did you notice that both Ra (the Egyptian Holy Spirit) and Horus (the Egyptian Christ) come to this "body of matter" in Amenta (the Earthly abode, this Lower Egypt of this darkened animal nature and "matter")? Why is this so important to grasp?

You just read about the only "Coming of Christ" that ever was or ever will be. This only coming of the Christ, sadly which many foolishly look for today, has already occurred in their lives and "in themselves" whether they are aware of such or not. This coming of Christ to humanity, the only coming ever, is the descent of the Deific Mind of God into dense and darkened "fleshly matter" of the animal body for the purpose of "awakening" and strengthening the Soul who was previously crucified on this same "cross of matter"; thereby aiding in the Soul's Spiritual evolution on Earth in preparation for its "return home". The Christ has come and He lives in us!

2 Cor 13:5 5 Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? (KJV)?

It should make you wonder if we, having Roman Catholic and Protestant religious beliefs, and not these metaphysical or "Gnostic" understandings of the Soul that undergirds all the ancient Mysteries and religions since Ancient Egypt, would qualify us a being "in" or "out" of this "Faith" of which Paul speaks. It should make you wonder that if we continue to believe in a supposed "historical and literal" Christ crucified on some old rugged cross on a Jersualem hill that it is "we" who are really outside of this real "religion" that not only the ancinets held sacred for thousands and thousands of years but which the real Paul taught himself to the Gentiles of the world 2,000 years ago. There are two "Pauls" in the New Testament; the real one who taught the "Gnostic Krst/Christ" and the false Roman Later created to negate previous Gnostic teachings that were too well known to discount in the Gentiles lands in which he traveled and taught. So by confusion and "double-speak" Rome was able to confuse this whole matter to most all but those with the most discriminating eyes and Spirits.

God has projected a ray of His own life into humans. "In man the Divine seed is the Christos."The cosmic God, this Ain Sof is hardly an object of worship by humanity for He is "unknowable"; but that segmented portion of infinite Being that is tabernacled within the flesh of mortals is the actual Divinity assigned to receive the attention and homage of mankind. Now back to the study and the "mummy".

Answer for yourself: What are to also learn? These passages from Massey conclusively indicates that the mummy was the type or symbol of the "god" or "Living Energy" in the body of mankind.

The core of the great Egyptian Religion as well as Biblical Judaism, which is its legacy, is centered upon the conquest of the carnal nature within the flesh of the body, this "prison of darkness". Escape from this animal-nature is in another place in the ancient Egyptian Religion called the "overthrowal of your coffins" (Book of Hades, Fifth Division, Legend D.) Again, the Earth, our incarnational existence and experience, is called in the Egyptian faith "the coffin of Osiris, the coffin of Amenta."

Answer for yourself: Do you remember that all the words we have been using in previous articles such as Hades, Hell, Sheol, the pit, the Abyss, the Underworld, the Netherworld, the inferno, infernal, Perdition, Tatatrus, etc., have all been equated with Amenta?

Answer for yourself: Then if we read in the original ancinet sources thousands of years old and long before later Christian "reinterpreation" of these concepts that Amenta is the Earthly incarnation, and if Amenta is equated with all these later religious terms such as Hell, Hades, the Underworld, the Netherworld, Tartarus, the pit, Sheol, etc., then seeing for yourself that the most ancient references to Amenta refers to Earthly incarnation then does it not stand to reason that these other words and concepts carried the same ideas in the beginning of their use?

Answer for yourself: If these concepts meant Earthly incarnation in the beginning of time and in their use in the eariest Sacred books ever found on this planet then should they not retain their original meanings now in our Christian Books?

Read the three above questions again and and again and answer them for yourself over and over again until you really let it sink in. No wonder we have heard our whole lives the phases a "living Hell" and "war in Hell" because that is where we live; in this Eartly "prison in matter" where we are "crucified Souls on the cross of matter". Only later will this most ancient understanding change in the 2nd century and later at the hands of Rome who rejects the entirely of the ancinet Sacred Gnosis and Spiritual Wisdom and in so doing give the world a replacement religion at the point of a sword.

We made mention earlier that Horus is the prototype for later "opening of prison doors" to release the Souls in bondage to the flesh of the animal body. In Horus' descent (the Egyptan Krst/Christ) to open the tombs or coffins "of the dead" for the release of the "sleeping captive Souls" Horus says:

"I am come as the mummified one," that is, Horus (the Egyptian Christ) has come into fleshly embodiment to every son and daughter of God, every human being.

Answer for yourself: Paul asks what again: "Know ye not that Christ is in you"?

This is the same teaching we saw in Phillipians chapter 2 earlier in previous articles. This is the Egyptian Kenosis just as we find later expressed in the Christianized version of the same. This is the very same we see when this "Mind of God as the Christ" humbled himself and experienced a "death" on the "cross of matter" and was born into the "cave of the human bodily prison". Ancient Egypt expressed this idea first as they spoke of Horus, the Egyptian Krst, who "emptied Himself of His divinity" or His Deity, or that He "abandoned a sovereign position." It has also been said, "When He left Heaven and came to this Earth, He gave up the voluntary use of His divine attributes." And another has written, that Horus "restricted the use of these divine attributes when he took on the form of man." This is the same ideas expressed over and over again that we see when reading of the Christian Christ; the "pattern" of God's Krst continues in the New Testament but was first taught most correctly in the ancient Egyptian Religion thousands and thousands of years ago than mankind is today "without excuse". Realizing this I can no longer pastor from a mega Church; God and I both know the truth now. It is your turn.

Answer for yourself: Why was Mithra reported to have been born on the 25th December (which in the Julian Calendar was reckoned as the day of the Winter Solstice as well as kwon as the Nativity of the Sun? Why does Plutarch says in his Isis and Osiris, c. 12, that Osiris was born on the 361st day of the year (the Winter Solstice-for us better known as Christmas), when a Voice rang out proclaiming the Lord of All? Why did Plutarch say that Horus was born on the 362nd day of the year (the same time of the Winter Solstice---these 3 days when the Sun ("Living Energy in Heaven appeared as if 'dead'")?

Answer for yourself: Why was Apollo born on the same. Why were so many of these gods like Mithra, Apollo, Krishna, Jesus, and others, born not only on the same day but also in caves or underground chambers? They are symbolic of a Celestial Truth of the descent of the Soul and "Christ Soul" as God and "Living Energy" descended into "matter" where God "died" only to be resurrected in a new self-evolving existence of His Self in "matter". This same legend of gods (or idols) being born in caves (symbol for darkened "matter") has, curiously enough, been reported from Mexico, Guatemala, the Antilles, and other places in Central America (C. F. P. von Martius, Etknographie Amerika, etc. (Leipzig, 1867), vol. i, p. 758). The symbolic and ancient Gnosis is found all over the world for thousands and thousands of years.

Answer for yourself: Why, is it that thousands who partook of the ancient Mysteries and their festivals, accepted the "light" brought from the caves of their religious services and carried them symbolically with them in the form of candles and in so doing then rushed forth rejoicing to carry the new glory and "light of God within them" over the world? Could it poosibly be that ancient mankind once knew that the very "Living Energy" of God, the "Light of the World", dwells within them; that they were "little gods" growing up into the image of their Father? And why did Rome feel so strongly later that these needed simpletons to be exterminated and murdered by the millions?

Stop and think about that. Horus has come universally to all God's children as has the Christ. Rome will come much later and limit this "Christ" to one supposed person. This deviates from the "Divine Pattern" of "the Krst" which has remained unchanged for thousands and thousands of years prior to Rome's reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. Horus is not limited to but one person as Rome will make it appear in their "radical reinterpretation" of this ancient Spiritual Wisdom; this Christ is not limited to but one person. He has come to all as the Horus/Christ. It should be noted that this definitive statement of the God himself that "he comes in the character of the mummy", taken with his other assurances that "he comes to those in their coffins," must be admitted to speak to the truth which we have missed in our Christian dogmas; namely, that it is the "God", this "Living Energy", who comes to be buried in the "matter" of a lower kingdom (Lower Egypt; symbolic of the flesh and animal-nature of mankind), from which burial both the "God" and the lower entity will be raised again to a higher estate.

When the Sun-god entered "the ark of earth (feminine "matter"), which is called his coffin or sarcophagus," he was buried in obscurity and shorn cut of his power. No wonder in the story of Sampson, a type of Sun-god, who lost his power when he became involved with a "woman" (think again; the woman is symbolic of Mother Nature, or "matter"); again a symbol for becoming entombed and wrapped in swaddling clothes of "matter" that restrain the Deity incarnated in "material existence". Absence of hair typically meant loss of strength or life, as in the biblical story of Samson from Judges 13-16. The reason for this is clear.

Answer for yourself: How so?

Samson's name means "little Sun" or we could say little "Living Energy". Such is mankind. Long hair was a symbol of the Sun's radiant power, and ancient Sun gods as well as solar heroes from India to Ireland were usually portrayed with long hair. Many centuries later, the loss of hair was still used to denote a passage through the Underworld. Again we see the same thing behind what we have taken to be a "literal story". We find the incarnation of the "Living Energy" of the Cosmos, this Absolute Sun, as but one cell in the body of Ra, incarnated into "matter" and shorn of the power of the Deity awaiting to be awakened from the "dead". We need to look no further than Herakles (Hercules); a Greek solar hero/god who entered the belly of the underworld monster Tiamat and re-emerged three days later from that "death-like darkness" without a hair left on his head. Notice the 3 days again which we find in the Jonah/Jesus story and the Winter Solstice where the Sun (symbol of "Living Energy") is conquered for 3 days by the darkness of "matter" only to arise in a re-birth on Dec. 25.

Answer for yourself: Sound familiar????

This is the "Divine Pattern" and behind it all was NEVER a "literal-historical" meaning assigned to some Sungod or Goddess or just to one person or assumed "Messa" or "Messiah"; it always found its "historical" interpretation in each child of God, in every person ever born, in you and me.

In a sculptured sarcophagus of the fourth century amazing we find the three Magi from our "Jesus Story" are shown offering gifts to the Divine infant but this infant is different from the typical nativities we see.

Answer for yourself: How was this infant different? The infant "god" or "Jesus" was depicted as a mummified child as late as the 4th century! This is rather uncharacteristic for a Jewish baby, to be wrapped as a "mummy" for ancient Egypt unless theology is involved.

Answer for yourself: How can this be? Is this birth narrative, which was added to the first New Testament after 180 A.D., only an anthropomorphic representation of the "young Atum" incarnating into "matter"? This speaks volumes if we can only hear it. Is this "Living Energy" and its impregnation into "virginous matter" the real truth behind the "virgin birth" stories we hear? Yes it is.

This is further testimony of the tragic loss of our "Egyptian roots" (as well as Jewish Roots, the legacy of ancient Egypt) to our Christianity as Rome progressively moulded their new faith away from these ancient Egyptian moorings and teachings in their radical "reinterpretation" and "literalization" of all things Egyptian. I hope you are beginning to see the "big picture"; a picture which teaches us that from beginning to end the Canonical Gospels contain the Drama of the Mysteries of the Lunar-Solar God, narrated as a human history (anthropomorphically) which Rome gave the world and which was their new "replacement religion" to which they positioned themselves right in the center as God's dispenser of "grace" and as the only "door" to Heaven.

Try to picture the baby Jesus symbolized as a mummy in a coffin. Besides astonishing try to realize with me that as late as the 4th century these "Divine Truths" had not died out as of yet. There were yet some who had possessing of the "keys" to correctly interpreting the Egyptian mythos which later becomes the "literalized Jesus Story" which they will reject and is so doing seal their very deaths. In its most ancient understanding the "infant mummy" is but another depiction of the "Osiris Story"; a figure of the Divine nature and "Living Energy" restricted and bound tightly by the garment of this darkened flesh of "death".

The Egyptian analogies to the Christian epic are so close in some cases as to suggest an Egyptian origin for certain Christian doctrines and rites. This is clearly shown by Gerald Massey:

The Christian dispensation is believed to have been ushered in by the birth of a child, and the portrait of that child in the Roman Catacombs as the child of Mary is the youthful Sun-God in the Mummy Image of the child-king, the Egyptian Krst/Karast, or Christ. The alleged facts of our Lord's life as Jesus the Christ, were equally the alleged facts of our Lord's life as the Horus of Egypt, whose very name signifies the Lord...The Jesus Christ with female paps, who is the Alpha and Omega of Revelation, was the Iu of Egypt, and Iao of the Chaldeans. Jesus as the Lamb of God, and Ichthys the Fish, was Egyptian. Jesus as the Coming One; Jesus born of the Virgin Mother, who was overshadowed by the Holy Ghost, Jesus born of two mothers, both of whose names are Mary; Jesus born in the manger—at Christmas, and again at Easter; Jesus saluted by the three kings, or Magi; Jesus of the transfiguration on the Mount; Jesus whose symbol in the Catacombs is the eight-rayed Star—the Star of the East; Jesus as the eternal Child; Jesus as God the Father, re-born as his own Son; Jesus as the child of twelve years; Jesus as the Anointed One of thirty years; Jesus in his Baptism; Jesus walking on the Waters, or working his Miracles; Jesus as the Caster-out of demons; Jesus as a Substitute, who suffered in a vicarious atonement for sinful men; Jesus whose followers are the two brethren, the four fishers, the seven fishers, the twelve apostles, the seventy (or seventy-two in some texts) whose names were written in Heaven; Jesus who was administered to by seven women; Jesus in his bloody sweat; Jesus betrayed by Judas; Jesus as Conqueror of the grave; Jesus the Resurrection and the Life; Jesus before Herod; in the Hades, and in his re-appearance to the women and to the seven fishers; Jesus who was crucified both on the 14th and 15th of the month Nisan (let us not forget that our own Christian Gospels disagree on which day that Jesus, as "the Christ", was crucified); Jesus who was also crucified in Egypt (as it is written in Revelation); Jesus as judge of the Dead, with the sheep on the right, and the goats on the left, is Egyptian from first to last, in every phase from the beginning to the end the story of Jesus and Horus are the same (John Jackson, Pagan Christs). This is a "must read" book if you want the truth. John Jackson simplified Massy which is needed to all but the most accomplished students.

If you want to begin such study to see these truths for yourself let me recommend anything that Alvin Kuhn writes, Acharya S and The Christ Conspiracy, William Kingsland and The Gnosis or Ancient Widsom in the Scriptures, Gerald Massey's The Historical Jesus and the Mythical Christ, Samuel Sharpe's Egyptian Mythology; James Bonwick's Egyptian Belief and Modern Thought; James G. Frazer's Adonis, Attis, Osiris Studies in the History of Oriental Religion, 3rd ed., (New York: St. Martin, 1976); and T. W. Doane's Bible Myths. I would recommend that you begin with Doan and Bonwick and Sharpe and work your way into Kuhn, Acharya S, and later Gerald Massey for he is a difficult read. Other scholars like Alvin Kuhn and William Kingsland, The Gnosis or Ancient Wisdom in the Scriptures, are an excellent beginning. I suggest that you read everything you can get you hands on by Alvin Kuhn who simplifies Gerald Massey. Gerald Massey is a hard read. I would hope in time you could work you way up to Massey's The Historical Jesus and the Mythical Christ or Natural Genesis and Typology of Equinoctial Chistolatry (London: 1936), pp. 42–43. For an exhaustive treatment, see Massey's book A Book of the Beginnings, Containing an Attempt to Recover and Reconstitute the Lost Origins [sic] of the Myths and Mysteries, Types and Symbols, Religion and Language, with Egypt for the Mouthpiece and Africa as the Birthplace, 2 vols. (Secaucas, NJ: University Books Inc., 1974). Other valuable references are Massey's Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, vol I and II. If you make it your life's work to read through and understand these works then no man can ever lie to you about God ever again.

Answer for yourself: I mentioned this above but were you ever aware that there exists numerous images of the mummified Child-Jesus which were found in Christian catacombs, tombs and chapels in the early centuries? There were and today they are locked away in the darkness of the Vatican catacombs where no eye can see them again. That should not suprise you.

At first view the linkage of the idea of death as suggested by the mummy, with the infant figure, rather than with the more appropriate stage of senility, seems inappropriate and not according to the laws of Nature. Something is missed here unless we possess the "keys" necessary to interpret the ancient Spiritual Wisdom. In early Christian and pre-Christian iconography Jesus was indeed often figured as an aged one, about to enter the grave.

Answer for yourself: Why is this?

The mummified child was called by the Egyptians the "Khart". It is often spelled Krst/Karest but we know it mainly today as "the Christ". This "Krst/Karest" of Egypt led to the later Greek "Christ".

In the Gospels Jesus is put to death in accordance with the instructions given for making the Karest mummy. Not a bone must be broken. The true Karest must be perfect in every member. It is said: "This is he who comes out sound; whom men know not is his name."

Now pay attention. Here is an unbelievable departure by Rome from the ancient Spiritual Wisdom from which they crafted their new "Horus Story" or "Jesus Story".

- In the Gospels Jesus rises again with every member sound, like the perfectly-preserved Karest, to demonstrate the physical resurrection of the mummy.
- But, in the Egyptian original, from which Rome drew, the mummy does not rise physically, it transform (there is no physical resurrection of the dead body as we find in later Christianity...the departure from the "Divine Pattern". The deceased says:

"I am spiritualized. I am become a Soul. I rise as a God."

This transformation into the spiritual image, the Egyptian "Ka", has been omitted in the Gospel. Time to learn something new.

Answer for yourself: What is this "Ka"?

The ka is usually translated as "Soul" or "Spirit" The "ka" came into existence when an individual was born. It was believed that the ram-headed god Khnum crafted the "ka", the Spirit-Soul on his potter's wheel at a persons birth. It was thought that when someone died they "met their ka". Notice the "hands pinted upward" toward Heaven. A persons "ka", their "Living Energy, Spirit-Soul") would live on after their body had died. If you are familiar with Isaiah then we see this same story repeated much later in the Hebrew Bible which was heavily influenced by the Egyptian Religion.

Isa 64:8 8 But now, O LORD, thou art our father; we are the clay, and thou our potter; and we all are the work of thy hand. (KJV)

Khnum (Khenmew, Khnemu, Khenmu, Chnum), from the Egyptian "unite", "join" or "build", was an ancient deity of fertility, water and the great Potter who created children and their "ka" (Soul) at their conception. He was depicted as a ram, ram-headed man or as a full male with the horns of a ram who wears a plumed white crown of Upper Egypt (remember Upper Egypt refers to the Heavenly Nature while Lower Egypt refers to the Animal Nature"?). He was associated with the Sun god Re ("Living Energy"), the air god Shu, the earth god Geb ("matter") and Osiris, lord of the dead (now the incarnated "Living Energies in matter" who become "mummifed" as in the depictions of Osiris). In Egyptian mythology, Khnum (also spelt Chnum) was one of the earliest Egyptian gods, originally the god of the source of the Nile River (symbolic for life). Since the annual flooding of the Nile brought with it silt and clay, and its water brought life to its surroundings, he was thought to be the creator of human children, which he made at a potter's wheel, from clay, and places them in their mothers' uteruses. You can see on the right the gift of "children" to mankind. Indeed, before the cult of Ra gained prominence, he was said by those who worshipped him (he was just one of many neteru, the Divine Attibutes of the One True God) to have moulded the other Gods, and he had the titles Divine Potter and Lord of created things from himself.

Moving beyond this background material this spelling of the name as Chrest or Chrest in Latin is supremely important, because it enables me to prove the identity with the Egyptian Karest or Karust, the name of the Christ as the embalmed mummy.

Answer for yourself: What does this Christ as an embalmed mummy teach us?

It is the image of the resurrection in Egyptian tombs, the type of immortality, the likeness of the Horus, who rose again and made the pathway out of the sepulcher for those who were his disciples or followers (just as in the "Jesus Story").

No representation of the supposed historic resurrection of Jesus has been found on any of the early Christian monuments. But, instead of the missing depiction of the resurrection of Jesus, we find the scene of Lazarus being raised from the dead (Lazarus being the Jewish telling of the resurrection of Osiris). This is depicted over and over again as the typical resurrection where there is no real physical one! Again the "allegory" has been tragically mistaken for a "literal-historical" event. The scene is not exactly in accordance with the rising from the grave in the Gospel. It is purely Egyptian, and Lazarus is an Egyptian mummy! Thus Lazarus, in each representation, is the mummy-type of the resurrection; Lazarus is symbolic of "the Karest", who was the "Egyptian Christ", and who is reproduced by Gnostic art in the Catacombs of Rome as a form of the "Gnostic Christ", who was not and could not become an historical character.

Further, as the whole thing is Egyptian, it is important to note that the name is derived from Egyptian religion as well.

Answer for yourself: How is that?

We find that, "Laz" (equal to Ras), which means to be "raised up", while "aru" is the mummy by name. With the Greek terminal "s" this becomes what? Hold on. This become "Laz"-"aru"-"s" or Lazarus. In the course of humanizing and carnalizing the mythos the typical representation of the resurrection found in the tombs of Rome and Egypt would become the story of Lazarus being raised from the dead. This Karest type of the Christ in the Catacombs is not limited to Lazarus but many examples exist.

By means of the Karest type the Christ and the Christians can both be traced in the ancient tombs of Egypt. The mummy was made in this likeness of the Christ. It was the Christ by name, identical with the "Chrestoi" of the Greek Inscriptions. Thus the honored dead, who rose again as the followers of Horus-Makheru, the Word of Truth, are found to be the Christian, on the Egyptian monuments. Ma-Kheru is the term that is always applied to the faithful ones who win the crown of life and wear it at the festival which is designated "Come thou to me" -- an invitation by Horus the Justifier to those who are the "Blessed ones of his father, Osiris" -- they who, having made the Word of Truth the Laws of God as the foundation for their, were the Justified -- [hoi chrestoi], the Christians, on earth.

justifed the ungodly

In a fifth century representation of the Madonna and child from the cemetery of St. Valentinus, the new-born babe lying in a box or crib is also the "Karest", or "mummy-type", further identified as the Divine babe of the Solar mythos by the disk of the Sun and the cross of the equinox at the back of the infant's head. Thus the child-Christ of the historic faith is born, and visibly begins in the Karest image of the dead Christ, which was the mummy-type of the resurrection in Egypt for thousands of years before the Christian era. This doubles the proof that the Christ of the Christian Catacombs was a survival of the Karest of Egypt. The mummy was the earliest human image of the Christ. It is all Egyptian and without the "keys" to proper interpreation of the Egyptian Religon and their Spiritual Dogmas then we have not the slighest clue as to what these same dogmas mean in our Christian Bibles; we have to believe our preachers and teachers. Having studied this in detail they are wrong. That is but one more reason why I no longer stand behind a pulpit having "obtained the keys" to life and truth which could only be accomplished once I removed myself from this replacement religion called organized Christiantiy today.

The Krst or Karast is the word for the Egyptian Christ. Both "Krst/Karest" depicted a "rising again" and were "representative of the resurrection". In light of this ancient meaning of "rising again" and "resurrection" I find it astounding and almost unbelievable that the alleged historic resurrection of Jesus has never yet been found portrayed on the so-called early Christian Monuments, including those discovered in the Roman Catacombs. After all it is the central dogmas of Christianity, this resurrection of Jesus Christ.

1 Cor 15:14 14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. (KJV)

But this above verse is always taken as if "literal" instead of "allegorical" for the rising of Osiris-Horus/Christ in the bosom of mankind; such a "literal" understanding of the above verse should not be! Had this been literal in the earliest days of Roman Christianity common sense would say that somewhere, someplace, some physical representation of this physical resurrection would be found. It is not. Its absence speaks volumes.

Answer for yourself: But what do we find there in place of the missing fact, in place of any evidence to a physical depiction of a resurrection of Jesus? This bears repeating and long pondering. If not Jesus then what do we find "resurrected"?

We find over and over the same scene of Lazarus ("Laz"-"aru"-"s", Osiris) ONLY being raised from the dead and not "Jesus". This raising of Lazarus (the Egyptian Osiris in "matter") is depicted over and over again as the typical resurrection where there is no real physical or fleshly one! The Krst/Karest/Christ of Egypt was reproduced in Rome like the other Mythical types perpetuated there by Gnostic Art. As the image is totally Egyptian, it is probable that the name is so likewise.

Now get ready for a bomb shell that has laid asleep behind but another mistakenly understood passage in our Bibles. "Las" (or ras) signifies to "be raised up", and "aru" is another name for the "Mummy-type".

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us? It tells us that Las-aru, or Lazarus, with the Greek terminal, is the Egyptian symbol of resurrection called the Karast, or Christ within "matter". This typical and pictorial representation of the rising from the dead body would become the story of Lazarus in the natural course of the later carnalization and literalization of the Mythos by Rome. The name "Lazarus" is a Latinized form of the Greek "Lazaros", a contraction "Eleazaros" ("God has helped"), in Standard Hebrew El'azar. In Hebrew, the Egyptian god Osiris (whose name in demotic/hieroglyphics is thought to have been pronounced Aser) is also translated Elaser (from "El" meaning god and "Aser"). There are several elements that link the episode of Lazarus with the story of Osiris being raised from the dead. In the Bible the raising is placed in "Bethany" (which in Hebrew can also be "Beth-Anu", "Beth" meaning "house"), whereas in the Osiris legend, it is placed in the house of the dead (which in demotic is a place named "Annu"). This similarity is used by some scholars to suggest that the Lazarus story is part of a general body of motifs shared among mystery religions in the Mediterranean, which became absorbed into the Jesus story.

I hope you see that the descended "Living Energy", this "buried god" was to have his "rebirth" in "matter" and to begin life anew as an "infant" god in Amenta, this Earth. Thus the Horus story. Thus the stories of all the solar gods and descending goddesses and lets not forget our "Jesus Story" which follows this same "Divine Pattern". This "Christ in us" must grow up and be "formed in us" as Paul states. The deceased father god, this "dying god", this incarnating god which "fell" into the darkness of "matter", who was "crucified on the cross of matter", was to metamorphose into the new form of himself as his own child, as God the Son. While yet a baby-god, an "infant Living Energy" newly "born" into "dark matter" and beginning his new experience in the grossness of "matter", he was cramped and confined by the limitations of matter (mummified) and the undeveloped stage of his own powers as an "infant" Deity newly born. He was the new god, who had not yet broken his bonds or risen from the limitations of his new incarnate fleshy existence. He needed to be raised from the "deadness of matter". Like Osiris, he needed to "come forth"; this descended "Deific Mind of God" as "the Christ" needed to grow up and be about his Father's business.

This descending "infant Living Energy" which "fell" from Heaven into the carnality of "matter" was as if a "mummy" in "Amenta" (the Earth, Hell, Hades, Sheol, Tartarus, the Underworld, the pit, etc.). Again forget not that the stage for this whole Celestial and Terrestrial drama was this Earth and not some after-bodily-demise existence following the biological death of the body somewhere between Earth and Heaven as we have been so erroneously taught today. This "god", this "Deific Mind of God" as "the Krst" had "gone down into Egypt" (carnality and animal matter) only to "rise from Lower Egypt" to "Upper Egypt" which is the Divine "Pattern". The animal nature was to become Godly! "Lower Egypt" (animal-nature) was to be unified with "Upper Egypt" (Spirit/Soul). God is "One", a Unity that is constantly becoming.

This is important. The Hebrews, mainly because of their separation from Egypt under Akhenaten, the Biblical Moses, chose to use their own unique symbolisms to depict these same "Divine concepts". Therefore we don't find the symbolism of the mummy in the typology of the Hebrew Bible. But with a keen eye we can find it there but only in another disguise. We find "the mummy" repeatedly hidden in the often used word "flesh". Where the Kamite, The Egyptian Book of the Dead says:

"My dead body shall not rot in the grave," we find that the Psalmist writes:

Ps 16:10 10 For thou wilt not leave my Soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. (KJV)

Strong's Concordance:

7585 she'owl (sheh-ole'); or sheol (sheh-ole'); from 7592; Hades or the world of the dead (as if a subterranean retreat), including its accessories and inmates: KJV-- grave, hell, pit.

Answer for yourself: Have we not already seen that the word "Amenta, Hades, Sheol, Hell, Grave, Pit, etc., all refer to the "incarnated bodily existence on this planet Earth"? Yes we surely have.

But once in a while we get lucky and find an original Egyptian term that has been retained in Hebrew Scriptures which makes the link to the ancient Egyptian Religion very plain. Such a term is the word "Sekhem".

Answer for yourself: What is the meaning of the word "Sekhem"?

Sekhem is one of the names of the burial-place of the Osiris-mummy in The Egyptian Book of the Dead. The deceased is buried as a mummy in Sekhem, or as we are more familiar now "buried in a grave when incarnated as Living Energy" into "matter". The "Divine Pattern" again before us should recall all that we have seen before.

Often "keys" fall into our laps to help us better interpret the Bible and its many ambiguous passages. When the word Sheol in the Old Testament is rendered in English by "the grave", it does not always mean the "abode of the deceased" or the physical person who had died and whose lifeless flesh is interred into the ground. Important to note is the fact that the Hebrew writers were not always speaking or thinking of the grave when they wrote of Sheol, which is the Egyptian Amenta (the realm of the incarnated Soul in "dead matter"). Often we must be on our toes to spot that Sheol in many places refers to the Divine nether-Earth, not simply the dirt tomb. The grave, this dirt to which the deceased is laid, is not identical with Hell, nor the pit-hole with the bottomless pit. The pangs and sorrows of Sheol, like the purging pangs of the Roman purgatory, have to be studied in The Egyptian Book of the Dead if we are to ever make sense of them. Many of the moanings and the groanings in the Psalms are the utterances of Osiris or the Osiris suffering in Amenta, in this Earthly incarnation. Let us not forget that the King David of the Bible is the Pharoah Tuthomose III and any reading of the earliest Old Testament Books must be undertaken with an Egyptian Mind-set!

Answer for yourself: Were you aware for starters that the true identity of the King David of the Bible is not whom you have thought? He is the Pharaoh Tuthmose III of the VIII Dynasty. Thus, once we identify correctly just whom this King David actually is then it makes sense that he would be speaking of Amenta and the Hebrew Sheol would be identical with the concept of Amenta, the realm of the dead, this Earthly incarnation. The study of the Hebrew Pharaohs are elsewhere on this very website if you wish to study them and learn just who are our Patriarchs in the Bible which are disguised as "Jews".

The Bible records cries for assistance in Sheol ("the incarnated in matter"). The appeals in the house of bondage for help from on high, and for deliverance from afflictions and maladies more than human, were uttered in Amenta before they were heard later repeated in the Hebrew version of Sheol, and the Psalmist who first wrote the supplications on behalf of the Manes (the deadened and incarnated Souls in "matter") was known as the Divine scribeThoth before the Psalms in Hebrew were ascribed to David. The speaker of Psalm 16 is talking pure Egyptian doctrine in Amenta concerning his Soul and body when he says, "My flesh shall dwell in safety, for thou wilt not leave my Soul in Sheol; neither wilt thou suffer thy holy one to see corruption; thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is the fullness of joy, in thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore". As we see from the The Egyptian Book of the Dead, this is a Mane, a Spirit of the dead, expressing his confidence in the duration of his personality, the persistence of his "sahu" or "mummy-Soul" in Amenta, and his hope of being vivified for ever by the Holy Spirit and led along the pathway of eternal life by Horus the Redeemer to the right hand of his father, Atum-Ra. He is the sleeper in Amenta when he says, "I shall behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied with thy likeness when I awake" (Ps. 17:15). This is the "Divine Pattern" repeated in both the Old and New Testaments but witout the "keys" to these ancient Egyptian Symbols we have not a clue or a chance to understand what we read.

The speaker was in Amenta as the land of bondage, "in fleshly matter", when the "cords of Sheol" were bound about him. He was likened to the suffering Horus, sitting blind and helpless in the utter darkness, pierced and torn and bleeding from the wounds inflicted on him by the battle with "matter" (Set, the the darkness of "matter"), who had been his own familiar friend, his twin-brother (itself a form of "Living Energy"), and who had turned against him and betrayed him to his death. Spirit and "matter" are at war and the Christ has come to conquer the "death of the incarnation". The most memorable sayings in the Psalms, and the most misleading when misunderstood, are uttered in this character of Osiris, who was the typical victim in Amenta, where he was tormented by the followers of Set, the forsaken sufferer who was piteously left to cry, "My God! My God! Why hast thou forsaken me ? Why art thou so far from helping me?" The sufferer is in Sheol, the miry pit, when he says, "I sink in deep mire". "Deliver me out of the mire, and let not Sheol shut her mouth upon me" (Ps. Ixix. 2,14, 15).

More clues and "keys" lay before us. The well of Jacob near Sechem answers to the well of Osiris at Abydos, and the oak or terebinth in Sechem to the tree of life in the Pool of Persea in the 17th chapter of the Egyptian Book of the Dead. The fields of Sechem correspond to the Sekhet-Hetep or fields of peace and plenty in the Kamite (Egyptian) original. Also the incident of Joseph carrying his father's (Jacobs) coffin matches Horus' carrying his father' (Osiris) mummy. The parallels are endless.

Answer for yourslelf: What should we think?

This tells us that behind the Hebrew, behind the New Testament, lies a "reinterpreted" Egyptian Religion where the original dogmas and doctrines have way to often lost their original meanings.

Well, we have learned a lot in this article. Time for a breather and a break. Let us continue when ready with next article in this series.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #14

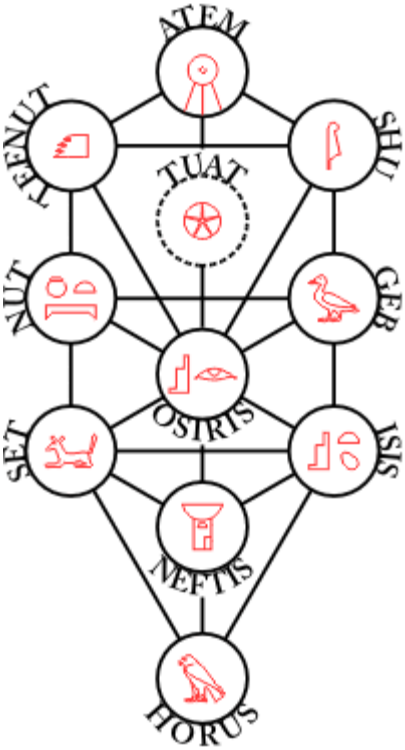
Let us continue our study on the Soul in Amenta. Our depth of knowledge and parallels to our "Jesus Story" increase. The "truth" is coming to light. Let us continue to separate "truth from fiction".

The word "mummy", which we have seen in earlier articles, and as found in the ancient Egyptian Religion, is connected to both the "Soul" and the "Krst/Christ". This word "mummy" is derived from the Egyptian word "mum", which means to "initiate into the mysteries."

It will benefit us greatly to establish a summary background in these "mysteries" before we continue with our study of the "mummy" and "Amenta"; the realm of the "incarnational dead".

Of direct concern for us is the Osiris, Isis, and Serapis (Osiris-Apis) originating in Egypt which were the foundation and "Divine Pattern" for the later Graeco-Thracian Mysteries, having their principal seat at Eleusis, and associated in particular with with Demeter, Persephone, and Dionysus. Others that followed this same "Divine Pattern" are those of Cybele and Attis in Phyrgia; of Aphrodite and Adonis in Syria; and of Mithra, primarily concerning with Persia and spreading into the Roman Empire. It is appropriate to take note of certain types of religious thought which were in close affinity with the standpoint of all of these Mystery Religions. Here, without a doubt, are to be included Orphism and the Hermetic writings. It is claimed that Gnosticism was indebted to the Mystery Religions for its metaphysical understandings of the cosmos as well.

Answer for yourself: Why is this "spread into the Roman Empire" of major importance for our study? Here we find the very foundation of the myths of the "gods" and "goddesses" which later becomes the same foundation for Rome's later "Jesus Story" from "beginning to end". All of the Mystery Religions as well as our "Jesus Story" follow the same "Divine Pattern" that expresses "incarnation into virginous matter (the Marys of the world), life, struggle to achieve and maintain an ordered existence, death, ascension, and rebirth". This is the Cosmic Cycle and pattern of the whole Universe; mankind is but a microcosm of the macrocosm. We need to search out the essentials of every religion, to see its real values. Especially we need to search for those basic truths which are common to each of them. Behind the ceremony and symbols, behind the various forms of ritual, there are deep truths. Much of the essence in Spiritual values in these world religions I mention are identical in each of them, for course, because they stem from the same Source. We need to study the similar teachings that are Spiritual in nature and Universal in Scope. Unlike the way I did studying "backwards" down from the 5th century where I discovered this "Divine Pattern" and its divergence the further I traced it to is Source, I recommend that all Christians begin with ancient Egypt and discovered the Divine Pattern in the beginning and study its divergence theologically as mankind evolves through the centuries up until the present. Then you can see just how far from this "Divine Patter" we have traveled and fallen away from this greater Divine Truth given to mankind in our very beginning.



It is important right now to recognize that there is no period of the Roman Empire concerning which we are so little informed as the third century; precisely the one during which the Oriental Religions reached the apogee of their power. What we do know however is that at a comparatively early date these "mysteries" began to invade the West. The influx of Egyptian, Semitic, and Persian beliefs and customs took place than threatened to submerge all that Greek and Roman genius has built up. The Cult of Cybele was represented in Rome as early ab 204 B.C.E. The Cult of Isis and that of the related Egyptian divinities had begun to take root in Greece and southern Italy (Rome) in the third century before the time of the "Christ". From the end of the first century the cult of Isis won an every-increasing company of adherents till the culmination of the Isis Cult and its influence in the early part of the third century C.E. The Cult of Mithra was represented at Rome as early as 67 B.C.E. and in the second and third centuries it was given a wide extension in the region stretching from the Caspian Sea to Italy and the Eastern part of Gaul. Being the religion of soldiers it was carried wherever the Roman legions were sent. The climax of Mithra's progress was reached toward the end of the third century. The Orphic brotherhoods were an appreciable factor in the Greek domain, including again Southern Italy, from the sixth century B.C.E. The Hermetic literature in its extant form was not earlier than the second century of our era. As you can see the conditions are in place for a later "reinterpretation" of the same religious ideology under a new name and a new time for the Roman Empire and this is expressed in Constantine's Christianity.

Answer for yourself: Why is all of this important? Syncretistic tendencies abounded in Southern Italy during these centuries and each of these "cults" and "religious expressions" were open in the course of their development to the introduction of new elements. That is why scholars will tell us that the Eleusinian Mysteries, being the religion of the Soul, was largely indebted to those of the earlier Cults of Isis. In fact the Eleusianian Mysteries were no more than a Hellenistic version of the latter (Foucart, Les Mysteries d'Eleusis). Foucart will go on to maintain the Orphism borrowed, especially through the medium of Phythagoras, quite largely from Egyptian sources. This is understandable once you learn that Phythagoras spent 22 years in ancient Egypt. As you are beginning to see the ancient Egyptian Religion became the foundation for all later "World Religions" in one way or the other! Without a keen and correct understanding of the ancient Egyptian Religion then often one is confused by its metamorphosis from nation to nation and the conflicting names and "changed" in the original Mythos are very hard to follow. But once one sees the overall "Divine Pattern" being reproduced over and over again, a pattern of "incarnation into virginous matter (the Marys of the world), life, struggle to achieve and maintain an ordered existence, death, ascension, and rebirth" then it is easy to see its replay once again in Rome's "literalized" and "carnalized" Christianity where the prior Divine Allegories of the Soul were "historicized" mistakenly in the life of a supposed Human Christ which is limited sadly to but one person by Rome.

The age in which these Mysteries has their widest diffusion in the Roman Empire was a period much given to astrology and sidereal mysticism in general. In the mystical schemes of these Mysteries large account was made of the "stars" and of their interconnection with the fortunes of Souls. Wide extension was awarded to the doctrine that the Soul in descending from Heaven takes on the attributes of the planets through which She entered into embodied existence. After death She has, by a reverse movement, to make the Heavenward journey, in order, after having laid aside at the several stations the limitations of Earthly existence, to return to Her original home in the realm of light".

> As we have mentioned before the Heavens were divided in these Mysteries into sever spheres, each of which were conjoined with a planet. A sort of "Ladder" composed of eight superposed gates, the first of seven of which were symbolized in the Temples of mankind of the "road" to be followed to reach the supreme region of the fixed stars. To pass from one story to the next the wayfarer had each time to enter a gate guarded by an angle of Ormuzd (Ahura Mazda, the good god of Zoroastrianism, the equivalent of Osiris). As the Soul traversed these different zones, it rid itself, as one would of garments, of the passions and faculties it had received in its descent to the Earth. The Soul was found to be "naked", stripped of every vice and every sensibility, when it penetrated the eighth Heaven to enjoy there, as an essence supreme, and in the eternal light that bathed the gods, beatitude without end (Cumont, The Mysteries of Mithra, pp. 144-145).

In these Mysteries these "gods" were conceived as cosmic powers, forces, and "Living Energies" as seen of the left in the depiction of the Ladder to Heaven (the neteru). God not only contains all things, but is veritably all things. The bottom line of all of this is Monotheism, where we find that a Cosmic Power was acknowledged, which was manifested in different forms and addressed under different names but which at the same time was described as "One" and "Universal". In this pantheistic viewpoint we see no real difference between these various Mysteries, since all of them can be interpreted as only varying designations of "the Power" which is one in essence though diversified in manifestation. Thus the Oriental and Egyptian gods were freely identified with the Greek, as Mithra with Helios, Isis with Demeter, Osiris with Dionysus, and Osiris and Horus with "Jesus". Central to all of these is the idea as you can see is the "Divine Pattern" of the "descent of the God" into matter in various degrees of manifestation. This "matter" again being a restriction to the "Living Energy" which had "fallen into matter". This was called again as we saw the "Krst/Christ-Mummy" as it applied to mankind.

Answer for yourself: Could it be then that the whole elaborate procedure of mummification was inaugurated to typify and symbolize the whole broad meaning of the incarnation, as a submerging of "Divine Living Energy/Spirit" into the dense state of "matter"? Yes it was. The ancients taught that it was this "downward fall" into descending realms of "matter" which was the only path leading to the "initiation" of these "Living Energies/Spirits" into the higher mysteries that lurk in the depths of creation and life.

Now your getting the idea. And this same "idea" was again later given a "new birth" in the Christian Mysteries with the "Jesus Story"; nothing is "new under the Sun" except Rome's later "historical-literal" interpretation of this ancient Metaphysical reality which at one time was known world-wide by the ancients.

The "introduction" is over. Now it is time we go deeper in our study of the Soul in Amenta as our study in this area is winding down and will soon end. As we have seen so far this is a most enlightening study that has revolutionary implications for our current Christian theology surrounding "Jesus" as well as "the Christ" which Rome presented to the world as an assumed "literal-historical" personage.

Answer for yourself: Is not serious study wonderful? Oh how I love it. This is how we separate God from "religion" and the dogmas of selfish men who misrepresented God to mankind for their selfish purposes. This this ancient Spiritual Knowledge was known to those who not only crafted the Roman Religion but who equally chose to deviate from the ancient Spiritual Gnosis and reject this higher Spiritual Knowledge and in so doing give the world the first "replacement religion of mankind" which was birthed from the 2nd through the 5th century by Rome.

Hosea 4:6

My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: (KJV)

Knowledge is important for it is the only path to "Truth". This is why we must know what happened in antiquity that shaped the formation of the Christian Faith as we know it today as it deviated from what mankind had always recognized and knew to be the central Divine Truths about the cosmos as well as himself as a living being within it.

Now we move to look at several very important Egyptian words that are all related in one way or the other to "the mummy" in Amenta and its relationship to the "incarnation of the "Krst/Karest/Christ". When we first think as Christians of the "incarnation of the Christ" we are programed to think of the "baby Jesus" laying in a manger. We know the story. The story is that the baby's mother, Mary, and his father, Joseph, had to leave their home city of Nazareth and go on some sort of tax business to the town of Bethlehem. Finding no room in the inn they would have to find another place to stay. At last Mary and Joseph found shelter in a small barn with the animals. When the baby was born that night, Mary said, "His name will be Jesus," and she wrapped him warmly and laid him swaddling clothes (burial clothes) in a manger. There he went to sleep!.

Oh how true. The "indwelling incarnated Christ" which "fell" into "matter" is always incarnated "asleep" in a body of darkened "matter"; a cocoon and prison of Spiritual "death" and a tempting "darkness" that imparts tremendous force and pressure to ensure that the "Christ" does not awaken within this prison of material existence. "Matter" is out to slay the "new born Krst/Karest/Christ" in order that it cannot fulfill the mission of "awakening" of the Soul in Amenta (Earthly incarnation). Almost every "Mystery" had its "Herod" who wishes to slay the new born "Mind of God" in "matter". It is the same story that we live our in each of our lives; the only problem is that our "Jesus Story" is not a "literal-historical" account of anything other than the corruption of the ancient Divine Spiritual Wisdom of the ancients which was the blueprint for the Soul and its Spiritual Evolution in these animal bodies in which it finds itself. It is time we find out what is hidden behind this "historization" of the ancient metaphysical truth of the incarnation of the Soul-Christ into "Amenta" or into this "densely dark fleshly matter" of the human body which is so often called in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Sacred Books of the world such terms as "Hades, Hell, Gehenna, the Underworld, the pit, Sheol, Tophet, Inferno, the Snake Pit, Purgatory, the Lake of Fire, Tartarus, etc. Hell, as it exists in the Western popular imagination, has its origins in Hellenized Christianity, particularly taken from adaptation of the Hellenistic afterlife known as Tartarus. Judaism, at least initially, believed in Sheol, a shadowy existence to which all Souls were sent indiscriminately. Sheol was at its earliest understanding as inherited from ancient Egypt no more than a poetic metaphor for just "death", not really an afterlife at all. Death, we have taken great pains to show was again at its earliest understanding by the ancients no more than an "Earthly incarnation into matter" by the Divine Soul. This knowledge would slip away slowly over time.

The Hebrew Sheol was translated in the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures, as "Hades", the name for the Underworld in Greek mythology. The Lake of Fire and realm of Eternal Punishment in Hellenistic mythology was in fact Tartarus. "Hades" was not what we have come to understand as "Hell" originally in Hellenistic mythology, but was rather a form of limbo where "the dead" went to be judged. Ancient Egypt has for thousands and thousands of years already understood this concept and taught it correctly according to the "Divine Pattern". The New Testament uses this word, but it also uses the word "Gehenna", from the valley of Ge-Hinnom, a valley near Jerusalem originally used as a location in which human sacrifices were offered to an idol called "Molech" (or Moloch). Gehenna is fairly well defined in rabbinic literature. It is sometimes translated as "Hell", but this doesn't effectively convey its meaning. In Judaism, Gehenna is not Hell, but rather a sort of Purgatory where one is judged based on their life's deeds on this Earth! Again "death" and "Earth" is connected. This was originally the "Divine Pattern" for the incarnation of the Soul into a "Spiritual Death" when incarnated and when it "fell" into a material existence on Earth. Interestingly the Kabbalah describes Gehenna as a "waiting room" (commonly translated as an "entry way") for all Souls (not just the wicked Souls). Some consider Gehenna as a spiritual forge where the Soul is purified for its eventual ascent to Olam Habah or "the world to come", often viewed as analogous to Heaven. This is also mentioned in the Kabbalah, where the Soul is described as like the flame of a candle lighting another: the part of the Soul that ascends being pure, and the "unfinished" piece being reborn. Another source for the modern idea of "Hell" is the Greek Tartarus, a place in which conquered gods and other spirits were punished. Tartarus formed part of Hades in Greek mythology, but notice this, Hades also included Elysium, a place for the reward for those who lead virtuous lives, whilst others spent their afterlife in the asphodels fields.

Answer for yourself: Have we been taught the dogma of Hell and Hades correctly? When was the last time Hell and Hades was called Elysium where Soul's are rewarded for righteous living? Is this why The Egyptian Book of the Dead called Amenta, our Hell and Hades, the "Isle of the Blessed"? One cannot find any burning fire here; at least not in the original understanding of the terms which we still use today to describe it however today the concept connected with these ancient terms definitely has been altered and changed from its original intent by ancient Egypt.

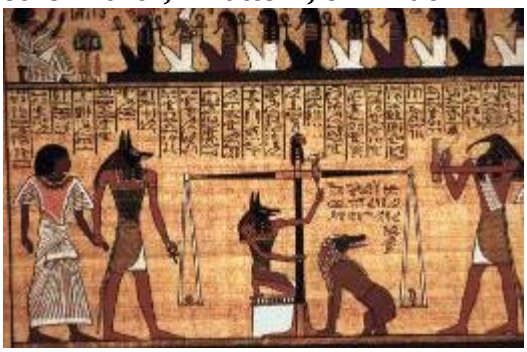
Alternately, scholars have also suggested that Greek "Elysion" may instead derive from the Egyptian term "ialu" (older "iaru"), meaning "reeds," with specific reference to the "Reed fields" (Egyptian: sekhet iaru / ialu), a paradisiacal land of plenty where the dead hoped to spend eternity. And all of this is in Amenta, Hell, and Hades, but we never hear of this from Roman Christianity.

Answer for yourself: What did you notice that is alarming and awe inspiring in the above discussion? Did you catch it?

There is no burning fire or torment to be found in Hades where Elysium is located. The Elysian fields, or sometimes Elysian plains, which again are located in Hades, were the final resting place of the Souls of the heroic and the virtuous. Now this is important for you to grasp. Hades was called in The Egyptian Book of the Dead the "Isle of the Blessed". Like most ancient (pre-Christian or pre-Roman) religions, Hades, or the Underworld was not viewed as negatively as it is in Christianity today. Be that as it may, amazingly Christianity, although teaching a different concept of Hell from that of the ancients, yet has traces of the truth in the New Testament showing us how this ancient concept of Soulish incarnation into "matter" was earlier changed. We have to look no further than its own book of Revelation where we find our very planet Earth called "Hell".

Rev 20:11-13 11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. 12 And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

Answer for yourself: "Works" where? In the Soul's prior incarnational existence on Earth.



Now watch closely as two realms are asked by God to return the "dead" and the "deceased" for their judgment.

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it;

and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is going on?

Mother Matter, in the form of "water", the seas of the Earth, as well as Mother Earth, "matter", or "mud" (called Hades/Hell by the ancients/incarnational existence), are being asked to open their mouths and return the dead for their rendezvous with God at the Double Hall of Ma'at, the throne of God for the weighing of the heart of the "dead" Souls who were incarnated into "matter". Their "works" are to be judged as we read above. It is simple if we but look at what is being said and interpret these "ancient texts" with the correct understandings of these "ancient words" as understood by the ancients when they "FIRST USED THEM" and intended that they be understood that way . We must read our Bibles and understand them and these words and concepts within them as the ancient did; any other reading or adopting the much later "Roman Reinterpretation" is a waste of time and only reinforces further ignorance of the Divine Truth!

Now here is where it gets very, very interesting so hold on tight. It might surprise you but a very, very important Egyptian word was marked upon the lids of the Egyptian coffins which contained their mummies.

Answer for yourself: What was this word inscribed on the tombs of the ancient Egyptians?

That word is "Krst" or, in its more familiar representation to us, "the Christ" in our English language. That's right; the ancient Egyptian, as far back as 10,000 year B.C.E. carved into their coffin lids and sephelcures the name "Christ".

Answer for yourself: Why? Were they looking forward to the coming of a Jewish Rabbi? Not on your life! We are missing something; possibly the biggest revelation ever concerning "Krst/Christ".

That fact is simply amazing when you think of it for a second an let it sink in. "The Krst/Christ" has been with mankind since the beginning of time and mankind was aware of "His Presence". This fact is alarming when paralleled with what we are taught today that "the Christ", according to Roman theology, only came to mankind "in the flesh" in a "historical sense" just a little over 2,000 years ago.

Now we have read this following passage our whole lives but never with the knowledge that you now possess. The ancients taught that the "Krst", like the Soul, experienced a "fall" into "matter" in order to see out and save the Soul from continued Spiritual Darkness since now imprisoned in the body of "death". So we read:

I Jn 4:1-3 1 Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

That is so true. No longer possessing the "keys" to interpret the ancient Spiritual Gnosis, meaning well often "untruths" are taught unknowingly. No greater untruth can be told than that of Jesus Christ being a "literal" and "historical" being some 2,000 years ago when as we have seen the name "Jesus Christ" can be found in ancient Egypt today over 10,000 years B.C.E. Now, with your "Metaphysical Eyes" wide open and your "Gnostic Mind" awakened now read the following passage:

2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: 3 And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Do we dare "think" and answer these following questions with an open heart and mind?

- What was again taught for thousands and thousands of years; a human "Christ" limited to but one person from nation to nation or as I have shown you the "incarnation of Krst/Christ" and Deific Mind of God which had "fallen to its death" with the Soul into the flesh of mankind?
- Does this above passage, so mistakenly interpreted now for 2,000 years, mean one has or at least should believe in a single supposedly "historical " and "literal" Christ who came as a Jewish person named Yeshua/Jesus some 2,000 years ago or does it really refer as really intended by the writer to mean the "incarnation of Christ" into the "flesh of the whole of mankind" and that such a Gnostic denial of this Gnostic Dogma renders one as if he was of the Spirit of the "anti-Christ"?
- Can we go to church our whole lives and die and be seen as if are "the anti-Christ" in the Creator's eyes because we believed a damning lie our whole lives?
- Have we as traditional "historical" and "literal" believers in but one "historicized Jesus" as "the Christ", as Rome as given us, allowed us to fall smack-dab into fulfilling this verse in our lives?
- Are we unknowingly true "anti-Christs" because we have never known or believed in the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and such dogmas as taught by these Divine Mysteries only one of which is the "fall" of "Krst" into all "matter" in his coming to save us as wayward Souls who are "dead and crucified on the cross of matter in Amenta"?
- Can we really be "not of God" because we never knew the truth about the "crucifixion of Krst on the cross of matter" as was taught by ancient Spiritual Sages from the beginning of time down and up until the 2nd century with Rome when everything changes? I will let you sort all of this out from the evidence that I present.

It appears that Rome is not telling the truth of the matter in the Bible for as I have shown you the Cult of Isis and Osiris is no stranger to Rome in the centuries long before or after when the Roman "Jesus" Religion was birthed! Eye-opening is this facts of history today that come before us that betrays Rome's radical reinterpretation of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of mankind. Once you get the facts then you can see for yourself the lies taught as "Divine Truths" today from behind the pulpits of our Churches and from this Roman Book of contradictions; never knowing this Divine Truth millions are led astray and die without ever coming to awareness of their true identity of themselves or "the Christ" that lived within them their whole lives. Looking up toward the Sky in hopes of the "coming of Christ" they live their whole lives in oblivion that "the Christ" has already come "within them" and desires to "awaken within them" and lead them home. It appears now that the idea of the "Krst", or the concept of the "incarnating Krst", was here long before a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus Christ and archeological evidence has located the name "Jesus Christ" in ancient Egypt over 5,000 years B.C.E. and possibly as early as 10,000 B.C.E. This ancient Egyptian reference to the "Krst" is not intended to conjure up thoughts of some "Jewish Rabbi" by any stretch of the imagination! How foolish to think so or fail to ponder the deeper significance of this ancient reference to "Jesus Christ" in ancient Egypt. In these coffins again were the mummified corpses of the deceased which had been anointed for "burial" and embalmed as the "Krst/Mummy". Interestingly, the word "mummy" is derived from the Egyptian word "mum" which again is very important to note.

Answer for yourself: What does this Egyptian word "mum" or "mummy" mean? It means " to initiate into the mysteries" or the ancient Mystery Religions where one was taught the ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the Egyptian Religion and the secret truths about the "Krst/Karest/Christ".

Answer for yourself: So now we see what?

We see a dramatic connection between:

- The "dead mummy" (mankind)
- The "Krst/Christ" (the indwelling god hidden within us during our Earthly lives)
- The "initiation into the Mystery Religions and Gnosis" (whereby one awakens to this Spiritual Knowledge of his "real self", his "real origin", and "his intended Spiritual pilgrimage).

It is these "Mystery Religions" that Rome will persecute and torment into oblivion; yet it is these "Mysteries" which were first to teach mankind about "the Krst/Christ" that indwells the flesh of mankind. Something or somebody is wrong here; either Rome or ancient Egypt which gave us these Spiritual Concepts in the first place. Again, you must decide upon the evidence. Surely Rome had no valid reason to persecute and murder out of existence others that believed in "the Krst/Christ" within the whole of humanity but they did; they did by the millions. In fact scholars today teach us that over the Dark Ages over 18 million "Christians" were put to death by other Roman Christians; 18 million fellow "believers" in "the Krst" who would not accept this "radical reinterpretation" of Rome's supposed "literal" and "historical" Christ which was limited to but one person. "You know them by their fruits" and the Roman Spiritual fruit is rotten on the vine. This just gets better and better as we begin to see that "nothing is new under the Sun" until the rise of the Holy Roman Empire and then everything goes to rot!

It will take us just a second to gather some background information on these "mysteries" in a different way than above before we proceed. From the beginning of recorded history, we have mention of sacred teachings concerning the rebirth of humans into a Higher Consciousness. In classical literature, reference is frequently made to "the Mysteries," which became the technical term for secret rites and methods known and practiced only by the priests and heirophants ("the initiated" who had been initiated to the secret knowledge of the "mysteries". Kamit, or ancient Egypt, was the greatest education center in the ancient world. Kamit's "Sacred Mystery Schools" were the first universities known to mankind. They had branches in other parts of the world, including China. In his classic work, Stolen Legacy, for which he was killed, George James summarized the destruction of this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom: "Ancient Rome, who through the edicts of her Emperors Theodosius in the 4th century A.D. and Justinian in the 6th century A.D. abolished the Mysteries of the African Continent; that is the ancient culture system of the world. The higher metaphysical doctrine of those Mysteries could not be comprehended; the spiritual powers of the priests were unsurpassed; the magic of the rites and ceremonies filled the people with awe. This lofty culture system of the Black people filled Rome with envy, and consequently she legalized Christianity which she had persecuted for five long centuries, and set it up as a state religion and as a rival of Mysteries, its own mother. [Note: What Rome legalized was the fraudulent, Romanized Christianity. What she persecuted was the authentic version or Afrikan Mysteries. It is important to recognize that the two coexisted; the Euro-counterfeit supplanted the Afri-Original or the Mysteries. Like George James, most people have the two confused or are not aware there is a difference, so well done is the deception!] This is why the Mysteries have been despised; this is why other ancient religions of the Black people are despised; because they are all offspring of the African and Egyptian Mysteries, which have never been clearly understood by Europeans, and consequently have provoked their prejudice and condemnation. In keeping with the plan of Emperors Theodosius and Justinian to exterminate and forever suppress the culture system of the African continents the Christian church established its missionary enterprise to fight against what it has called paganism. Consequently missionaries and educators have gone to the mission field with a superiority complex, born of miseducation and disrespect: a prejudice which has made it impossible for them to accomplish the blessings which missionary enterprise might otherwise have accomplished." (Suzar, Blacked Out Through Whitewash, p. 92). This book is a hard book to read for Caucasians who have grown up in Christianity and in a nation of technological progress being at the same time taught their "racial superiority" over others in the world which is undergirded by the Christian faith when in fact just the opposite is the truth when the facts of history before Rome changed them become known. It is humbling to say the least to come to the "truth" and know you never had it and those that did were exterminated by the white Christian faith of antiquity! Now again the "mummy".

The "Christ", the "mummy", the "Krst-Mummy", the Soul and the tomb all together point to Spiritual "initiation" into the higher Spiritual Realm and Heavenly Mysteries that go with it. Again, this "initiate" into these secret mysteries was considered as if an "awakened mummy" from "the dead"! This is very important. It was if "matter" has risen to a "new birth" and to a "higher consciousness" of the true reality beyond this physical limitation of our incarnated Souls in these bodies of "death", in its existence in Amenta (remember this abode of the Soul when incarnated into "matter" was called by many synonyms such as Hades, Hell, Gehenna, the Underworld, the pit, Sheol, Tophet, Inferno, the Snake Pit, Purgatory, the Lake of Fire, Tartarus, etc.).

These sacred teachings concerning "the mysteries" were found in the empires of Egypt, India, Persia, Greece, and many other nations around the whole world like South America even. The world's religions, mythologies, gods, goddesses, etc., are derived from the ancient Spiritual teachings of Africa, a system founded upon and expressing the cosmic, universal principles of life. Essentially, the world's religions are corruptions or distortions of African theology. Let that sink in because it is to Africa and their children, the original Jews, that we must turn in hope of ever recovering the truth about God and His Krst!

The Mysteries were taught in specially created Schools by priest-heirophants who developed extraordinary techniques to assist select candidates achieve a higher state of consciousness. The falsely credited Pythagoras and Euclid acquired their knowledge from Egypt's Sacred Mystery Schools as did Plato, Proclus, Plotinus, and many of the other great Greek philosophers. The Mystery priesthood functioned as a closed elite whose knowledge and practices were held in secret. With the rise of ecclesiastical Christianity the Spiritual Mysteries were suppressed along with their knowledge; often called "Gnosis". Scholars today blame this persecution of these Spiritual Gnostics and the ancient Spiritual Wisdom by Rome as the main reason for the fall of the Western world into the darkness and horrors of the Middle Ages. We find such names as Philo Judaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Valentinus, Origen, Proclus, Basilides, Iambilicus, and Plotinus, all speaking openly of the existence of the Mysteries and Mystery Schools, claiming initiation therein, and openly teaching as much of it as it was permitted for them to make public. The Mystery tradition was composed of two levels: the lower or public Mysteries and the esoteric Higher Mysteries. Understand that over the centuries this knowledge of the "hidden mysteries" had circled the globe and there is hardly anywhere around this whole planet that this Spiritual knowledge or "Gnosis" was not known. That that will all change beginning in the 2nd century with the emerging domination of Roman Christian religious dogma and their persecution of these Mysteries.

Now time for a break and we will pick up in the next article with an important word study. We find the hidden truth quite often in the etymology of words.

Let us continue our study in the next article in this series.

THE SOUL IN AMENTA #15

We begin this article with an important word study; especially in light of what we learned previously about the ancient Egyptians writing the name "Krst" on their tombs. In the previous article we make the connection between the word "Krst/Christ", the mummy, and the initiation into the Mysteries or a higher Spiritual Consciousness.

Answer for yourself: Why is the knowledge of the Egyptian word "Krst" or "Christ" being inscribed upon the lids of Egyptian Coffins so very important for us? Why is this so critically important to note?

This origin of the word "mummy" and its connection to "initiation into the mysteries" suggests that the elaborate procedure of mummification was inaugurated to typify the whole broad meaning of the incarnation, as a submerging of "Living Energy" into the dense state of mortal matter. This again is why the Mysteries taught from nation to nation for thousands of years after Egypt. For such a downward "descent" and "ascent" through the world of material existence was, as we shall see, the only path leading to the "initiation" of the Spirits into the higher mysteries that lurk in the depths of created life.

Answer for yourself: But there is more. There exists an Egyptian word which was used to designate the mummy. Can you guess this word?

The mummy is called the "Krst/Karest/Christ". That right. The "mummy" in ancient Egypt was called "the Krst/Christ". Not only was the word "Krst" inscribed on their tombs but the very "mummy", a symbol of this "Living Energy in matter" was also called "the Krst/Christ". Let us now take time to make the connection between the word for "anointing" as in the anointing of the "dead mummies" with the penetrating oils and resins that would penetrate and pierce into this very vessel and the Egyptian word "Messa" or "Messiah" as we more commonly know it.

Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

#4899 mashiyach- the anointed, the anointed one

- a) used of the Messiah, Messianic prince
- b) used of the king of Israel
- c) used of the high priest of Israel
- d) used of Cyrus
- e) used of the patriarchs as anointed kings

Strong's Concordance:

4899 mashiyach (maw-shee'-akh); from 4886; anointed; usually a consecrated person (as a king, priest, or saint); specifically, the Messiah: KJV-- anointed, Messiah.

So we see amazingly that the Egyptian mummy is called by the word "Krst/Karest/Christ" but as you might have guessed it comes with an entirely different meaning from what Roman Christianity has taught and applied to it. This Egyptian word which we know as "Christ" was marked on the lids of their coffins. These "dead" mummies were associated with the "Krst/Karest/Christ". It is this "Krst Soul", this "incarnating Deific Mind" which also "fell" into or "pierces" into the "matter" of humanity. This piercing of the "Living Energy" of God which "fell" into "matter" again is the "crucifixion of God on the cross of matter" as described by the ancients. Take a minute to let it sink in that all of these Metaphysical Concepts are related and find their origin in ancient Egypt and no where was this "crucifixion of God in matter" understood to be "historical"& "limited to but one person"; rather it applied to the whole of humanity.

Answer for yourself: Is it not rather strange that the ancient Egyptians would have the name of a supposed future Jewish Rabbi on their tombs don't you think; especially since as early as 10,000 or 5,000 B.C.E. there exists not a nation or person who is called a Jew on the whole planet? Again we are missing something of huge significance; we are missing the truth behind the words "messa", "Messiah", "anointing", "Krst", and "crucifixion of God on the cross of matter".

Here lies the problem that we encounter today in even trying to study this out. We are hampered by prior indoctrination and conditioned by erroneous religious teaching before we ever begin our personal search for "the truth" as Christians and followers of "the Christ". We stumble at the gates of knowledge because of the radical reinterpretation of the ancient Egyptian Religion and its religious beliefs and dogmas by a later Roman Orthodoxy which then passed off upon the world counterfeit and false meanings to existing ancient religious dogmas which had maintained their integrity from nation to nation for thousands of years. These reinterpreted ancient Religious Beliefs, like those of ancient Egypt for instance, became the cornerstone of their replacement religion which we know as Christianity today. In a matter of 300 years this ancient Spiritual Wisdom had been mutilated by Rome to an almost unrecognizable level. We read it everyday in our Bibles and mistakenly approach it with a "literal-historical" approach when nothing could be further from the truth.

This Egyptian word for the mummy, the Krst/Karest/Christ, of which I speak, consists of the consonants K R S with a suffix T, giving us the word "K R S T". This is why I so often equate in my articles the word for "Christ" as "Krst/Karest/Christ" since they are all the same words actually and carry the same meanings originally! The voweling is indefinite, as it always was in the ancient writings. Notice the close connection between the language of the Hebrews and the earlier Egyptian language since both are "consonant" languages only. The Hebrew language will follow the "Egyptian pattern" and likewise become a consonant "only" language. Now scholars have come along and introduced an A before the R and another after it, making the word K A R A S T as we find it so often generally written. Scholarship abounds with many related spellings of the word "Krst" such as:

- Karist,
- Karest,
- Kerast,
- Kerist or
- Krist.

But they all mean the same. They all are variations of "the Krst" and "the Christ".

Now lets move on. It is very, very important to note the fact that the root of the word "Krst", which we just saw meant "mummy", is related with the Greek "kreas", which is the word for "flesh".

Answer for yourself: Then are the words "mummy", "flesh", "anointed", and "Krst/Karest/Christ" all related? Yes. How is the "Messiah" connected to "flesh"; how is "the Krst/Christ" connected with "flesh"?

What I say next is so important. The mummy was always anointed in order to preserve it as a form of "matter" for all eternity. Even at that it was only "symbolic" for the mummy was never intended to be "reinhabited" by the Soul in another incarnation as we might suppose. Egypt never believed in a physical resurrection of the "body" and neither did the Mysteries.

Answer for yourself: What was the mummy to teach us then?

The mummy was symbolic in its intent that "Living Energy", whether in "matter" or in our "Soul" as Divine Consciousness was preservable for all eternity.

Mummification taught us that this "Living Energy" , invisible, or visible, will never die or be annihilated. In other words, energy can be converted from one form to another (transform), but it cannot be created or destroyed (this is the Law of the Conservation Energy in the Universe). The anointing was symbolic of a penetrating into "matter" of a preserving substance (Egypt used symbolically various oils and resins) and when we look at the word we find that this preserver of "matter" or this "savior" of "matter" was this penetrating "Krst/Karest/Christ" who "fell" down the Tree of Life (the image on the right) and became embodied and incarnated "into dead matter" which is represented by the "dead mummy". Here we have the "fall" of the gods, the "neteru", the penetration of the gods into "matter" ritually demonstrated before us in a physical setting. Here is Philippians two symbolically and ritually symbolized before our very eyes. Here we see the metaphysical truth of the incarnation of "the Krst/Hours/Christ", this "Deific Mind" of God into "matter" portrayed in a religious ritual which is the background for the Horus and all later descending god, goddesses, and Sungod and Sungoddess stories. It is the prototype and "Divine Pattern" for the later "Jesus Story" as well. The "mummy" had been "the fleshly" home for the "indwelling Krst/Karest/Christ-Soul". So no wonder the word "Krst" or "Christ" was written on the lids of Egyptian coffins. Horus, on the right at the bottom of the Egyptian Kabbalah and "Ladder from Heaven" is this "descending Christ" into "matter" of which I speak. It is the job of "Horus" or "the Christ" to transform us as descending Souls for our ascent and return back up this Ladder of Heaven to our Father who waits for us as seen in the Prodigal Son allegory.

Lets talk about the Greek language for a second. The "Kr" consonant, seen in "Krst", metamorphoses into the Greek "Chr" very easily. Next to impossible is to not note the closeness of the word "Krst" to the Greek "Chrestos or Christos". Here we have before us plainly as the nose on our face that the "Krst" in Egyptian language is truly the Egyptian origin for our word Christ!

Now if we take this word KRST and use a different vowel we end up very close to the Latin word "crux", or the Middle English "cros" ("cross"), and our very own word "crust".

Answer for yourself: What is this saying to us when we make the association of the words "cross, crux, crust" as they are related to "Krst/Karest/Christ" and "flesh"?

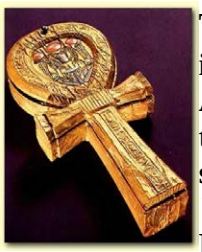
Answer for yourself: How is this "Krst" or "Christ" originally understood to be related to this "cross"? Have we understood this dogma of the crucifixion of "the Christ" correctly? Was this "Krst" always connected to the "crux" or "cros" or "cross" and is this "crucifixion" of Christ always have been a Metaphysical Reality and never was to be altered from this meaning as Rome has done when making the "Christ" a supposed "historical" and "literal" person limited to but one body and not the entire species of mankind?

Answer for yourself: Is this "cross" or "crux" some type of symbol for an old rugged cross of wood where this Krst/Karest/Christ was nailed and crucified? No, this "wood" is but only "matter" as we have seen from the beginning and often the ancients typified "matter" by using the word "wood" as all encompassing of the totality of "matter".



Answer for yourself: Or is this cross in which the "Krst/Karest/Christ" was "crossed", "crucified", but a symbol for the impregnation and intersection of two planes of existences; the "flesh" of all mankind and the "Deific Mind of God" as "the Christ" merging into a higher expression of life? It is the symbol of all symbols? This is a lot to take in all at once but the truths are fantastic and explains what lies behind our Sungods and Goddesses and the "Jesus Story" when correctly interpreted as but a parallel to the ancient Mysteries.

Like the Egyptian cross, the "crux" or the "cross" was but the metaphysical symbol of the crossing of two "Living Energies" and planes of existence (visible/invisible) in an incarnation of the "Deific Mind/Living Energy" from God which intersected (crossed over and into) the "flesh" and "matter" of humanity. This intersection and anointing (penetrating) of "matter" (symbolized by the word anoint and the anointing ritual) by "the Christ" (Christ means "anoint" once again, the penetrating into "matter" of the "Krst Mind of God", our flesh) is a Universal Law of God that never should have been limited to but one being or person as Rome has so implied in their "literalization and historization" of the "Jesus Story". Instead of being the prototype and pattern of all humanity they relegated it but one supposed individual and all incarnated Souls which are taught to believe Rome's redacted version of the "Horus Story" are robbed of their incarnational goal and purpose.

Answer for yourself: Is this "cross" only a symbol of the penetration of "the Christ" into another plane of existence, in this case "matter", whereby the two planes become "one" by the "impregnation" of one level of "Living Energy" (Deific Mind/Spirit) with another plane of "Living Energy" ("matter")?

Lets examine the first cross ever. It is the Egyptian Cross called the "Ankh".

The Ankh was, for the ancient Egyptians, the symbol (the actual Hieroglyphic sign) of life but it is an enduring icon that remains with us even today as a Christian cross. The top loop of the Ankh also represent the feminine aspect of God as the Womb of all life, of "Mother God", while the elongated section represent the masculine aspect of Father God, (the Phallus). These two sacred units, or symbolic and representative depository of "Living Energies". When these two "Living Energies" merge and "come together" this results in life. The circle symbolizes Eternal Life and the cross below it represents the Material Plane ("matter") which is separated from this other realm of existence by a horizontal plane or division between these two existences. The Ankh combines two symbols, the circle which represents "eternity and what is called the "Tau Cross" (on the right). When these two "Living Energies" intersect and come together then immortality occurs. This Ankh also represents symbolically the male and female symbols of the two principal Egyptian deities Osiris and Isis, thus the union of Heaven and Earth, the "Living Energies (gods/Elohim) in Heaven" and the "Living Energies (gods/Elohim) in matter". It all fits together.

Gen 1:26-27 26 And God said, Let us (the neteru) make man in our image, after our likeness:... 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)

Again we see the intersection of the two realms of "Living Energies" that produce human life as we know it. The Ankh is called the "Crux Ansata," it is of Egyptian origin and can be traced to the Early Dynastic Period, appearing frequently in artwork of various material and in relief, depicting the Gods.

Answer for yourself: Do you recall we said that the Egyptian word for "the Christ", "Krst", when given certain vowels in Latin means "crux"? By taking these ideas and putting them together we come away with the knowledge that the impregnation (anointing of the mummy, symbol of "matter") of the penetrating "Living Energy" as the "Krst/Karest/Christ" into "dark matter". This combination gives us the idea of eternal preservation of this "Living Energy" of the human existence which is likened to the rebirth of "dead matter" (Soul). At the heart of it we find the idea or "rebirth" and "reincarnation".

Now let us put this together where the rubber meets the road and make it simpler if possible.

We begin by making the connection between our root words; between, as shown above, the "Krst/Karest/Christ" and "crux" and the "cross" and when we do then we clearly see that this Ankh is a dramatic symbol of the "incarnation" and intersection of God, as "Living Energies", into "matter" (anointing and penetrating into "matter") or into "humanity" whereby "the Krst/Karest/Christ" is incarnated and anointed (penetrated) into "matter" as well as the descending Soul which like "the Krst" also "fell" into "matter". This "Krst" has come to save the Soul from further "death" at the hands of the animal-nature. These Heavenly "Living Energies" of which I have spoken so much "fell" down from Heaven and the Celestial Spheres and became incarnated or lodged in "matter". This mummy or "Messiah", anoints, penetrates, and impregnates "fleshly matter" and in so doing brings life to the human self and Soul whereby the Soul is vigorized to where he/she can overcome the struggles and battles against the animal-nature (battle of Set and Horus) which defies him and in so doing "rise from the dead" while yet in this fleshly body. The Soul is to be "born again" Spiritually while he yet lives in this physical body and in so doing transform this animal-nature into the likeness of "the Krst" of which he has become an example himself. Unless the Soul is transformed first by the indwelling Christ then there is no hope that the animal-nature can be transformed at all. This "resurrection from the dead" by an increased Spiritual consciousness (being Born Again) in order to subdue this Earthly incarnation of slumber that intoxifies the Soul, is to occur not after the demise of the clay body; it is to occur while we yet live. We, as Souls, are to awaken in Amenta, in our Earthly graves, in Hades, in Hell, in this Earthly pit, in this grave and Underworld, from this fleshly slumber and the devices of the pleasures and lusts of the flesh and animal-nature which rob us of our incarnational purpose.

JACOB'S LADDER

On the right we see Anubis, who guides "the dead", offering life (the Ankh...a New Birth), a "higher life and Spiritual consciousness" to mankind in this Earthy existence "before the death of the body"; not after the deceased is buried. When we first look at the image on the right being conditioned as Christians we think of a rebirth that involves a physical resurrection of the body; this is not what is occurring. Anubis is offering the "walking dead Soul" the gift of being "Born Again" and the awakening of the indwelling "Krst" along with a Higher Consciousness which has already "anointed" and "penetrated" humanity but which waits to be awakened by the Soul in its desire and effort to arise "from the death" of Spiritual darkness imposed by the darkness of the incarnation and "matter". This is all about a Spiritual Rebirth of the Soul and not the deceased biological body. Anubis offers a "higher life" to the "dead plane of matter" and of flesh which is yet "alive but dead". That is why if you recall the Soul, once incarnated is likened to have "died" as we saw in earlier articles. Once alive physically we are the "walking dead" needing a resurrection of sorts while we yet live, a second birth, a Spiritual Birth, a "born again" experience, a new birth in Pisces (already born in Virgo as flesh) and all of happens on "this side" of our lives before the death of our biological body or the physical grave. The Christ must be born in us, this Krst must come to us while we yet live in these "bodies of death and prison" and form His image in us if we ever hope of rising and ascending to Heaven and ascend and climb this "Ladder to Heaven" home.

As a baby the infant Hours, like the baby Jesus, needs help to grow. "He must be formed" in us Paul says. We must nurture and bring to puberty this infant Horus/Krst/Christ, this very savior in us to where he can be about "His Father's business". That comes automatically if we achieve that "higher existence" and "higher consciousness" and "awake" from this fleshly death "while we are yet living this incarnational experience" in this life, this "Lake of Fire". This will happen automatically if we quit feeding our flesh and begin feed our minds and Spirits the true "Bread from Heaven" and the "milk of the Word" and not more religious erroneous rhetoric.

This should come automatically if we experience truly this "Born Again" experience which is not just signing a card, joining a Church, saying a prayer, asking this Jesus into your heart, asking for forgiveness, and given some money to the church. Being truly "Born Again" is a progressive radical change of living and thinking and acting whereby we see from the examination of Judaism as well as the Gnostic Gospel of John that it is a "Spiritual Awakening of one's Soul" whereby is is "born a second time" unto God. In this Second Birth, the one is Pisces, and not Virgo, one is born anew and his Earthly consciousness is transformed into the consciousness and image of the indwelling "Krst/Karest/Christ" (the mind of Krst/Christ). This is a process and not an overnight event. It takes diligent work and effort and a life full or repentance; forever reaching out but not fully obtaining the "mark of the high call of God in Krst Jesus". We must fight the animal-nature, the flesh, this Set in us, and "overcome" it and restore the Divine Harmony between Spirit and flesh.

I Jn 4:4 4 Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. (KJV)

This "overcoming" of this Set, this "animal-nature" which threatens the Spiritual malformation of our Soul and its intended goal of Spiritual transformation in its incarnation and "penetration" into "matter" is necessary for our Soul's "ascent" after the demise of the fleshly body. So the depiction on the right where Isis is offering "life" or the "Ankh" to mankind is not referring to a physical body resurrection because ancient Egypt nor Paul never taught this; it is the awakening of our Souls to a higher Heavenly consciousness.

No wonder the Gnostics were known to say:

"Know whom you are, know from where you have come, know to where you go?

Answer for yourself: You mean that all this talk of "resurrection" I hear in church related to a physical body resurrection is wrong? Didn't ancient Egypt and other world religions teach a physical body resurrection? No, absolutely not and neither did the ancients. Only at time passes along with the loss of the "keys" to interpret the ancient Spiritual Wisdom do we find the erroneous interpretation of Hades, Hell, Sheol as well as the resurrection not of Consciousness but a physical resurrection since the Spiritual interpretation of the Egyptian mummy was lost as well!

Having lost the "keys" to this ancient Spiritual Wisdom then many in Judaism, like the Pharisees, and some of the Christian Fathers assumed and supposed that the Egyptians believed in the physical resurrection of the preserved body, and this false inference from looking at a "mummy" without a Spiritual understanding of what it represented is frequently echoed in our own day Sunday after Sunday in our Churches and all because we don't understand this ancient Spiritual Wisdom which we read that is yet in our Bibles today. But this belief in a physical resurrection of a dead body and not a Spiritual resurrection of Divine Consciousness is a mistake of the ignorant and the unlearned. It is a mistake made by 99% of Christians in the world today due again to the incorrect teaching and misunderstanding of the ancient Spiritual Truths from ancient Egypt from which almost all Christians dogmas had their origin. The doctrine of the resurrection of the Body is not Egyptian. There is proof existing that the Egyptians did not make the Mummy as their type or hope of a physical resurrection. With them the deathless only was Divine, and their dead are Spirits Divinized by rebirth in the likeness of their Gods. I repeat, the doctrine of the physical resurrection of the body is not Egyptian. We find in The Egyptian Book of the Dead that the promise of all blessedness is for the Spirit and Soul not to re-enter the deceased earthly body for evermore. In the rubric to chapter 84 we read:

"His Soul does not enter, or is not thrust back, into his mummy forever."

Their idea of the life hereafter always turned on the transformation, and not on the resurrection, of the body; and their doctrine is that of transformation in the Hades (during Earthly existence and incarnation), and not of resurrection from the Earth. Accordingly the early Christians, who were ignorant of Egyptian symbolism, did base their belief in a life hereafter upon a bodily resurrection here, derived from their mistaken understanding of the ancient Egyptian Mysteries and Religion; especially the Krst/Karest/Christ or Mummy-Christ. They misunderstood not only "the Egyptian Krst" but the "resurrection from the death of incarnation" as well. The Christian's foothold in a future existence as Spiritual entities depend on the re-possession of an earthly physique. Without the physical possibility there was no spiritual probability hereafter for the Christian since they fail to understand what they read in their Bibles and have not understood going on now well over 1,800 years at present. This misunderstanding of the Bible is a natural result of taking over the mummy-type of Egypt without a knowledge of the typology and symbolism or the facts upon which it was founded. The doctrines and dogmas of Christian theology are derived from Egypt and its special knowledge of the Spirit realm, which the modern believers have never yet penetrated. Only in the last 200 years since the discovery of the Rosetta stone have we only just now opening the door to this knowledge and the "keys" so necessary to interpreting correctly our Christian Bible.

And here it may be said that those Egyptologists, who are orthodox Bibliolators, first and foremost, are not going to help us much. Bibliolatry blinds the eyes of Bible of objective scholarship. We have to get at the facts and help ourselves! We as Christians assume a physical resurrection because we look at the preservation of the "mummy" and mistakenly assume a physical resurrection because we don't understand the Gnosis and knowledge that surrounds the Egyptian mummy and its Spiritual significance and its connection to "the Krst/Christ".

So this Ankh pictures the impregnation of the Divine Life into the denseness of darkened "matter" and "material existence". Of course we speak of humanity here who alone has the indwelling "Christ"; not the mineral kingdom, not the plant kingdom, and not the animal kingdom. The Christ has come to cross the plane of Spirit and "matter" to infuse life to our Soul as well as direction for its Spiritual evolution in this material existence whereby we might return and ascend home. The Prodigal Son allegory is to be our story.

Christians like to think that they are superior to pagans, heathens, and Jews, but they know so little about their own religion that they do not even realize that most of Christianity is actually a corruption of the ancient Egyptian Religion plus some truths taken Judaism (itself the legacy of ancient Egypt). But since Judaism is itself a modification of the ancient Egyptian Religion only "redefined" through "Jewish Eyes" this is permissible if the dogmas and doctrines maintain their original meanings which were held sacred in ancient Egypt. The problem for Christianity is that the vast majority of their "dogmas" have deviated drastically from their original meanings over these last 2000 years. Easter, Christmas, the Cross, these are all originally of ancient Egyptian origin but mean something otherwise in Christianity today. That should not be. The main symbol of Christianity is the cross. For example,

Christian churches are filled with crosses, and Christians wear crosses on necklaces, jewelry, clothing, etc. As we mentioned above, the cross does not originate in the Bible or in Christianity. The origin of the Cross is in the Heavens and the Sky, in Outer Space. It is the very heart of metaphysics and created "Life" as we know it and Egypt symbolized it as the Ankh.

The girdle was sometimes highly ornamented; men as well as women wore earrings; and they frequently had a small cross suspended to a necklace, or to the collar of their dress. The adoption of this last was not peculiar to them; it was also appended to, or figured upon, the robes of the Rot-n-no; and traces of it may be seen in the fancy ornaments of the Rebo, showing that it was already in use as early as the fifteenth century before the Christian era. (Fig. 44.)

• Wilkinson, vol. i. p. 376.

Please examine the picture closely on the left taken from 1,500 years B.C.E. and read the bottom of the picture for a further enlightenment to my statements. But behind this all we find that this "Cross" depicted the intersection of "Living Energies"; the Sun (Heaven) and Earth ("matter"). This cross was imaged in Heaven and recognized on Earth by mankind as the very origin of all created life. This cross was the symbol of the "Living Energy of the Sun", itself a symbol of the All Intelligent Energy of the Cosmos, God, who has come and impregnated Mother Earth, with His very "Living Energy" and in so doing brought forth the fruit of the union of these two planes of "existence" to produce a higher manifestation of "Life" then possible alone and apart. This is all explained in depth on our Astronomy and Christianity website elsewhere. Notice if you will the statement at the bottom of the image on the left where it says the cross was worm by people as early as 1,500 years before the Christian era. But behind this simple fact we find that its origin was recognized first in ancient Egypt and its metaphysical realties were symbolically represented by the Ankh. The above is from Wilkinson's Egyptians, by Sir John Gardner Wilkinson, first published in London 1837-41. Wilkinson was the first Egyptologist to make a comprehensive study of the tombs in the Valley of the Kings. He published the first complete survey of the main archaeological and historical sites in Egypt and Nubia and the first comprehensive plan of ancient Thebes. He lived 1797 - 1875. "The ancient Egyptian hieroglyphic symbol of life -- the ankh, a tau cross surmounted by a loop and known as crux ansata -- was adopted and extensively used on Coptic Christian monuments" (The New Encyclopedia Britannica, 15th edition, 1995, volume 3, page 753). "A still more curious fact may be mentioned respecting this hieroglyphical character [the Tau], that the early Christians of Egypt adopted it [...] numerous inscriptions, headed by the Tau, are preserved to the present day on early Christian monuments." (Wilkinson's Egyptians, by Sir J. G. Wilkinson, volume 5, page 283-284).

Let us look at what else he found. The center of this ancient Egyptian hieroglyph has not an "Ankh" as we might expect but an actual image of this same "cross" represented in a similar shape that was later adopted by the emerging Christian Church which has lost the Gnosis to understand the very symbols it adopted for its "radical reinterpretation" of the ancient Spiritual Wisdom and Egyptian Religion.

In fact, the cross is to be found in many places in pre-Christian times:

"From its simplicity of form, the cross has been used both as a religious symbol and as an ornament, from the dawn of man's civilization. Various objects, dating from periods long anterior to the Christian era, have been found, marked with crosses of different designs, in almost every part of the old world. India, Syria, Persia and Egypt have all yielded numberless examples, while numerous instances, dating from the later Stone Age to Christian times, have been found in nearly every part of Europe. The use of the cross as a religious symbol in pre-Christian times, and among non-Christian peoples, may probably be regarded as almost universal, and in very many cases it was connected with some form of nature worship." (The Encyclopedia Britannica, 11th edition, 1910, volume 7, page 506).

When you read "nature worship" as a Christian we usually run away since being brainwashed that this is "pagan". Few Christians even know what the word means. The word "pagan" only means one who does not acknowledge the other's God. We were never told by our Christian leaders that 1,800 years ago that is exactly what Rome did to the ancient Spiritual Concepts and Dogmas of the whole world. Rome rejected an unbroken Spiritual tradition that had existed for over 10,000 years and possibly as old at 600,000 years. And it has been so long ago and with Rome's oppressive armies the light of truth in this regard has gone out. Adolph Hitler, himself a Christian, believe it or not, is quoted as saying: "If you tell a lie long enough, everybody will believe it". He was right!

This is worth looking at. The Callanish Standing Stones are situated on the Isle of Lewis, Scotland. These stones are arranged in the shape of a cross, yet they were erected about 2000 B.C.E., i.e. well before Christianity.

Well, they don't appear to be in the shape of a "cross" until you get an aerial view. Then you see it very plainly as on the left image. Here we see the legacy of the "incarnation" of the Soul in Amenta as well as the ancient understanding of the "Krst" being "crucified in matter" that they inherited from ancient Egypt who sent colonists into the whole of the world. That is why we find same ancient Spiritual beliefs held around the whole of the planet. This was the understanding of the Divine and had been since the beginning of time. That will all change in the 2nd century with Rome's rejection of Judaism, itself the "Living Legacy of Ancient Egyptian Religion". A radical reinterpretation of "everything" was necessary by Rome and they did it in 300 years. Christianity is undeniably a bastardization of Judaism and 2.5 billion people in the world follow this bastardization of Divine Truth never knowing how far they have strayed from the truth. We have aborted our incarnational purpose as descending Souls if we die never coming to the Truth about these matters. At the very least, you should research the issues on which I, as a resigned Pastor, write, and THEN decide whether they should be believe as "truth", instead of automatically believing the propaganda that is fed to you which is absolutely NOT the "Bread from Heaven" that the "Krst/Christ" promised us. I encourage people to be free and independent thinkers and begin serious study into the Jewish and even earlier Egyptian Roots of the current Christianity which we have inherited.

Let us continue in the next article in this series.

THE BIBLE AND ASTROLOGY: WHAT IS THE TRUTH ABOUT ASTROLOGY?

Answer for yourself: What does the bible teach about astrology and the Heavens?

More than likely you know that from the very very ancient mankind observed the Heavens and the stars in them. What you more than likely did not know that likewise from the beginning Gods people were instructed to and encouraged to study the stars and the signs in the heavens. We find this admonition right in the beginning of our Bibles and the Hebrew Scriptures.

Gen 1:14 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: (KJV)

God instructs us from the beginning that the stars and the heavens are for signs!

Answer for yourself: What is the meaning of these "signs"? Signs for what?

Well it cannot be for seasons (spring, summer, etc) because that is mentioned in addition to "signs" in the same verse so "signs" must mean something else.

Strong's Concordance

226 'owth (oth); probably from 225 (in the sense of appearing); a signal (literally or figuratively), as a flag, beacon, monument, omen, prodigy, evidence, etc.: KJV-- mark, miracle, (en-) sign, token.

Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

226 'owth- 1) a sign, a signal

- a) a distinguishing mark
- b) a banner
- c) remembrance
- d) a miraculous sign
- e) an omen
- f) a warning

2) a token, an ensign, a standard, a miracle, a proof

Answer for yourself: Could these "lights" in the firmament mean more than the Sun and the Moon? Could these "lights" in the firmament possibly mean astrological signs or the signs of the Zodiac? Does the bible ever mention the Zodiac? You might be surprised but the Bible surely does mention the Zodiac and often synagogues had a zodiac in their floor.

In 1928, Israeli farmers in Beth Alpha, located at the base of Mount Gilboa in the Valley of Jezreel, were digging an irrigation ditch when they unearthed a brightly colored mosaic chip. A Hebrew inscription on the piece was cause for consultation with Professor Eliezer Sukenik of the Hebrew University, who immediately ordered an archaeological dig. This led to the discovery of the remains of a fifth century synagogue's pillars and walls. The greatest surprise came when they unearthed an almost completely intact zodiac mosaic floor.

The elegant floor of warmly colored stones contains an instantly recognizable image of the twelve signs. The Greek Sun god Helios is the largest image, appearing in the center of the horoscope wheel. He's crowned and is shown inside his chariot surrounded by stars and a crescent Moon. Four horses appear with him, and his chariot has multi-colored wheels.

Beautiful renditions of the zodiac signs appear in the house sectors, starting with Libra at the rising sign point, rather than traditional Aries. Angels of the four seasons decorate the corners. Twenty-two different stones were used to create this masterpiece; the Hebrew alphabet is comprised of the same number of letters. The pavement was made in the time of Emperor Justin the First, who reigned from 518 to 527. It covers the entire nave area and has inscriptions referring to the zodiac in Hebrew and Greek. Examples of the twelve zodiac signs with Helios in his sun chariot surrounded by angels have been discovered in seven ancient synagogues in Israel. In addition to Beth Alpha, the zodiacs appear at Hammath Tiberias, Khirbet Susiya, Yafia, Sepphoris, Beth Shean, Husifa, and Na'aran.

ASTROLOGY AND ANCIENT JUDAISM

Hebrew tradition believes the first Jewish patriarchs used astrology, including Abraham. Abraham came from Babylon or Mesopotamia, a city with a name that translates as "light of the astrologers," where planetary deities were worshipped. One astrological treatise possibly written by Abraham is known to have existed in the third century B.C. Abraham's father Terah was also an astrologer.

Moses (c.1200-1100 B.C.), as Pharaoh's adopted son, was also an astrologer. He correlated the attributes of the twelve signs to the twelve tribes of Israel, then took the people from the tabernacle in the wilderness on their pilgrimage, lined up by zodiacal order. Rabbinical tradition asserts that the signs of the zodiac have represented the twelve tribes since antiquity.

Beth Alpha's floor is renown as one the most important mosaics in Israel. The synagogue is now part of a National Park on Kibbutz Hefzibah. Visitors can tour the Beth Alpha Synagogue National Park and see the most complete zodiac floor from the time when astrology held a place in the synagogue.

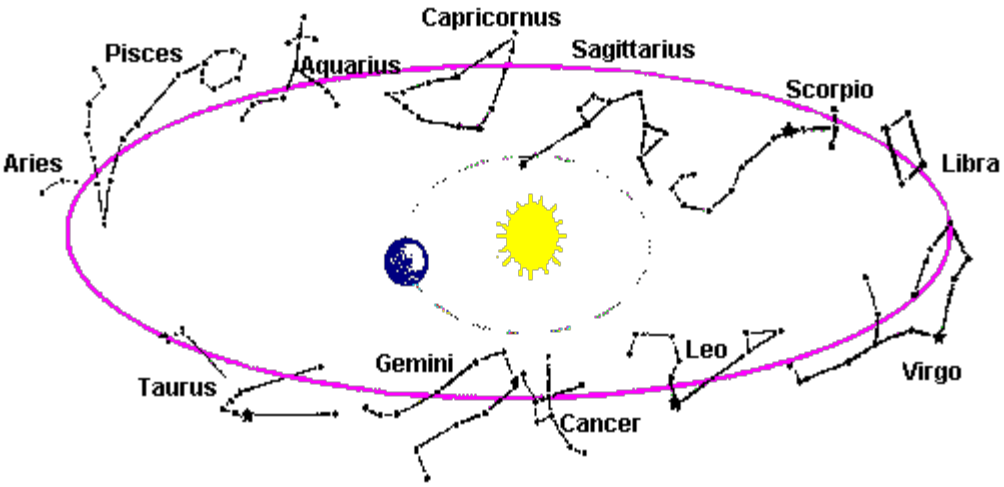
We should expect and do find multiple references to the Zodiac in the Bible.

Job 38:31-33 "Canst thou bring bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his season? Or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons? Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? Canst thou set the dominion thereof in the earth?"

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word "Pleiades"? Pleiades is a "cluster of seven stars in the neck of the constellation Taurus." Then there is Orion. Orion is "constellation in the southern hemisphere containing seventy-eight stars."

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the word Mazzaroth? What does this word mean?

Strong's Concordance:



4216 Mazzarah (maz-zaw-raw'); apparently from 5144 in the sense of distinction; some noted constellation (only in the plural), perhaps collectively, the 12 signs of the Zodiac: KJV-- Mazzoroth. Compare 4208.

Brown-Driver-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

4216 mazzarah- Mazzaroth; the 12 signs of the Zodiac and their 36 associated constellations

Here we have a verifiable account of the Zodiac being looked upon with a "holy reverence".

Job is actually asking if Yahweh (the so called sacred name for the tribal god of the Jews) God can bring the Zodiac about each day and according to the dates thereof. So it is very clear that we are talking about Astronomy here.

Amos 5:8 "He who made the Pleiades and Orion, and changes deep darkness into morning."

These people knew the Zodiac and Astrology.

Answer for yourself: Why would God mention the Zodiac in the Hebrew Scriptures if we are not to understand it? It would appear without a doubt that these people knew the Zodiac and Astrology!

Answer for yourself: Why should this surprise anyone; it is all right there in the Bible?

Even Yahweh himself was fascinated with His stars that He even named them.

Ps 147:4 4 He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names. (KJV)

The Book of Jasher is given scriptural authority in Joshua 10:13 and II Samuel 1:18.

Answer for yourself: Why have we as Christians and followers of "the Christ" not ever been taught or know much concerning the Book of Jasher? The reason this book has not been very popular and probably hidden, is because what it says about astrology. One of the many problematic passages in the book is the one concerning Abraham's father Terah who "had twelve gods of large size, made of wood and stone, after the twelve months of the year, and he served each one monthly" (Jasher 9:8). Abraham himself is depicted as worshipping the sun and the moon:

"And Abram served the sun in that day and he prayed to it…and Abram served the moon and prayed to it all that night." (Jasher 9:14-17)

Then we have recorded that the Jews did the same thing later, "And he (Josiah) did away with the idolatrous priests…who burned incense to Baal, to the sun and the moon and to the constellations and to all the host of heaven." (II Kings 23:5)

These Jewish kings were sun-worshippers as it is stated in II Kings 23:11, "removed the horses that the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun…"

This is where it really gets interesting. We see the phrase "all the host of heaven" in the passage above.

Answer for yourself: What is meant by "all the host of heaven"?

It is clearly referring to the stars and the constellations and such. That is what is meant by the "host of heaven", it is basically astrological.

Now we have a problem in the next passage which seems contradictory to what we have seen up to this point and especially so when comparing what we saw written in Genesis earlier in this article. Notice with we the diametrically opposite position now taken concerning the Sun and the stars:

Yahweh warned his people, "And beware, lest you lift up your eyes to heaven and see the sun and the moon and the stars, all the host of heaven, and be drawn away and worship them and serve them…" So we see here that "all the host of heaven" is the stars and such and that Yahweh warned to not even look up at them.

Answer for yourself: What is going on? Isn't this contradicting from Genesis 1:14 where it says that these "host of heaven" were given for a sign to his people? Something is wrong and unless one studies hard he will forever confused when contrasting these several passages; some for and some against astronomy and astrology.

Deut. 17:3 is another place where Yahweh condemns his people who "has gone and served other gods and worshipped them, or the sun or the moon or any heavenly host, which I have not commanded'. The interesting thing is here is that Yahweh, God the creator of all these things, the stars, the Sun and Moon NEVER once says that these things are not real, living creatures. Think about it. These verses go on to call them "gods". It is as if Yahweh and His people all believed that these "host of heaven" had personalities and were living entities.

Answer for yourself: Is the Universe "alive"? Is our galaxy but a small microcosm of this living being that we call God?

I've learned enough astronomy to discover something that's completely changed my view of cosmology. This is that the idea that there are principles of self-organization acting on astronomical scales which seems really to be true. During the last ten years or so, people who study galaxies have discovered evidence that feed-back effects and mechanisms of self-organization are indeed happening at the level of the galaxies: they are, in fact, essential for galaxies to form stars. They're also necessary to the existence of spiral galaxies. The idea that a galaxy is a self-organized system - more an ecology than a nonliving clump of stars and gas - has become common among astronomers and physicists who study galaxies. Thus, it seems to me quite likely that the concept of self-organization and complexity will more and more play a role in astronomy and cosmology. This is exactly what is described in the earliest chapters of Genesis. It was only in the 1980's that the idea that our entire planet could be regarded as a single living stystem, called "Gaia", began to be taken at all seriously, and the Gaia hypothesis is itself still the subject of intense debate. We have not yet really grasped the notion of a single planet as a living system, so it is small wonder that it needs a large leap of the imagination to regard the entire Milky Way Galaxy as a living system. And yet, the concept of Gaia, and Jim Lovelock's insight into the nature of life itself, provide just the springboard needed to make that leap.

John Gribben, from In The Beginning: The Birth of the Living Universe, states:

- "Lovelock realized that the key feature of life on Earth is that the entire ecosystem of the planet is far from chemical equilibrium, and stays far from equilibrium. Even from a distance, a visitor from outer space could analyse the composition of the Earth's atmosphere, using spectroscopy, and infer that life was at work, creating and maintaining these non-equilibrium conditions. But a galaxy like the Milky Way is also in a far from equilibrium state, and is being maintained in that state by processes going on within it! The very criterion that led Lovelock to the insight that the entire Earth could be regarded as a living system applies to the Milky Way itself. (. . .)"
- "If you had a lifespan of a few billion years, so that you could sit and watch galaxies rotate, and if you had a vantage point in the far depths of space, high above the Milky Way, looking down on its spiral patten, you would see individual stars moving through the spiral pattern. Following their orbits in obedience to the simple laws of physics. But the pattern itself, flying in the face of those simple laws, would not be disrupted as a result. Instead it would persist, refusing to be destroyed by the movement of the stars. It would be as obvious to you that something odd was going on as it would be to an alien spectroscopist that there is something odd about the atmosphere of the Earth. And as you watched the spiral arms grow, and move around the Galaxy seeemingly independently of the differential rotation of the stars, it would be obvious that you were watching a living system. (. . .)"
- "I have argued that our Galaxy is alive - literally alive, in the full biological meaning of the term. Like other galaxies it has been produced by a process of evolution and competition within the Universe, following the Big Bang. The end-product of this evolutionary process has been spiral galaxies that are very efficient supernova-nurseries."

The underlying theme here, which is found in the Ancinet Spiritual Wisdom, is that the Cosmos is alive and is the living expression of God.

Answer for yourself: Can we prove this, that the Cosmos is alive? To prove my point: Nehemiah 9:6 "Thou, even thou, art Lord…and all the host of heaven worshippeth thee." So here we see the stars as worshipping Yahweh. This must mean that the writer believed that the stars were actually living creatures.

Judges 5:20 "The stars fought from heaven, from their courses they fought against Sisera."

Answer for yourself: What did we see in the above verse from Judges 5:20? Here we see that the stars are actually fighting in battle. The writer of the book of Judges seemed to think that stars were living beings.

Job 38:7 "When the morning stars sang together, all the sons of God shouted for joy."

This is basically saying that the "sons of God" were in reality the stars or host of heaven.

Ps 147:4 4 He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names. (KJV)

Here the bible says that even Yahweh himself gave the host of heaven, the stars, names.

Ps 148:1-3 1 Praise ye the LORD. Praise ye the LORD from the heavens: praise him in the heights. 2 Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts. 3 Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light. (KJV)

So here we see that the stars and sun and the moon are told to praise God as if they were living souls. We can clearly see that this is exactly what the Hebrews believed. They believed that the stars were living beings.

Dan 12:3 3 And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever. (KJV)

So here Daniel said that those who have a "special" insight will be like the stars and that the stars are actually righteous.

Answer for yourself: How can a mass of organic and gaseous substance be righteous?

The only way is that Daniel thought that the stars had souls and were living. This is what was generally believed in ancient times as well as the Hebrews as we will see as our studies advance.

Answer for yourself: So who exactly was Yahweh? We have all been taught that Yahweh is believed to be a name for God but when we look deeper we see what we have missed our whole lives.

I King 22:19 19 And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left. (KJV)

We have already seen in this article as discussed above that the "host of heaven" is the stars of the heavens. Then this verse is referring to the stars in the Heavens which surround the Yahweh's throne. More specific it refers to all the Heavenly orbs in the Heavens above which include the planets, the sun or the moon.

Answer for yourself: Is there anywhere that tells us exactly who Yahweh might be?

Ps 89:36-37 36 His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. 37 It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah. (KJV)

The verse says that Yahweh's throne is as the sun, and that it stands as a witness in heaven! This means that we should be able to "see" this witness and see Yahweh's throne as we look into the sky above. This is all the more amazing when it dawns upon us that we have seen the Throne of Yahweh our whole lives and never recognized it as we looked at the Sun over and over again.

Answer for yourself: Could it be that this verse is saying that the ancient Hebrews viewed the Sun as if it was Yahweh or at least a symbol of Yahweh? Is this any different from Egypt who likewise looked at the Sun as the representation of God as their Savior?

Ps 50:1-2 1 The mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. 2 Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. (KJV)

So here we see that the rising of the Sun and its going down has something to do with Yahweh speaking.

Answer for yourself: Is God communicating a message to us from the Sun and other stars in the Heavens and we not know it?

- What is this message?
- Is there any connection between God's message to mankind in movement of the Sun and its path through the Heavens?
- Did the Ancient Egyptians understand this message of God and can we know it today?
- Has this message from God as understood by the Ancients been changed over time and have we lost the original understanding of what God was speaking as the Ancients understood it and has this message been replaced by a counterfeit message by Rome?

These are very, very important questions. I realize that this is new material for most but that does not change the fact that unlike "literal Christians today" and "literal followers of the Christ" the Ancients and their Priests understood the movement of the Heavens as the message of God and the voice of God to them. God's salvation message was proclaimed on the chalkboard of the Heavens above and the wisdom of the Ancients reveal to us such wisdom if only we knew to look. This concept of God speaking to us from the Sun and the Stars is totally foreign to Christianity in the Western Hemisphere today since we are taught since childhood that Astrology and Astronomy is evil.

The above passage goes on to say that God (the sun) hath shined. This is clearly speaking of the sun.

We all have at one time or another in our lives heard of Malachi 4:2

"But for you who fear my name the SUN of Righteousness will rise with healing in its wings…"

Here the SUN is referred to as being righteous and able to heal. This next verse should wrap this up and really expose just who Yahweh was.

Ps 84:11-12 11 For the LORD God is a sun and shield: the LORD will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. 12 O LORD of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee. (KJV)

It is as plain as can be that this verse refers to Yahweh as being a star or the sun! How much more evidence do we need to see that the Ancients, and even the Hebrews, understood God as associated with the Sun and saw a message being proclaimed by the Creator by the movement of the orbs of the Cosmos?

Yahweh was worshipped in the symbol of the SUN!

Job 37:14-21 14 Hearken unto this, O Job: stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God. 15 Dost thou know when God disposed them, and caused the light of his cloud to shine? 16 Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds, the wondrous works of him which is perfect in knowledge? 17 How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south wind? 18 Hast thou with him spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking glass? 19 Teach us what we shall say unto him; for we cannot order our speech by reason of darkness. 20 Shall it be told him that I speak? if a man speak, surely he shall be swallowed up. 21 And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds: but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Now what does this mean? This is talking about God's light shining through a cloud. Now what is the bright light in the clouds? It is the SUN!

Let us consider these other verses.

Isaiah 2:5 "…walk in the light of the Lord."

Isaiah 60:1 "Arise shine for thy light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen."

Numbers 24:17 "…a STAR shall come forth from Jacob…"

There are many more examples as these. As stated before the bible is nothing more than Astrotheology and is not to be taken literally in many places where we have erroneously done so because of inadequate teachings. One might say that the whole book can be shown to be nothing but myths, astral worship, and personification of the movement of the Heavens rolled into one book which is dispersed among the history of a people; the Hebrews.

Answer for yourself: Is there proof that the early Christians and even recent day Christianity still worship the sun? And what about Jesus?

- Is he really just another SUN God? Did he really exist?
- Can it be shown that the depiction of "Jesus Christ" in the New Testament is nothing more than the personification of the SUN and its path through the Zodiac?
- Can it be shown that Jesus Christ's father is the whole heavens and the 12 Houses of Israel is the 12 Houses of the Zodiac and the 12 disciples are the 12 signs of the zodiac?
- What about the New Testament? Has Astrology in the New Testament been interpreted "literally" as a historical "Jesus Christ" when in fact the Ancients who originally taught these concepts which were later written down never intended them to be understood other than an allegorical expression of Divine Truth and the Message of God as heard from the movement of the orbs in the Heavens above?

THE NEW TESTAMENT AND ASTROLOGY...HIDDEN IN PLAIN SIGHT

If you have read the New Testament much then you have read astrology over and over again and never possibly noticed it. Let us look quickly at only a few examples before we move to a deeper study.

Matthew 2:2 "Where is he that is born King of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him."

Here we see that Jesus "the Christ" had his own star for they saw his star.

Matthew 2:10 "And when they saw the star, they rejoiced exceedingly with great joy."

Answer for yourself: Is this not worship of the stars?

I Corinthians 15:40-41 "There are also heavenly bodies and earthly bodies, but the glory of the heavenly is one, and the glory of the earthly is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars, for star differs from star in glory."

It is interesting that Paul states that some stars are different from others and compares the resurrection with the glory of a star.

Answer for yourself: Are stars born? Do they die? Does this have anything to do with them rising in the horizon and setting below the horizon and was this understood by the Ancients that God was speaking to them of "birth, life, death, and rebirth"? Was the rising and setting of the Sun and Stars a symbol of a theological Divine Truth; one of "birth" and "death" and "rebirth"? Did the Ancients see the same message spoken to them by God in Nature with the seasons which itself was controlled by the "signs" of Heaven? You bet they did and in fact in time they came to see these same Divine Principles working in their own bodies. In such a way Ancient mankind and the Egyptians and their Priests, who just happen to be the biological parents of the later Jewish race, came to see that mankind was "created in the image of God" which they saw above their heads, around them on earth, and within their own bodies. Keep that in mind.God was speaking to them of "life after death" and "Eternal Life" through the message of the Sun and Stars. Understand these movements of the Cosmos were understood allegorically by the Ancients of deeper Divine Principles and these Divine Principles later became religious Dogmas that were always understood "allegorically" and not literally. Literal truths were expressed through the medium of allegory by Ancient sages and Priests of Egypt for example but the myths created to express them were never meant to be believed literally. For example Osiris was a type and shadow of a Divine Concept and never meant to be understood as a historical person. Keep that in mind when we look at the life of "Jesus Christ" in the New Testament. Personification is fine to teach Divine Truths if we understand it as such but when personification and allegory become "literalized" without the reader's knowledge then deception enters into the mix and in the case of Christianity the personification of the allegorical "Christ" into a historical literal "Jesus Story" has rendered us as idolators since the vast majority of Christians today worship Jesus as a godman instead of worshipping the Invisible Divine Creator as instructed by Moses and the Ten Commandments.

Answer for yourself: Did we miss something of major importance in I Corinthians 15:44-41? Yes we did.

We must take time to notice something very important in this verse which was the very substrate of Egyptian and Jewish religion. Egypt understood and the substructure of their whole worship of God was the Divine Principles that "So Above, So Beneath". Let me explain. There is a heavenly and an earthly figure or pattern for everything. Two different concepts. Remember this it is very important.

Malachi 1:11 "For from the rising of the sun to it's setting my name (Yahweh) is great among the nations."

Answer for yourself: But Yahweh's name is not said to be great after the setting of the sun. Why? Because his name was that of the Sun.

Before we go on we need to learn a little more of what the Ancients understood of the Sun. This brings us to Horus, the Son of God in Egypt. The name Horus comes from the Egyptian word "Hor", which translates as 'face'. We find that he had many names because of the different aspects connected to him. We find him worshipped as Mekhenti-irry which translates as 'He who has on his brow Two Eyes', the sun and moon representing his eyes. The followers of Horus invaded Egypt in pre dynastic history, at this time he was venerated as a victorious warlord. He became a part of the state religion and was associated with the sun god, Ra. Horus was so important to the state religion that Pharaohs were considered his human manifestation (representatives) and even took on the name Horus. In the more popular religious beliefs of the Osiris cults he was the son of Osiris and Isis. The avenger of his father's murder and the model of a dutiful son. It is in these stories that we find him doing battle with his uncle, Seth (personified darkness). This sure should make us think of the Sun battling darkness on a daily basis; especially when the Sun sets in the western horizon and "dies" only to be "resurrected later".

Other Names For Horus:

- Haroeris (Horus the Elder): An early form of Horus. He was a god of light. His eyes represented the sun and the moon.
- Ra-Harakhte: (Horus of the two horizons): This horus was identified with Ra and the daily voyage of the sun from horizon to horizon.
- Harpokrates (The infant Horus): As a child he represented the new born sun and was often pictured being suckled by Isis. In this form he is often depicted as a naked child seated on Isis's lap. This motif later become the icon for baby Jesus and Mary.
- Harmakhet (Horus in the Horizon): In this form he represented the rising sun.
- Horus Behudety: In the form of Horus of Edfu, he represented the midday sun.
- Harmachis: (Heru-Em-Akhet, Harmakis): "Horus in the horizon". Horus as symbol of resurrection, linked with the setting sun.

Isis - Horus

The picture of Isis and Horus is another "image" that has supposedly been "Christianized". The worship of the mother and her child, the re-incarnated sun god, has been one of the main components of sun worship since ancient times. The child represented the reborn sun god, proclaimed to be husband of the mother. That enabled her to claim the title "mother of god" – "queen of heaven". Please notice the “nimbus” surrounding the heads in many depictions of the “mother and child”. This “nimbus” or radiant light, in the form of a circle or halo, originated in the sun worship. The nimbus was used to indicate the radiance of the sun gods or goddesses. As if that was not enough often Catholic theology is betrayed by their artwork and no greater example could be found that this next picture of Mary and baby Jesus, not only with the nimbus of the sun above their heads but they are surrounded by the constellations of the Zodiac. Notice also the rays of the Sun behind her and let us never forget that we get the word for "ray", as in rays of the Sun, from Ra, the personification of God the Creator as the Sun in Egypt.

Answer for yourself: In the myth of Horus did the Ancients understand by watching the path of the Sun that God was speaking to them of higher Divine Truths such as "birth, life, death, and resurrection"? It sure appears so and they immortalized this Divine Truth in the allegory of Horus, the Son of God. We should expect to find the same Divine Truth in the "Jesus Story" and we do but like Horus it was never meant to be taken "literally" as a historical person. Modern scholarship reveals this to today if we only look.

DID EGYPT KNOW YAHWEH FIRST?

Answer for yourself: Since we saw earlier that Yahweh was often depicted as the Sun then is there a possibility the Yahweh was first know by the Egyptians long before the Jewish people which again modern scholarship today shows us were their biological children? Did you know that the name "Yahweh" is from an Egyptian word Ioa?

Exod 3:13-14 13 And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them? 14 And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you. (KJV)

The Egyptian name for God was "Nuk-Pa-Nuk," or "I Am That I Am". James Bonwick, in Egyptian Belief and Modern Thought, goes on to teach us that this Egyptian phrase, "I Am That I Am" should recall to our memory the Mosaic narrative. Also he informs us that the secret Name of God was earnestly sought for in prayer. On an ancient image of a priest, the Deity is styled "Divine Father." It was a solemn declaration on the tomb of an Egyptian worthy the cry of a pious Israelite-"The Lord is God, there is but one God for me". This is all the more understandable when we come to realize that all the various names for their "gods" and "goddesses" but nothing more than expressions of the Many in the One or the various attributes of the Creator individualize and expressed individually (James Bonwick, Egyptian Belief and Modern Thought, p. 395). In none of these forms or attributes, however, not even in the naked shining sun, was it the literal object that was worshiped, but certain functions or powers, of which these were but the representations. It was observed that the sun in cooperation with the earth and the atmosphere which gave rain, caused all manner of verdure to spring forth and bear its proper fruit. It was held, therefore, that the sun was the supreme formative power, the mighty author of fruitfulness, and that the greatest and most glorious manifestation and exertion of his powers were employed in reproduction. Sun worship was therefore nothing more nor less than the worship of the principle of reproduction in man and nature and symbolized the very gift of life which came ultimately from the invisible Creator Himself. And as the influence of the real sun was extended over and through all nature, so this principle was extended through all worship.

Godfrey Higgins, in his Anacalypsis, vol. ii, p. 17, informs us that this Egyptian name "I Am That I Am" was found on the temple of Isis at Sais in Egypt. "'I Am' was a Divine name understood by all the initiated among the Egyptians" says Higgins. He goes on to say that "The 'I Am' of the Hebrews and the 'I Am" of the Egyptians are identical." Furthermore he make note of the fact that the name esteemed the most sacred by the Egyptians was that which the Hebrews later adopted; namely Y-Ha-Ho (Yahweh or Jehovah to us today). He says it is variously pronounced: but Clement, of Alexandria, Egypt, assures us, in his Stromatis, that all those who entered into the temple of Serapis, were obliged to wear on their persons, in a conspicuous place on their breast or forehead, the name of "I-ha-h", (Jao) or "I-ha-hou" (J-ha-ho), which signifies "the God eternal." Now for a remarkable statement: From this, I think, we may fairly infer, that the Egyptians were of the same religion, in its fundamentals, as the Jews (Godfrey Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii, p. 17).

Answer for yourself: Then does it not appear that the name "Jehovah" or "Yahweh", which was adopted by the Hebrews, was a name esteemed sacred among the Egyptians? The Hebrews called "Nuk-Pa-Nuk" which they learned of only in Egypt by the name recognized today which is "Y-ha-Ho" or "Yahweh" (Godfrey Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i, p. 329; vol. ii. p. 17). Bonwick goes on to say that this name was well-known to the Egyptian Gentiles long before the Jewish nation there can be no doubt. Bonwick also make mention of the fact that the Egyptian expression "Nutar Nutra" exactly corresponds in sense to the Hebrew "El Shaddai," the very title by which God tells Moses he was known to Abraham and Isaac and Jacob (Prof. Renouf: Religion of Ancient Egypt, p. 99). For those who want to check this out and learn more in detail a fantastic book I highly recommend is Bible Myths and Parallels in Other Religions by T. W. Doane (1910) and you can these things in greater detail.

Answer for yourself: What other "Divine Truths" did Egypt know which we have today inherited from the hands of antisemitic Rome (remember the Jewish nation would be not only the children of the Egyptians but inherit their religion of the Sun as well) altered and changed? Has the allegories and symbolisms expressing Divine Truth as taught by Egypt and Judaism been "literalized" by Rome in the New Testament and in so doing we have lost the true message of God which He spoke from the Sun and the Stars which the Ancients priesthoods knew?

One more thing before we move on. Amen-Ra was another name for this Divine Father in heaven, who has the title of "Huhi" the eternal, from which the Hebrews derived the name "Ihuh." The closest the Jews come to a name for their god is Yahweh or as some call him Jehovah. But Jehovah had never been pronounced until the 17th century when the letter J was added to the English alphabet. Yahweh is translated in the Bible as LORD. But Lord is just another title, making the name of the Jewish god two titles, lord and god. It was their Shem Hammephorash for which neither Yahweh nor Jehovah are the correct pronunciations. The Jews considered the name of their god to be so sacred that it was only pronounced once a year and only by the High Priest in the temple in Jerusalem. Additionally, only the Hebrew consonants which correspond to IHUH or later JHUH, which comprise the Tetragrammaton - the Ineffable name, were written. Instead of pronouncing the name, the Jews substituted the name "Adonai" for the name of their god. Or so they now claim. But Adonis is the Phoenician God of love and beauty. It is quite probable that the Jews simply did not have a name for their god, so they borrowed the Greek name early in Jewish history. Whatever the name of the Jewish god may have been, there hasn't been a high priest who could pronounce the name in the temple for 1900 years. The fact is, there is not a modern Jew, or anyone else who knows how to pronounce his own god's name. And the Christian god does not even have a name. For the derivation and origin of the name "Jesus Christ" we must look to Ancient Egypt for it began there thousands of years before the first century.

Psalms 68:32-34 "Sing praises to the Lord, to him who rides upon the highest heavens, which are from ancient times…and his strength is in the skies."

This makes it clear that Yahweh rides in the heavens and in the sky is his strength.

Jesus, as "the Christ," was also worshipped as the sun.

Answer for yourself: When did Paul see Jesus?

Acts 26:13 "At midday, O king, I saw on the way a light from heaven, brighter than the sun, shining around me…"

Here Paul says he seen this bright light at midday, the time of day when the sun is the brightest (Horus Behudety: Paul saw in this Jesus another form of Horus of Edfu as he represented the midday sun).

II Peter 1:19 "And so we have the prophetic word made more sure, to which you do well to pay attention as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the DAY DAWNS and the MORNING STAR arises in your hearts."

Answer for yourself: What exactly does Peter mean by morning star and the reference to the "dawning of the day"? Could he possibly mean Jesus Christ?

Revelation 2:27 "And I will give him the MORNING STAR."

Well we finally get our answer as to whom Jesus Christ is and he himself admits it.

Revelation 22:16 "I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the BRIGHT and MORNING STAR."

Well we have our answer but it is not comforting for some who have been taught a historical "Jesus" their whole lives. Jesus Christ tells us who he is just as God did in Psalms 84:11.

Ps 84:11 11 For the LORD God is a sun and shield: the LORD will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. (KJV)

God and Jesus are the SUN in many of the texts within our Scriptures and we fail to recognize it today! And these bible verses and the earliest Christian history which escapes the literary purge and destruction of Rome clearly prove that "Jesus Christ" was but an allegory for deeper Divine Concepts and was not worshipped as a historical person but as the Sun and the heavens was his father's house. The Bishop of Carthage Tertullian says that Christians were considered as sun worshippers because they prayed towards the east just like their pagan counterparts who also worshipped the sun. Tertullian goes on to say, "You say we worship the sun; so do you." (CE xiv, 525; Ad. Nationes, xiii; Ante-Nicene Father. iii, 123) Tertullian went on to renounce Christianity and admitted that he was in error.

DID THE EARLIEST CHURCH FATHERS KNOW JESUS WAS THE SUN BUT "LITERALIZED" THE SUN IN THEIR INTERPRETATIONS?

Other orthodox Christian fathers had interesting things to say also.

- St. Cyprian (258 CE) spoke of Christ as "the true sun (sol verus)."
- St. Ambrose (339-397 CE) the Bishop of Milan said of Christ, "He is our new sun."
- St. Gregory of Nazianzus (330-389) called Christ, "Sol noster, sol verus."
- St. Zeno of Verona (375) called Christ, "Sol noster, sol verus."
- Leo the Great (440-461) said that it was custom of many Christians to stand on the steps of the Church of St. Peter and pay homage to the Sun by obeisance and prayers.

- Emperor Hadrian could see not difference between the Christians and the followers of the Egyptian god Serapis who was the Sun. He states, "There are there [in Egypt] Christians who worship Serapis and devoted to Serapis are those who call themselves 'Bishops of Christ.' (Giles, Hebrew and Christian records, vol. ii p, 86)

This is really where the beginning of Christianity lays, in Egypt. There was a group there called the Therapeutae. For many centuries before the time of Jesus there lived a sect of religious monks in Egypt known as Essenes, or Therapeutae. Numerous bodies of ascetics (Therapeutae), especially near Lake Mareotis, devoted themselves to discipline and study, abjuring society and labor, and forgetting it is said, the simplest wans of nature, in contemplating the hidden wisdom of the Scriptures. Eusebius even claimed them as Christians and some of the forms of monasticism (by Christians) were evidently modeled after the Therapeutae" (Smith's Bible Dictionary, art, "Alexandria"). As Eusebius states in his Ecclesiastical History, Book II chapter 17, "Those ancient Therapeutae were Christians, and that their writings are our Gospels and Epistles." This sect of mystical Jews who lived near Alexandria in Egypt at the beginning of the first century CE. They are described by Philo in his book On the Contemplative Life as a Jewish Pythagorean school which also included the Essenes. Some say that Philo himself may have been a member. Although the Church historian Eusebius argued that the Therapeutae were the first Literalist Christians, as Philo wrote about them in 10 CE, 20 years before the supposed date of the crucifixion, this theory has now been thoroughly discredited. Philo writes about the Therapeutae in terms suggesting that they were practising a Jewish version of the Pagan Mysteries. Ironically, Eusebius may well have been right. The Therapeutae are most likely the proto-Christians who created the Jesus story.

The Gnostics Jews had a very big influence on Christianity. Time and space will not allow me to go into the connection here but as we have seen before on our other websites the Gnostics did not believe that the bible should be taken literally. The early Jewish and Gentile Gnostics believed that the bible should be interpreted allegorically. It is no coincidence that there are 12 patriarchs, 12 tribes of Israel and 12 disciples. 12 is the number of astrology and the 12 "houses" that the sun passes through every day and the 12 hours of night and day. The seven branched candlesticks seen in all Catholic churches are taken from, Revelation 1:12-16. These seven candlesticks are nothing more than the Sun as the central light and represented as Jesus again, and the Moon, Mercury, and Venus on one side and Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn of the other. Because in the "middle of the lamp stand one like a son of man,…girded across his breast with a golden girdle, and his head and hair were white like wool, …and his eyes were like a flame of fire. (Vs. 16) And in his right hand he held seven stars;… and his face was like the SUN shining in its strength."

Answer for yourself: What did we just read? We just read another account where Jesus Christ is being described as the Sun again!

Revelation 4:7 "And the first creature was like a lion (Leo), and the second creature like a calf (Taurus the bull calf), and the third beast had a face as a man (Aquarius, the waterman) and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle (Aquila)."

Answer for yourself: Does this sound familiar? This is basically a copy of what Ezekiel chapter one states.

Answer for yourself: How did Ezekiel view this relationship?

Ezekiel states in 1:1 "…the heavens were opened and I saw visions of God."

We should notice right off that Ezekiel got his vision from the heavens.

Matt 28:20 20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that the word "world" is purposefully mistranslated in your Christian New Testaments? Why?

Strong's Concordance:

165 aion (ahee-ohn'); from the same as 104; properly, an age; by extension, perpetuity (also past); by implication, the world; specially (Jewish) a Messianic period (present or future): KJV-- age, course, eternal, (for) ever (-more), [n-] ever, (beginning of the while the) world (began, without end). Compare 5550.

Thayer's Greek Lexicon:

165 aion-

- 1) forever, an unbroken age, perpetuity of time, eternity
- 2) the worlds, the universe
- 3) a period of time, an age

You hear often the talk about the "new age" coming. Well in this verse we find that the word "aion" is a reference to the divisions of the Zodiac that reveal to us the precession of the equinoxes. Gerald Massey says this about the "end of an age". *"When Horus had fulfilled the period of 2155 years with the Easter Equinox in the Sign of Aries, the birthplace passed into the Sign of Pisces, when the Ever Coming One, the Renewer as the Eternal Child who had been brought forth as a Lion in Leo, a Beetle in Cancer, as one of the Twins in Gemini, as a calf in the Sign of the Bull, and a Lamb in the Sign of the Ram, was destined to manifest as the Fish, in the Sign of the Fishes...Pisces."*The Zodiac moves in the Heavens and every 2160 years one sign of the Zodiac moves out from the Vernal Equinox and is replaced by the next revolving sign of the Zodiac and a complete cycle of the Zodiac and all 12 constellations takes 26,000 years. In other words the time of the era of Jesus everywhere they were looking for a Messiah because of the Zodiac cyclic calendar. Massey goes on to state, "The Messiah who manifested in this sign was foreordained to come as Ichthys the fisherman, or, doctrinally, the fisher of men"(G. Massey, The Light of Egypt, p.20). ICHTHYS is an anagram for "Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior" and also ichthys is the Greek word for fish. Early Christians were called "Pisciculi" or "little fishes" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i, p. 568). Augustine said of Jesus, "he is the fish of the living water," (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i, p. 636). Tertullian calls Jesus, "our fish". Thus every where you look you see a fish symbol on the back of cars that is suppose to represent a historical person but now you know it is all just Astrotheology. I think that there is more than enough proof here to say that the Egyptians and their children the Jews had a love affair with the heavens and even worshipped them for they were for them the picture of the Invisible God. We must never forget that the worship of the Invisible God was aided by what they saw from the hands of this God and by that I mean the Heavens from which He spoke to them. To think that they physically and literally worshiped an orb and not the God which made them is foolish. We have seen Yahweh and Jesus the Christ both referred to as the Sun.

Answer for yourself: What do with do with the many stories of Jesus in the New Testament? Are all of them Astrotheology literalized? Where does the Astrotheology stop and literal truth begin? Was Jesus Christ really a historical person or a personified Divine Concept later "literalized"? Can we be sure? Will checking out the evidence for ourselves help us come to the truth about the "Jesus Story"?

Answer for yourself: After what we have seen thus far don't you owe it to yourself to check out the evidence for what this article contends for yourself?

- If then the New Testament can be shown to be but myths and Astrotheology then should we not be wise like the Egyptian sages and Priest and men like Moses, himself an Egyptian Pharaoh, and come to the original message and proper understanding of what the Ancients understood this God speaking to all mankind from these Heavens?

- Is this message of God from Heaven capable of being restored today and will it help expose the lies given to us by an antisemitic Rome?
- Will our worship of God, once repenting and unlearning the errors taught to us by a false "literalization" of "Jesus Christ" and learning of these hidden Divine truths spoken from Heaven by God which have been long kept from us, benefit and help us worship the Creator in Spirit and in Truth as He desires of us?

You bet it will and we move on to this task at present. Blessings.....

THE STORY BEHIND THE BIBLICAL ACCOUNTS: EGYPTIAN MYTHS AS ARCHETYPES

It will be disconcerting for some to learn that behind many of our Biblical stories and accounts in traditional Scripture lay Egyptian myths that attempt to relate and explain metaphysical realities to the finite minds of people. One only has to begin a serious attempt to study the origins of many Old and New Testament accounts to find that behind them lay a mythological nature.

First a little must be said about "myths". Let us define the word.

- Myth is a traditional or legendary story, usually concerning some superhuman being or some alleged person or event, with or without a determinable basis of fact or a natural explanation, especially a traditional or legendary story that is concerned with deities or demigods and the creation of the world and its inhabitants. This traditional story is of unknown authorship, ostensibly with a historical basis, but serves usually to explain some phenomenon of nature, the origin of [humanity], or the customs, institutions, religious rites, etc. of a people; myths usually involve the exploits of gods and heroes.
- Myths (both old and new) are heroic stories considered by most people as having never occurred. Yet this does not mean that myths are "false," but only that to understand them we must separate their metaphysical truth from literal reality.
- Myths the world over tend to express certain common themes: those relating to cosmogony, the creation of the universe or the earth with its solar system, humanity, plants, and animals, other aspects of nature, and the theory of their origin, as well as myths of a second creation following a disaster, frequently a flood; to theogony, the origin of the [deities] and their genealogy, especially the Great Mother, pairs of deities (often brother-sister/husband-wife), and triads with the addition of a child; to etiology, the study of causes and beginnings in general; and to the struggle between or among opposing forces, especially dualistic elements as good-evil, light-dark, or heaven-underworld. Myths are also shaped by personification, that is, the endowment of aspects of nature, inanimate objects, or qualities and abstractions with human form, attributes, and characteristics. This is closely related to anthropomorphism, the assigning of human shape, qualities, and concepts to a deity, animal, plant, or other object. By means of deification, humans and personifications were elevated to the position of a deity.
- Other myths explain social traditions, customs, religious beliefs and practices, and the mysteries of life and death. Myths and legends pass from generation to generation, enriching the lives of all who listen, giving them value and a sense of security, and linking them with their ancestors before them, and wisdom heroic and divine.
- Many scholars believe that myths of the ancients represent one of the most profound achievements of the human spirit, the inspired creation of gifted and unspoiled minds, uncontaminated by the current scientific approach and analytic mentality, and therefore open and prone to profound cosmic insights which are veiled to modern thinking man with his inhibiting definitions and impassive soulless logic.
- There are whole schools of modern mythologists who argue that ancient myth is closely bound to rite and ritual; that myth was, as it were, nothing other than the "rite spoken"; and that myth and ritual were practically two sides of the same cultic coin. On the other hand, there are historians of religion who claim that the ancient myths were primarily etiological in character - fictitious tales evolved for the purpose of explaining the nature of the universe, the destiny of humanity, and the customs, beliefs, and practices current in their days, as well as the names of holy places and out standing individuals.

- On a deeper level there are psychologists who see in the ancient myths depositories of primordial archetype motifs which reveal and illuminate man's collective subconscious (Most beliefs surrounding death show fundamental similarities in that the dead went to an afterworld, which might be an underworld beneath the earth, an island paradise, a [hall of heroes], or the moon, and a number of mythologies linked death to a cycle of rebirth, somewhat parallel to that occurring in the Heavens and in Nature and vegetation). Imagination, superstition, and embellishment mingle freely with observation when we look at myth. Some myths are used to teach; some are 'just' for entertainment and storytelling.

We should be tipped off to the fact that the Bible is a book of "myths" if we are alert in reading the Bible when we notice contradictory accounts in the Bible of the "same" event. This fact alone should make us want to know "what is behind the story" we are reading at the time. Truth always lies behind "myth". Inquiring minds "want to know". Well that is me and I hope it is the readers as well.

Behind some of these contradictory accounts and inconsistencies we find ongoing propaganda wars between the kingdoms of Judah and Israel as they wrestled among themselves for supremacy. On other occasions, an early version of a story can be shown to be chronologically replaced by a later version. This was particularly true in the Creation and flood accounts, where early Egyptian influences on Israel came into conflict with later Babylonian sources. The later Babylonian "interpretations" would eventually replace the earlier Egyptian "interpretations" of the events in question.

As one studies increase he can be on the look-out for Biblical stories that closely parallel these earlier myths and legends from neighboring cultures like Egypt and Babylon. Truly there is "nothing new under the Sun" when it comes to religion because basically all world religions have come from but one; namely, Egyptian religion. If you come to understand Egyptian religion and religious ideas you can trace them along with their "reinterpretations" down through history; even into our Christianity today. While in some cases the influences were obvious, as with the Babylonian flood myth, in many cases the task will be quite difficult and will require the deciphering and correct interpretation of Egyptian myths which is not always easy given our limited knowledge of Egypt up until the last 150 years with the discover of the Rosetta Stone and the recovery of the ability to read the Egyptian heiroglyphics. Even more important because of the biblical emphasis on monotheism, the keen reader will notice how the authors of these later Scriptures tried to eliminate references to or symbols of deities other than the Hebrew god.

Answer for yourself: How was this done? These changes were made by transforming foreign deities into human characters whereby they were given a pseudo-historical existence as well as sometimes changing the locale of the story. Let me give you some examples. The Egyptian "Hathor" becomes the Greek "Aphrodite" and the later Roman "Venus", the Egyptian "Amon" becomes the Greek "Zeus" and the later Roman "Jupiter" and so on. The same things were done to the earliest principles and theological dogmas that were first understood by the Egyptians who studied the Cosmos and Nature for thousands of years and in so doing extrapolated these Divine Truths in the first place. Over time all things "change" and that is where we are today in Christianity.

You may recall being taught in school that Western (white) civilization is founded upon the ancient Greek civilization which seemed to suddenly appear. What European historians are trying to diffuse, hide, or deny is that the Greek civilization was primarily the offspring of the advanced Black African Civilization of ancient Africa's Nile Valley, which preceded it by thousands and thousands of years. Even Greek legends related that Egyptian and Phonecian conquerors ruled all or part of Greece until the 14th or 15th century B.C. Thus we find that the Nile Valley civilization of Egypt and Nubia was already old before Europe was born. The pyramids of Africa's Nile Valley were hoary with age when the tribes of norther and central Europe were making their first stone hammers. Nile valley civilization also existed before the Western Asian civilization of the Tigris and the Euphrates rivers.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

Kamite or Egyptian civilization originated from Ethiopia and Diodorus said the Egyptians were the earliest of civilized men, and that they not only colonized Egypt but it was from there that they diffused Ethiopian culture throughout the whole world. Albert Churchward, in his The Signs and Symbols of Primordial Man states that "Thus we can see that African colonies went forth and settled in all parts of the world, leaving the proofs in language, myth, and the hieroglyphics, in religious rites. The symbolical customs and ceremonies in far off lands are still extant among races by whom they are no longer read or understood, but which can be read in Egypt (p. 284).

Think of what you just read. Religious rites and ceremonies from Egypt were taken into all the world and over time the "keys" to their proper interpretation were "lost, no longer read or understood correctly"!

Answer for yourself: Could that have happened to us who are reared as Christians today with traditional Christian dogmas and doctrines and we not know that? Could it be that what we read and study and recite and cherish in our Christians Churches we have got "all wrong" a lot of the time? Could we be wrong on such doctrines as "atonement, salvation, forgiveness, eternal life, messiah and this Jesus Christ"? Well the thought of this was so frightening to me that I had to know for sure so I dedicated my life some twenty years ago to make sure I was "right" as a Christian and the years of my repentance and finally my resignation as a Pastor of a large Christian Church is the result of such an eye-opening scrutiny of my faith. Dears ones, we are so far off from the truth as Christians it is almost beyond belief. And you study of Egypt and their religion and its "reinterpretations" down through history from nation to nation will be proof positive of what I say. The "story" of God as understood by these Spiritual Masters in Egypt change over thousands of years and we never know of this because we never possessed the knowledge of what the "real" was before the "counterfeit".

As you might expect, the versions of the later stories usually disguised the true nature of the truth or the Biblical story, making it difficult to identify the earlier mythological source. Of course this was the agenda of the writers and some accomplished this agenda better than others. Nevertheless, in many instances the editors overlooked some of the telltale signs of these earlier sources and, even in disguised form, it is often possible for the knowledgeable reader to strip off the disguises and see what mythological elements the biblical authors attempted to mask and keep hidden from the reader in order to make it look as if their "god" is the real "god" and their story the "original" when in fact it but a retelling of the original with some "changes".

And lest we forget there are also stories in the Bible that simply are not true. We know this today for certain because we have in our possession today archaeological data that indicates without a doubt that events described in the Bible as happening within a particular time frame couldn't have occurred at the time indicated. Several of these stories describe Israel's destruction of enemy cities during the campaigns into the Transjordan and Canaan. The archaeological evidence shows that many of those cities didn't exist in the time of Biblical lives of the characters identified Biblically as "Moses" and "Joshua".

What should concern the "truth seeker" and reader of Bet Emet Ministries is how Egyptian mythology and literature strongly influenced much of the early biblical history, especially with regard to Creation and the flood as well as the patriarchal narratives, a subject that has been irresponsibly ignored. The lack of attention to Egyptian influences on the Bible by both biblical scholars and Christian or Muslim Egyptologists is unfortunate. A conscious and deliberate effort exists to keep the two spheres separate in spite of the fact that the Bible shows a long and continuous relationship between ancient Israel and Egypt. This has been ignored long enough and the insightful reader will begin to look to Egypt to find the true origin for much that is presented in the Bible as "Jewish". Let us not forget that this Bible places Israel's formative years in Egypt, living an Egyptian life-style, educated in Egyptian ideas, and dwelling there for centuries before the Exodus. It describes Joseph as prime minister of the nation and married to the daughter of the chief priest of Heliopolis (biblical On), one of the most influential Egyptian cult and educational centers. His two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, were half-Egyptian and educated as Egyptians. Ephraim not only became heir to Joseph and founded the kingdom of Israel but is listed as one of the Hebrew Pharaohs; Manasseh had the largest territorial base of all the tribes.

Moses, according to the biblical account, was raised and educated in the Egyptian royal court, and many members of his tribe, Levi, have Egyptian names. King Solomon married a pharaoh's daughter and built an Egyptian temple in Jerusalem for her. Common sense dictates that she had a large entourage of Egyptian priests and servants to administer to the temple's needs. Jeroboam, when he fled from Israel to escape Solomon's wrath, dwelled in Egypt before leading Israel away from Judah.

And historically, Egypt had a powerful cultural influence on Canaan from well before the Exodus to late in the first millennium B.C. An eighth-century seal of a Hebrew official from the court of King Hoshea of Israel (c. 730 B.C.), for example, shows the official dressed in typical Egyptian garb and standing over an Egyptian winged-disk icon, indicating that Egyptian ideas heavily influenced the royal court of the kingdom of Israel.

As we go through the Creation and patriarchal stories, the educated reader easily sees how Egyptian mythology significantly influenced Hebrew interpretation of and beliefs about its earliest history. These influences bring us to the question of the origin of Hebrew monotheism.

Answer for yourself: How, when, and where did Hebrew monotheism originate?

Biblical monotheism appears to have gone through an evolution that finds its origins in Egypt. In the earliest stages of Israel and its evolving monotheism, the Hebrews imagined an all-powerful Creator deity, but evidence of belief in other deities remains buried in the stories, most obviously in the form of "Emanations" from this One Absolute Creator; we call them "angels" today. The Gnostics called them "aeons". I never cease to be amazed that we can accept as true "angels" but when we read the same things expressed by the Gnostics as "aeons" then they are labeled as "heretics". This ideas of "Emanationism" appears to be the primary form in which Hebrew monotheism originated and the form in which it has fundamentally survived even into present times. The three major monotheistic religions, Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, still believe in a host of supernatural beings, particularly angels and the devil. They are beings created by the one all-powerful Creator just as the Egyptian deities were the product of the one all-powerful Egyptian Creator. The similarities of these various "Emanations" are endless and no less startling are the similarities between the Egyptian "Karast" and the Christian "Christ" as again but "Emanations" or attributes of Deity that come from this One Absolute whom we call God.

The idea of an all-powerful Creator who brought forth other supernatural beings or other "Emanations" from Himself has its roots in ancient Egypt. There it was a central belief in most religious cults that a single Creator was responsible for all of existence, including the appearance of other deities. The other nations of the Near East had no similar theology. It is the Egyptian views that initially influenced Hebrew understanding of the first times, and we will see that many of these Egyptian Creation myths are replicated in biblical history.

Over time, however, the nature of the theology changed. Whereas Egyptians also worshipped the many other deities created by the prime Creator as "Emanations" of Himself, by the time of Moses, there is a new emphasis in which this Creator deity is deemed to be the only god to be worshipped. As we study we find the reason for this is the over-emphasis of Osiris worship in the days of Moses. This is understood also as "Godman" worship similar to the "Jesus worship" in Christianity today. It always humors me to understand that in response to this unbalanced worship of the "Godman" (instead of the One Absolute God) which Moses encountered during his rulership as Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty in Egypt that he chose to respond by closing down all the Temples in Egypt and enforced mandatory worship of the One Absolute Invisible God called Aten; thus the parallel is that if Moses were alive today and President of the United States that he would close down all the Churches that worship this "Jesus" today (THINK).

No one, for instance, ever worships God's angels. This view is reflected in the biblical command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." The idea that only one deity among many should be worshipped is known as henotheism rather than monotheism. But there is no difference worshipping "angel" than "Jesus" because in the last analysis we find them both to be but " manifestations" or "Energies/Powers /Forces/Neteru" of the ONE God since all have "manifested" from this ONE. Now you better understand the statement made above about Moses closing down all churches that "worship this Jesus".

Fora brief time in the mid-fourteenth century B.C., Egypt experienced a form of authoritarian monotheism under a pharaoh named Akhenaten whom many believe to be the Biblical Moses. A full understanding of Akhenaten's theology has yet to be developed, but its existence in a time when Israel was likely still in Egypt raises questions about what influence his ideas had on the educated Hebrew people in his realm. Biblical and Christian Egyptological scholars go out of their way to build an unbreachable wall between Akhenaten and Moses, but it does not rest on solid factual foundations. The result of such religious prohibitions by Akhenaten/Moses eventually produced eventually the Exodus which resulted from a volatile religious feud between Akhenaten's successors, who reinstated the traditional beliefs, and his followers, who lost control of Egypt after his death.

History records for us that the Hebrews depicted in the Bible never embraced a pure monotheism, nor was there a single universal religion as we find in Egypt. It would take the Babylonian captivity to produce a pure monotheism in the Israelites. Many important biblical characters in post-Exodus times, for instance had names ending in "Baal," who was a major Canaanite deity. Gideon, one of the most famous of the early Judges, also was known as Jerub-baal, and Saul, first King of Israel, had a son named Esh-baal and this son succeeded him on the throne. These Baal names became an embarrassment to the final redactors of the early Bible books and they either added fictional glosses to the text to explain the apparent inconsistency or they changed the Baal name to "Bosheth," a Hebrew word meaning shame.

Belief in other deities goes farther than naming conventions. For example, Solomon had many non-Hebrew wives and he built many religious shrines for them so they could worship their own non-Hebrew deities. Later scribes attributed the breakup of Solomon's empire to a punishment by God for his apostasy. And Jeroboam, first king of Israel after the break from Judah, not only set up golden calves at cult sites, but established rival temples to the one in Jerusalem. And, throughout the period of the monarchy, biblical writers tell us that the Hebrews constantly succumbed to the religious influences of the Canaanites and Philistines.

Under King Josiah (640-609 B.C.), many severe religious reforms were instituted and strong opposition to idol worship emerged. Whether pure monotheism became part of Hebrew religion at this time we can't know for sure. But, by this time, the earlier beliefs had become embedded in Hebrew traditions and writings. Ultimately, a single redactor or, most likely, a school of redactors sometime after the fifth century B.C. gathered the main sources and traditions together and produced the first version of biblical history in its present form, editing as best they could to eliminate inconsistencies between monotheism and earlier religious beliefs. From this we get the Documentary Hypothesis (JEDP) which shows us the multiple source thesis which explains this Hebrew collection of stories and traditions that later become the Hebrew Scriptures.

It is in these Biblical stories that we find a long and continuous relationship between Ancient Israel and Egypt which directly links Egyptian mythology to Hebrew interpretation of and beliefs about its earliest history as a people and a nation as well as their God.

With this as a small introduction let this information settle and then let us continue our search for the truth which we can find in Egypt and their religion like no other place in the known world.

Let us continue our study.

WAS OSIRIS THE PROTOTYPE FOR THE JESUS OF THE "JESUS STORY" IN THE NEW TESTAMENT?

It is important that the reader be familiar with the concept of "archetypes" before he reads the following article. Having done this then let us continue. We have witnessed on other websites from Bet Emet Ministries the unbelievable parallels between the solar and lunar gods and the "Jesus Story". It is enough to make your head spin and wish you have never learned of this plagiarism in Christianity today.

Answer for yourself: Where did the dying-reborn God myth start?

Well we have seen that all roads lead to Egypt and pre-Egypt if that is possible to the pre-dynastic Egyptians. If we look past Egypt we find that Asia minor is also a source for the "Jesus Story". The ancient Greeks and Romans inherited and adapted Gods from ancient Asia Minor (Assyria, Babylon, Phrygia, Persia, Mesopotamia, Egypt, places like that). These old-ancient religions were pretty basic Mother Earth, cycle-of-nature affairs. We have seen that observations by the Ancients of the Heavens above and Nature around them, often called Mother Earth religions, personified the forces and powers they observed and central to these observations was a pattern or cycle observed by them for thousands of years. From these observations these nations in toto reasoned and had Gods who personified the cycle-of-nature by dying in the autumn (Autumn equinox began the death and culminated at the Winter solstice) and being reborn in the spring. We don't know exactly when these dying-reborn Gods began -- they date back thousands of years, basically fading into prehistory. We do know their names, and some of their rituals. And we can trace the evolution of their ideas from Egypt to Greece and Rome -- and on to the Christian church in your neighborhood which you attend this weekend.

John 10:30 30 I and my Father are one. (KJV)

It all began with Osiris and Horus, the Father and the Son who were "one" and from these arises others personifications of the Sun and Moon and their movements and various powers and forces taken from Nature fashioned in the same understandings; only the names changing from nation to nation down through time. By the time of Jesus of Nazareth as depicted in the New Testament, as it was thousands of years before, the Mediterranean world contained a great diversity of creeds and rituals surrounding these "personified sun gods" (Attis, Mithra, Dionysus, Buddha, Krishna, Hercules, Zoroaster, etc.). Of course as time would have it details varied according to location and culture, but the general outlines of these faiths were astonishingly similar. A pattern emerged and overlap was not uncommon but the general outline of them is as follows:

- These personified sungods were born on or very near our Christmas Day at the Winter solstice
- These personified sungods were all born of a Virgin-Mother which was personified from observations of the constellation Virgo
- These personified sungods were born in a Cave or Underground Chamber which was the personification of the Sun rising at dawn as its rays (Ra) spread through the sky

- These personified sungods all led a life of labor for Mankind (as the personified Sun it struggles against the darkness in its path across the sky and through the solar year)
- These personified sungods were all called by the names of Light-bringer, Healer, Mediator, Savior, Deliverer.
- These personified sungods were eventually vanquished by the Powers of Darkness or by characters who were themselves depictions of personified darkness (Set, Satan, Devil) following their glory at the Summer solstice from which they fell to their soon coming death following the Autumn equinox and the ultimate Winter solstice
- These personified sungods descended into Hell or the Underworld (the realm of darkness) for 3 days at the Winter solstice
- These personified sungods rose again from the dead, and became the pioneers of mankind to the Heavenly world on December 25th following the Winter solstice
- These personified sungods founded Communions of Saints, and Churches into which disciples were received by Baptism.
- These personified sungods were all commemorated by Eucharistic meals (partaking of the solar harvest)

Answer for yourself: Does any of this sound familiar and something you have learned in church about Jesus as well? What does this say about Jesus and certain teachings like:

John 14:6 6 Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: How is the depiction of Jesus in the New Testament different from all the rest of these solar gods or is it? Is the "Jesus Story" a clone of prior "savior stories"?

Answer for yourself: Time does not allow nor space in just one article to compare all of these solar heroes with the "Jesus Story" but let me ask you something; are you aware that the "original" and first "Jesus Story" is the story of Osiris that originated in Egypt thousands of years before the supposed "historical Jesus?

OSIRIS:

It is said of Osiris:

- He came to fulfill the law.
- Called "KRST," the "Anointed One."
- Born of the virgin Isis-Meri on December 25th in a cave / manger, with his birth announced by a star and attended by three wise men.
- Earthly father named "Seb" (translates to "Joseph.")
- At age 12 he was a child teacher in the Temple and at 30 he was baptized, having disappeared for 18 years.
- Baptized in the river Iarutana -- the river Jordan -- by "Anup the Baptizer," who was beheaded. (Anup translates to John.)
- Traveled widely, taught men and "tamed them by music and gentleness, not by force of arms" [Plutarch]
- Performed miracles, exorcised demons, raised El-Osiris from the dead.
- Walked on water.
- Betrayed by Typhon, crucified between two thieves on the 17th day of the month of Athyr.
- Buried in a tomb from which he arose on the third day (19th Athyr) and was resurrected.
- His suffering, death, and resurrection celebrated each year by His disciples on the Vernal Equinox -- Easter.

- Called "The Way, the Truth, the Light," "Messiah," "god's Anointed Son,' the "Son of Man," the "Word made Flesh," the "word of truth."
- Expected to reign a thousand years.

Answer for yourself: Does any of this sound familiar and something you have learned in church about Jesus as well? If you want other proof that the "Jesus Story" is but the retelling of earlier similar accounts from the myth of Osiris and Horus then follow the above link.

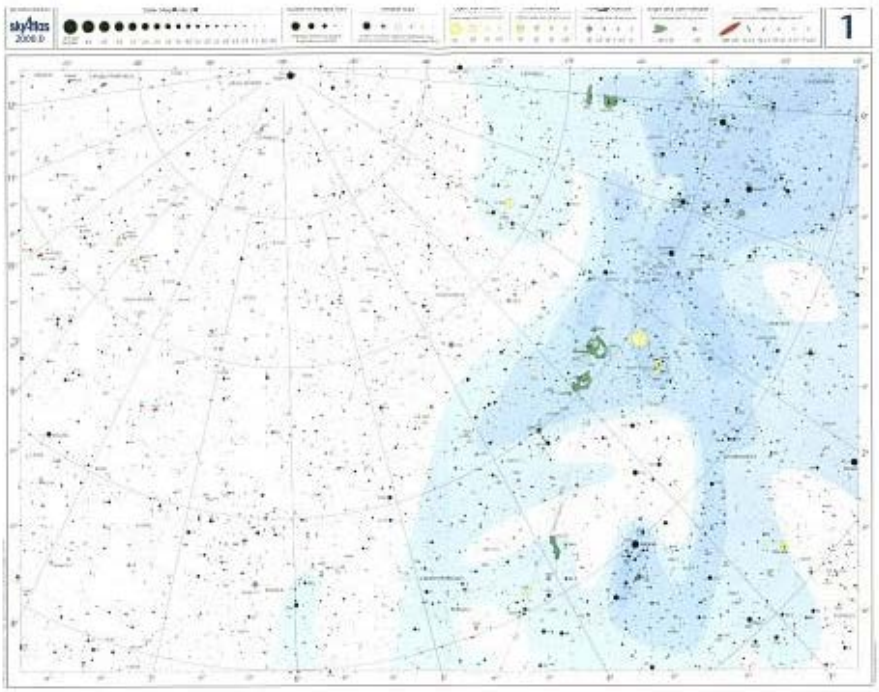
THE BIBLE AS A URANOGRAPH OF COSMIC ILLUMINATION ON THE SOUL #1



It would appear from the title of this article that our Christian Bible is somehow and someway associated with "uranography" or a "uranograph" whatever that is. Well lets find out how not only our Bibles but many Sacred Scriptures the world over have a common thread and by that I mean are related to the God of the Cosmos and the role of the uranograph hidden within them all in their passages and stories to various degrees. This commonality speaks to us that at one ancient time on this planet there exited a commonality or a brotherhood of mankind under one revelation from the Divine; a brotherhood gathered around one basic religion doctrine that is but a faint memory since being divided subsequently the world over by religions who lost this religious truth; religions bent on the conversion or annihilation of those who won't succumb to the religious tenants of those possessed with a darkened tunnel-vision of God. But in order to learn of this "uranograph" that lies silently behind our Bibles we have to acquire some background information as to what a "uranograph" is in the first place.

For right now understand that a "uranograph" is a "star map" of the Heavens. It will make more sense to the reader as I enlighten your minds to the use of the uranograph behind the many Bible stories that we read and mistakenly believe to be "historical narratives" when in fact they are not. This is something you have to see for yourself before you can believe such a statement from me. Let me just say the Bible is a marvelous book when you come to possess the right "keys" for its proper interpretation but taken at face value it is a crude misinterpretation of the hidden spiritual message lost in a culture and writing methodology to which few in the Western Hemisphere has any competent knowledge at all. For right now know that in this study we will become acutely aware that this "uranograph" lies concealed behind the many passages we read in our Bible, both Old and New Testaments, which are sadly too often mistakenly assumed to be a "historical narrative" when in fact they are not. This is an unbelievable detective story that is hard to put down once you get on the "trail" of this truth. This will be a new revelation to most and definitely upsetting to normal Christians as these truths from such study begin to impact one's sound reasoning and ultimately their whole Christian "religious belief system" as it now stands as an assumed "literal-historical" narrative. Let is be said that it might take time for these new "spiritual concepts" to make their full impact upon the minds and hearts of the readers so I strongly suggest that you give this article as the others forthcoming the due attention they so rightly deserves. In other words it might require several readings for you to see and "get it". As further study I strongly suggest that the "truth-seeker" both read and study at their leisure our"astro-theology" website for further enlightenment as to this spiritual concept of the "uranograph" which lies behind our Bibles and in so doing the staggering importance of what I teach here will become plainly evident. It will take your breath away when you see the "Jesus Story" from beginning to end, from Matthew chapter 1 through Matthew chapter 28, as nothing more than the personification of the Sun and its path through the Zodiac each year. Hidden behind this Solar Mythology is the most astounding "Soul Science" that mankind can ever hope to know about his true identity, his origin, and his future as "incarnated Souls" in this human plane of existence. But this "Soul Story" is not a new story at all; it was told of both Osiris and Horus 10,000 years B.C.E. because our same Sun passed through this same Zodiac every year that mankind has found life on this planet so these personified stories and myths of this Sun, our small visible representation of the Invisible Cosmic Intelligent Energy of the whole Cosmos whom we call God, should be the same and are the same. But the good news behind all of this is that when you recover the "keys" to the correct interpretation of these religious allegories and stories in our Christian Bibles then the most glorious revelation of mankind's Soul shines out at you and in so doing lights your path to the hereafter.

Answer for yourself: So what is uranography? What is a uranograph? What has this to do with our Bible?

The "uranograph" is a chart of Heaven. It is the road-map for our Souls. To some a "uranograph" is nothing more than a star atlas depicting the constellations and stars in the Heavens above. In fact I use one with my telescope at times. But for our purpose we need look deeper to the spiritual significance of the "uranograph" as the very foundations of the Scriptures we read in our Bibles that are Divine allegories mistaken for assumed "literal historical" narratives way too often. So for our purposes in this article a "uranograph" is a map outlined by the early Spiritual sages charting the spiritual make-up, constitution, physiology of man and his two natures, the psychic centers and areas of spiritual force and energy within him, and all of this was understood and translated to earth by the Spiritual Masters of antiquity "after the pattern of 'things' in the heavens;" otherwise known as the "Pattern in the Mount".

Answer for yourself: What is this "pattern of things in Heaven" of which I speak? What are "these things" that are patterned in Heaven? Can we know of them? How is Heaven to be translated and brought down to Earth? Is it possible? How can we know? Has it been known before and this sacred knowledge been lost to most today? Where do we begin to look? This surely is possible because even a verse in our New Testament tells us that it is:

Matt 6:10 10 Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. (KJV)

Evidently mankind on earth as well as our environment on earth are to be the mirror image of Heaven above. In other words Earth is to be "Heaven's Mirror". Ancient Egypt, better than any other nation that has ever existed on this planet not only knew this but made it happen for thousands of years. Heaven is to come and be manifested in our world and in our experience "now" as creations made "in the image of God". Well everything it seems starts with Egypt so we look there first because my studies have shown me that the Ancient Egyptians, best of all later nations, understood this spiritual principle and concept better than any other nation that has risen since the glorious Old Kingdom of Ancient Egypt. What we will see should make you wonder just whom it was that taught these deep spiritual concepts of our Soul to them as seen imaged in God's visible Heaven and Sky in the first place. It makes you wonder who was here before the Egyptians that imparted this spiritual knowledge of mankind's Souls to them. It should make you wonder just whom taught mankind in the beginning this "Soul Science".

"Do you not know, Asclepius, that Egypt is an image of heaven or, to be more precise, that everything governed and moved in heaven came down to Egypt and was transferred there? If truth were told, our land is the temple of the whole world" Asclepius III 24-26

"True without deceit, certain and most true - what is below is like what is above and what is above is like what is below, for the performing of the marvels of the one thing." Hermes Trismegistus

Answer for yourself: Can you begin to fathom what was just said? Has God, our Creator been communicating to the whole of mankind from His starry Heavens since the beginning of time and we not know it? Has our Creator been speaking to you and me from above and we not know it? Are you aware that when you walk out into your backyard late at night and gaze at the night Sky that God is speaking to you right at that moment from Heaven above? Could our Creator be writing His plan of Spiritual Salvation for our Souls on the blackboard of His Sky and we know it not? Is is possible to acquire and possess the "keys" to rightfully recognize and interpret the Sky and the Heavens? Could it just be that this "message" from Heaven above, once it is correctly understood and interpreted, contradict almost totally this "literal-historical" Gospel that Roman Christianity has taught the world for over 1,900 years? Read that last question again and be prepared to be humbled by what you will learn.

This message from "Above" is of the highest spiritual nature and it was intended from the beginning of mankind and the incarnation of God's Deific Mind and Consciousness in earthly flesh to be taught and understood to every living creature. I was in my early 40's before I, as an ordained Pastor no less, bumped into it accidentally in my studies following Seminary as my studies continued and encompassed Judaism, Gnosticism, Egyptian Religion and Astronomy as I was tracking down the pre-Roman truths about "the Jewish Christ". I was startled repeatedly to see that the origins for what I was searching and finding in my studies seemed to continually have their origin in the Sky and Heavens above! These studies not only exposed the deceit and lies of this "literalized" and "carnalized" Roman Christian theology which I had inherited since childhood but these studies absolutely changed the whole direction of my life. I have since learned to thank my "Library-Angel" to leading me to this knowledge and opening both my mind and heart to these higher truths. Let us begin to uncover the real message of our Christian Bible because I guarantee you that although you have read this Bible your whole life you have never heard yet understood its true message that lies behind mystical and celestial allegories of "these things in Heaven" which are sadly mistaken for "literal" history on the earth as taught by mainline "literalistic" Christianity today. Let us begin with Hermes Trismegistus.

Answer for yourself: Who is Hermes Trismegistus? Hermes Trismegistus (Greek for "Hermes the thrice-greatest") is the syncretism of the Greek god Hermes and the Egyptian god Thoth (neteru). In Hellenistic Egypt, the god Hermes was given as an epithet the Greek name of the Thoth. He has also been identified with the Enoch of the Bible. The Hermetica is a collection of writings attributed to Thoth - a mythical ancient Egyptian sage whose wisdom is said to have transformed him into a god. Thoth, who was venerated in Egypt from at least 3000 B.C.E., is credited with the invention of sacred hieroglyphic writing and his figure, portrayed as a scribe with the head of an Ibis, can be seen in many temples and tombs. He is the dispatcher of divine messages and recorder of all human deeds. In the great hall of judgement, the after-life court of the god Osiris where the dead are judged, Thoth would establish whether the deceased had acquired spiritual knowledge and purity, and so deserved a place in Heaven. Thoth was said to have revealed to the Egyptians all knowledge on astronomy, architecture, engineering, botany, geometry, medicine and religion, land surveying, and was believed by the ancient Greeks to be the architect of the pyramids. According to Thoth, the Great Pyramid and all of the sacred sites in Egypt were built following the geometries of the human body; a plan given in Heaven first and later translated to earth. Thoth was the "One who Made Calculations Concerning the Heavens, the Stars and the Earth", the "Reckoner of Times and of Seasons", the one who "Measured out the Heavens and Planned the Earth". He was "He who Balances", the "God of the Equilibrium" and "Master of the Balance". He is known as "The Lord of the Divine Body", "Scribe of the Company of the Gods", the "Voice of Ra", the "Author of Every Work on Every Branch of Knowledge, Both Human and Divine", he who understood "all that is hidden under the heavenly vault". Thoth was not just a scribe and friend to the gods, but central to order and harmony of the Cosmos, called by the Ancient Egyptians "ma'at", both in Egypt and in the Duat (the realm of the ascended Souls in the Sky and Heaven). He was "He who Reckons the Heavens, the Counter of the Stars and the Measurer of the Earth". Thoth was the "god of the equilibrium" and considered depictions of him as the "Master of the Balance" to indicate that he was associated with the Equinoxes - the time when the day and the night were balanced ("He who balances the scales"). The Greeks, who were in awe of the knowledge and spirituality of the Egyptians, identified Thoth with their own god Hermes, the son of Zeus and Maia, who was the messenger of the Gods and guider of souls in the realm of the dead. To distinguish the Egyptian Hermes from their own, they gave him the title "Trismegistus", meaning "thrice-great", to honor his sublime wisdom. The books attributed to him became collectively known as the "Hermetica". Shrouded in this "myth" is the truth as it once existed and from this superior knowledge of God and the Cosmos a ray of Cosmic illumination was given mankind about himself, his natures, his origin, and his future and it all came from reading the Heavens "above". This knowledge was entrusted to the sages of antiquity and are the hidden foundations for the Sacred Books of the world today. This is the uranography of which I speak.

We could deal for hours about this Enoch, Thoth, and Hermes and I would love to do this but that is not our purpose here. What we wish to investigate is the relationship between God and Mankind and this "Pattern that exists in Heaven" above; a "Pattern of Heaven to be built upon Earth" given mankind by God through a series of Emanations from Himself (think of the Kabbalah) through the agency of the "neteru"; one particular Manifestation of God whom was given the name "Thoth". If this idea of the "neteru" is new to you or the idea of "Emanations from God" then follow the link before proceeding.

We need now to move on and investigate the paradigm, models, and archetypes that exists between the "Macrocosm and the Microcosm"; between Heaven and Earth, between God and man that find their ultimate origin in the Heavens above as the "Pattern in the Mount" that is to be replicated upon the "Earth". Let us not forget that man is made in the image of God and the only image of God that man could ever see is the visible representation of God his Creator "above his head" and "in nature" around himself. If you take time to read this link and the article hen you will begin to see the depth of this uranograph that is the hidden secret that lies behind so many of our Bible stories which are nothing more than personifications and anthropomorphic representations of the Heavens above. The eternal, universal principle of the relationship between the Macrocosm and the Microcosm, and their combined relationship to the mythological archetypes is one that is as indispensable now in understanding the nature and existence of mankind as it was during the rise of the great religious sages and philosophers of the ancient world as far back as ancient Egypt. These Ancient Egyptians understood this most excellently; it is we "literalistic Christians" who don't today.

The principle of the Macrocosm-Microcosm holds that the ,laws, rules, forces, powers, and energies shaping and governing the human body and mind are exactly the same as those shaping and governing the entire universe. That being true then each human is a miniature cosmos within himself. It would at this point benefit us to know from the outset that the Egyptian's Great God Ra, the Logos, was regarded by them (as Amen-Ra) as the unseen although immediate over-all deity of our local universe (that is, of the Milky Way) in its entirety, the latter existing within His enfolding, omnipresent aura and semblance. Amen-Ra clearly seems to have represented the principle of the universal Life-force, which although was unseen is yet omnipresent in every microscopic fragment of the cosmos (both visible and invisible). As this principle was the very basis of all purposeful existence in the universal Nature, it, as Ra (God), logically gave rise (in due cycle) to all manner of forms and hierarchies of intelligence and consciousness which are but attributes and expressions of Ra (God). Bearing in mind the widely accepted modern concept of natural evolution, in which organic forms gradually evolve out of cells, which are themselves evolved out of base atomic substance and sub-atomic particles, the logical corollary of the theory is that all matter must, in fact, be fundamentally organic-that is, life-bearing (alive). Thus, as the Ancient Egyptians taught as well as other nations in antiquity, the Universe is itself organic (ALIVE). As atomically organized matter emerges from chaos to produce instinctive order as confirmed by quantum mechanics today and as such an instinct can only be the product of memory, which is itself a faculty of consciousness, it logically follows that natural order and consciousness are twin aspects of one and the same universal Life principle.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us? Thus, the universe is not only organic and alive, it also possesses an infinite field of consciousness (Energies) out of which emerges an evidently hierarchical spectrum of evolving intelligence (hierarchies of Energies). Egypt call this hierarchial system of Cosmic Energies that Emanated from the One God, the "Father Energy", the "neteru". Hence, we might suggest, there is fundamentally little difference in the direction in which modern science is traveling today and the metaphysical beliefs of the Ancients. The only difference is that modern science has not quite "arrived" at the same, inevitable point of perception as did the Ancients but given time they will confirm the religion and science of Egypt and are doing so every day. Having said that then understand that our own Sun was thus thought of as but a very partial expression of Ra's being, God's being, even the solar system as a whole representing merely a small part of God's objective physical form. Our Sun and solar system was but a small picture of the whole of God; one might say it was a small shadow of the real or a smaller image or "double" of the original that lies in the realm of the "invisible" since Ra is "hidden and unseen".

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us?

Consequently, our planet Earth, and mankind upon it, has to be viewed here from the Egyptian viewpoint in the context of a microcosm of Ra's macrocosm, fulfilling a partial role in the life of his vast organic life cycle. But taken to the next level mankind is but a "double" of the larger "Pattern" of Ra revealed throughout this same universe as well. Mankind is at the same time under the control of the same laws, rules, forces, powers, and energies that shape and govern the human body and mind which are again exactly the same as those shaping and governing the entire universe. Man is but a smaller version of the "image of God" revealed in the Cosmos.

This ideology combined with an understanding and analysis of the mythological archetypes that portray the multidimensional history of mankind, begins to shed the light of understanding on matters that seem both esoteric and insurmountable to the human mind. Simply said we are all extensions of Ra and are but small manifestations of a very big God whose whole body, if he had one, is the whole totality of the Cosmos and all of its powers, energies, cycles, and patterns. Thus man is but a small pattern of the whole; a microcosm of Ra's macrocosm.

Answer for yourself: What should this then mean to us?

Thus it can now be easily seen how the ancient religious myths and mythologies, like those of Ancient Egypt, which were personifications of the Sun and stars, actually speak the language of the cosmos to mankind in a symbolic and archetypal fashion that surpasses cultural and language barriers, and that therein lies the truest, unabridged version of human history, as well as the history of the universe(s) and that multifarious recognition we call God. In these mythologies lies the truth about our Souls. We only need the "keys" to interpret them correctly.

The idea of man as a Microcosm, representative both externally and internally of the earth or the universe, is idealistic of a primitive, original state of consciousness. This is wisely expressed in the following statement of the Essenes in The Gospel of Peace, wherein it is shown that humans contain within themselves the very essence of the Earthly Mother. The words of "the Christ" are cited wherein he speaks of the both the heavenly and the earthly nature of man:

"I tell you truly, you are one with the Earthly Mother; she is in you and you in her...The hardness of our bones is bone of the bones of our Earthly Mother, of the rocks and of the stones...The tenderness of our flesh is born of the flesh of our Earthly Mother...Except a man be born of the Earthly Mother and the Heavenly Father (notice...two births; one natural and one Spiritual) and walk with the Angels of the Day and the Night, he cannot enter into the Eternal Kingdom."

In addition to being of the flesh of the Earthly Mother, humans are also considered Microcosms of the Heavenly Father and the temporal Cosmos (represented by the stars and universe). This triplicity of the Earthly Mother, the Heavenly Father, and the temporal, sensorial, phenomenal (known through the senses rather than through thought or intuition), and materialistic Cosmos when all combined is considered the Macrocosm which is personified along with the entirety of its energies, forces, and powers (neteru) in the whole of mankind. When an individual acknowledges awareness of himself as a personification or extension of the Macrocosm, it is at this point that one can begin to integrate and bridge the gaps in consciousness that make a person appear as separate and alone. It is also at this point that one can start to embody and externalize higher dimensions of their quantum self (be born of the Earthly Mother, the Heavenly Father, and the temporal Cosmos) and walk with the angels-neteru (a conscious ability professed by both the Essenes and the Egyptians). This might sound complicated but really it is not. We are simply saying that mankind is to spiritually mature and advance to the point that he recognizes that he is a Divine manifestation of God, our Creator tabernacling in these fleshly bodies. Along with this comes the idea that we are all "connected" with one another; similar to cells in one body. Thus the ancient Egyptian saying: "the body of Krst/Karest/Christ". Let us look at a verse that speaks of such a spiritual awakening so needed in the world today:

John 14:20 20 At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. (KJV)

And from the wisdom of Paracelsus concerning the Macrocosm-Microcosm he wrote:

"Everything that comes from the flesh is animal and follows an animal course; heaven has little influence on it. Only that which comes from the stars is specifically human in us (from Above); this is subject to their influence...You should look upon man as a part of nature whose end lies in heaven. In the heavens you can see man, each part for himself; for man is made of heaven. And the matter out of which man was created also indicates to you the pattern after which he was formed...Heaven is man, and man is heaven, and all men together are the one heaven, and heaven is nothing but one man....We, men, have a heaven, and it lies in each of us"

Paracelsus goes even further in elaborating on the inner Microcosm of humans being related to the macrocosmic stars. Through a certain mental faculty our spirit can by imitation be made like to some star, so that it is filled with the characteristics and functions of it. He states that each human was created great and noble and that they can only be understood as an image of the Macrocosm, the Great Creator:

"The inner stars of man are, in their properties, kind, and nature, by their course and position, like his outer stars, and different only in form and material. For as regards their nature, it is the same in the ether and in the microcosm, man...Just as the sun shines through a glass, as though divested if body and substance, so the stars penetrate one another in the body...For the sun and moon and all planets, as well as all the stars and whole chaos, are in man...For man was created from heaven and earth, and is therefore like them!"

Now lets connect Heaven to Earth; at least physically. All atoms and sub-atomic particles hail from the One Source we call God and our bodies and everything in which we partake or all that we create, as well as the planet on which we live, is part of the cyclic, harmonic life of the Cosmos. The sub-atomic particles that comprise the atoms of the Cosmos eventually combine to form under the influence of Cosmic energies into molecules and eventually matter which frames the stars and the planets. Some of this eventually found its way to our home we call Earth and became the building blocks that created all matter on this planet; even providing the carbon based "clay" necessary for the human species. So what is "Above" has actually become "What is Below"; both literally and figuratively. Thus, humans can be likened unto the Creator (the Heavenly Father, the Earthly Mother and the visible and sensorial Cosmos). One cannot ignore the flesh of the Mother, the spirit of the Cosmos, nor the heavenly essence of the Father, for these are the same of which one is comprised (man is thus made in the image of God).

Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)

Considering now then that humans are Microcosms and contain within the infinite substance of that which can be both visually and spiritually confirmed, the archetypes and "patterns" of the collective unconscious take on therefore a much more importance and their role as "patterns" for humankind to learn from and emulate becomes mankind's most important spiritual quest. It is these very archetypes and "Patterns" in the Sky and Heavens above that the Spiritual Masters of antiquity included in the Sacred Religious books of nation after nation; the Christian Bible being but one of many such books depicting the "Heavenly Patterns" to light the way of mankind in the ascent of his Soul while tabernacling in these fleshly bodies. This is called in our Bible "the Pattern in the Mount".

Now here is the crux of the matter if you have followed me up to now! The great, misunderstood mythologies and Ancient Spiritual Wisdom that was taken from the personification of the Sun (understood only as a symbol of the Invisible Conscious Energy of the Cosmos we call the Ultimate ONE or God) and its path through the Heavens and the Constellations of the Zodiac was personified on the pages of the most Ancient Spiritual Bibles and Sacred Books of antiquity. We fail to see this since being taught to interpret our Bibles as if "historical" and "literal" only. This Cosmic Intelligent Energy of the Universe, our God, was embodied and externalized as if manifested or incarnated in the myths of solar heroes like Horus, Orpheus, Dionysus, Mithra, Krishna, Adonis, Tammuz, Hercules, and even Jesus. These stories were never to be taken as if they applied to another; they were about you! These solar gods were personifications of the Cosmic energy that finds itself imprisoned in matter; the flesh of mankind as our Souls. The stories of the solar gods are the "Patterns" by which mankind can learn and instruct his Soul in God's intended path of spiritual development while resident in this matter of Earth. This "Pattern" for our Souls was first written in the stars above before it became written on the hearts of mankind. We are to be but "a microcosm" of the vast Cosmic "macrocosm" in our very experience as "Incarnated Souls" in this plane of matter; the human body. Our Soul's story from beginning to end is written in the Zodiac and the Sky and Heavens above. This knowledge and the "keys" for the proper interpretation of the "intended Heavenly Pattern" written in the Zodiac and Heaven was preserved throughout the ages of mankind in myth after myth that was never taught or intended to be understood as a "historical narrative" of any other person than the person who heard it. All of these Solar heroes were but examples for mankind to follow. They were "pictures" of us. In all of these myths that became the very foundation of the stories in our Bibles and Sacred Books of they world they represented mankind's Soul and their stories as religious myths typified the Souls incarnation and birth in each of mankind. The "religious myths" of the Ancients, like Ancient Egypt for example, were but Divine Allegories and metaphors for the Soul's life, its intended maturation, and its final release from physical matter which had captured and imprisoned it at the demise of the fleshly body. In so doing these religious myths, as interpolated from observations of the Cosmos above and from the observation of Heaven become no longer just archetypal sagas of fantasized gods, goddesses, heroes, heroines, dragons, winged creatures, and the like; but instead, they are better understood as the content of the multidimensional human structure (Spirit/Soul tabernacling in matter and flesh; our spiritual and animal natures), as well as a symbolic language expressing the nature of the Divine Life as expressed in all matter (God/Ra and the Descent of the Soul from God/Ra into all flesh).

Rom 8:29 29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. (KJV)

Mankind was to be a "little Ra" conformed into His image. And to think that all of this knowledge of the Soul and its Descent into Matter along with its intended "Pattern for spiritual growth", which is the major theme of the world's spiritual and religious books, came from the super keen spiritual sensitivity of ancient races like Ancient Egypt who sensed this message in God's visible Heaven and Sky above and who definitely understood that man needed to have "two births"; be born of the Earthly Mother (Virgo/Virgin) and the Heavenly Father (Pisces/the two fish) and in so doing would then be able to walk with the Angels of the Day and the Night. Today such concepts escape us totally and we can sadly only speak of them in in retrospect; or even worse misinterpret them as if they applied to but one supposed person in history, the Roman "literalized" Jesus.

For the invisible things of him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being perceived through the things that are made (the Cosmos), even his everlasting power and divinity; that they may be without excuse.

Therefore, reflecting on this "Heavenly Pattern" and the archetypes of it we might better understand these spiritual concepts if they be defined as the form of the inner substance and knowledge that lies hidden within mankind awaiting its "awakening". Mythology might best be defined then as the collective stories of the higher dimensions, or the Macrocosm (God), as they relate to dimensional physicality becoming the Microcosm (mankind). This is what our Bibles are all about in the stories we read regardless if we are aware of it or not.

Man, the microcosm, is thus to be best understood as a replica of the heavenly man and the universe. From the history of man written thus in the constellations of the Sky and Heaven, the early religious formulators, seers, mystics, Egyptian priests, etc., transferred this Heavenly idea, image, and record to earth. Beginning with the Pyramids Texts, the Coffin Texts, and later papyrus Egypt was the first to capture these Divine Ideals and translate them from Heaven to Earth. The Egyptians really have the first Bible; it is called The Chapters of Coming Forth by Day but is more commonly recognized today as the Egyptian Book of the Dead. This story of which I speak is told in there from beginning to end. Sadly today all later "religious books" miss this Divine intent which shaped the great nation of Ancient Egypt for thousands of years.

I hope you understood all of this because it is critically important. But ancient Sages and Spiritual Masters did much more that capture the Divine Pattern in the Heavens above and translate them to earth. They patterned "earth" after "Heaven" and incorporated this Divine Symbolism "Above" into the very history of their nation, its geography, its architecture, and its theologies "Below" in order to make their nation conform to the "Pattern in the Heavenly Mount".

Answer for yourself: What should this mean to us? In the beginning know and understand not everything that we approach and interpret as if "historical" and "literal" in our Bibles is just that. Often Divine Allegory of higher Spiritual realities and Divine Spiritual Truth is so framed in our Bibles, for instance, that what we mistakenly assume it to be a "historical-narrative" but later if we are fortunate to gather the "keys" necessary for correct interpretation of what we read in our Bibles that we see that these stories and tales were never intended to be "historical narratives" in the first place. Rather what we assumed to be "literal history" is not that at all. Namely, it is the depiction of a higher Spiritual Reality that takes the form of stories involving assumed human beings and nations that are but representations to the finite minds of mankind of a higher Spiritual Reality modeled for mankind "Above" in the realm of God's Heaven and Sky. Thus the Egyptians and the Jewish nation in particular stand out for this accomplishment and this is the reason we find this same celestial symbolism incorporated into their Spiritual Books like the Egyptian Book of the Dead and the Jewish Tanakh. It is from this incorporation of "So Above, So Below" that we get our religious dogmas in Christianity today. Had these ancient Spiritual Realities and dogmas as they once existed in the earliest Gnostic Christian expression remained the same and carried the original intent of the first writers of these Spiritual Truths as far back as Ancient Egypt then we would not have a problem. But we do have a terrible problem besetting us because in the early 3rd through the 5th century to many of these earlier Spiritual Truths handed down from nation to nation concerning God and the Soul in mankind were "reinterpreted" by an anti-Gnostic Roman "literalistic" Christianity and in so doing the "light of God" was hidden under a bushel for almost 1,900 years.

What we will investigate in the forthcoming articles is the undeniable evidence that the spiritually minded sages and seers of ancient antiquity, especially Ancient Egypt and Israel, distributed the various powers, forces, energies, phenomena and localities observed and witnessed in the Heavens and Sky above mankind over the national maps of their nations in accordance with the heavenly chart as well as in their nation's religious faith! Not only that they took this "Pattern in the Mount" and incorporated it in their Sacred Geometry and architecture like the Pyramids, the Giza Plateau, the various Temples of Egypt as well as as their geography of their own nation. The "Pattern in the Mount" was constructed on Earth with "intent" and "purpose" and in so doing this "Pattern in the Mount" became the very religious foundations of their Religious Beliefs and their national "theology". The reader needs to understand right now that both Ancient Egypt as well as the Jewish nation will be leaders in such religious pursuits. All nations tried to frame their own history and geography after the pattern of things in the heavenly mount.

With the advent of the age of information that is blossoming the world over we no longer need have our paths to truth darkened and it is to this effort of "restoring the light of God's truths" in this matter we will continue to look deeper into this "uranography" in the second article in this series.

DID JESUS CHRIST HAVE TWO MOTHERS #1?

Answer for yourself: Were you aware that in all religious myths down through recorded history that the nation's Christs, Sungods, and Messiahs had two mothers? Are you aware that in the New Testament, hidden behind the supposed literal historicity of "Jesus Christ" we find that the New Testament Jesus has likewise two mothers? How could there possibly be rational significance to even such a question at it goes against the very Laws of Biology and the Cosmos? Is this possible? How can I know?

If this can be proven then we will have to study in order to crack the surface of our ignorance of the Divine Truths hidden in our Christian Scriptures in our pursuit of the truth behind our "Jesus Story"; a truth that sadly escapes almost all Christians today who have never studied Comparative Religions or Astrotheology.

When one approaches such a subject he is often put off by the writings of Christians who relegate such an idea as but crude illiteracy of the Ancients where they are mistakenly believed to have taken their own religious myths as if "literal history and stories". I must admit when reading of these things years ago before my studies progressed to where they are now I was swayed by these Christian writers and their comments upon Ancient religious antiquity as they relegated all such comments about "Christs" and "Sungods" as but mythical rubbish and nonsense of early "Paganism". That word, Paganism is a "buzz word" that is found to be used a lot by Christian writer who lack the "keys" to unlock this Ancient Spiritual wisdom and in so doing they literally discount and blaspheme the Ancient Spiritual Masters by relegating their profound Wisdom to the trash bin of "Paganism" and illegitimacy. Unsettling to me, even in spite of their comments, is the fact that these "Sungods" and these "Messiahs" had similar lives and sayings to that found in the New Testament in its depiction of my Christian Jesus. I, not possessing yet the "keys" to unlock this Ancient Spiritual Wisdom at that time in my life and in my studies, was unable to see the depth and profoundness of this supposed "Pagan" rubbish and nonsense. But that will all change over the next 5 years as my studies advanced to the point where I could see the incredible intelligence and Spiritual Wisdom that hid exalted Cosmic Truths under the religious myths of the Ancients. Exposed before me as my studies in Gnosticism and Egypt advanced was the foolishness, absurdity, and lunacy of these former Christian writers and their blind opinions on such "presumed childishness, ignorance, absurd symbolism, metaphor and myth" of the Ancient Wisdom and religious myths!

When I got to think about much of what I was reading about, like the two births and two mothers of these Sungods and Messiahs, it finally dawned on me that I should not be surprised at the idea that the nations "Christs", like the Christian Jesus Christ, should have two mothers and two births. In fact one day I was reading the Gospel of John and the truth jumped out at me; a truth that I had never seen illuminated to me before. I saw that in the "Jesus Story" even the New Testament Christ, the symbol for the Divine principle in mankind, heralded explicitly by Jesus in his declaration to Nicodemus that "ye must be born again." Nicodemus asks if this means that we must enter a second time into our mother's body and experience a second birth in the natural manner. There is always a "literal" interpretation which the flesh of mankind looks for in the beginning. But often we loose the real truth when we look only superficially at such passages. Jesus replies that we "must be born of water and the spirit." Something was hidden in such a response. Many opinions exist but I went to the Lexicons to get to the root of the words.

Answer for yourself: What does "Spirit" mean? The Thayer's Greek Lexicon says:

4151 pneuma-

1) a movement of air (a gentle blast)

- a) used of the wind, hence the wind itself
- b) the breath of the nostrils (the mouth)

The Greek word "pneuma" is translated as "spirit" in many passages and means "air" or "breath."

Unknown to most Christians is that one great keys to Bible meaning is the series of the four "elements" of ancient mythicism:

- Earth,
- Water,
- Air,
- Fire

The Ancient taught that the body of the physical or natural man was conceived as being composed of the two lower elements, earth and water, while air and fire, representing mind and spirit, commingled to make the higher or spiritual man. It is important that in such an understanding we see "two realms" of existence; one physical and one Spiritual. Mankind is a mixture of Heaven and Earth.

Jesus' statement to Nicodemus, then, could have been rendered, "born of water and air." And John the Baptist uses three of the four elements when he states that he, the forerunner of the Christos, and therefore a type of the lower natural man, indeed baptizes us with water (omitting earth), but that there cometh after him one higher than himself who shall baptize us with the holy spirit (air) and with fire. Let us stretch our minds for a second. We find in the New Testament that the depiction of the Jewish Christ affirms that mankind has two births, necessitating two mothers, and John the Baptist adds that we must have two baptisms.

These same Ancient Spiritual Masters and Sages of Antiquity, from nation to nation, taught that man's spirit is an indestructible fragment of God's own mighty Spirit, truly a tiny "spark" of that cosmic Intelligence and Love which we call the Mind of God.

John 1:1 1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. (KJV)

Unknown to most Christians is that the reference to "the Word" in John 1:1 has more in common with "thought" and "idea" than with a "spoken word". We really need to grasp this idea before we go on.

John 1:1 1 In the beginning was the Thought, and the Thought was with God, and the Thought was God. (KJV)

These same Ancients in their writings typified the divine element in man by "fire" and in contrast the lower or human element by "water". The fiery soul of man is housed in a temple of flesh and matter which is 72% water by actual composition! Now if you have read much of Comparative Religions you find repeatedly the crossing of the rivers and seas and the immersion of solar heroes in water in olden mythologies, and the rite of baptism in theology, signified nothing beyond the fact of the Soul's immersion in a physical body of water nature in its successive incarnations.

Answer for yourself: Does this mean that our Sungods and Solar heroes and Christs, and their "baptisms", or when they "walk on water" are but personifications of the Divine Soul as it descends into matter and the flesh (water) of mankind? Yes. Thus when Christ walked on the water this was neither a human action, since it is not human to walk on water, nor was it divine, since it is not of God to walk, but it is an evidence of the union of humanity and Divinity as told through allegory. That will not suffice for many so it appears that we need more evidence before we can say for sure and draw rigid conclusions that might apply to our inherited "Jesus Story". What we will see behind many of our "Jesus Stories" are parallels with the lives of the Sungods and should be so since both are descriptions and personifications of the incarnation of God into matter in the form of "the Christ".

Answer for yourself: Does this finally settle the long debated question as to why Jesus Christ submitted to a baptism of repentance given by John the Baptist if he was "without sin" as Christianity teaches? Is the New Testament Jesus fulfilling the mythos and myth of the Sungods? Let me give you a clue; he is fulfilling the mythos and we mistakenly read it as if "historical-literal".

Answer for yourself: Where do we get the idea that the Sungods were baptized in the first place? We get it from the personification of the Sun as it moves through the Zodiac. Yep, the "Sungod Stories" and the "Jesus Stories" come from the personification of the path of the Sun through the Heavens. Comparative Religion shows that the story of Jesus already existed in numerous religions prior to the alleged time of Jesus. Chrishna, Horus, Orpheus, Bacchus, Osiris, Dionysus, Buddha, Apollo, Hercules, Adonis, Ormuzd, Mithras, Indra, Œdipus, Quetzalcoatle, etc. are all prior "Jesus Stories". The motif of a Crucified Savior was already extant prior to the alleged time of Jesus. Solar Mythology shows the story of Jesus is just an allegory for the sun passing through the Zodiac and the passage of the seasons of the year. Jesus travels throughout his one year ministry, and the description of his travels exactly match that of the sun traveling through the Zodiac during the year when personified as seen in the lives of these prior Sungods, their lives and their "logia" or sayings. Here we have the origin of the "Jesus story", which is the personification of the Cosmic Energy, the Sun, which is but a symbol for God as understood by the Ancients. This common origin explains why all the stories of crucified saviors are essentially the same. The "key" to unlocking this whole repetition of "solar stories" lies in the fact that all these Sungod stories as well as our "Jesus Story" is mystical and mythological allegory depicting the "Descent of the Divine Soul" into matter. Thus, the proper interpretation of the "Jesus Story" is the "pattern" for the "birth, life, maturation, death, and rebirth" of our Soul. The rest is commentary but you have to see it to "believe it". We do this now.

Just for fun understand that the personified Sun is born in the House of Capricorn where upon as the personified Sun he must move from the House of Capricorn to the House of Aquarius. Now read the following two links and try to tell you that this is but a coincidence before you resume this study.

The Second House that the new born Sun (Son of the Sun when personified) travels is the House of Aquarius, the House of the Water bearer.

Answer for yourself: Is this why Jesus, the personified Sun, after his birth in the House of Capricorn, moves on to the House of Aquarius and why the New Testament has little to mention between the birth of the Christ (personified Sun) and when he appears at the waters of Jordan to be baptized? Jesus moves from the "manger" of Capricorn to the Jordan and John the Baptist (the water bearer). I will let you figure that one out by yourself. The Sun is plunged into the water of the Constellation of Aquarius on its route to the zenith of its life and ministry at the Summer Solstice. Now let us continue. There are 12 articles detailing the "Jesus Story" that parallel the passage of the Sun when personified through the Zodiac and they line up perfectly with the depiction of Jesus from Matthew chapter 1 through Matthew chapter 28. You literally have to see this to believe it.

We have seen that the Spiritual Masters of Ancient antiquity, from Ancient Egypt on down through history, including the great Greek philosophers like Plato, Plotinus, etc., in symphony taught that mankind is distinctly a creature compounded of two natures:

- A higher and a lower,

- A spiritual and a sensual,
- A divine and a human,
- A mortal and an immortal, and finally
- A fiery and a watery,

Each of these manifestations of God is combined in a mutual relationship in the organic body of flesh. Heraclitus, a Greek philosopher of the late 6th century B.C.E. states: "Man is a portion of cosmic fire, imprisoned in a body of earth and water." Plato, who lived 427 B.C.E. – ca. 347 B.C.E. was an immensely influential classical Greek philosopher, student of Socrates, teacher of Aristotle, writer, and founder of the Academy in Athens. Speaking of man Plato affirms: "Through body it is an animal; through intellect it is a god." To create man God incarnated the fiery spiritual principle of His own Energy/life in the watery confines of material bodies. Man is cosmic fire, the very Energy of The Cosmos limited and entrapped in this matter we call flesh. That power which permeated the lower nature of human kind is transformed into soul power as a permanent virtues. The cosmic fire force within man, the furnace wherein this work is effected, is symbolized by many things by these Ancients. We will look at a few as this article goes on. But a few more things need to be said.

The following is a summary of the Ancient's teaching on mankind and the Divine Spark within him:

Man per se is an invisible entity. What we see of him in and through the body is merely the manifestation of the inner man, because man essentially is a spiritual energy -- a spiritual, intellectual, and psychomaterial energy, the adjective depending upon the plane on which we choose to discern his actions, for indeed he may be said to exist on all planes, inner and outer. Though man is an invisible entity, he needs a physical body in which to live and with which to work upon this physical plane. He is a pilgrim of eternity. He came forth from the invisible part of cosmic being in aeons so far bygone in the past that mankind, except the great sages and seers, has lost all count thereof. He came out of the womb of cosmic being as an unself-conscious god-spark, and after wandering aeon after aeon through all the various inner worlds, passing at different stages through our own material sphere, and out again into the inner worlds, he finally became man, a self-conscious entity; and here we are. Future aeons of time will bring forth even on this our earth, into a far more perfect manifestation than at present, the locked-up faculties and powers existent in every human being. The heart of the heart of a human being is a god, a cosmic spirit, a spark of the central cosmic fire; and all development is merely bringing forth into a more perfect manifestation the infolded energies, faculties, powers, organs, of the evolving entity we understand as God in matter, or should I say God in mankind. And as these faculties and energies become more able to manifest themselves, become more perfectly evolved forth, does the organism through which they work -- the body -- show the effects of this inner evolving fire, of this energy within; and thus also the body itself so evolves, because automatically reflecting in itself each inner step taken forwards. Out of the invisible into the visible, like the growth of a plant, comes man, the man-plant of eternity. Now you know why Osiris was a "vegetation god". Beginning in one life on earth as a human seed, man grows to maturity, and produces or evolves forth what is locked up within; and then, with the natural decay of power, sinking to earth the body dies; and after a long period of rest and assimilation of experience in the invisible worlds, the Ancients taught through observation of the unchanging Laws of the Cosmos that this inner spiritual flame comes again to earth for a new incarnation here. The spirit of man works through the human soul.

What you need to know right now is that what you just read is the most accurate and truest basic description of man that anthropology can present.

Man is, then, a natural man and a god, in combination.

Ps 82:6 6 I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High. (KJV)

John 10:34 34 Jesus answered them, Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods? (KJV)

Our natural body is the platform, the medium that gives the Soul of man its baptism by water; our initial spiritual body is to give us the later baptism by fire!

- We are born first as the natural man; then as the spiritual.
- Or we are born first by water and then by fire.

Of vital significance at this point are two statements by St. Paul:

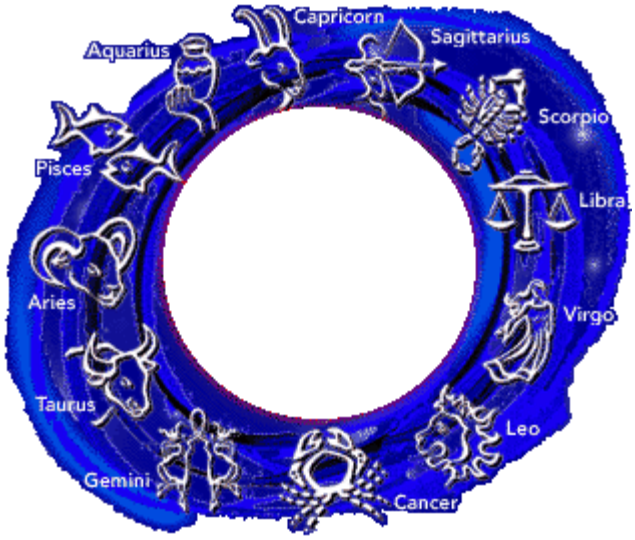
1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. (KJV)

1 Cor 2:14 14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. (KJV)

This should make sense to us; for the natural man is not yet in that higher kingdom of evolution, and he must be transformed, transfigured, lifted up into a superior world of Divine Christ Consciousness before he can apprehend spiritual things. Development of the Spiritual Nature in him will thus transform him, and nothing else will. We must feed on God and His truths if the "inner man" is ever to grow to his intended Spiritual Maturity in this physical realm the live, the testing ground for our Souls.

Now we come to the genius of the Ancient so terribly misunderstood and denigrated by early Christianity. Gross blindness and the dullness of the later Christian age which is propagated by later Latin and Greek Church Fathers would cite these same marvelously ingenious portrayals as the evidence of childish ignorance on the part of these Ancient Spiritual Masters who were the disseminators of this profound Spiritual Wisdom. Using astrological bases for portraying cosmic truths, the Ancients used Astrotheology to express in simple myth which was already known as a Heavenly truth.

Answer for yourself: What better symbolism could they have used to portray such Divine Cosmic and Heavenly truth than the symbols of Heaven themselves?



The Ancient Spiritual Masters and Adepts localized the birth of both the "natural man" and the "spiritual man" in the Heavens and understood that they were connected with two Constellations:

- They taught that the natural man was birthed in the zodiacal house of Virgo and
- They taught that of the spiritual man was birthed in the opposite zodiacal house of Pisces.

Answer for yourself: What is this to teach us?

These then, Virgo and Pisces are the houses of the two mothers of life.

The first was the Virgin Mother (Virgo), the primeval symbol of the Virgin Mary thousands of years B.C. Virgo, it was taught, gave man his natural birth by water and became known as the Water-Mother. The connection of Virgo with water is confirmed both in the fact that Virgo's polar opposite is Pisces, the Fishes, and one of the esoteric rulers of Virgo is Neptune, veiled by the Moon. Take time to look at the picture and see how Pisces is adjacent to Virgo on the Wheel of the Zodiac. Let the reader picture before him the circle of the Zodiac, with the House of Virgo at the western or right end of the equatorial meridian line drawn horizontally through the center and intersecting the circle on the east and west, and with the House of Pisces directly opposite it on the left and eastern end. This picture that I used has it reversed but you get the point. The simple fact that these two Constellations stand opposite to each other and six months apart and they will presently be seen to dramatize cosmological and anthropological truth of the most basic and, in our present state of ignorance, astonishing important are they to our understanding if we ever hope to arrive at the truth behind our "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? There is a relationship between the two Constellations and the Spiritual Message that they bring mankind and we will see this momentarily.

According to the ancient Egyptian sphinx, the first house of the Zodiac is Virgo, not Aries as in the modern Zodiac!!!

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? Thus, the natural birth of mankind begins here. It is common knowledge among occultists that, from remote antiquity, Virgo represented the Mother Goddess worshipped under various names by different pagan cultures. Some of the mythological representations of Virgo are Nana, Eve, Istar, Demeter, Hecate, Themis, Hera, Astraea, Diana, Cybele, Isis, Fortuna, Erigone, Sibylla and the Virgin Mother. All representations of these goddesses are of the Great Mother in some form. It is this Great Mother who existed before the Masculine gods of ancient and classical mythology. The feminine aspect of God will be replaced by a Masculine representation of God around 2000 B.C.E. when the northern hemisphere invades and conquers the southern hemisphere.

Pisces (the Fishes by name) gave man his spiritual birth by the Fish and was denominated the Fish-Mother. So now we have two mothers, a "water mother" (Virgo) and a "fish mother" (Pisces).

Let us not forget that the personified Sun, a symbol of God and Cosmic Energy/Force/Power moved through the Heavens and the Houses of the Zodiac. This Heaven is what we call the Sky or Space. Despite all the various Creation myths that the Egyptians subscribed to, they had one thing in common, Nun. Even though the myths named different gods as the original Creator, they all agreed that He sprang from Nun, the primordial waters. Nun was more than an ocean, he was a limitless expanse of motionless water. Even after the world was created, Nun continued to exist at it's margins and would one day return to destroy it and begin the cycle again. Thus we should expect and are not disappointed with "water" symbolism with Pisces (the Fish Mother) and Virgo (the Water Mother). Behind all of this Astronomy mind you is the Descent of God into matter, Spirit and Soul, invisible and visible (fire, water, air). Let us not forget what lies behind this symbolism.

The virgin mothers are all identified with water in symbolism and their various names, such as Meri, Mary, Venus (born of the sea-foam), Tiamat, Typhon and Thallath (Greek for "sea") are designations for water. On the other side there are the Fish Avatars of Vishnu, such as the Babylonian Ioannes, or Dagon, and the Assyrian goddess Atergatis was called "the Fish-Mother."

- Virgo stood as the mother of birth by water, or the birth of man the first, of the earth, earthy birth;
- Pisces stood as the mother of birth by spirit or fire, or the birth of man, the second birth, a spiritual birth

- Virgo was the water-mother of the natural man,
- Pisces the fish-mother of the spiritual man.

Don't forget what I just said as we will build upon this as we go.

Answer for yourself: What else lies behind the significance of the fish symbol in the zodiac and in mythical religion?

We all can agree that water is very important in the birth of a baby. The mother's womb is a watery environment. The baby begins to float in a watery environment somewhere between 3-6 weeks and we all are familiar with the saying "her water broke". Therefore water is the type of natural birth because all natural birth proceeds in and from water. All first life originated in the sea water. The fish, or the "symbol of a fish", is a birth in and from the water, and it stands patently as the "generic type" of organic life issuing out of inorganic!

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? Namely, that the fish symbolism typifies life embodied in a physical organic structure.

Answer for yourself: What are the Ancients doing with such Astronomy and symbolism of these Constellations?

The Ancients were masters at utilizing astrological symbolism and facts for the depiction of cosmic truths, the ancient astrologers localized the birth of the natural man in the zodiacal house of Virgo, and the birth of the spiritual man in the opposite house of Pisces. These, then, were the houses of the two mothers of life's progeny. The first was the Virgo (Virgin) Mother, the primeval symbol of the "Virgin Mary" thousands of years before Christ. Virgo gave man his natural birth by water, and became known as the "Water-Mother" as I said above. Pisces, the Fishes by name, gave him his birth by the "fish," or in the sign of the Fishes, and was denominated the "Fish-Mother." Virgo stood as the mother of birth by water, or the birth of man the first, earthy, in a watery body. Pisces stood as the mother of birth by the spirit, or by fire, or the birth of man the second. Man's physical body is the high product of a biological evolution that actually started in the ocean water! The Ancients taught that our Soul ascends through various manifestations and kingdoms before entering the mankind: first the mineral kingdom, next the vegetation kingdom, then then animal kingdom before the human kingdom. Virgo was poetized as the Water Mother of the natural man; Pisces as the Fish Mother of the spiritual man. So Virgo was the first of the two mothers of the god-to-be in the life of mankind; Pisces was the second.

In spite of the presence of these significant data standing for all to read in mythology and the Scriptures, any profound grasp of the interior notions was missed because the true relevance of the symbolic sense of both water and the fish had never been glimpsed. Prominent as the fish symbol has been in Christian literature of the introductory period of Christianity, no one has seemed to divine its enlightening cryptic import. Water is the type of natural birth because all natural birth proceeds in and from water. All first life on our globe originated in sea water, and all vegetation must have water to maintain its life. The fish is a birth in and from water, and the fish fittingly therefore stands patently as the generic type of organic life issuing out of the inorganic! The fish typifies life embodied in a physical organic structure, subsisting in a sea of inorganic matter. Organic life is born out of the inorganic just as the fish is born out of the water. It is the child of the water-as-mother. And if organic life (the "Fish") is in its turn to become mother, its child will be mind and spiritual consciousness, son of the Fish Mother (the home for the Christ). Water is thus the mother of natural physical life, and organic physical body becomes the mother of later evolving divine mind. Thus we can see that the Ancients are teaching through such Astrological symbolism that organic life is born out of the water, and is the first birth (natural), child of the water-mother. And if organic life is in turn to become a mother, its child will be "mind" and "spiritual consciousness", son of the fish-mother. This is the home for the "descending Christ" and his incarnation into mankind! We need only to remind us that Paul has already taught us

1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward (second) that which is spiritual. (KJV)

We are speaking of a Divine Pattern that is repeated throughout the whole Universe and therefore taught in all the Ancient Wisdom religions. Simply said God created and in so doing He descended into matter (the natural physical creation...the first birth); the Mind of God, the Intelligent Spark of the Cosmos descended subsequently into this same matter and transformed the creation by imparting the Divine Spark into mankind (matter). This is "the second birth; the spiritual birth. Thus we have "two births" and "two mothers"; Virgo and Pisces. So, in brief, water is the mother of natural physical being, and organic structure becomes the later mother and gestator of the Divine Cosmic Mind of the Creator who descends into matter.

Speaking not about a "literal-historical" Christ but rather the "Christ-Consciousness" Paul would say:

Phil 2:5-7 5 Let this mind (thought) be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

Now when you find in your studies the name "Jesus Christ" in Ancient Egypt as far back as 10,000 B.C.E. then you no longer are confused about just whom this "Jesus Christ" actually is.

We continue. Now, strangely enough, water is not limited to this one symbolism as it is the type of another thing that teaches us about an even earlier stage of development of matter. Matter is the virgin mother of all life. All things are generated in the womb of primordial matter. Of all the nations which teach this we look to Egypt and their religious mythology and symbolism for its greatest unveiling of hidden Divine Truths concerning this "primordial matter".

Answer for yourself: Why is Egyptian religious mythology so important for us to understand? Simply, as I found in my 20 years of study, it is by a consideration of the nature of matter and its evolution that we are enabled to arrive at last at the true meaning not only of the double motherhood of life but the clearest understanding of the metaphysical state in which mankind is placed by our Creator. Let us not be mistaken, at the heart of our "born again" doctrine, as with all our other religious doctrines, like the Laws, Cycles, and Patterns operating in the Cosmos which the most spiritually inclined of our species as far back as Ancient Egypt both saw and spiritually understood when pondering the night skies of Ancient Egypt. Of course at the heart of all of this is the "truth about 'the Christ'" and the coming of "the Christ" into matter as the mediator between mankind and God.

Egypt taught that man exists on a number of different levels at once, from the most physical to the most metaphysical. Einstein agreed with the same principles. Since Einstein's relativity theory, it has been known and accepted that matter is a form of Energy—a coagulation or condensation of energy. We know that Energy is made up of molecules rotating or vibrating at various rates of speed. In the "physical" world, molecules rotate at a very slow and constant rate of speed. That is why things appear to be solid, for our earthly senses. Really an visible object is mostly "space" and when we touch it we are touching only the circulations electrons and this gives it the appearance of being a solid. Basically visible objects are miniature "solar systems" consisting of small amounts of matter separated by vast amounts of "space" in which the electrons are circling the atoms at such speeds that they appear as "solids". The slower the speed, the more dense or solid the thing. In the metaphysical (spirit) world, the molecules vibrate at a much faster, or ethereal dimension—where things are freer and less dense. In this light, the universe is basically a hierarchy of energies (neteru), at different orders of density. Our senses have some access to the densest form of energy, which is matter. The hierarchy of energies is interrelated, and each level is sustained by the level below it. This hierarchy of energies is set neatly into a vast matrix of deeply interfaced natural laws. It is both physical and metaphysical (natural and spiritual). It is into this "space" in matter, our flesh for example, in which the Energy or "neteru" named "the Karest/Christ" has entered in its "incarnation". This Divine Consciousness has come to "tabernacle" in the flesh of mankind. All of mankind are manifestations of "the Christ child".

Today modern science has verified what the Ancient Egyptians taught about matter and metaphysics. We know today that matter is seen to exist in two states, in each of which it becomes mother of life, at two different levels. Primordial matter, the sea of empty space, is the first mother of all living forms. This is the primal "abyss of the waters" in Genesis. Egypt gave the Hebrews the ideas they later expressed in Genesis. This "abyss of waters" is called "Nun" in Egypt. This Nun is one of the eight creator deities of the Hermopolitan Ogdoad. He was the divine personification of the primordial waters of chaos from which the "primeval mound" of the sun-god, Atum (the invisible One arose). Here again we find the primordial waters as the Eternal Potential that will birth the "first-natural-visible" creation (the primeval mound) and behind it operating in secret is the the "second-spiritual-invisible" One; the Absolute First Cause. The Latin word for "mother" is our very word "matter," with one "t" left out--mater. And how close to mater is water! And organic structure is the second mother, parent of spiritual mind (the Karest/Christ).

The ancient books always grouped the two mothers in pairs. They were called "the two mothers" or sometimes the "two divine sisters." As we find them described in Egyptian religion and other Ancient Religions they were the wife and sister of the God, under the names of Juno, Venus, Isis, Ishtar, Cybele or Mylitta. In old Egypt they were first Apt and Neith; and later Isis and Nephthys. Massey relates Neith to "net," i.e., fishnet! Pisces, the fishes, refers again to the "spiritual birth" that is to follow the "natural birth" (Virgo). Clues to their functions were picked up in the great Book of the Dead: "Isis conceived him; Nephthys gave him birth."

Answer for yourself: Could these references to the two mothers, Isis and Nephthys and Apt and Neith be in reality a reference to the two births of mankind; one natural (the one in Virgo...watery womb) and one spiritual (one in Pisces)? No wonder the fish symbolism is the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: What have we seen here so far? This is very important you understand what you just read. We see that the Ancients used both astronomy and astronomical terminology dealing with the Constellations in the Zodiac which move above our heads and the methodology of "personification" to express these various Energies of the Cosmos and associated forces, principalities, thrones, dominions and powers to refer to mankind and the two births of mankind; one natural and one spiritual.

Answer for yourself: Then are we seeing that the "personification" of these Metaphysical dynamics of the Cosmos were explained by the Ancients use of "personification" to describe these Metaphysical principles, like Isis and Nephtys, gods and goddesses (the two births of mankind...natural and spiritual)? Yes we are. Is this how they wrote in explaining the Descent of God or the Soul into matter and the Descent of the Mind of God, the Christ into the flesh of mankind? We sure did see it and this is exactly how to interpret the Ancient Wisdom Scriptures and the "Christ Stories" in these various Sungods and the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: Then did these same Ancients use this same Methodology to express Metaphysical dynamics operating in the Cosmos and in so doing are we to understand that these Sungods and goddesses (neteru) and the "Christs" are not to be understood as if "historical-literal" personages but yet behind these Spiritual Stories lie a very real Metaphysical truth concerning the Descent of God, the Cosmic Mind into matter in the form of His Christ? We sure are. This applies to the "Jesus 'Christ' Story" as well.

These Ancient Sages go on to write: "Isis bore him; Nephthys suckled him," or reared him. The full sense of these statements was not discerned until they were scrutinized in the light of another key sentence which matched them: "Heaven conceived him; the Tuat brought him forth."

For "heaven" is precisely the place, or the state of the first matter-mother, the "firmament" of empty space, and in the bosom of this first mother form the unit potential of the seed of "divine mind-to-be" is conceived. All later potency of a godly mind is latent in the depths of sub-atomic matter. "The shape of things to come" in the evolution of universal life is archetypically conceived at the arc of the cycle when spirit and matter, as yet undifferentiated, are identical and homogeneous. Spirit yet slumbers in unconsciousness, and matter exists only in the mind of God. All things are initially conceived in the innermost heart of primordial Being, wherespirit as Father and matter as Mother are yet One. Being is then Father-Mother, not Father and Mother. With this comes the crystal clear insight into the mystery. For that which is to eventuate in the cycles of evolution as the descent of the Divine mind into an organic matter and creature, by that I mean mankind is elementarily conceived by Divine ideation (thought..."in the beginning was the Word") in the innermost depths of Cosmic Consciousness (God's thoughts/Mind), or in the unmanifested world of "thought" (before matter and the "big bang"), or again in the heart of Infinite Spirit, where Spirit is identical with pure undifferentiated matter.

Answer for yourself: How did Egypt express this idea; the "thought" in the mind of God before the subsequent visible "manifestation" of that "thought" in the physical realm?

This is mirrored in the Egyptian statement that Isis conceived him. Matter in its invisible, inorganic state and existing only in the world of "thoughts" of God as it existed only as "potentiality in Nun before the "big bang" was the womb of the first conception. In the beginning, the world appeared as an infinite expanse of dark and directionless waters, named Nun. Nun was personified as four pairs of male and female deities. Each couple represented one of four principles that characterized Nun:

- hiddenness or invisibility,
- infinite water,
- straying or lack of direction, and
- darkness or lack of light.

Matter existed as "thought" only in the primeval water that encircles the entire world, and from which everything was created. Isis is virgin, i.e., pure matter, or matter which, as "thought", is unmanifested and undifferentiated that awaits its birth, evolution and transformation. The Tuat, on the other hand, is really earth, as the type of physical matter, or matter organic, aggregated into substantial forms, called by us physical matter. It is matter as substance, constituted and existent in the visible world in structural forms. We have before us then the "invisible world of potential Energy" and the subsequent "visible world of potential Energy realized" (matter is energy...it only changed "form"). Isis was matter existing only as empty space (invisible), and Nephthys was atomic matter, consisting of concrete structural forms (visible) awaiting its manifestation. It is the "invisible world that births the visible". It has been said that it is advantageous for us to think of the physical worlds as floating in the sea of empty space like fish in a pond of water. These physical worlds are the second form of matter (matter in thought and in the mind of God in the invisible realm being the first), and their organic bodies of substantial matter give birth to the Logoi (word, thought, speech, reason, principle, standard, or logic) in the solar systems and to the Karest/Christos in man.

Plato also thought a lot about the natural world and how it works. He thought that everything had a sort of ideal form, like the idea of a chair, and then an actual chair was a sort of poor imitation of the ideal chair that exists only in your mind. One of the ways Plato tried to explain his ideas was with the famous metaphor of the cave. He said, Suppose there is a cave, and inside the cave there are some men chained up to a wall, so that they can only see the back wall of the cave and nothing else. These men can't see anything outside of the cave, or even see each other clearly, but they can see shadows of what is going on outside the cave. Wouldn't these prisoners come to think that the shadows were real, and that was what things really looked like? Suppose now that one of the men escaped, and got out of the cave, and saw what real people looked like, and real trees and grass. If he went back to the cave and told the other men what he had seen, would they believe him, or would they think he was crazy? Plato says that we are like those men sitting in the cave: we think we understand the real world, but because we are trapped in our bodies we can see only the shadows on the wall.

Answer for yourself: How does all of this apply to Plato?

In the same way the "natural birth" as seen in the Sun passing through the Constellation Virgo (Water-Mother) is not the real birth for mankind; the real birth for mankind is the Spiritual Birth that is typified only by the "natural birth".

1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. (KJV)

Plato would tell us that the "natural birth" of mankind (Water Mother-Virgo) is but a shadow for the real birth of mankind which is "spiritual" (Fish Mother-Pisces).

This concept of the "spiritual birth" is mirrored in the Egyptian statement that "Isis conceived Horus, the Christ-to-be". Matter was the womb of the first conception, and Nephthys was to give birth to what Isis conceived. Isis is therefore the true Virgin of the world, because she is matter in its virginal state, not yet existent, unable to be paired off as the opposite pole of spirit and hence unwed. As virgin, she has not yet given birth to the Christ. That role will be performed by Nephthys, matter impregnated by spirit/Energy. Cosmically and evolutionarily speaking, Isis is the young girl who can not marry and bear the Christ; Nephthys is that same young girl grown to womanhood and able to produce her child. In the same sense in which we say that the child is father of the man it can be said that Isis is the mother of Nephthys. And we shall see that this legend of the two mothers, the second being the daughter of the first, is found intact in the New Testament Gospel story.

Answer for yourself: Do we need a review before we close this article.

Answer for yourself: If heaven, in the sense of virginal matter, conceived the Divine Consciousness principle, what is the "Tuat" that brought it forth? It must be equivalent to Nephthys. This locality is the Egyptian designation for earth, or matter in its substantial evolved form which can finally bring spiritual consciousness to manifest expression. It is matter in its physical form. Isis was matter subsistent in the form of "empty space;" Nephthys was atomic matter, existent as visible structural form, or the "fish." The fish is seen to be the type of organic matter floating in the sea of inorganic first matter, the "waters of the firmament." We see the physical worlds floating about in the sea of empty space like fish in the water. The physical universe is that Great Fish in the sea of infinite Being which contains the germ of the Jonah Consciousness (for Jonah is another figure of the Jesus or Christ Consciousness). This great universe is the second form of matter and hence is the second mother, Nephthys.It is the developed bodies of organic matter that give birth to the Logos in the macrocosm and to the Christos, a seed unit of that same Logos, in man the microcosm. Man's physical body, with brain and nervous system organized to give expression to that grade of mind denominated the Christ consciousness, is the divine Fish of the mythologic tradition of early Christianity. One needs only to refer to the Greek designation of the Christos of the precessional period of Pisces as Ichthys the Fish to be amazed at the play of the symbolism in the ancient day precisely when Christianity was being formulated. For the sun had entered the sign of the Fishes about 255 B.C.

So under the conception of the divided function of motherhood it can be said that man's future Christhood is conceived in the womb of Isis and brought to birth from the womb of Nephthys, the second mother, the immediate incubator of the Christly power in the world. New life is first conceived in the minds of man before born from the womb of its physical mother. This is a Cosmic Law; two births and two mothers! It is conceived by the mother and born by the daughter. Life is spiritually conceived and physically born. Man is born first as man, by water, the sea of primordial matter, in whose depths he is conceived; then he is reborn later as god, by the fire of spirit, emerging with biological life out of the womb of the sea, the Water-Mother.

The two mothers can be sharply distinguished as these two forms of matter in the following delineation: the first or virgin mother (Virgo=Isis) is matter in its first creative form; invisible, inorganic, unsubstantial (in our sense) and subatomic. The second mother (Pisces=Nephtys) is matter in its later evolved form as visible, organic, substantial and atomic. The first mother, the "Water Mother", virgin though she is, generated her child, organic matter, who by virtue of her "immaculate conception" was confusedly still called "virgin." And this daughter, grown to adulthood by evolution, became the second, or "Fish Mother," and in her turn produced, not now a daughter, but her Son, the masculinity indicating a spiritual and not a further physical progeny, the birth of Mind from matter (the Karest/Christ).

As hinted a moment ago, this genealogy or divine lineage is found in the New Testament of Christianity and the "Jesus Story".

Answer for yourself: How is that?

The first mother, corresponding to Isis is Anna, and the second mother is her daughter Mary, who bears the Christos, Jesus. Anna and Mary are the Isis and Nephthys of the Christian dispensation. And it is a question whether the Christian Anna and the Hebrew Hannah are not immediate derivatives from the Egyptian An, Ani, Anu. An was an alphabetical glyph for existent being. Ani was the name of the human entity evolving to deity in the Book of the Dead. We will later see that "Anu" will have an astonishing significance a little farther on in the final article #3.

The Ancient Spiritual Wisdom of the sages taught that the Divine spirit (existing the Mind of God, a mind of thought and ideas) is conceived in the womb of Isis, the first universal mother, and brought to birth in the womb of Nephthys (physical matter), the second mother, the immediate incubator and gestator of its manifest expression. If you are not familiar with the concept of "archetypes" you need to read this article in order to help you conceptualize what is being said. This is saying simply that physical realm manifests the archetypes that exist in the invisible realm of pure Energy and Spirit. Moses, whom many believe in Pharaoh Akhenaten of the 18th Dynasty, speaks of this when mentioning "the Pattern" of the Tabernacle in Heaven as a template for the one to be built on earth.

Exod 25:40 40 And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount. (KJV)

The "real is the Spiritual" in the realm of the Fish-Mother (Pisces; second birth); the natural is not the real but a shadow pointing to the real spiritual reality that is hinted at by the physical real (the archetype); in this case King David, really Tuthmose III, a Pharaoh of Egypt, 18th Dynasty, speaks of the same thing by mentioning this "pattern" as well.

1 Chr 28:19 19 All this, said David, the LORD made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern. (KJV)

Now you can begin to see why the Egypt had at the very center of its Religion the Spiritual concept of "So Above, So Below". Even the New Testament teaches this:

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." (Mat 6:10 KJV)

As we have seen there is a "pattern" for the birth of mankind; a natural and a spiritual birth as taught by the Constellations above. Unknown to most Christians is that Ancient Religious myths of the nation's Christs, Sungods and Messiahs were generally "allegorized" as having two mothers! Unknown to most Christians is the profoundness of Spiritual knowledge within such a statement. Re-examination of such a religious stance of the Ancients in not only beneficent but necessary if we ever hope to settle the "historicity" problem surrounding the New Testament's depiction of "Jesus Christ". Such a religious belief may go against biological law but it does not go against Spiritual Law of the Cosmos as I have explained. As we study this out you will see that it is not the Ancients who are unintelligent but it is us today who are still immersed in primitive superstition, not the Ancient Spiritual Adepts.

This dual maternal parentage of the Messianic characters of history should not have appeared so outlandish and bizarre had we possessed only a few "keys" necessary to interpret our own Scriptures. This is easy to understand when we consider that it is the Jewish Christ, Jesus himself, the dramatic personified figure of the divine principle in man, who categorically announced this very feature in declaring to Nicodemus that "you must be born again." Here we find our "two births" and by necessity our "two mothers".

Thus life has two births and must of necessity have two mothers. Or, as we have heard so often when reciting that often used passage "a man must be born again", man is born as a natural creature from the Divine Spirit into matter, and born later as a spiritual god when he emerges from his baptism in the water of his physical body (his earthly life and reenters the bosom of his Father as the Soul at his death). Or, finally, he is born first as man, by water (physical birth of the Soul in matter/flesh); and reborn later as god, by fire (repentance and Spiritual enlightenment and awakening).

The body of the physical, natural first man, of the earth, earthy, was symbolically conceived as being composed of the two lower, or coarser of these four elements, earth and water; while air and fire, representing mind and spirit, commingled to constitute the higher, or spiritual man, the second Adam, or the Christ. Jesus' statement to Nicodemus could then as meaningfully have been phrased "born of water and air." Thus we can see a new significance in the statement of John the Baptist, in which he uses three of the four elements to symbolize his meaning when he said that he, the forerunner of the greater Christ, baptizes us with the two lower elements, water and earth (but omitting earth, which should have gone with it); but that the mightier power of spirit that is to supervene after his preparatory work has been accomplished, will baptize us "with the Holy Spirit (air) and with fire." Jesus thus affirms that we have two births, necessitating two mothers, and John adds the corroborating datum that we have two baptisms.

Egypt sees these Divine processes mentioned above, the first and second birth of mankind taught, proclaimed and modeled for all mankind to see in the movement God's Heavens in the beginning of time. The Spiritual Priest and Masters of Egypt were the first to understand that God depicted for all of mankind the first birth on the western side of the zodiac, in the house or womb of the Virgin Mother, in the constellation Virgo, because in the west the Sun, which is the universal symbol of spiritual fire, descended into organic matter in its setting, or incarnation. This is a beautiful picture of God's Energy incarnating in matter which the Ancients understood as the God's Spark of Life/Energy being deposited in matter and flesh of mankind. So man is born as natural man on the west (Virgo/virgin matter), to be regenerated as spiritual man on the east (Pisces). Spirit's descent, in the form of the setting Sun sinking on the west horizon as the Constellation Virgo is on the night's western horizon, makes it man; consequently the Sun's resurrection on the eastern horizon, like the summer sunrise, makes it deity again. This is the death and resurrection of the god in all religions. It is all about God becoming "matter" and infusing this matter with His Consciousness and Divine Mind as the Soul in matter (flesh). This is "the incarnation of Christ" we see in our "incarnational" infancy narratives in the Gospels. It is incarnation and return to spirit. This "Divine Pattern" is cyclical being played out in Cosmic Laws above our heads in the Heavens which is the Sky as seen in the path of the Sun as it moves through the Zodiac yearly. This explains why many of the nation's Christs have but a one year "ministry" as we find with the New Testament Jesus in the Gospel of John. It takes the Sun only one year to repeat it circular cycles through the Heavens, Constellations of the Zodiac and the Equinoxes and Solstices. This same "Divine Pattern" is again replayed for us in the Laws of Nature. Ancient mankind saw the Creator teaching mankind about his "Divineness" not only above his head but under his feet as well. Thus we again better understand the cornerstone of all Egyptian Religion: So Above, So Below. This "Divine Pattern" was told repeatedly in multiple symbolisms many of which are in our Bibles in which we mistakenly interpret as "literal" stories about assumed personages.

Answer for yourself: Now did Jesus, the New Testament Christ, really go down into Egypt as a child? The Ancients again tell this similar story about their Sungods and their "Christs" and frame such an "incarnation of God's Energy into matter" in the form of a story of the "descent of their Messiahs into Egypt and his exodus back to Canaan". Now you can see that more than likely this is again allegory to follow the mythos.

We close this article now but will pickup with the second in this series as we will deal with the "bread that came down from Heaven".

RETURNING TO GOD'S TRUE SALVATION MESSAGE AS SEEN IN THE BIBLICAL FESTIVALS

It has always been God's intention to break down the middle wall of partition separating Jew and Gentile, thus uniting both Jew and Gentile as one with Him. It is God who is to be the Savior of the Gentiles (Isaiah 11:10, 42:6; Acts 2:39; Ephesians 2:11-18).

Isa. 11:10 And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious. {glorious: Heb. glory}

Isa. 42:6 I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles;

Acts 2: 39 For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, [even] as many as the Lord our God shall call.

Eph 2:11 (KJV) Wherefore remember, that ye [being] in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; 12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: 13 But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. 14 For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition [between us]; 15 Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, [even] the law of commandments [contained] in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, [so] making peace; 16 And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby: {thereby: or, in himself} 17 And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. 18 For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father.

In the Old Testament (Hebrew Scriptures) God provides a written record of the both "Jews" and "non-Jews" as they not only relate to each other but to God as well; and often that realationship involves worshipping God according to the same "Pattern". This "Pattern" of Worship of God can be demonstraed to have existed as far back as Ancient Egypt and carried own down through history in the Jewish people and Judaism today. This "Pattern of Worship" not only concerns the worship of God but there is a "hidden" message from God in how we worship Him that involves the path given mankind for his salvation. The New Testament has a very important statement that needs our attention:

John 4:22 22 Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews. (KJV)

This is of major importance for in this statement is all we ever need to know concerning God, His proper worship according to this "Pattern" and the path given by God to all mankind that "they might be saved". The Apostle Paul teaches us that Gentiles, who turn from idols to serve the living God, are grafted into Israel by faith; thereby becoming "fellow-citizens" with the saints.

Speaking to "non-Jews" in Ephesus Paul says something else that needs our attention and of great importance, and mind you this is "said" long after the New Testament's depiction of Jesus' death. This is of major importance to us, the "non-Jew", Christian, and follower of "the Christ" today.

Eph 4:4-6 4 There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; 5 One Lord, one faith, one baptism, 6 One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What is this "one faith"? Let me cut to the chase. Historicans and scrutiniy of the New Testament Biblical texts, when consulting the Greek, show without a doubt that the "non-Jews" in the first century in Jerusalem and in Asia, Minor, came to the understanding of God under the "wings" of Biblical Judaism. James gives us a dramatic picture of Gods' will in this matter:

Acts 15:15-21 15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, 16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up: 17 That the residue of men (non-Jews, Gentiles) might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. 18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world. 19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God: 20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. 21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day. (KJV)

Of course most likely by now you know from previous studies that James alludes in this passage to the Covenant of Noah and the Laws of Noah in these 4 "summary statements" in Acts 15:20. Unknown to you is that these "non-Jews", "who doeth all these things", by revelation also kept the "Appointed Times" of God long before the Jews were ever a people. These "special times" with God were recognized by the Ancient to be connected with the Equinoxes and Solstices since the beginning of recorded time and we find in almost every nation the worship of the God of the Cosmos at these times; these times by the way which coincide with the Jewish Biblical Festivals and Feasts. What I discovered in my studies over the years is that beneath the "external rites" of these celebrations and observations of mankind at this special "Appointed Times with God" is a deeper message given by God that affects and shows the path for the salvation of the Soul of mankind. In nation after nation these "non-Jew", long before there were every a Jewish nation, saw in the stories, myths, and legends of their "personified sungods" this descent of the Soul, its birth, life, evolution, and maturation, death and its final resurrection" which goes hidden in the flesh of mankind. Events in the lives of these "personified sungods" that occurred at these different times of these Equinoxes and Solstices were markers for this development of the Soul within mankind. All of these "Divine Truths" were handed down through time by these Ancient Spiritual masters in the "Hidden Mysteries" of various world religions and when we look at Egypt we can understand how Moses, being reared in Pharaoh's house, would be privy to such knowlege.

Acts 7:22 22 And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds. (KJV)

This Moses possessed this "Message of God" and this "Pattern for the worship of God" and we find it duplicated in the Laws of Moses and the examples given us in the Old Testament where we find this "mixed multitude"of both "Jews" and "non-Jews" worshipping together in the Sinai according to this same "Pattern" and "one faith". This"one faith" is the "same" faith shared in the New Testament by both "Jew" and "non-Jew"; the same faith with the same religious doctrines concerning not only this "Pattern for the worship of God", but the same doctrines concerning Faith, Baptism, Repentance, Good Works, Covenants, Atonement, Salvation, Eternal Life, Eternal Judgment, Resurrection, etc. Our focus in this article is how the "Jew" and the "non-Jew" understood this "Salvation Message" of God hidden in the worship of God; in particular the observation of the Biblical Festivals and Feasts.

THE GREAT SEPARATION BETWEEN JEW AND NON-JEW

Following the destruction of the Temple in 70 C.E., the assembly of Gentile Messianic Believers (Church) became more "Gentilized" under the influence of Rome and lost much if not all of the "Jewish Roots". Thus Jews and Christians began to go their separate ways. It wasn't long before the fruit of the Jerusalem Church in Asia, Minor, was flooded with Gentile unbelievers who embraced the "Messianic-Christian faith" as best they could but never had a background in the Jewish faith. It is these Gentile "converts" who lacked the foundations of Torah and who would, under the influence and teachings of others who separated from the mandates of the Jersualem Church, would not accept the Jewish customs and began to drift from this "Pattern of Worship". These Gentile "converts" would forget one important thing: Jewish often meant BIBLICAL! Because of this lack of understanding of the Jewish faith, and distrusting things that are often different from their prior religious customs, these Gentile "converts" brought their hatred and bigotry against the Jews with them into this new Jewish faith. About the same time, some of the genuine Gentile Christian leaders developed a faulty theology that created an anti-Semitic mentality in the Gentile Church that further divided the Christian world from the Jews. These early anti-Jewish declarations laid the foundation for the tragic future of Jewish Christian relations that would see the Gentile Church lose sight of its Jewish roots and persecute the Jews down through the centuries. Constantine's Easter Letter is a good place to start to see how the "non-Jew" looses it "Jewish Roots".

GOD IS DOING A NEW THING IN OUR DAY....SHALL WE NOT SEE IT?

But in these last days, God is doing a marvelous thing. He is breaking down the walls of hate and misunderstanding that have divided the Jews and Gentile believers. He is sovereignty pouring out His Spirit on thousands of Jews and at the same time, God is stirring in the hearts of Christians a holy love for the Jewish people and awakening them to the Jewish roots of their Christian faith and all the "truths" that go with that which reveal Western antisemitic Constantinian Christianity for what it really is.

Many Christians are realizing that the origin of our faith is Jerusalem, not Athens, Rome, Geneva, Wittenberg, Aldersgate, Azusa Street, Springfield, Nashville, Tulsa, etc.

As a result, Christian Churches around the world are reaching out to the Jewish people in their communities, singing songs from the Old Testament, rediscovering their Jewish roots and celebrating the Jewish Feasts and Festivals and Sabbaths. It is clearly God's appointed time to reconcile Jew and Gentile, binding us together by His Spirit.

THE CELEBRATION OF THE BIBLICAL FESTIVALS BY THE NON-JEWISH BELIEVER

Because of the prophetic season in which we are living, many Christian Churches are realizing that it is proper, good and pleasing to the Lord to celebrate the Jewish Feasts of Passover, Pentecost and Tabernacles (Romans 14:5-6).

Rom 14:5-6 5 One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. 6 He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks. (KJV)

Not only that but when we study the original languages of the Bible, both Greek and Hebrew, we find that these Festivals are not merely suggested for the Gentiles to observe, but expected and commanded!

THERE A NUMEROUS BENEFITS THAT ARE BEING EXPERIENCE BY CHURCHES WHO KEEP THE FESTIVALS

Some of these are:

- 1. Better understanding of the Bible
- 2. Rediscovery of the Jewish roots of Christianity
- 3. Fuller comprehension of God's plan of redemption
- 4. Deeper revelation of the work of "the Christ" within us all
- 5. Greater insights into God's prophetic seasons
- 6. Clearer and more powerful teachings through visual aids
- 7. Discovery of the Biblical Church calendar.

Answer for yourself: What Church that desires more of God would not want these benefits!

You can realize them in your own congregation by celebrating the Feasts.

GETTING STARTED WITH THE PASSOVER

Historically, Passover marks the national liberation of the Hebrews from Egyptian slavery. Pesach, the Hebrew name of the feast literally means "the lamb". God instructed each family to take an unblemished year-old male lamb to their home on the tenth day of the first month, Nisan. This corresponds to the months of March and April. They were to examine the lamb for four days to see that it was perfect. On the fourth day at twilight (the beginning of the fifth day), they were to kill the lamb and take some of the lamb's blood and place it on the two doorposts and the lintel of their house. On the first Passover, the avenging angel of God killed every first born male throughout the land, from Pharaoh, to slave, to camel. The angel would "Passover" those homes that protected themselves by placing the blood of a lamb on their doorposts and lintels.

Today the Feast of Passover is celebrated by Jewish people and many Christian churches around the world with a Passover Seder which commemorates the liberation from Egyptian slavery which is a picture of God's salvation. The Feast of Passover, properly understood, is a picture of the salvation provided by God to those who believe His Word and respond to it in proper faith and proper works. The Passover Seder is a meal with special foods, practices and Scripture readings. The Passover Seder commemorates the liberation from Egyptian slavery, in accordance with God's instructions (Lev. 23:1,4, Exodus 12:14,24-27).

Lev. 23:1 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, ...

Lev. 23:4 These [are] the feasts of the LORD, [even] holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons.

Exod. 12:14 And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the LORD throughout your generations; ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever.

Exod. 12:24 (KJV) And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons for ever. 25 And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land which the LORD will give you, according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service. 26 And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service? 27 That ye shall say, It [is] the sacrifice of the LORD'S Passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses. And the people bowed the head and worshipped.

UNLEAVENED BREAD

Hag ha-Matsot, the Festival of Unleavened Bread is described in Ex. 12: 15.

Exod 12:15 15 Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel. (KJV)

This stems from the commandment to eat unleavened bread (Matsah) and the prohibition against eating "hamets" or leavened food, in commemoration of the Israelites' hasty exodus from Egypt when they had time to prepare only unleavened bread. While the prohibition against hametz applies to the entire festival, the commandment to eat matsah applies, strictly speaking, to the first night only.

Answer for yourself: What is the connection between the "Passover" and "Unleavend Bread"?

One needs to understand that after one receives the gift of salvation from HaShem which is by birthed by God's love fo mankind and sent to us by His grace, then as God's redemned children we are obligated to "cast out the leaven" from our lives. Repentance from sin is the heart of the issue "after we are saved" as we slowly sanctify our lives by "casting out the leaven" as our Souls mature within us. Leaven is used as a metaphor for "sin" in the Bible and it is understandable that after one comes to God then God expects us to clean up our lives in response to God's gracious gift of salvation. Thus the observation of "unleavened bread" by a Child of God is an immense lession and necessary as the next step in our sanctification and Salvation since God's Salvation is a "process" that is accomplished over time by our due diligence to continullay "seek out" and "cast out the leaven" in our lives.

Rom 12:2 2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God. (KJV)

THE FEAST OF PENTECOST

The Feast of Pentecost is celebrated on the sixth day of the Hebrew month of Sivan. This corresponds to the months of May and June on the Gentile calendar.

Historically, the main activity on the Feast of Pentecost was the presentation of a wave offering to the Lord, two loaves of baked bread with leaven (Lev. 23:15-21). The wave offering expressed the Hebrews' dependence on God for the harvest and their daily bread. This was a thanksgiving offering. Not only that but it is a picture of the people of God; two loaves representing the two "peoples of God"; the Jew and the non-Jew as the peoples of God (the two oliver branches in Joseph's hand).

Later when the Jews were dispersed among the nations, the Feast of Pentecost lost its primary significance as a harvest festival and the Feast of Shavuot, Pentecost, was celebrated as a memorial to the time when God gave the law at Sinai. It is this "Law" which is given to both the Jew and the non-Jew through the various Covenant's of God. This is because the Jews have traditionally believed that God gave the law to Moses on the Day of Pentecost (Ex. 19:1,11).

Exod. 19:1 In the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day came they [into] the wilderness of Sinai.

Exod 19:11 And be ready against the third day: for the third day the LORD will come down in the sight of all the people upon mount Sinai.

Answer for yourself: Why is this giving of the Laws of God contained in the Torah so imporant for our salvation? Simply said it is by the knowledge of and the obedience to these Laws and Commandments of God that our Souls grow as we elevate them Spiritually and in so doing supress our carnal and animal natures in our bodies. This is the very same Salvation Message of the Jewish Jesus in the New Testament which we have seen and studied before. This is the path of progressive sanctification that leads to Eternal Life.

Salvation is achieveable to all mankind by their faithfulness to the Torah of God. The fruit of the Torah lived out in one's life is a total reorientation of one's life: a repentance in terms of turning to God. Such is love of God. A potent form of anti-Judaism still remains in Christian theology today as seen in its exclusivist concepts of salvation. Exclusivist forms of salvation affect the Christian approach to mission; i.e. if the Christian Jesus Christ is the only way for salvation, then Christians have an obligation to preach the Gospel and convert all people - including Jews. Within this traditional thinking, if salvation is only available through Jesus Christ, then the Jewish tradition is incapable of securing salvation for the Jewish people let alone "non-Jews". This ultimately leads to denigration and anti-Judaism because Judaism is deemed to be inferior, it has insufficient power for salvation, it is ineffective, and perhaps demonic in some Christian teaching seen with Augustine and Luther. This has happened continuously throughout the ages in Christian preaching and the teachings of the Church Fathers. The most potent forms of anti-Judaism and the persecution of Jews can be traced back to mission and behind that an underlying assumption that salvation is only available through Christ.

Christianity maintains that all men are doomed to sin, and everyone will go to everlasting hell unless they accept this New Testament Jesus as their savior. Judaism has always held, and has for thousands of years, that we do not need that sort of salvation, for we are not doomed or damned at birth. We are not doomed or fated to sin. Quite the contrary. The Torah says: "If you do good, won't there be special privilege? And if you do not do good, sin waits at the door. It lusts after you, but you can dominate it." (Genesis 4:7) In other words, you can do good, and if you do, things will be better for you. If you do not do good, sin wants to be partners with you. But you can control sin, you can control your evil desires, and you can be good. So we have free will, and that is what Judaism has always believed, because that is what the Torah teaches. The Torah does not teach -- or even mention -- that we are "born in sin," or that we are fated to sin. Just the opposite. We have the ability to choose. Which means that we can be good, or we can be evil. It's up to us. And if can be good, that means we can be righteous. I cannot understand how or why Christians like to say that no one can be righteous in the eyes of God. The Torah says otherwise.

"All your nation is righteous, they will inherit the earth eternally; the shoot that I have planted, the work of My hands, something to be proud of" (Isaiah 60:21).

So we are righteous, and Hashem is proud of us. And it says, "Open the gates, so that the righteous nation that keeps the faith may enter" (Isaiah 26:2). We Children of the Israel, both Jew and "non-Jew" are righteous "if" we keep God's Laws and Commandments like Jesus says in his Salvation Message in the New Testament. For the Torah of the Jews says so and always has since the beginning. Before that Egypt said the same things. God laid all this out believe in or not in the Sky and Heavens above in His Laws that operate in the Cosmos and in Nature and the Ancient sages and Spiritual Masters saw and knew this and taught these Divine Concepts to mankind since the beginning of time. For us today, walking in tis same revelation and knowledge, we see that we must uphold the Torah, or otherwise we might cease to be righteous. But as long as we keep the Torah, we are righteous.

The Prophets of the Torah warned us about this many times. They often called man wicked.

Answer for yourself: When is man called "wicked"? When he did not obey the Commandments of the Torah.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that not once, not once, did anyone in the Old Testament warn the Jews or any man for that example to not fail to "believe in Jesus" or the Salvation Message that will one day connected by Rome to this man called Jesus?

The problem is that Christians do not understand the meaning of the concept "righteousness." They think it means that one has never sinned. Never sinning is almost impossible. The Torah says that "There is no person on earth so righteous that he does only good and never sins" (Eccl. 7:20) Rather, the definition of a righteous person is as taught in Proverbs 24:16: "The righteous fall even seven times and still get up, but the wicked stumble in evil." Being righteous does not mean that one never sins. It means that after you sin you get back up again, repent, and try again. You keep on trying. That is being righteous. This is again progressive sanctification and the path to Eternal Life and the true Salvation Message of God.

Not only that, but even if you keep on trying, and you don't succeed very well, and you have many sins, you can still be forgiven and go to Heaven. In the Book of Job (33:23) it says that if someone has even only one merit and 1000 sins, he is rescued from hell. So we are not doomed to hell. That's what Judaism teaches concerning Eternal Life and Salvation, as we see from the Torah.

The Christian bible, on the other hand, teaches that there is no repentance after sinning. Here is what it says in the christian bible: For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. For it would have been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. -- 2 Peter 2:20-21 In other words, if anyone accepted Jesus as savior, and then sins, they are in worse trouble than they were before they accepted jesus.

Answer for yourself: So what then is the advantage of accepting Jesus? It seems better to stay with Hashem! Hashem accepts repentance, and loves all those who turn away from sin, no matter how many times they have sinned and repented. "For the righteous stumble even seven times, but they get up again!" And they are still called righteous!

And the wicked who repent are no longer called wicked. Even when I have told the wicked that he will die, but then he repents, and he does justice and righteousness; he returns the collateral when he is supposed to, he repays what he stole, he begins to live by the Laws of Life, and does not do evil, he will live, and he will not die. All the sins that he committed will not be held against him, for he has begun to do judgment and righteousness; he shall surely live. -- Ezekiel 33:14-16

We see, therefore another fallacy of the Christians, who argue that "sin has separated us from a perfectly holy G-d." We are not separated from Hashem at all. All we need to do is repent.

But no, say the Christians. Repentance won't work, for some reason that we cannot understand. They claim that "no one can be close to G-d without jesus." This is completely wrong. The righteous live by their own faith. (Habbakuk 2:4) We do not gain life or atonement by the faith or righteousness of someone else like this Jesus. We are masters of our own fate, because the choice to do good or bad is our own. In Judaism, it is entirely up to you. If you do good, you will get good. If you "choose life" you "get life".

I suggest that if Christians wish to combat anti-Judaism, Christians must now re-examine their concepts of salvation and Biblical Atonement and recognize Judaism as God's legitimate path of salvation for Jews and "non-Jews" without any belief in the Christian doctrines connect to the "Roman Christ". Understand that some of these "doctrines" are correct and so tragically wrong. If Judaism has salvific power (to use Christian language), then there is no necessity for a mission to Jews or anyone for that matter whereby we teach a false atonement and the wrong Salvation Message from God as Christianity teaches today due to its indoctrination and forged texts.

Answer for yourself: But what are we to do with the New Testament examples of Moses being taught to the "non-Jews" in "every city" as seen in Acts 15:21 21?

For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day. (KJV) ynagoges in Asia, Minor, in the earliest centuries of the emeging Christain era.

Answer for yourself: What are we to do with the many, many examples in the New Testament where we find that both Jews and "non-Jews" observed together the Sabbath, Passover, Unleavend Bread, First Fruits, Shavuot (Penecost), Rosh HaShannah, Yom Kippur, Tabernacles, as well as Paul's example of him teachingthe "non-Jews" in Asia to keep the Sabbath Havdalah service, etc.?

Answer for yourself: What of the examples were we find in the New Tesament "non-Jews" keeping the Torah along with the Jews after this death of Jesus as depicted in the New Testament? Did these early "non-Jewish" believers know something that today as Christains we don't; namely, that it was in keeping this Jewish Torah that they had discovered the "Salvation Message of God" and that is why they kept it? Do you think that they viewed this as a "curse" or "death" of the higest expression of Love of God for them, to show them the way to Him when they die?

Without a doubt in this Torah we find not only the true Salvation Message of God for all mankind but as well this "Pattern of Worship of God" given all mankind in the beginning of time. Accompanying this "Pattern of Worship" in this Torah and Old Testament we also find a distinct and unique message from God as well concerning our Souls and how they are to grow and inherit Eternal Life in this plane of existence. This "Plan of Worship" and "Plan of Salvation" is laid out in the Biblical Feasts and Festivals of the Jews and their Sabbaths. These Jewish people and their Rabbis, of all peoples today, have preserved this Ancient Message of God concerning His Salvation for mankind in its purest form which can be seen when comparing this "Message" with the same earlier "Message of Ancient Egypt" and the later altered "Message" of Rome.

So it was at Shavuot, the Day of Pentecost, when God gave the roadmap of "How to be Saved" at Sinai when He gave Moses the Laws and Commadments which comprise the respective Covenants of the Jew and "non-Jew". The Day of Pentecost did not originate with Christianity as many Christians maintain and would like you to believe, but it is the day when the Jews and all Gentile converts traveled to be in Jerusalem to celebrate the Feast and the giving of God's Law and Salvation Message to all mankind along with this Pattern for His Worship. These Laws given in the Torah were understood by both the Jew and the "non-Jew" as their Covenant responsibilities to God.

From Luke's account in Acts 2 we see the marvelous timing of God. Thousands of Jews had journeyed to Jerusalem to celebrate the Feast of Pentecost. It was then that the followers of "the Christ" were waiting in the upper room and were filled with the Holy Spirit. There was such a loud noise accompanying this experience, that it attracted the attention of the Jewish visitors who went to see what the commotion was all about. Peter then stood up and preached a bold sermon to this Jewish crowd. This outpouring of the Holy Spirit was taking place on the very day when the Jews were offering the two wave loaves to God (symbolizing the two peoples of God, the Jew and the "non-Jew") and celebrating the Law symbolizing their dependence on God. One wave loaf symbolized the Jews and the other the Gentiles who would also receive the Holy Spirit in like manner as recorded in Acts 10.
The Middle Wall of partion between these two peoples were cumbling and would do so until Constantine in the 3rd century when it would be rebuilt and sadly it reamins upright today.

It is this Spirit of the Lord which is given to empower the child of God, now saved as his "personal Passover" through faith, and "cleaned up from his sin through repentance from sin through his observance of his "personal unleavened bread" and resultant obedience to the Law and Commands of God" given him at "his personal Sinai", is now equipped to live thourghout his life a victorious life over sin.

Answer for yourself: What are we to learn from this?

We see from this that we all are to expereince in our lives our very own personal Passover, our very own personal Unleavened Bread, and our very own personal Pentecost/Shavuot for this is God's "Salvation Message" for our Souls and in it is the very "Pattern for Worship" of the Creator in both our bodies and Souls. We as Christains were not commanded in the Laws of Noah to keep these Appointed Times with God that occur at these Equinoxes and Solstices but according to Isaiah 56 "we get to" if we "choose those things that please God". I choose to. By examples in the Old Testament we are shown other "non-Jews", long before the Jewish nation, observee and keept these Holy Days, these Appointed Times with God, learning the lessons concerning their Souls and Eternal Life buried deep in these Equinoxes and Solstices. Anceint mankind read God's blackboard of the Sky and Spiritually discerned by observing the motion of the orbs of Heaven, His Sun, Moon, and Constellations, that in Gods' Heaven lies a Salvation Message of God for all mankind that was brought to earth by the Spiritual Masters of antiquity: "So Above, So Benath". This "Messge of Salvation" and "Pattern for Worship" of God, first recongnized in the Heavens "above" and in Nature "below" the Spiritual Masters of antquity shared God's Divine Message with mankind and it lies there for your receiving yet today.

It is God's Spirit in us, this "anointing", which empowers the child of God to live the mitzvoth and the commands of God in his life. Even Jesus said his yoke was easy. God made it so easy for us if we will lean upon Him and His power in us that enables us to live a Torah obedience and love filled life.

ROSH HA-SHANNAH, YOM KIPPUR, AND THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES (SUKKOT)

On Rosh HaShanah, God gives us a pictur of the "future judgment" of mankind. Judaism teaches, just like Egypt before them, that everyone is judged by God based on his or her actions during the previous year. The resulting judgment is inscribed by God and a person's future is determined for the following year. Don't lose sight of the over all picture of man being judged by his "deeds" and "actions" and not by his "creeds" as the Romanized Paul teaches us in the New Testament. Though that judgment is inscribed, it is not yet sealed and can still be changed at least for another ten days. For the "non-Jew" the next passage is very important.

Acts 11:18 18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. (KJV)

God waits until Yom Kippur to seal the book for the year.

Answer for yourself: How can a person change their judgment for the better?

"Repentance, Prayer, and Charity can remove the bad decree." Notice if you will we are speaking of "deeds" again and not "creeds". This is very important. God looks especially at three areas during the time between Rosh HaShanah and Yom Kippur, the Ten Days of Repentance. By doing teshuvah with true regret for the past and commitment for the future, a person can erase his misdeeds and hence improve his judgment before it is sealed on Yom Kippur. Similarly, by praying with greater concentration before God, and by giving charity with the proper spirit, one can also upgrade one's status. This is how we atone for our sins, through righeous deeds that are the fruits of our obedience of the Commandments and Laws of God as taught by the "Gospel of Jesus" in the New Testament. This is how we prepare our lives to be judged by God at our deaths. We next come to Yom Kippur when our atonement accomplished during our lives is weighted in the balance and judgemed by God.

As I noted in Days of Awe, by S. Y. Agnon, Yom Kippur atones only for sins between man and God, not for sins against another person (the Second Tablet of the Law). Now you see the importance of repentance and the Second Tablet of the Law and its various Commandments between mankind.

Answer for yourself: Now, do you understand Jesus' answer on Eternal Life asked him by the lawyer where he mentioned only the Second Tablet of the Law?

To atone for sins against another person, you must first seek reconciliation with that person, righting the wrongs you committed against them if possible. That must all be done before Yom Kippur. By Yom Kippur the 40 days of repentance, that begin with the first of Elul, have passed. On Rosh Hashanah God has judged most of mankind and has recorded his judgement in the Book of Life. But he has given a 10 day reprieve. On Yom Kippur the Book of Life is closed and sealed. Those that have repented for their sins are granted a good and happy New Year. Since Yom Kippur is the day to ask forgiveness for promises broken to God, the day before is reserved for asking forgiveness for broken promises between people, as God cannot forgive broken promises between people. Since Yom Kippur is the day to ask forgiveness for promises broken to God, the day before is reserved for asking forgiveness for broken promises between people, as God cannot forgive broken promises between people. Yom Kippur is a day of "NOT" doing. The is no blowing of the Shofar and Jews may not eat or drink, as fasting is the rule. It is believed that to fast on Yom Kippur is to emulate the angels in heaven, who do not eat, drink, or wash. An important part of the Yom Kippur service is the "Vidui" (Viduy) or confession. The confessions serve to help reflect on ones misdeeds and to confess them verbally is part of the formal repentance in asking God's forgiveness. Because community and unity are an important part of Jewish Life, the confessions are said in the plural (We are guilty). As Yom Kippur ends, at the last hour a service called "Ne'ila" (Neilah) offers a final opportunity for repentance. It is the only service of the year during which the doors to the Ark (where the Torah scrolls are stored) remain open from the beginning to end of the service, signifying that the gates of Heaven are open at this time.

Answer for yourself: What should we learn from this? That repentance from sin, confession, and obedience to the Laws and Commandments of God, just like "the Christ" taught in his Gospel in the New Testament, is the way to Eternal Life and Salvation. All that we do on Yom Kippur is but a picture of the reality that awaits us all at the end of our physical existence.

The last major feast on the Jewish calendar is Tabernacles. It is celebrated in the Fall in the Jewish month of Tishri, which corresponds to the month of September/October on the Gentile calendar.

The Feast of Tabernacles came at the final ingathering of the harvest season. The fruit of the land had been reaped so the people could rest from their labors. It was a time of great rejoicing and was celebrated from the fifteenth to the twenty-first. Then on the twenty-second (the eighth day), there was a special Sabbath which was a day of rest characterized by further rejoicing (Lev. 23:33-41).

Levi 23:33 (KJV) And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, The fifteenth day of this seventh month [shall be] the feast of tabernacles [for] seven days unto the LORD. 35 On the first day [shall be] an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work [therein]. 36 Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it [is] a solemn assembly; [and] ye shall do no servile work [therein]. {solemn...: Heb. day of restraint} 37 These [are] the feasts of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim [to be] holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt offering, and a meat offering, a sacrifice, and drink offerings, every thing upon his day: 38 Beside the sabbaths of the LORD, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill offerings, which ye give unto the LORD. 39 Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the LORD seven days: on the first day [shall be] a Sabbath, and on the eighth day [shall be] a Sabbath. 40 And ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God seven days. {boughs of goodly trees: Heb. fruit of, etc} 41 And ye shall keep it a feast unto the LORD seven days in the year. [It shall be] a statute for ever in your generations: ye shall celebrate it in the seventh month.

The primary activity during this feast is the building of booths or shelters (Sukkah). God commanded the Hebrews to build shelters to live in during the Feast as a reminder of how He cared for them during their wilderness wanderings and the fact that they were pilgrims passing through this life (Lev. 23:42-44).

Levi 23:42 (KJV) Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths: 43 That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I [am] the LORD your God. 44 And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the feasts of the LORD.

The shelters were loosely constructed and decorated and the roof covered with branches. This allowed the Hebrews to see through the roof into heaven and be reminded of an even greater rest and rejoicing when God's hoped for Messiah would rule on the earth. Thus, the Feast of Tabernacles symbolizes the Messianic age.

The Feast of Tabernacles has such universal significance in God's redemptive program, that He requires all nations to go to Jerusalem to celebrate this feast in the world to come (Zech. 14:16).

Zech. 14:16 And it shall come to pass, [that] every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.

I, as well as the untold multitudes in the various Messianic Ministries of the world, rejoice to see the many thousands of Gentile believers which are returning to the Biblical Roots of their faith in this day and time as a sign of the prophetic season in which we are living.

WHAT SHOULD THE BIBLICAL FESTIVALS MEAN TO THE CHRISTIAN?

I am aware that many teach that the Festivals were fulfilled in the life and ministry of the Jesus of the New Testament. Much of that understanding is taken from the Gospel of John and other passages in the New Testament. It is not my intent here to discuss such a matter, but when one undergoes a serious and intensive study of the New Testament and its "forged texts" as compared with the Hebrew Old Testament for accuracy one is saddened by the purposful gross misapplication of Old Testament passages, purposful mistranslation of Old Testament passages, and the hundreds of Old Testament passages purposfully taken out of context in the New Testament which are purposefully manipulated to provide "false proofs" that make it appear as if this New Testament Jesus fulfilled the Old Testament prophetic passages and the Biblical Feasts. I used to believe that as well from reading "only" the New Testament, but after years of serious study, where I compared line upon line of Hebrew Old Testament and true Masoretic text from the Jewish Scriptures and not the "altered" Christian Old Testaments with New Testament text, I came to see the error of my previous religious belief system. I had put my faith in the wrong document. Along with that I had the "Wrong Salvation Message" and the "Wrong Pattern of Worship". In light of such a study and the convincing results from it then the bottom line is that we cannot be certain that this Jesus of Rome's New Testament was the Messiah or even historically existed in the first place.

If you find it hard to believe what I just said, then I suggest you purchase only one book and be awakened to the serious flaws in the Christian Bible and the New Testament which has so severely been "added to and taken from" by the Roman Church over the centuries: Antisemitism In The New Testament by Lillian Freudmann. What a book! What a book! What a book! Read it and you will never be the same again and not sorry that you did and then you will not be able to question what I say or write for when you take her challenge and compare the Hebrew texts, line upon line, and precept upon precept with the later Greek and English Christian Old Testaments and New Testament you will see how doctrine after doctrine was altered and changed from the Hebrew; in so doing you will see "another Gospel" created, "another Pattern of Worship" was instituted by Rome, and "another Salvation Message" replaced the only one mankind had known since the beginning of time!!!

IN SUMMARY....GOD'S TRUE PLAN OF SALVATION

Having said that, then let me explain God's true plan of salvation as seen in the Biblical Festivals as taught in the Bible that a Jew like this Jesus used and believed in the first century...the Holy Tanakh:

- God makes His salvation available through faith as pictured in the physical salvation of Israel from Egypt at the Passover where God passed over those who responded to Him in faith and obedience. Works accompany such belief for if the Israelites had not responded accurately to their faith and failed to apply the blood to their door then they would likewise had died.
- Once we are saved at Passover one comes to Unleavend Bread as it is time to get the "leaven" (picture of sin in the Bible) or sin out of our lives. This is a sanctification whereby we make ourselves through repentance and obedience to the Word of God acceptable vessels for God's Spirit to inhabit. God's Spirit comes to such a one in the fulfillment of Pentecost.
- We then leave the first harvest season during the year and encounter the dry period as symbolized by the whole of life of mankind. Once we are saved, cleansed, and filled with God's Spirit, we are equipped to live out our lives where we must deal with the good and the bad as we encounter them in life. Sometimes life is hard as seen in the dry season following Pentecost; yet we have the Spirit of HaShem to comfort and sustain us.
- The next Festival is Rosh HaShannah which symbolizes our death at the end of our life. It is appointed for man to once die and then the judgment which is also a second part of Rosh HaShannah.
- After the resurrection at Rosh HaShannah and the judgment and reward for believers as well as non-believers, then one awaits final atonement at Yom Kippur.
- The only thing lacking is the eternal dwelling of the Spirit of God with mankind at the Festival of Tabernacles. This is the eternal Sabbath where God and man are one.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that not only did the above plan of YHVH'S salvation make sense, but Yeshua's name was not mentioned once?

This is only a summary to say the least of what the Biblical Festivals reveal...the Plan of Salvation of God. And if you noticed, this plan is very understandable to the Jew and non-Jew without trying to "force" Jesus to fulfill passages that yet remain unfulfilled. Sadly the Christian Church has not heard this message and yet it is the very core of the whole of the Bible a Jew like Jesus would have! So sad! I thank God above that He put into my heart the love for Him and the desire to study as I have to find these truths and be able to share them with other Christian brothers and sisters who are in Churches that teach them wrong Salvation Message of God let alone the wrong Pattern of Worship of God.

I tis these Biblical Festivals, correctly understood as given above, which will further enable the Jew and the non-Jew to become one in expectation of the coming of the Messiah.

UNDERSTANDING THE PRECESSION OF THE EQUINOXES AND ITS INFLUENCE UPON THE "JESUS STORY"

At a time in the Middle Paleolithic period, 50,000-40,000 B.C., humanity was apparently well on its way to developing the methods for systematic stellar observation that would eventually lead to scientific astronomy. Gerald , one of the first Egyptologists in modern times to realize that with the final eclipse of the incredibly old Land of Kam (ancient Egypt), that the world lost the "gnosis" and hidden deeper truths of the Divine, believed that such systematic stargazing was no younger than 52,000 years and may have been as old as 75,000 years. Certainly, the priests of Old Kam, Ancient Egypt, as represented by the historian Manetho (c. 250 B.C.), allowed for 36,725 years of continuous history tied to the celestial cycle known as the Great Year or Precession of the Equinoxes. In the second volume of Ancient Egypt, Massey devotes an entire chapter to this phenomenon and with good reason. Only by understanding the Great Year is it possible to fathom Nile Valley history from remote times. Let me go on record that the same thing can be said about the "Jesus Story" as you will see beyond any doubt if you have the courage to study the following articles.

The Precession of the Equinoxes, i.e., the Great Year, is determined by the earth's axial tilt of 23 1/2 degrees which causes the magnetic north pole to "wobble" in a slow circle around the north pole of the ecliptic True or Vertical North as the earth spins and revolves around the sun. This means the position of the equinoxes moves slightly every year against the background of stars located in the band of sky defined on earth by the Tropic of Cancer at 23 1/2 degrees north (of the equator) and the Tropic of Capricorn at 23 1/2 degrees south (of the equator). Because of this motion, the equinoxes slip backward twenty minutes each year in a circular fashion, taking 25,920 years to come back to their original position.

This phenomenon may have been detected as far back as 40,000 years ago, (possibly more), certainly no later than 13,000 years ago. The ancient stargazers of inner Africa divided this imaginary celestial circle into twelve arcs. Within each arc, they installed a constellation designed out of certain star patterns, and imbued each constellation with a name, story and symbol. Each of these twelve constellations became the Sign that thematically defined the span of 2,160 years, marking the time it took the equinoxes to transit backward through each arc. The 2,160-year subperiod is, therefore, the time span of an "age", of which there are twelve, in each Great Year, determined by this precession of the equinoxes. Since most of these signs were given animal forms, the later Greeks called this celestial band the "Zodiac," from the word zoion, meaning "animal." These signs were, (tracing backward from the opening of the Kamite year), the Lion (Atum), the Scarab (Khepera), the Twins (Set and Horus), the Bull (Ptah/Osiris), the Ram (Amen), the Fishes (In-tiu), the Water-Bringer (Menat the Nurse, then Hapi the Nile), the Goat (Mendes), the Archer (Set or Shu), the Scorpion (Serqet), the Scales (Maat) and the Virgin Mother (Neith or Isis).

As the spring equinox passed through a zodiacal sign, an age was inaugurated that was seen to symbolically, mythically and psychically dominate life on earth during a period of 2,160 years. Egyptian dynastic history began in the Age of the Bull (c. 4200 B.C.), making bull symbolism and the bull deities, Ptah and Osiris, the overriding symbols of that age. With the movement of the spring equinox into the Sign of the Ram (c. 2200 B.C.), the Ram-deity, Amen, and his city, Wast (Thebes), came to dominate the cultural life of Kemit. This was the age when the Hebrew people emerged on the stage of history and, as the Old Testament shows us, "ram," "lamb," and "shepherd" imagery permeated their symbolic life. With the movement of the spring equinox into the Age of the Fishes or Pisces (c. 68 B.C.), we find the people of the lower Nile Valley converting to the religion of the Piscean Age, Christianity, within the next two centuries.

There was yet another Great Year, tied to the first by the same movement of the magnetic pole, e.g., the polar Great Year with its consequent precession of the pole stars. This was also a (retrograde) circle around True North of 26,000 years encompassing seven circumpolar constellations. In this instance, we find that the polar star itself changes every 3,700 years, as the circumpolar constellations make their slow, circular, retrograde movement around True North. A little before 5300 B.C., the pole star, Aipha-Draconis, was in the constellation Draco the Dragon from whence derives the myth of the dragon that surrounds the tree carrying the golden apples or the golden fleece.

Around 1600 B.C., Aipha-Draconis moved from the (magnetic) polar position to be replaced by Ursa Minor, and the current north star, Polaris, is in that constellation. But in the ancient Egyptian planisphere, Ursa Minor was called the "Jackal," or "Dog," so that the current north pole star is really in the constellation of the Jackal. This is why Anubis became so important in the Kamite funerary ritual, why the coyote became so important in Native American cosmo-mythology, why the Pale Fox is so central to the Dogon world-system, indeed, why the dog proverbially became "man's best friend."

The last half of the second volume of Ancient Egypt was devoted to the Kamite sources of Christianity. Massey demonstrated the manner in which New Testament Christianity evolved directly out of the Osirian mysteries. Indeed, in its formative phases, Christianity was essentially Egyptian, and the people of Egypt were the first to convert en masse to Christianity because they saw it as the continuation of their own 10,000-year religious tradition. Osiris, in his resurrected form, was the mummified karast, sometimes keres, (i.e. he who was "anointed" and swathed in linen to be preserved and restored.) The term, kristos, is Greek and appears in Alexandria around 280 B.C., apparently derived from karast. As we know, kristos is the root of Christ the anointed son of God, as Osiris was the anointed divine man, both being the avatars of resurrection.

Even the birth of Christ on December 25th identifies him with the Egyptian deity, Horus, who is Osiris reborn, and is cosmically the sun beginning its ecliptic ascent toward its zenith at the summer solstice, June 23rd. Thus, it can be said that the sun was "born" from the depths or the "cave" of the winter solstice at 1:30 a.m. on the morning of December 25th. The resurrection of the Christ at the equinox, i.e. Easter, after the crucifixion derives from the intersecting or "crossification" of the ecliptic path of the sun with the celestial equator that defines the moment of the spring equinox. After this "crossification," the duration and power of the sun increases, so it is "reborn."

Answer for yourself: Was there ever a historical Jesus Christ? It is not easy to say. There is not a shred of legitimate historical evidence anywhere that the Jesus Story originated as the biography of a man named Jesus, and quite a lot of evidence that it did not. The basic plot of the Jesus Story, including the motif of a crucified savior, already existed in many other religions long prior to the alleged time of Jesus. What we do find if we study into these areas is that the "Jesus Story" is actually an allegory for what would naturally be the oldest and most important story humans would notice and write down, that of the annual passage of the seasons of the year as the Sun travels through the 12 Houses of the Zodiac.

This is a hard thing to hear let alone read; that is until you do the study to see the truth.

There are those who do find a "historical Jesus" however but not the one in the time frame depicted by the New Testament. To them this "Jesus" seems to have been a trained Essene initiate, who lived most of his life in Egypt's western desert, and was markedly influenced by the Egyptian mystery tradition. According to Talmudic sources, his surname was Pandera, meaning "panther," so that he was known as Joshua, son of the Panther. This may be a clue to his association with the Egyptian priesthood. In Egypt, as throughout Africa, the badge of priesthood was the panther skin. Esoterically, the priests were all panthers, the panther representing the sun-by-night; thus, Jesus by being, "the son of the Panther," according to the Talmudists, may well have been a "son" of the Egyptian priesthood (Massey, Ancient Egypt: The Light of the World).

Only serious study into these areas will reveal the "keys" necessary to find the ultimate truth behind the "Jesus Story".

Let us continue our study.

DID JESUS CHRIST HAVE TWO MOTHERS #2?

Before we get into the "meat" of the second article in this series a little background information and teaching is needed.

Ps 19:1-4 1 The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork. 2 Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. 3 There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. 4 Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What are the Heavens "declaring" to mankind? Since the word "declare" in Hebrew also means "rehearse" then was is being "replayed" above our heads? Are we listening? Have we heard? What is the firmament, or the "visible arch in the Sky" saying to mankind? What are the utterances, promises, and commands being spoken to mankind above our heard? What are the "words" being declared above our heads to which all the world are to hear? How can it be that there is no "speech" or "language" which this voice of the Heavens has not been heard when this whole idea seems so strange to us today?

Having declared that the heavens reveal God's glory, the Psalmist informs us that the heavens declare a message in a language that is understood by all peoples. That once was true but no more. Rome made sure of that in the 3rd through 5th centuries. These starry worlds, as such, do show forth His handiwork, but explain little about the glory of God. The "keys" necessary for interpretation of the Stars in the Heavens is lost today except to few who have safeguarded this arcane Spiritual Wisdom down through history and those like myself who happen to stumble upon it in copious study over the years.

Answer for yourself: How then can the stars be made to speak, in a language everyone can understand? Has it really happened in the history of mankind and we are not aware today for some reason? Can I find these "keys" to interpret what God is saying to mankind today?

Answer for yourself: What is this message that the Creator wrote in the Heavens regarding mankind and his Soul's salvation? Is there a message in the movement of the orbs of the Heavens which I have never heard? Is it possible that this message concerns the salvation of the Soul in mankind? With so many religions today and "paths to salvation" by today's world religions could it just be that the true and ORIGINAL SALVATION message to all mankind is written in the stars and I not know it? How do stars speak to us? Let me say as we advance our studies I have along the way shown the abundant evidence of the forgery of religious passages and Scriptures by Christianity along with many of its cardinal doctrines and dogmas over the twenty years to which I have devoted my life to such studies. When all of this is seen to the degree it has happened it saddens the best of us and sickens our hearts that what we are taught today is a jumbled mess of convoluted doctrines and dogmas "created" over the earliest centuries of the emerging Gentile Roman Christian Church. Of great new is that no man has been able to "forge" the Heavens and the stars and therefore the real "salvation message" that the Creator wrote in the Sky as discerned in the movements of the Sun and the orbs of Heaven. This message as been the "same" since Creation; only lacking on our part is the knowledge to discern the "keys" to its interpretation.

The message of the Sun and the Stars concerning mankind and his intended "salvation" is yet spoken today. It is a simple message given to all nations since time began but unfortunately a "silent" message that goes unheard by almost all mankind today since men have not been taught to "read the Book of God in the Sky". The answer to the above enigma is quite evident. Pictures speak in all dialects. They speak a universal language, to all peoples everywhere. Somewhere in the earliest ages of human existence the visible stars were once named. Certain ones were arranged into groups by someone thoroughly familiar with the laws of astronomy. Those names and groupings were at the same time included in certain figures, natural or imaginary, but intensely symbolic and significant. The picture above is a mosaic of the Zodiac discovered in the floor of a Jewish Synagogue. In fact archeology has located a bunch of these in Israel today. Imagine that; zodiac in the floor of Jewish synagogues. This should make you mind wonder as to why this was thought so important by Judaism to include it in the very architecture of their places of study and prayer. Today we know these grouping of stars as Constellations. Twelve constellations make up the Zodiac. These major star groupings form a belt which circle the sky close to the plane of the earth's orbit around the sun. Modern atlases list them in the following order: Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius and Pisces.

It is well known that the ancient races drew charts of these Zodiacal Signs, that ancient astrology was actually the father of astronomy. Astronomers sometimes denounce the Zodiac as unnatural and confusing, yet they have never been able to brush it aside or substitute anything better or more convenient in its place. The Signs of the Zodiac are a part of the common universal language of astronomical science. The Zodiac is found in religious faiths the world over. Astrology is based upon it. The Bible is replete with it. The Companion Bible tells us that all the verbs in the second half of Psalm 19 are of an astronomical nature.

Answer for yourself: Why would that be? What does this possibly indicate? When your studies advance in this area of study you will come to see that the written words of Scripture parallel the words written in the Heavens and which are preserved "message" hidden in the Signs of the Zodiac. But we are not quite ready for that right now but it won't be long.

When we begin to take notice of such things we should being to think that the Ancient Spiritual Masters understood that the Heavens are supposed to speak to mankind, to declare insights, reveal knowledge and that no language even exists that does not contain the voice of the heavens. The Ancient Spiritual Master of Egypt, for example, taught that we, mankind, can have a conversation with the Eternal Being of the Universe through the motions of the heavens. Think on that for a second! The "pattern" for mankind, his birth, life, death, and rebirth is taught by the Zodiac but you have most likely never heard it or saw in in the night sky when you look above in the night sky. But not only that the "pattern" for his spiritual development of his Soul is there as well. Not only on a "literal-physical" level did man learn his fate by living and dying but the Creator's intended "path" and "pattern" for his invisible Souls life-cycle in this physical plane of existence was written above his head in the nigh sky; man is without excuse. The Bible, when understood correctly, speaks clearly about the purpose of the Sun, moon and stars." The Bible begins to declare this message right in the beginning of the book. I open to Genesis 1:14-18.

And God said, let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs and for seasons and for days and years: And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth and to rule over the day and over the night and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good.

MAZZAROTH: THE TWELVE SIGNS OF THE ZODIAC

In Job, God asked his humble servant a series of questions involving the wondrous miracles performed. In Job 38:31-33, God asks, "Can you bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades or loose the bonds of Orion? Can you bring forth the Mazzaroth in their seasons? Or can you guide Arcturus with his sons? Do you know the principles of the heavens? Can you set their dominion over the earth?"

Answer for yourself: What is God telling Job?

God is proclaiming that there are principles in the heavens and that they govern life on earth (physical and spiritual). Furthermore, God is responsible for bringing forth the Mazzaroth in their seasons.

Answer for yourself: What is the "Mazzaroth"?

Most Bibles avoid translating this sacred word, Mazzaroth, because it literally means "the twelve signs of the zodiac" in Hebrew. So, God created the zodiac and brings each of the 12 signs or Houses of the Zodiac and their "message" forth in their rightful seasons. This zodiac is like a "book" in the Sky whose pages turn "monthly". The "message of the Zodiac" repeats yearly; thus the "rehearsal" we saw above. The "message of God" is being repeated monthly and yearly since the beginning of time. God goes on to explain to Job that the heavenly constellations, like the Pleiades and Orion, have influences that can be unleashed upon the created order.

We don't have to be afraid of signs from the heavens; especially when we learn that God speaks through these signs of the Zodiac to you and me and to all mankind.

In Jeremiah 10:2 it says, "…do not be dismayed by signs from heaven." We need to be open to the realization of messages in the Heavens. The problem is that few of us possess the Ancient "keys" to understand God's "blackboard" in the Sky and the messages He writes upon it and declares to all mankind.

Answer for yourself: What types of messages are we to learn from the Sky? Well, there are many. I could begin with the spiritual message behind the Equinoxes and Solstices, the true salvation message of God hidden in the Biblical Festivals, but that is not our focus right now. Understand that these Equinoxes and Solstices, the seasons mentioned in Genesis above, are the foundation stones for almost all world religions today but our focus is on one in this article. Let me elaborate. We are concerned in these articles with the two births of mankind; in particular the Descent of the Soul, the Christ into matter as the mediator between man and God.

The Hebrew word for "light" used when God says, "The sun, moon and stars were created for giving light on the earth," is "aur". The Hebrew writers were well versed in the sacred language of archetypes. I highly recommend that you stop right now and read the article on "archetypes" and come to fully understand the concept for this is what we are dealing with in the Heavens "speaking to us". The Ancients, familiar with the idea of "archetypes", were able to contemplate Divine Heavenly Truth through symbol as each letter of their alphabet held an archetypal meaning:

- "Aleph", the beginning letter of aur symbolizes unthinkable vibration, the sacred spirit of life, infinite potential and eternal possibility.
- "Vav", the middle letter, symbolizes the process of divine fertilization emanating from the creative void.
- "Raysh", the final letter, symbolizes the hidden movement of cosmic possibility as creation.

Answer for yourself: What is being said here?

Hidden in the letters of Hebrew "light" we discover its deeper meaning, the infinite potential of the sacred Spirit fertilizing creation. Again we see that this teaches us that God humbled himself when He limited and confined Himself to matter through the agency of His Christ:

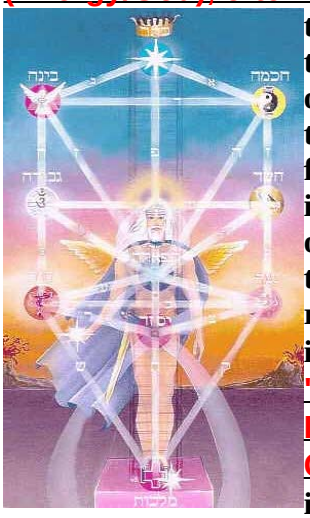
Phil 2:5-7 5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: (KJV)

Notice the word "likeness".

Strong's Concordance:



3667 homoioma (hom-oy'-o-mah); from 3666; a form; abstractly, resemblance: KJV-- made like to, likeness, shape, similitude.

In this verse we find the core of all religious truth; that all things consist of God in one way or the other.

Speaking of the "Father God"

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him (God-Father) were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

All things that exist, visible and invisible are "manifestations" of God; nothing exists that is not fully God in one way or the other. The first line of the Bible says, "In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth." When you break it down into archetypal Hebrew it means the first fruits of the spirit aspiring to express eternity through a fountain of divine wisdom were the creation of the celestial dimensions and the manifest world. Now that casts a whole new light on Biblical translation. The Hebrew word for astrologer is "ashaph" which breaks down to the spirit communicates through the sacred flames. This "sacred flame" (Energy/God), often called a "spark" by the Ancients found a home in physical matter; in particular as the Soul (Divine Consciousness) in the flesh of mankind. Egyptian "Gnosticism", and even the Jewish Kabbalah teaches that a Divine Spark of Celestial Energy (God) has fallen into our physical world or matter. This Divine Spark of Cosmic Intelligent Energy descended the ladder of Heaven into matter. For our purposes we focus on the Soul and its descent from the invisible realm to the visible realm in mankind where it is entrapped in matter; ie., the flesh of mankind. Once birthed in it new home of "flesh" the Ancients the world over taught that this Soul is now "dead" while the flesh of mankind lives. Consequently the Soul must be awakened by a divine aspect or counterpart of the self so that it can be raised and reintegrated with the divine sphere. These "Divine Sparks" become enmeshed in the lower worlds and within them is the desire to return to the Infinite God. These "sparks are raised back to God when humanity conforms its behavior to the Divine Laws of God operating the Cosmos and adheres to the Commandments of God and when individuals discover the "roots" of their own Souls. Thus the awesome importance of the 42 Negative Confessions of Egyptian Religion and the Torah of Judaism. They are the same and it is from Egypt that Moses will learn of these mitzvoth given to all mankind by the Creator. Sadly, my birth religion, Christianity, prides itself on not being under these "Laws".

Rom 10:4 4 For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. (KJV)

Rom 6:14 14 For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace. (KJV)

Now past this short introduction we continue to look at these "two births" of mankind that is taught in the Heavens and in the Constellations Virgo and Pisces. We continue from the first article in this series in which we saw that the Ancients taught that mankind had two births, a "natural" birth and a "spiritual" birth and that these were taught in the message declared by the Constellations Virgo and Pisces. We saw that the Ancient Spiritual Masters understood that the path of the Sun through the Houses of Virgo and Pisces was speaking and declaring to mankind, as Psalm 19 said, of the necessity of mankind's two births; one natural birth and one Spiritual birth. We saw how this was connected with the idea that man "must be born again"; a birth of "water" (the Water Mother of Virgo) and a birth of "fire" (the "Fish Mother" of Pisces). We saw in the earlier article that the Descent of God into matter was described by the Heavens (the Constellation Virgo) as the natural birth of God (in particlular...mankind) in the watery womb of matter. We saw likewise in the earlier article that God also descended into matter in the form of Heavenly fire. We saw that this was understood by the Ancients as the Descent of the Soul, the Karest/Christ come to tabernacle in the flesh of mankind. We saw that it is this second birth, the spiritual birth of mankind, was declared by the Constellation of Pisces and it is in this "being born again" where we find the awakening of "the Christ" within mankind. This refers to the awakening of Christ Consciousness and the ascent of the Christ Nature in oneself in order that the Christ Consciousness awakened within mankind can operate in through a physical body.

The Ancient Sages taught that this "Divine Spark", in the guise of individual men, is unaware of its true origins, but nevertheless possesses an unconscious desire to return to its divine home. The Divine Spark thereby constitutes the individual's essential but forgotten reality. The Gnostics held that the material, empirical, human being is essentially an illusion that envelops, indeed imprisons, the inner, true self. It is only by acquiring knowledge or "memory" (in the Platonic sense of anamnesis) of this inner self that the Gnostic devotee can free himself from this hostile world and achieve ultimate spiritual fulfillment and enlightenment of his true condition and true salvation. While the Kabbalists held a similar view regarding the "sparks," their Jewish commitment to the world's essential goodness led them to transform the "sparks doctrine" into a vehicle for world-redemption. For the Gnostics, knowledge (gnosis) is not achieved through a purely cognitive procedure. Gnostic knowledge is first and foremost knowledge of the heart; it is an experience of spiritual regeneration, of immediate salvation. It is in essence, the awakening of the long-dormant inner, divine self. Meditation, debate, and reflection are all useful in preparing the intellect, but the intervention of a divine luminous power creating a profound emotional experience is necessary to create the image of the "essential man" which is of the same essence as the divine world. This awakening occurs, according to the Kabbalists, only through a person's attaining a deep, abiding, emotional/spiritual knowledge of his true self, and is achievable only when an "arousal from above" compliments man's own "arousal from below."

What I have just described to you is mankind's necessity of "two births" which the Ancients came to see and understand by looking intently at the movement of God's Sun through the Zodiac. They heard the message of the Heavens. The plan for mankind's salvation was first seen and understood from examining the movement of God's Energy, the Sun, a symbol for God as it moved through God's own Heavens. All religions begin with Astrotheology. Every Bible and Holy Book has its beginning and origin in Astronomy and Astrology. That may shock the reader but grasp the importance of the fact that all theology in the beginning of the human race and its intelligent ascent as a species began by interpreting the Heavens; the abode of God. The stars were understood as speaking to man a "Heavenly Message" as we learned above from Psalm 19. Concerning the Soul in mankind the Ancient Spiritual Sages came to understand that mankind needed to have two births that necessitated 2 mothers and they saw this pictured for them by the Sun being born in Virgo and Pisces as described in the first article. Mankind, aided by the indwelling Christ, the illuminator within, is to have two births and two mothers. This is what the Gnostics taught as well; both Jewish and Gentile Gnostics.

Answer for yourself: Seeing this portrayed in the Heavens and in the Zodiac what should we be thinking might possibly be true?

The Zodiac was mankind's first Bible to teach him about the Descent of the Soul into living mankind and the Divine plan and "pattern" for its Spiritual Maturation in the flesh of mankind. Once the reader comes to see and fully understand this "Heavenly message" then all aberrant world religions and their alternate "salvation messages" are easily seen as nothing more than deviant teachings that have strayed from God true message of mankind's salvation written in the stars. Once this "Divine Message" is both declared and understood from Heaven then we can beat our swords into plowshares and be thankful that there is no longer room for religious bickering, wars, and bloodshed between Christianity, Judaism, and Islam about "who is right". Only God is right and the Heavens have spoken the "same theology" since the beginning of time. Of these 3 religions the "enlightened reader" will come to see that Judaism is the more correct religion of the 3 and it has a lot in common today with its parent religion; that of course being Egyptian Religion. The "path of the Soul" birth into matter, its life and maturation, its release at the body's death, and its rebirth was all transcribed by the Creator in the Sky and the Ancient sages of antiquity came to see this "pattern" in the Sky. It is beyond question that the great ancient design of the zodiac is a wondrously conceived chart aimed to depict the structure of the Logos, "the Christ", the pattern or creative evolution, the essential constitution of the Universe and the course of the current of life in the Cosmos, and by analogy in man the microcosmic replica of the macrocosm.

In short, the round of the zodiac, the famous horoscope of twelve signs, exist above us as a omni-directional, cinema-like, projection of the inherent twelve-fold, plastic matrix that sub-divides that organic computer referred to as the "Collective Consciousness." As the twelve disciples of Jesus represent aspects of his own consciousness, so do the twelve celestial signs of the zodiac, likewise, represent the twelve archetypal facets of our own being.

As we all know science began with the stars, and mankind discovered in them the dominants of the unconscious, the "gods," as well as the curious psychological qualities of the Zodiac: a complete projected theory of human character – Carl Jung

Almost infinite nuances of significance have been adumbrated in those twelve signs or houses of the zodiac and the thirty-six other constellations, as well as in the pictorializations which ancient wisdom and an ingenuity born of a wise understanding of the deeper truth of life conceived and drew around those star clusters in the heavens. The uranograph, or chart of the skies, was incontestably the first of all Bibles, pictorially edited. Not quite simply and patently, but still most luminously for the initiated who held the hidden "keys" to the symbolic lexicon of ancient writing, it can be affirmed that all Bibles are but amplifications and elaborations of the original volume of ideography that was first written on the open slate of the sky, then charted in the zodiac and the planispheres carved on the ceilings of ancient temples and later transferred to earth and inscribed in scrolls, tablets and parchments.

Commonly known as the Zodiac of Dendera, the picture is but one example from among many of Egyptian Zodiacs; the Dendera Zodiac is found on the Temple Roof at Dendera. Man, adjured the old Scriptures, was to fashion his new body of spiritual glory "after the pattern for his Spiritual Development as taught from the heavens," the frame of the heavenly or zodiacal man, the primal Adam Kadmon. And a cryptic graph of the nature and history of this celestial Personage was sketched by the enlightened Sages in the configurated star groups. The Adam Kadmon is the symbol of Primordial Man, the first being to emerge with the creation of the cosmos is common to a number of religious and philosophical traditions. Many Ancient Religions describe this spiritual concept as the primal man who is composed of the very elements which were to become the world. This "gigantic divine being" is both infinitely far and and at the same time deposited near the innermost recesses of the human heart. Indeed, in many of these Ancient Religious traditions this the Primordial Man is identified both with the entire Universe and the Soul or essence of all things. Simply said mankind requires a "second birth" as taught by the Constellation Pisces in order that he can obtain the goal of his earthly carnation; that being his evolution into "the Christ" incarnated in matter (flesh). We, as human kind are to live out the stories we read of the nation's Christs and for the Christian the "Jesus Story " is to be our living experience in this physical realm in which we temporarily inhabit.

Some more thoughts on the Zodiac are warranted. The word "zodiac" comes from the Greek word "zodion", meaning a small animal zootype, or living symbol of the microcosmic life of man, who is indeed made in the image and likeness of the Divine Man pictured in the cosmic heavens as seen above. Man's little physical body is a miniature copy of the universal body of God; for after all we are made in the "image of this God". It stretches our minds to grasp the concept that the eternal frame of cosmic Man, the goal of our fleshly existence, was outlined in the scroll of the skies, the solar systems and galaxies being symbolic representation of the very living cell clusters in his immeasurable organism. Wow.

Interestingly, a similar image is found in Plutarch who relates that the entirety of the heavens is arranged in the form of a macroanthropos, a colossal human being who is conceived as a model for the human world.

The Primordial Man is also an important symbol in Gnosticism. The Gnostics inferred from the verse in Genesis "Let us make man in our own image" that the first earthly man was created on the model of a cosmic Adam on high. In the Nag Hammadi text, the Apocryphon of John, we learn that this anthropos is the first creation of "knowledge and Perfect Intellect" and the first luminary of the heavens. This Anthropos becomes the heavenly model through which the demiurge forges an earthly Adam (mankind).

In the Kabbalah, the Primordial Man is spoken of as Adam Kadmon, and, in the Lurianic Kabbalah this symbol becomes a pivotal notion linking God, Man, and the World. Adam Kadmon, as the first being to emerge from the infinite Godhead, Ein-sof, is essentially indistinguishable from the deity, yet at the same time his body is said to both emanate and constitute the world. Man, having been created in God's image, is said by the Kabbalists to be comprised of the very same cosmic elements, the Sefirot, which comprise the "body" of Adam Kadmon. The symbol of Adam Kadmon expresses the idea that the cosmos itself has both a soul and body very much like that of man.

In 1928, Israeli farmers in Beth Alpha, located at the base of Mount Gilboa in the Valley of Jezreel, were digging an irrigation ditch when they unearthed a brightly colored mosaic chip. A Hebrew inscription on the piece was cause for consultation with Professor Eliezer Sukenik of the Hebrew University, who immediately ordered an archaeological dig. This led to the discovery of the remains of a fifth century synagogue's pillars and walls. The greatest surprise came when they unearthed an almost completely intact zodiac mosaic floor inside the synagogue. The elegant floor of warmly colored stones contains an instantly recognizable image of the twelve signs. The Greek Sun god Helios is the largest image, appearing in the center of the horoscope wheel. He's crowned and is shown inside his chariot surrounded by stars and a crescent Moon. Four horses appear with him, and his chariot has multi-colored wheels. Examples of the twelve zodiac signs with Helios in his sun chariot surrounded by angels have been discovered in seven ancient synagogues in Israel. This should make us wonder at what lies at the very heart of Biblical Judaism. We need only ask Moses.

Moses (c.1200-1100 B.C.), as Pharaoh's adopted son, was also an astrologer. He correlated the attributes of the twelve signs to the twelve tribes of Israel, then took the people from the tabernacle in the wilderness on their pilgrimage, lined up by zodiacal order. Rabbinical tradition asserts that the signs of the zodiac have represented the twelve tribes since antiquity. Sets of twelve from the Bible are obvious candidates for linkage; these include the Hebrew tribes, the twelve Prophets and the twelve Apostles. We see the influence of the Zodiac in Moses' life where he arranged the Israelites around the Ark in their encampment, not only circularly but in sets of three with regard to compass direction. Ancient gods also tend to have existed in sets of twelve and their several personal attributes often find a nice fit in the zodiac.

Answer for yourself: Seeing that the Jews and Judaism connected the Zodiac with their religion as did Ancient Egypt and other nations then is it not evident that these Ancient Spiritual people understood that the Cosmos, the Zodiac, and the Stars had a Spiritual message for mankind? It should would appear so.

Having understood the above introduction to the second article then let us continue to examine Biblical passages in light of this new found knowledge and see just what we can find lurking behind the traditional "literal-historical" interpretation of the New Testament.

Remembering the Constellations Virgo and Pisces (symbolic of mankind's two births), we find an immediate link between the symbol of bread in connection with both Virgo and Pisces. Pisces is the house of the Fishes by name (2 fishes), but it is not commonly known that Virgo in astrological symbology was the house of Bread. This is indicated by several items of ancient typology. Many centuries ago in the Precession of the Equinoxes, the end of the year was marked by the position of the great Dog-Star Sirius, mighty celestial symbol of the divinity in man.

Answer for yourself: So what did the helical rising of the Dog-Star Sirius symbolize? It symbolized the increasing of consciousness from one reality or frequency - to another (natural to spiritual). Could we see in this, the helical rising of Sothis, Sirius, in Egypt just prior to the flooding of the Nile the very symbol and image of mankind's "second birth" and "second illumination" of mankind and his Soul? Is Sirius, the herald star of the Nile's annual innudation and the virtual salvation of Egypt a spiritual symbol for mankind's salvation tied to his spiritual awakening of his Soul, and his "second birth"? Is this the same thought as the "the Christ being formed in you" which Paul spoke? Yes. Remember, first comes the "natural" then the "spiritual". God is again speaking from heaven about mankind's salvation.

Unknown to most Christians is the almost endless intimations of vital significance hidden in the Constellations and their configurations that carry with them the esoteric import of the Scriptures we read in our Bibles. Equally unknown to most Christians is the methodology of the archaic science which is in truth the "lost key to the Scriptures". What we find when we study is the fact that Biblical theology rests more completely on Astrological Symbology than has been discerned in any age since the ancient day. Acquisition of these "lost keys" to Scriptural interpretation is necessary if one hopes to arrive at the proper interpretation of the Scriptures they read and in so doing obtain their true meaning. This is crucial when reading the New Testament as it is basically Astrological symbology whereby Divine Metaphysical Truths are personified and presented in anthropomorphic schemes to the reader. Thus we have a gold mine behind our "Jesus Story" and we never know it. Now we have to pay close attention. Precisely at midnight of December 24, the Winter Solstice, Sirius stood on the meridian line from the zenith to Egypt.

Answer for yourself: Why is this important? In and of itself it is not. But watch this.

At the same moment there arose on the eastern horizon the constellation of the Virgin (Virgo), bearing in her left arm the Christ child, symbol of the Christhood coming to function in man, symbolized by the great star Spica (Latin, a head, or "spike" of wheat), symbol of that same divinity coming as celestial food for man. In Virgo the soul and the body are blended and of supreme importance to each other; the mother protects the germ of the Christ life; matter guards, cherishes and nurtures the hidden soul until its awakening in the flesh of mankind (Pisces).

"The choice of this particular date is cosmic in its implications, and not unwittingly, we can be sure, did the wise men of earlier times make these momentous decisions. Annie Besant tells us that: "He (the Christ) is always born spiritually at the winter solstice, after the shortest day in the year, at the midnight of the 24th December when the sign Virgo is rising above the horizon; born as this Sign is rising, he is born always of a virgin, and she remains a virgin after she has given birth to her Sun-child as the celestial Virgo remains unchanged and unsullied when the Sun comes forth from her in the Heavens. Weak, feeble as an infant is he, born when the days are shortest and the nights are longest..." (Annie Besant, Esoteric Christianity, p. 157).

"At the time of the birth of Christ, Sirius, the Star in the East, was on the meridian line, Orion, called "The Three Kings" by oriental astronomers, was in proximity; therefore the constellation Virgo, the Virgin, was rising in the east, and the line of the ecliptic, of the equator and of the horizon all met in that constellation. It is interesting also to note that the brightest and largest star in the constellation Virgo is called Spica; it is to be found in the "ear of corn" (sign of fertility) which the Virgin holds. Bethlehem means the "house of bread," and there is therefore an obvious connection between these two words. This constellation is also composed of three stars in the shape of a cup. This is the true Holy Grail, that which contains the life blood, the repository of the sacred and the holy, and that which conceals divinity. These are astronomical facts. The interpretation of the symbolism attached from ancient days to these constellations is as old as religion itself. Whence came the signs, and how the meanings and symbols associated with them came into being, is lost in the night of time. They have existed in men's minds and thoughts and writings for thousands of years, and are our joint heritage today. The ancient zodiac of Denderah (antedating Christianity by several thousand years) is ample proof of this. In the sun's journey around the zodiac, this "Man of the Heavens" eventually arrives at Pisces; this sign is exactly opposite the sign Virgo, and is the sign of all world Saviors. We have already seen that the age of Christianity is the Piscean Age, and Christ came to the Holy Land when our sun transited into that sign. Therefore that which was started and had its being in Virgo (the birth of the Christ Child) is consummated in Pisces when that Christ Child, having attained maturity, comes forth as the world Savior" (Alice Bailey, Bethlehem to Calvary, p. 64).

Of course Alice Bailey speaks not of a supposed "literal-historical" Jesus Christ in Israel in the first century; rather, she speaks of the awakening of "the Christ" in the whole of mankind whereby the whole human race can assume its rightful position as "saviors" of the world in which we have been born.

"One other astronomical fact is of interest in this connection. Closely associated with the constellation Virgo, and to be found in the same section of the Heavens, are three other constellations, and in these three there is portrayed for us symbolically the story of the Child which shall be born, suffer and die and come again. There is the group of stars called Coma Berenice, the Woman with the Child. There is Centaurus, the Centaur, and Boötes (the shepherd), whose name in the Hebrew language means the "Coming One."

Answer for yourself: What's coming? Could the Constellation Bootes be a picture and symbol indicative of the "coming of the Christ" and his Descent into water mother, the cosmic womb of matter? Could this "change of consciousness" intended for all mankind which has experienced only a "natural birth" as symbolized as we saw in the rising of Sirius and its helical rising at the same time as Virgo connected, all in one message, teaches mankind that "the Christ" is to descend into the water mother, to descend into the womb of matter where he can experience his awakening in the hearts of mankind? Could this be a prophecy fulfilled that lies behind the allegory of the "fish mother" of Pisces? Could the Constellation of Bootes be teaching us that into the womb of the Cosmos, into the water mother Virgo, into the womb of natural birth comes the Sun (personified as the Son/Soul/Christ) which is symbolic of the Energy of the Cosmos (the Divine Spark in mankind)? Is this Energy of the Cosmos understood as the "Divine Spark" in the form of "the Soul/the Christ" who descends into all matter and the flesh of mankind? Is this the Descent of the Soul into the animal kingdom thus separating man from animal due to this higher consciousness? I think it is getting obvious by now.

Answer for yourself: Why a cenatur? What has a centaur have to do with "the Christ" and his coming? The centaur, ever the symbol of humanity in the ancient mythologies, reminds that man is an animal, plus a god, and therefore a human being with dual natures. We have before us a perfect example of what happens when "the Christ" descends into matter; the animal in which "the Christ" descends is endowed with a higher consciousness than the normal animal kingdom whereby mankind is both "animal" and now "Divine". Alice Bailey states: "Then He Who shall come looms over them all, over-shadowing them, pointing to the fulfillment which shall come through birth and human incarnation. Truly the picture book of the heavens holds eternal truth for those who have eyes to see and the intuition developed rightly to interpret. Prophecy is not confined to the Bible, but has ever been held before men's eyes in the vault of heaven" (Alice Bailey, From Bethlehem to Calvary, chapter 2).

Answer for yourself: What is the Constellations and the Stars teaching man in their message to mankind? Have you heard it?

Simply man is born "naturally" needing a "second birth". It is intended for the whole of mankind to travel from Virgo to Pisces. Man is born slightly higher than animals and has an animal nature. The Ancients taught that there is a mineral kingdom, a vegetable kingdom, and an animal kingdom. What separated man from animals is the Descent of the Soul that gives man his intellect. Thus we see that a centaur is a fitting example in the Heavens to teach mankind that although an animal the Descent of the Soul lifts him above the animal kingdom and he is then both "natural" and "Divine".

Let us reexamine Virgo for a second. It must ever be remembered that the Gospels of John states:

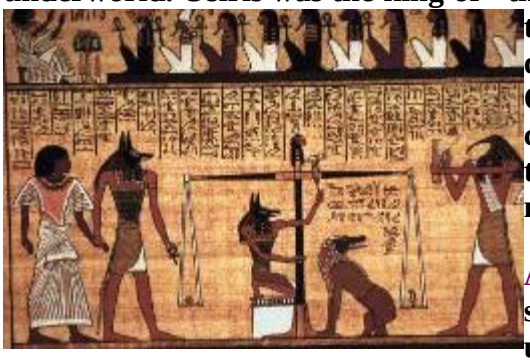
John 6:58 58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever. (KJV)

So typology represented "the Christ", seen as Virgo holding "celestial wheat", as coming in the form of the bread from Heaven, the babe Christ, and as food for man in the form of Heavenly wheat. John speaks of the Christ principles being "food" for mankind. Then we see in the Gospels that Jesus broke a loaf into fragments and gave to his disciples, saying that it was his body, broken for them. God feeds the natural man with His Christ and its evolution within the flesh of mankind.

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What did we just see?

We now have Virgo established as the HOUSE of Bread and Pisces as the HOUSE of Fish. But are not done for we are yet missing important information. God is feeding mankind the manna from Heaven through His Christ in us.



Answer for yourself: What is hidden behind the ideas of "Houses" in relation to the Signs of the Zodiac?

They are, as at first, the two states of matter (invisible - undifferentiated potential; visible - realized potential, physical existence) but now we need to notice the immediate reference to the life of man on earth. These "two houses" are in the final stage of the meaning man's body itself, which consists of matter in both its invisible and its visible forms. For man has a natural body (Virgo - natural birth) and a spiritual body (Pisces - spiritual birth). Man's body itself houses the two mothers. The body is this double house of both Bread and of Fish.

And the next parallel is seen when it is considered that this physical body is for the Soul the HOUSE of death and in its regenerative phase, the HOUSE of rebirth. It is the house into which the Spirit descends to its partial obscuration in the darkness of the grave of matter, into the night of death, or incarnation, out of which it is to arise in a new birth or resurrection (second birth, "born again" on the opposite side of the cycle).

Answer for yourself: Why is the Egyptian Bible called "the Book of the Dead"? How can "dead people" read it? Does it not appear to you that people need to read their Bibles while they are "alive"? How could a book whose title read The Coming Forth By Day be at the same time named the Book of the Dead?

Something is amiss here. Yet the book dealt mainly with the great trial of the soul of the deceased in the Hall of Judgment, the Hall of Osiris; and Osiris was the Lord of Amenta, the realm of the dead, the dark underworld. Osiris was the king of "those in their graves". The Book of the Dead is a book about the typical Christian judgment, enacted in the world of Souls following the demise of the body. Yet its original title was The Day of Manifestation. One knew that the Greeks had derived most of their profoundest conceptions from the Egyptians. One has to wonder if the figurative use of the word "death" in the title Book of the Dead is based on some hidden meaning found in the pages of the Book of the Dead. It is.

Answer for yourself: Could it be possible that all mediaeval and modern scholarship had missed the fundamental meaning of the word "death" as used in Scriptures by failure to catch some hidden Ancient symbolism? What an understatement. Could it be that some mighty truth lurked undiscovered under the metaphor of the word "death"?

What we find upon our studies is that Christianity has totally misunderstood their Scriptures and led untold billions astray from Divine Truth. Not only has Christianity totally misunderstood its own Christ, atonement, Law, the salvation message of God but almost unbelievably Christianity has lost the "keys" necessary to correctly interpret the word "death" as it applies to the Soul in their own Scriptures. With overwhelming certainty had come the perception that when the ancient writers of sacred books of religion spoke of "death" they referred to our present life on earth in these bodies of flesh! When the Soul descended into matter it was said to "have died". This is the often mistunderstood doctrine of the "crucifixion of Christ"; not on a old rugged tree but in dense matter. And when these Ancient Spiritual Masters spoke of "the dead", they again referred to us, here and now, alive as we seem to be!

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Obviously those to whom Paul was speaking were alive. There we have our answer right before us all the time. And by the terms grave, tomb, coffin, sepulchre, mummy-case, out of which we would be resurrected they meant these living bodies of ours! In the Ancient Divine Wisdom and theology, "to die" was for the Soul to incarnate in bodies on earth. If you take a second to reflect it can be found that the two words "womb" and "tomb" are from the same stem and convey the same connotation. Baptism in water is likened to a "new birth" because we enter into a "watery tomb" where human life, in the natural sense, cannot survive. He who enters life by way of the womb has entered the tomb of living death. In the eye of the Ancient Spiritual sages, death was to live the kind of life in the flesh that we are living here. In reality, as calm reflection then for the first time clearly indicated, for the soul there is no such thing as death, in the sense of total destruction, for the soul is indestructible. For if death could be at any time only a matter of relative intensity or degree of life, and this would be dependent upon the character and materiality of the embodiment in which it might find itself functioning at different stages of its growth. And one saw then that our life here fitly deserved the designation of death because it was the most sluggish, inert and restricted sphere of existence in which the Soul was ever called upon to become embodied and imprisoned. This type of life was the profoundest "death" the Soul was ever subjected to, as an individual entity! It could go no lower, be restricted no more completely, than it was here in the flesh of mankind. It should come to you as an astonishing realization in this connection, that we could never be any more "dead" than we are now in our mortal habitat. We are truly in the very jaws of "death", in the "valley of the shadow of death", and we are therefore the "dead" of all the ancient philosophical books. Thus the Egyptian Bible was commonly called "the Book of the Dead" as it prepared living Souls for their release from this body of death.

Answer for yourself: Is it possible that all religions have been designed as instruction and guidance for "those in their graves" of earth-life, and all its sacred books were meant to be a light for us, "the dead", in the dark underworld of Hades, Sheol, Amenta (which refers to the arena we live while alive in the flesh)? But long ago was lost the knowledge that such instruction was for us, that we were "the dead" for whom all religious systems were devised, and for whose resurrection out of the tomb of the physical body the whole end and aim of religion was conceived.

Answer for yourself: Since Christianity has mistakenly interpreted the word "death" then does this mean that Christianity's teaching of a physical bodily resurrection is incorrect as well? Yes.

The first consequence of such a tragic rejection of Ancient Egyptian Religion and Ancient Spiritual Wisdom connected to the true meaning of the word "death" as used in Ancient Spiritual writings and teachings for thousands of years is the certainty that the often mentioned "resurrection" in the New Testament could not signify the mere raising of decaying physical bodies from cemeteries!

Answer for yourself: What then is the resurrection to which we should look?

The "true resurrection" refers to the re-arising of the buried Soul from out its physical prison, its rending at last of the fleshly veil of the temple, its bursting the bars of death in the body, which was the only grave, sepulchre, tomb or sarcophagus that the wise Ancients ever had in view in the proclamation of their great Easter message!

Answer for yourself: What should we see here? The undeniable fact that the whole framework of Divine, Religious Revelation given to mankind by the Creator, spoken from the Heavens above by the Sun, stars, and Constellations, the abode of God, from the beginning of mankind's existence is to be constructed of spiritual, not of historical or "literal-physical" interpretation as Christianity has done with its "literalization" of "the Christ". This "re-arising" of the Soul is prefigured in its "awakening" while imprisoned in this body of death whereby it can then exert its Heavenly influence to sanctify the animal nature of our bodies. This is the purpose of "the Christ" and His "Descent into matter, the flesh of mankind". Such awakening is prophetic of the final awakening of the Soul and its release from "the dead"; its entrapment in the flesh of mankind.

The Gospel narrative was, as taught from the beginning of time and as seen in the Sky and the Heavens, nothing more than a series of Spiritual Allegories taken from the personification of the path of the Sun through the Houses of the Zodiac as Spiritual sages followed and interpreted the path of the Sun (symbolic for the Intelligent Energy of the Universe we call God). This path of the Sun, the symbol for God, as it moves through the Heavens, when interpreted correctly, is to be indicative of a mystical understanding of the synonymous path, "pattern", and direction for the Soul's maturation and development while it resides in this "matter/body of death"! The Sun and the Cosmos was designed by the Creator to teach mankind of his Soul and in so doing depicts the nature of our own personal soul-life, the history of everyman's experience in the world of flesh and matter, or what just so happens to be the "realm of the dead". Not a single item of Ancient Philosophy, Ancient Spiritual Wisdom, not a statement anywhere in Ancient Scriptures or Texts, controverts this conclusion in the least degree; whereas every new bit of testimony fortified verifies this Metaphysical truth and its undeniably. This is the hidden revelation that Rome stole from the world for within it is the intended righteous conduct of the Soul and the sanctification of the temple of the Soul, the fleshy body. Rome lived by a philosophy that is contradicted by the very Sun they worshipped; that is "might makes right". The message of the stars refutes this and in light of such Ancient Wisdom those who possess it can stand the assault of any theologian or scholar who tries to challenge or refute it. This understanding of "the Soul" and the path for its spiritual maturation existed in the world until the rise of the Mighty Roman Empire in the 3rd through the 5th century. After burning down the libraries of the world and murdering millions of people who trusted in this spiritual knowledge given mankind in the beginning of its existence the earth was plunged into darkness the depths of which is yet felt today.

A significant passage from the Book of the Dead recites: "Who cometh forth from the dusk, and whose birth is in the house of death"--referring to the incarnating Soul. In a spiritual sense the soul "dies" on entering the body in incarnation, but has a new birth in it as it later awakens "spiritually" and even later "resurrects" from the body at its demise. The body is therefore the house of the Soul's death and rebirth, or the place of the Soul's/Christ's crucifixion and resurrection. This is not "literal" unless you experience it in your life because God never intended it to be limited to only one person as Rome would have us believe. And the Egyptians had a name for the body as the point of these transformations, which carry the central meaning of all theologies. This name now rises out of the dim mists of ancient Egyptian books to enlighten all modern Bible comprehension. This city of the body, where the sun of soul sank to its death on the cross of matter, to re-arise in a new birth, was called the city of the sun, or in Greek, Heliopolis, but in the Egyptian, ANU.

There is a world of revelation behind the Egyptian word "ANU" that we save for the last article in this series.

DID JESUS CHRIST HAVE TWO MOTHERS #3?

We ended the second article in this series with a "bang" when exposing how Christianity has misunderstood their own Scriptures over 1,800 years at present and how it has affected a multitude of cherished Christian doctrines passed off onto the world as supposedly necessary for the salvation of mankind. We looked at how Christianity has misunderstood the words "death" and "resurrection" in their own holy book. We explained why Egypt called its own Bible "the Book of the Dead". All of this mind you is tied to the "two births of mankind" and the operation of "the Christ" and his incarnation in the flesh of mankind. We ended with the following paragraph which is repeated here as a link between article 2 and 3.

A significant passage from the Book of the Dead recites: "Who cometh forth from the dusk, and whose birth is in the house of death"--referring to the incarnating Soul. In a spiritual sense the Soul "dies" on entering the body in incarnation, but has a new birth in it as it later resurrects from it at the demise of the body. The body is therefore the house of his death and rebirth, or the place of the Soul's/Christ's crucifixion and resurrection. later these ideas will be "literalized", "carnalized", and "historicized" in transforming the "Christ within" into an assumed historical person. The Egyptians, who gave us these spiritual concepts in the first place, had a name for the body as the point of these transformations, which carry the central meaning of all theologies. Through the benefits of archeology and the tireless efforts of dedicated men and women over the last two hundred years we have before us today the "clues" and "keys" necessary to interpret correctly these ancient spiritual writings; many of which have found their way into our Old and New Testaments. This name now rises out of the murky hazes of ancient Egyptian books to enlighten all modern Bible comprehension.This city of "the human body", where the "Sun of Soul" sank to its death on the cross of matter (think...intersecting two planes of existence, forming a cross), to arise in a new birth, was called the "City of the Sun", or in Greek, "Heliopolis", but in the Egyptian, "Anu".

Answer for yourself: What lies behind "Anu"?

We saw previously that the first, or virgin birth was depicted as taking place on the western side of the zodiac, in the house or womb of the Virgin Mother, Virgo (the Water Mother). This allocation was due to the fact that it is in the west that the Sun, universal symbol and embodiment of the fire of spirit, descends each evening into the earth and water that "represented the body" in which the "Soul incarnated", this body itself being composed of those two elements, earth and water. So man is, zodiacally, born in the water, as natural man, on the western side (Virgo); and is to be reborn, or regenerated, as spiritual man, at the end of the cycle, on the eastern side (Pisces) necessitating two births and two mothers. The Heavens revealed to mankind that mankind, in his pilgrimage through this plane of existence, requires "two birth" thus necessitating "two mothers". Spirit's descent into water (of the body) on the west makes the man a physical being; its later resurrection on the east makes it man a spiritual being; the deification of man. Says the text of old Egypt: "Pepi saileth with Ra to the eastern side of heaven, where the gods (deity in man is born) are born."

Answer for yourself: What does this mean? This refers to the death (descent of the Divine into matter) and resurrection of the divinity (release of the Divine essence in matter/body at the end of bodily existence), the basic theme in all religions. It is simply the Ancient story of incarnation and return to heaven.

Answer for yourself: Have we read of this in our Bibles and not noticed it before? Yes. This same idea is allegorized in our New Testament in the story of the "Christ" and the "descent of the Christ/Messiah" into "Egypt" and his "exodus" back to spirit, historicized in the Scriptures as "Canaan."

Hidden almost everywhere in these New Testament stories which we have been taught to read as assumed "historical narratives" are ancient allegories of the "Descent of the Soul into matter" and its "return to Heaven" at the death of this physical body given mankind.

Further examination of ancient volumes and books available to us today brings to light today the connection between the zodiacal pictorialization and the Bible. It is time we look at another one which is a central idea in the New Testament concerning "the Christ".

By that I mean the use of the symbol of bread in connection with both Virgo and Pisces. Pisces is the "House of the Fishes" by name, but it is not commonly known that in the astrological representation the Constellation of Virgo is known, even today, as "the House of Bread". This is indicated by several items of the typology. Many centuries ago in the precession of the equinoxes the end of the year was marked by the position of the great Dog Star Sirius which we have already seen is a heavenly symbol of the divinity in man. Long ago in Egypt, precisely at midnight on December 24, this bright Sun stood on the meridian line running from the zenith to the south. Terribly important for us to know is that at the same moment there was rising on the eastern horizon the constellation of the Virgin (Virgo), bearing in one arm a star that was represented as "the Christ child", symbol of the Christhood coming to function in man; and in her other hand she clasped the great star Spica (Latin: a head or "spike" of wheat), symbol of that same deity coming as the celestial food for man.

Answer for yourself: What did this represent again? The Ancients came to understand this as the "Coming of the Christ into mankind" along with "the message of God taught through "the Christ" to all mankind" so that he might be saved.

It must be remembered that the "Jesus Story" has written for us that if mankind was to have eternal life, they each of us must virtually eat the body of Christ as our divine food, and drink his blood.

Mark 14:22-24 22 And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. 23 And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. 24 And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many. (KJV)

Hence typism and symbolism represented "the Christ" as coming in the form and nature of man, the human babe; and coming likewise as spiritual food represented by wheat.

Answer for yourself: Should we see that these "two comings" of "the Christ" are representative of mankind needing "two births" as well? Yes.

The "Jesus Story" describes the supernal gift of the spirit in the words:

John 6:50-51 50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. 51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. (KJV)

Jesus took the same symbol, a loaf, and, breaking it into fragments, gave a morsel to each of his disciples, saying it was his (spiritual) body, broken for them.

Answer for yourself: As this "loaf" from God was broken and distributed to all mankind present, then is this a symbol of the body of Osiris being dismembered and spread throughout the land? Yes. In the mythos we find that Set discovered the body of Osiris by chance and this time and cut up Osiris' body into fourteen pieces and scattered them far and wide throughout Egypt. This is a picture of the Metaphysical reality that God has descended from Heaven into all forms of matter; in this article we focus upon the key idea of the "Descent of the Soul" into matter (flesh).

Now the name "Anu" was given to an actual Egyptian city, where the rites of the death, burial and resurrection of Osiris or Horus were enacted each year (Osiris, a neteru, is symbolic for mankind); but the name "Anu" bore a theological significance before it was given to a geographical town. The name is obviously made up of "NU", the name for the Egyptian Mother-Heaven, or empty space, or abyss of nothingness out of the bosom of which creation emanates. The name for the Important to note. The A (alpha privative) means, as it does in thousands of words, "not." It is prefixed to a host of words to negate an affirmative meaning, as a-theistic, a-moral, a-symmetrical, a-mnesia. A-nu would then mean literally "not-nothingness," or a world of concrete actuality. The negation of a negative posits an affirmative. It refers thus to our world of physical manifestation.

Answer for yourself: Do you see in this the "breaking and multiplying" of the bread and the cutting up of Osiris as but symbols for this Divine Descent of God into all matter?

Here we are brought face to face with the important Biblical sense of the word "multiply." To exhibit its infinite creative resources, life must multiply itself endlessly. The unitary life of deity must break itself up into infinite fragments if it is to fill empty space with a multitude of worlds and beings of diversified natures. The primal sea, or Mother must engender a multitudinous progeny, to spawn the limitless schools of organic "fish-worlds" (spiritual worlds). This is the meaning of the promise given to Abraham that his seed should "multiply" until it filled the earth with offspring countless as the sands and the stars.

Answer for yourself: Since we learned that life divine was symbolized by bread (Virgo) as the type of the first birth, and by fish (Pisces) as the type of the second, then could we might expect to find in old religious typology the allegory of a generic Christ personage multiplying loaves and fishes to feed a multitude?

We should and we do.

No wonder we find in the "Jesus Story" then the account of "the Christ" feeding the 4000 and 5000 with 5 loaves of bread and 2 fishes (2 as in Pisces...remember)? The leads to the significance of the two numbers; "5" and "2". We find that as the bread symbol pertains to Virgo, mother of the natural man, the five loaves is likewise intended to refer to man's five senses, while the two fishes could have represented the two natures (natural and spiritual) unified by the second birth.

This is amazing. But unsettling to see and realize its implications that are only reiterated when one begins to read into the subject of Comparative Religions. We definitely have a very close connection between the Gospel narrative and the "Jesus Story" and Egyptian Mythology.

Answer for yourself: Knowing this then can we begin to estimate the serious challenge presented by finding these Ancient Spiritual Allegories presented as "factual, historical, and literal" history in the New Testament to which "required belief" has been attached for one's salvation?

Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence? Is this whole Bible a "Spiritual Allegory" centered on the Descent of God, the Soul, into matter, mankind, and we not know it? Now let us continue.

"A-NU" would then mean "not-nothingness," or a world of concrete actuality, the world of physical substantial manifestation. The Ancients taught that such a world is the realm in which units of Cosmic consciousness (thought, the Mind of God) go to their death and rise again in concrete manifestation (the invisible becomes visible). A-NU is then metaphysically likened to the physical body of man on earth. Anu is the body of mankind; "the place of multiplying bread!" The Soul descends out of the waters of the abyss of the NUN, or space in its undifferentiated unity, which is the sign and name of all things negative. The NUN is indeed our "none." Life in the completeness of its unity is negative. To become positively manifested it must differentiate itself into duality, establish positive-negative tension, and later split up into untold multiplicity. This brings out the significance of the Biblical word "multiply."

Precisely such a world it is in which units of Cosmic Mind, Cosmic Thought, Cosmic Energy, and Cosmic Consciousness go to their death "death" (matter) and again rise out of it. Says God in the Old Testament: "I cast down to death and I raise up again." Anu is then the physical body of mortals on earth. The Soul descends out of the waters of the abyss, or the Nun, which is simply space in its primordial undifferentiation and finds its home in the flesh of mankind.

Here, then, in the Ancient dusty and long forgotten and silent records of Egypt we find the original story that is later mistaken presented as an assumed historical reality limited to but one person in the New Testament. How sad. Serious study on my part, and yours as well, will show you that the original, the prototype, of the "miracle" of the loaves and the fishes in the Gospels of Christianity, as well as many other Gospel stories by the hundreds find their earliest existence in Ancient Egypt.

Answer for yourself: In this of this new found knowledge don't you think that a new enlightening meaning must be read into our New Testaments around the life events and sayings of the New Testament Jesus?

Answer for yourself: Does it not appear to you, the enlightened reader, that such new information make it necessary lift these Biblical narratives out of their assumed "literal-historical" existence and inspect them anew to see if behind them lie only Metaphysical Divine Allegory and Reality?

Our eyes are opening. We see then, as the Ancient Spiritual Masters always taught, that Anu, as the physical body, is the place wherein the unity of the Christ's power is broken into an infinite number of fragments, which are distributed out among a multitude of God's children hungered after a three-days fast. This latter detail can readily be taken as referring to the deprivation of "spiritual food" suffered by Souls in their sojourn in the three elemental kingdoms, mineral, vegetable and animal, before attaining to the plane of mind.

Answer for yourself: Did we just discover the truth behind the Christian Eucharist? Is the Eucharist a picture of the broken but multiplied fragments of the body of the God, distributed to feed hungry humanity? And as humanity is composed of twelve groups of divine conscious units, there were gathered up twelve baskets of fragments! How appropriate.

Now for certain, for I have found it, this episode of the Christ's purported life is found to be Egyptian in origin and meaning and symbolic in character!

It is a known fact that the Hebrews came along and appropriated Egyptian material. They picked up the name ANU and fitting it back into its zodiacal "House" of Virgo, they called it the "House of Bread." This required their adding to ANU their word for "house," which, as anyone knows, is "Beth".

Answer for yourself: What do we get? This yields us Beth-Anu.

Now it is a fact of common philological knowledge that the ancient Greek and Egyptian "U" is rendered as "Y" when the words are brought over into English.

Answer for yourself: Since the "U" becomes a "Y" then what do we get? We get "Bethany" of the Gospels! Beth-Anu becomes "Bethany".

Bethany is thus just the sign of Virgo, as the "house of Bread," the home of the great star Spica, the head of wheat!

Answer for yourself: But what do we get when we take the Greek "Bethany", seen as "the House of Bread", back into the Hebrew? We get Beth-Lehem (Lechem, Lekhem), for lechem, lekhem, is bread in everyday Hebrew.

Answer for yourself: What do we learn? We see that the Ancient taught that "the Christ" was born in Bethany or Bethlehem, the astrological "house of Bread." Later it seems that the two signs, Virgo and Pisces, and their symbols, bread and fish, were almost interchangeably confused or commingled in the symbolic imagery. This was natural, since the two signs, Virgo and Pisces, represented the same body of man in its two aspects of birth, both dying and being reborn, and the two processes are confusedly mixed over time.

Answer for yourself: If Pisces is then the "house" in which the Christ in man comes to his birth, it is pointful to ask if there are evidences in the Bible or Christianity that Jesus was colored with the fish typology?

To any causal reader of the "Jesus Story" we find easily that we are overwhelmed by "fish symbolism" for after all it was the Age of Pisces in which these "Christ events" were supposed to have happened:

He picks his twelve disciples from the ranks of fishermen (in Egypt they were as well carpenters, reapers, harvesters, sailors, rowers, builders, masons, potters, etc.);

- He told Peter to find the gold in the fish's mouth;
- He spoke of a fish parable in the Sermon on the Mount
- He performed the miraculous draught of fishes;
- He fed the multitude with two fishes
- He declared that he would make them "fishers of men."
- His resurrection likened to Jonah who was in the belly of a fish
- He cooked fish in Luke and gave it to his disciples following his resurrection

In the catacombs under Rome the symbol of the two fishes crossed was displayed on the Christ's forehead, at his feet, or on a plate on the altar before him. And the Romans for several centuries dubbed the early Christians Pisciculi, or "Little Fishes," members of the "fish-cult." And the Greeks designated the "Jesus Story" as Ichthys, the Fish.

Answer for yourself: Can all this be just a coincidence?

It is the product of ancient custom, which figured the Christs under the symbolism of the reigning sign of the zodiac, according to the precession of the equinoxes. And that sign was the sign of the two fishes in the shape of a "cross"; Pisces. The Age of Pisces, an artifact of the Precession of the Equinoxes, is the time span extending from about 200 B.C.E. (200 hundred years before the "Jesus Story") until the current day. No wonder all the fish symbolism since it is the age in which "the Christ" from antiquity was redefined in Pisces symbolism. It appear that it took two hundred years to get the stories of these allegorical Christs redone.

And yet another surprising correlation comes to view. The Christ, as it has here been delineated, is the offspring or creation of a conception of deific Mind, first in the inner bosom of spiritual matter, then in organic bodily structure. Primeval space, we have seen, was called in Egypt the NUN, or the Waters of the Nun. All Bible students recognize a familiar ring in the phrase "Joshua, Son of Nun." Sadly, hardly any Christian knows that the name "Joshua" is just a variant name for "Jesus".

Answer for yourself: Did you know that the phrase is actually written in some old documents as "Jesus, Son of Nun"?

At any rate Joshua is just Jesus, no less. So here is the Christ, called Jesus, son of space, or the NUN. But the wonder increases when we turn to the Hebrew alphabet and find that while "M" is called and spelled "Mem" and means "water," "N" is called and spelled "Nun" and means--of all things--"Fish"!

Jesus, then, is son of Pisces, the Fish-sign, as he indeed is in the Gospels themselves.

Answer for yourself: Can you believe that Horus, the Egyptian Christ, who is identical with the Jesus of the Gospels in some one hundred and eighty details, performed at Anu a great miracle?

Horus raised his father Osiris from the dead, calling unto him in the cave to rise and come forth.

Answer for yourself: Do you have a hint at where we are going next?

Now Anu, as we have seen, became Bethany of the Gospels; and it was at Bethany that Jesus raised Lazarus from death!

Answer for yourself: Could Osiris and Lazarus have a connection that affirms that the "historicized" Jesus of the New Testament is but a mistaken reiteration of the life of Horus in Egypt?

Answer for yourself: Who was Lazarus?

According to Budge and other eminent Egyptologists today the ancient designation of Osiris was ASAR. But the Egyptians invariably expressed reverence for deity by prefixing the definite article "the" to the names of their Gods. Just as Christians say, or should say, the Christ, they said: "the Osiris". It will be found that the article connoted deity in ancient usage. Our definite article, "the" is the root of the Greek word "theos", God; the Spanish article, masculine, "el," is the Hebrew word for God; and the Greek masculine article, "ho," is a Chinese word for deity. To say the Osiris was equivalent to saying "Lord" Osiris. Now watch this closely. When the Hebrews took up the Egyptian phrases and names they converted the name of "the Osiris" or "Lord Osiris" directly into their own vernacular, and the result was "El-Asar." Later on the Romans, speaking Latin, took up the same material that had come down from revered Egyptian sources and to "El-Asar" they added the common Latin termination of the second declension masculine nouns, in which most men's names ended, namely, "-us".

Answer for yourself: What do we get? We now get "El-Asar-us." In time the initial "E" wore off, as the scholars phrase it, and the "s" in Asar changed into its sister letter "z," leaving us holding in our hands the Lazarus whom Jesus raised at Bethany!

Answer for yourself: What are we to make of all this?

We are faced with the irrefutable evidence of Comparative Religion that Jesus' raising of Lazarus at Bethany is but a rescript of the old Egyptian dramatic mystery in which Horus, the Christ, raised his "dead" father Osiris, or El-Asar-us from the grave. And the Egyptian recital was in the papyri perhaps 5000 years B.C.E. or more before the events alleged to occur to a historical Jesus.

But the comparison is not complete. Nor was Osiris, masquerading under the name of Lazarus, the only Egyptian personage present at the scene of this supposed Christian "miracle." Isis, the wife and sister of Osiris, under her ancient designation of Meri, was present also. As the feminine counterpart of the male deity was dualized to match the doubling of Horus as Horus the Elder (otherwise Osiris) and Horus the Younger, so the Meri name was sometimes pluralized, becoming Merti. Let us not forget what we learned about the neteru; they Emanated from the ONE in pairs. They are always together as duality. So also at the Egyptian scene of the rising of Osiris were present the two divine sisters, Isis and Nephthys. An old source-name for Isis was Meri, basic for the Latin mare, the sea. The Egyptian plural of Meri was Merti. In Latin feminine form this became Mertae. In Hebrew it resolved into what was rendered in English as Martha. The picture is now becoming very clear to the reader.

We are reading Egyptian religious Divine Allegory without their correct meaning when we read our New Testaments and the "Jesus Story"...what a waste of time that postpones our Soul' intended maturation as God intended

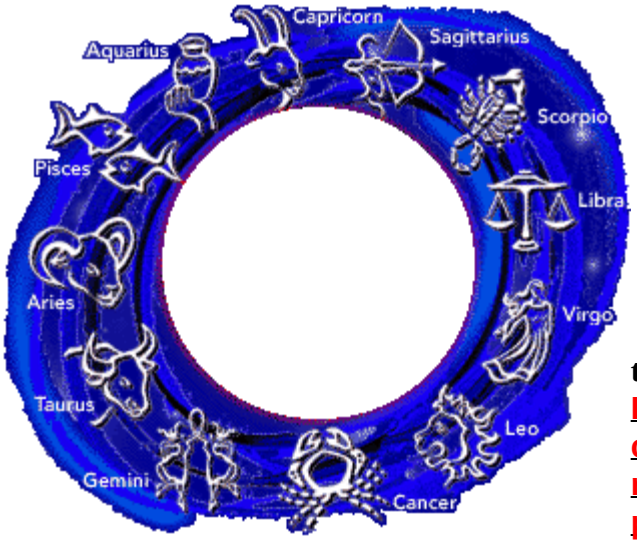
So even in the ancient Egyptian transaction there were present the two Maries, or Mary and Martha, the sisters of Lazarus! Martha is the Christianize form of Isis as Jesus is but a Christianized form of Horus/Osiris to which the "keys" for proper interpretation has been lost for almost 2,000 years; but no more!

One must ask what it can mean to the future of Christianity to realize now that this episode of the supposed life of Jesus is found to be the distorted republication of an antique Egyptian allegory, completely unhistorical in character.

To support the contention that this derivation is not a fanciful invention or sheer coincidence, we find the Egyptian "Azar" reappearing in the names of two of the Hebrew Priests in the Old Testament, Azar-iah and El(e)azar. The -iah (or -jah) appended to deific names substantially equated the prefixed "El" in Hebrew usage. But a further and far more authoritative confirmation of the linkage was found in one place in Renan's famous Life of Jesus, on page 308. The French theologian displayed an extraordinary knowledge of Judean history, geography, sociology and religion, and in connection with the elucidation here presented this citation from his great book confronts the Christian exegesis with a challenge which it may be difficult to fend off. We quote the passage as follows: "The village of Bethany, in particular, situated at the summit of the hill upon the incline which commands the Dead Sea and the Jordan, at a journey of an hour and a half from Jerusalem, was the place especially beloved by Jesus." Following this a numeral directs us to the note appended at the bottom of the page, in which the reference is to Bethany: "Now El-Azerie (from El-Azir, the Arabic name of Lazarus) in the Christian texts of the Middle Ages, Lazarium." :

On the next page, Renan, speaking of Mary he states: "Her brother Eleazar, or Lazarus, was as much beloved by Jesus." Here is indisputable evidence that the Egyptian connection with the name of Bethany clung to the town up to the Middle Ages. Since it is agreed widely that John's Gospel is far more mystical and spiritual and less historical than the other three, it is quite apparent that this reprint of an ancient Egyptian allegory would be more likely to be included in John's Gospel and omitted from the three synoptic ones.

Answer for yourself: What can it mean to Christian theology that the story of the raising of Lazarus was extant in Egyptian papyri at least 5000 or more years B.C.?



All this sets the stage for the crowning item in this article. In the Gospel drama John the Baptist enacts the role of the first-born or natural man, coming first to prepare the physical ground of evolution for the advent of the second Adam, or Christ.

Answer for yourself: Is this saying the same thing as "Virgo" (the first mother that prepared matter for the first natural birth) prepares the way for "Pisces" (the second mother as the medium for the spiritual birth of man)? Yes.

John the Baptist is again a Spiritual Allegory found in the stars of Heaven. He would therefore stand in the allegory as the son of the Water Mother, Virgo, and under the astrological symbolism would be born at the Autumn Equinox, or in his mother's House Virgo, which stands as that station in the zodiac. On the other side of the cycle of descent, "death" and resurrection, would stand Jesus, the Christos, son of the Fish Mother, born in his mother's House of the Fishes, Pisces.

Answer for yourself: What we notice right now? These houses are six months apart on the zodiacal chart!

This is not good news for the "Jesus Story" nor Christianity as you will see. The house of cards comes tumbling down and with it the Gospel's historicity when the astronomical understanding of the Gospel Story is made evident. We find in the first chapter of Luke's Gospel, that the Annunciation to Mary of her conception of the coming Christ by the Holy Spirit which is related to have come in the sixth month of Elizabeth's pregnancy with John the Baptist. With the "keys" to this interpretation you can see the methodology that these myth-makers devised for discerning intelligence in the allegory in Luke. The natural man, having covered the zodiacal "six months" between his conception and the date of his quickening into spiritual status in his evolution, was dramatized as being "quickened" at a point exactly opposite from the point of the beginning of his life. Six months on the chart would mark the end of an epoch begun opposite it (the Christ is quickend, born born in Pisces as the natural man was born in Virgo..separated by 6 months). This occurs simultaneously in the narrative. Six months, speaking purely zodiacally, would terminate the period of mortal life and bring the natural man to the place of his deification. At that point he would be represented as being quickened from natural to spiritual life.

Answer for yourself: Do you see it?

So then, according to the Lukan account, when the mother of the true spiritual Christ (Isis/Mary), who had just been impregnated by the Holy Ghost (Osiris was dead...remember), came into the presence of the first mother (Elizabeth, John the Baptist's mother), carrying her child at the figurative completion of his cycle of physical evolution, and awaiting only the advent of the spiritual Lord to be quickened into a new order of exalted being, he was dramatized as manifesting this reawakening by the statement that "he leaped in his mother's womb." The Luke narration makes it clear that the conception of Jesus had just taken place when Mary visited her cousin Elizabeth and found her at the six months stage of her pregnancy. These two birth, the natural and the spiritual are related as seen in their 6 month correspondences on the Zodiac. Mary's coming into the presence of Elizabeth is made the occasion of the natural man's leaping in his mother's womb. When the Christos comes to the natural man the latter leaps into the higher kingdom of spirit. The Virgo man is to become the Pisces man; first the natural then the spiritual. The Zodiac has the key to this story. The natural man should be overjoyed at the reality of his "second birth"; being "born again". The two mothers and two births required of man as taught by God in His Book in the Sky is dramatized for us in this New Testament story of Elizabeth and Mary. It is but a simple matter of arithmetic to note that the last three months of Elizabeth's pregnancy with John coincided with the first three of Mary's pregnancy with Jesus, bringing the birth of Jesus just six months after that of John! So Luke has it. But be not mistaken it was in the zodiacal chart some thousands of years before it could have "happened" in Judea. It had occurred zodiacally long before it could have occurred historically.

The implication of the reality that lies behind this supposed historical study is overwhelming when realized. The supposed historical occurrence is but a presumption of ignorance based on the zodiacal when that became circulated as history among the unintelligent masses. Little has changed today by design orchestrated by Rome some 1,800 years ago. The Dark Ages yet exist in the Christian Church and little hope exists for deliverance from such darkness and tunnel vision without serious study in the churches of our land.

As we see, John, symbolic of the natural man, excited at his new "awakening spiritually symbolized by Pisces, jumped for joy. This is the plan for mankind written in the night sky. We, as natural Virgo creations, are all to experience and be joyful for our experience and second birth in Pisces. The Luke narration makes it clear that the conception of Jesus had just taken place when Mary visited Elizabeth, and this is the occasion of the natural man's leaping in his mother's womb. When the Christos comes to the natural man the latter (Christos) leaps into the higher kingdom of spirit.

John 3:30 30 He must increase, but I must decrease. (KJV)

I was taught that his is about a clash of ministries; that John the Baptist must step out of the way to make room for the ministry of Jesus. Well, we almost got it right.

St. Paul declares that we come to birth spiritually only as we die carnally, meaning that the quantum or quality of divine character in us grows in proportion as the quantum of raw nature decreases. We increase deifically as we decrease humanly; the god gains in power as the animal nature in us dies. So the structure of the allegory depicted the spiritual man, Jesus, son of Nun, the "Fish," as increasing, while John, son of Virgo, the Water Mother, decreases in stature.

This battle between Set and Horus that is eternally waged; good vs evil. Here is where the 42 Negative Confessions and the Torah play such a big role in the maturation of "the Christ" within us all and our Souls. Man must come to the knowledge of right and wrong; the Torah defines absolute right and wrong and reveals them as the highest love. The Torah is the training manual for our Souls in order to train our Souls in their earthly abode how to live like God and conquer this animal nature as the Christ continually to be "formed" in each of us and rises daily to conquer the Set in all of us. Judaism teaches the same thing; the mastery of the Yetzer Ha Ra (good inclination) over the Yetzer Ha Tov (evil inclination). This the internal battle of light and darkness, flesh and spirit. This life is the proving ground for our Soul. Every man has an idea of what is good, but only the 42 Negative Confessions and the Torah define them absolutely for mankind. Only in this way can the "John the Baptist" in all of us decrease and make room for the increase of "the Christ".

Astrologically, as we might expect, the Ancients observed that as a star or constellation sinks below the horizon in the west, its opposite star or constellation would be rising in the east (there is your 6 months again between Virgo and Pisces); the two births and two mothers. As John, typified by the constellation of Virgo, type of the first, the natural man, went down below the horizon (having completed his mission of preparing the way for his greater successor), Jesus, type of the spiritual birth, typified by the Constellation of Pisces, rose on the world in the east. So we now understand the narrative has John saying: "I must decrease, but he must increase." In the descent of soul into the body spiritual power decreases as physical life increases. But on the reverse arc of the cycle, or evolution, the physical (John) decreases as the Christ power increases in its new round of growth.

Answer for yourself: Do we dare say that a day of brotherhood in human society may be about to dawn, as the "six months'" reign of a degrading literal interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures goes down to disuse and the day-star of a transfiguring spiritual interpretation rises in the east in its place?

DID THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS IDENTIFY THE BIRTH OF CHRIST WITH BOTH THE VERNAL EQUINOX & THE WINTER SOLSTICE? HOW CAN THAT BE?

To better understand this article it helps to have read the previous articles on "Did Jesus Have Two Mothers"? Having acquainted yourself with this necessary information then let us continue our study into the astronomical background for the later "Jesus Story".

Well if you understood the title to this article then you have already understood that such an occurrence, a historical and literal birth of the "same person" twice in the same year is not biologically possible for there is only one time that one person is born "literally" and such a thing violates the Cosmic Laws of the Universe. Well that Cosmic Law applies until you read the early Church Fathers who speak of the two supposed births of Jesus Christ in the same year. Yet in spite of such logic and biological principles and Universal Law we are astounded when reading the early Church Fathers to their absolute ignorance of such a fact let alone their own admission of their deception and lying to further their religious agendas; in particular their presentation of "Jesus Christ" to the masses. Let us examine the evidences and in so doing the results of our inquiry should tell the discriminating reader that these early Church Fathers were aware that their "Jesus Christ" and their resultant "Jesus Story" was not only a hoax but in the final analysis nothing more than an astronomical phenomena which was later "personified" and presented to the masses as if a literal historical reality when in fact it was not.

Answer for yourself: It is one thing to say it; another to prove it. What is the inescapable conclusion if we see that the early Church Fathers taught that "Jesus Christ" was born both at the Winter Solstice as well as the Spring Equinox? Well for starters we will be hard pressed to believe that "Jesus Christ" was a real "literal historical" person. This of course brings into doubt any and all Christian Doctrines and Dogmas which have been taught by Christianity as connected with either the person of Jesus Christ or events and sayings in his life. As if that is not enough we are then pushed to reconsider the whole of the "Salvation Message" of Christianity since it is squarely based upon the supposed life and sacrifice of this "historical Rabbi-Messiah" of the first century. Let us begin looking at the facts and evidence in this regard.

In the first 200 years of Christian history, no mention is made of the calendar date of Jesus' birth. Not until the year 336 do we find the first mention of a celebration of His birth.

Answer for yourself: Why this omission? In the case of the Church fathers, the reason is that, during the three centuries after Christ's life on earth, the event considered most worthy of commemoration was the date of His death. In comparison, the date of His birth was considered insignificant. As the Encyclopedia Americana explains, "Christmas... was, according to many authorities, not celebrated in the first centuries of the Christian church, as the Christian usage in general was to celebrate the death of remarkable persons rather than their birth..." (1944 edition, "Christmas").

- Speculation on the proper date began in the 3rd and 4th centuries, when the idea of fixing Christ's birthday started. Quite a controversy arose among Church leaders. Some were opposed to such a celebration. Origen (185-254) strongly recommended against such an innovation. "In the Scriptures, no one is recorded to have kept a feast or held a great banquet on his birthday. It is only sinners who make great rejoicings over the day in which they were born into this world" (Catholic Encyclopedia, 1908 edition, Vol. 3, p. 724, "Natal Day").
- During this time eight specific dates during six different months were proposed by various groups. December 25, although one of the last dates to be proposed, was the one finally accepted by the leadership of the Western church. A summary of the debate on the dates of Christ's birth appears in The Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church: "Though speculation as to the time of year of Christ's birth dates from the early 3rd century, Clement of Alexandria suggesting the 20th of May, the celebration of the anniversary does not appear to have been general till the later 4th century. The earliest mention of the observance on Dec. 25th is in the Philocalian Calendar, representing Roman practice of the year 336. This date was probably chosen to oppose the feast of the Natalis Solis Invicti [nativity of the unconquerable sun] by the celebration of the birth of the 'Sun of Righteousness' and its observance in the West, seems to have spread from Rome" (1983 edition, Oxford University Press, New York, 1983, p. 280, "Christmas").
- Around 200, when Clement of Alexandria mentioned the speculations about Christ's birthday, he said nothing about a celebration on that day. He casually reported the various ideas extant at that time: "And there are those who have determined not only the year of our Lord's birth, but also the day..., the 25th day of Pachon... Furthermore, others say that He was born on the 24th or 25th of Pharmuthi" [19th or 20th April] ("The Stromata, or Miscellanies," The Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. 2, Eerdmans, Grand Rapids, 1986, p. 333).
- Later, in 243, the official feast calendar of the time, De Pascha Computus, places the date of Christ's birth as March 28. Other dates suggested were April 2 and November 18. Meanwhile, in the East, January 6 was chosen, a date the Greeks had celebrated as the birth of the god Dionysus and the Egyptians as the birth of the god Osiris. Although pagans commonly celebrated the birthdays of their gods, in the Bible a birthday is never celebrated to the true God (who, of course, had no birth or day of origin).

What is of interest to us in this article is the fact that in spite of all this speculation the original date of Jesus' birth was never known for certain in Christianity. But toward the end of the second century, Clement of Alexandria was known to have cited various opinions of concerning Christ's birth date, the two most prominent of which were January 6th and December 25th. Later in the fifth century, Augustine commented: "For He is believed to have been conceived on the 25th of March (Spring Equinox), upon which day He also suffered... but He was born according to tradition upon December 25th" (Winter Solstice) (De Trinitate, Augustine).

Notice with me that neither the writer of the Gospel of Luke nor the writer of the Gospel of Matthew gave any indication of Jesus' actual birthday. Like many things Christian, the origin of this supposed date for the birth of the "Christ Child" comes from the celebrations and rituals of the Ancient existing religions which beginning Christianity had to compete against. Here too, we see Christianity assimilating portions of the Ancient Wisdom and Astrotheology into its structure for its own unique interpretation of "the Christ" and his supposed birthday.

One of the remarkable things about early Christianity is the fact that the early devotees made no mention of the birth of their supposed saviour or even his supposedly fleshly existence for that matter. The conflicting genealogies in our current Gospels are believed by modern scholars to have been added to the existing Gospels after the second century. The earliest Gospel, Mark, speaks nothing about the ancestry, birth and genealogy of Jesus and contemporary Greek and Roman writers and historians of that period have nothing to say about him either save vague, generic references to the title of "the Christ". In some cases where writers like Josephus and Paul make "specific" mentions of Jesus, these references turn out to be forgeries written in by zealous students, and redacting bishops. Also, there was strong opposition to the "pagan" custom of celebrating birthdays – ironic when one considers that from top to bottom "paganism" is woven into Christianity's beliefs and customs. At first, his birth date was on January 6th; however, by the 4th century it was noticed that Christian worshippers were also partaking in Mithraic celebrations of the Sun [natalis solis invicti] on December 25th. Realizing that their followers were gravitating towards the worship of Mithra, Roman Christian authorities moved the feast date of Jesus from January 6th to December 25th. Trying to compete with an earlier religious celebration was not such a good idea Rome figured so wisdom prevailed; "is you can't beat them, join them". Such were the lengths these early proselytisers were prepared to go to win or retain converts.

In Rome December 25 was made popular by Pope Liberius in 354 and became the rule in the West in 435 when the first "Christ mass" was officiated by Pope Sixtus III. This coincided with the date of a celebration by the Romans to their primary god, the Sun, and to Mithras, a popular Persian sun god supposedly born on the same day. The Roman Catholic writer Mario Righetti candidly admits that, "to facilitate the acceptance of the faith by the pagan masses, the Church of Rome found it convenient to institute the 25th of December as the feast of the birth of Christ to divert them from the pagan feast, celebrated on the same day in honor of the 'Invincible Sun' Mithras, the conqueror of darkness" (Manual of Liturgical History, 1955, Vol. 2, p. 67).

Protestant historian Henry Chadwick sums up the controversy: "Moreover, early in the fourth century there begins in the West (where first and by whom is not known) the celebration of December 25th, the birthday of the Sun-god at the winter solstice, as the date for the nativity of Christ. How easy it was for Christianity and solar religion to become entangled at the popular level is strikingly illustrated by a mid-fifth century sermon of Pope Leo the Great, rebuking his over-cautious flock for paying reverence to the Sun on the steps of St. Peter's before turning their back on it to worship inside the westward-facing basilica" (The Early Church, Penguin Books, London, 1967, p. 126).

The Encyclopedia Americana makes this clear: "In the fifth century, the Western Church ordered it [Christ's birth] to be observed forever on the day of the old Roman feast of the birth of Sol [the sun god], as no certain knowledge of the day of Christ's birth existed" (1944 edition, "Christmas").

I assume the reader is familiar with December 25th being the Winter Solstice but let me reiterate that December 25th was the date of the birth of the Sun from the dead at the Winter Solstice. After this momentous day in the Sun's path through the Zodiac, the winter, having reached its peak, slowly gives way to spring. The Winter Solstice therefore, had been traditionally in Roman times, a period of unrestrained celebration. The celebration was called the "Dies Natalis Solis Invicti" or "the birthday of the unconquered Sun." In the pagan religion of Mithraism, which was a form of Sun-worship, the Winter Solstice was naturally an occasion of great celebration since the death of "old man winter" was assured as the Sun was "raised from the dead" and renewed its northward trek in the Sky after remaining motionless in the Sky for 3 days as if dead. It was during these 3 days that the Sun, or the personified "Son of the Sun" fought the Devil; or as we more properly understand "fought the Dark-Evil, the D-Evil, the DEvil", the Devil (see it?); thus the "descent into hell for 3 days" where the Christs fight the darkness of Winter (the Devil) which we read about in the lives of the Solar Sungods as well as the "Jesus Story". As the Sun rose from its "grave of darkness and Winter cold" it brings with it again the hope of Spring and Harvests which was literally "salvation" and "life" to mankind. The worship of Sol Invictus, the Sun God, became so popular that by A.D. 274, the Roman Emperor Aurelian (c212-275) gave official sanction to December 25th, the Winter Solstice, as the birthday of that God.

The December 25 calendar date often overlaps the Winter Solstice, honoured throughout the ancient world for the annual return of the Sun, and the longer hours of daylight needed for the planting of the next year's crops. The Winter Solstice was the mythical birth date of a number of archetypal fertility gods, such as Mithra, Adonis, Dionysus, Osiris, Baal, and many other versions of the Solar Sun God, who bore such important titles as the:

- Son of Man,
- Light of the World,
- Sun of Righteousness, and
- Saviour.

Most pagan mysteries celebrated the birth of an "allegorical" Divine Child at the Winter Solstice and this paralleled the "birth" of the Sun.

Being a new religion in town is not always easy. Christianity in it battle with the pagan religions for converts had to make compromises in order to survive and therefore was forced to slowly assimilate their celebrations and beliefs into its religious synthesis. Christmas day became one of the assimilated celebrations. Over time this became a very successful day of observance and its popularity grew:

- The annual celebration of Christ's birth can be traced back to at least 336 A.D., when it was observed by western churches on December 25th. Since the event was honored in the form of a religious service, the term "Christmas" came from the Old English term Cristes Maesse, meaning "Christ's Mass."
- By the year 354 A.D. we already have documents referring to December 25th as the birthday of Jesus.
- By 440 A.D. Christians were celebrating the Winter Solstice as the birthday of Jesus.
- By the sixth century, during the reign of Emperor Justinian (527-565), it had become recognized as an official Christian holiday (Asimov, Guide to the Bible: p931-932, Asimov, Book of Facts: p370, Craveri, The Life of Jesus: p47, Keller, The Bible As History: p338).

As with the earlier prototypes whose body and blood given in sacrifice enriched the earth and caused wondrous plants to grow, so do countless popular legends and songs tell of flowers and medicinal herbs that grew under the cross or on Jesus' tomb. As the dead and resurrected Savior, the archetype in a long "pattern" of dying and rising gods, Jesus is clearly the embodiment of the same similar mythos and marks the continuation of such earlier gods as Mithra, Baal, Dionysus, and others.

We saw above that Rome sanctioned Dec. 25th as the birthday of Jesus. But not all agreed that the "Christ Child's" birth was to be reckoned at the Winter Solstice in December. As stated, up until the fourth century AD, many Christians were celebrating Jesus' birth on January 6. At the time, December 25 was the traditional birth-holiday of the Persian savior Mithra. Catholic Church Fathers were angered at the celebration of this other Sun King proceeding their own festivities, so they appropriated the earlier date and moved Jesus' own birthday up by some twelve days. Now you know where the famous Christmas Carol "the Twelve days of Christmas" came from. January 6 became known as The Feast of the Magi, or Three Kings Day. Not only was Mithra's birthday of December 25 adopted by Christians, but also the halo of light surrounding baby Jesus' head, the resurrection of both the god and his faithful followers, and numerous other aspects were all borrowed by the early Christian church directly from the preceding mythos of the Mithraic cult.

Christianity was divided throughout its kingdom regarding the birth of Jesus. In early on Christianity there were fierce debates about whether December 25th or January 6th should be celebrated as the birthday of Jesus. Lurking for consideration was March 25, the Spring Equinox as well as we shall see.

Uncertainty about Jesus' birthday in the early third century is reflected in a disputed passage of the presbyter Hippolytus, who was banished to Sardinia by Maximin in 235, and in an authentic statement of Clement of Alexandria. While Hippolytus favoured January second, the learned Clement of Alexandria (Strom., i. 21) enumerates several dates given by the Alexandrian chronographers, notably the twenty-fifth of the Egyptian month Pachon (May 20th) in the twenty-eighth year of Augustus and the twenty-fourth or twenty-fifth of Pharmuthi (April eighteenth or nineteenth) of the year A.D. 1, although he favoured May twentieth. This shows that no Church festival in honour of the day was established before the middle of the third century.

Mentioned above was that Origen at that time in a sermon denounced the idea of keeping Jesus' birthday like that of Pharaoh and said that only sinners such as Herod were so honoured. Arnobius later similarly ridiculed giving birthdays to "gods." A Latin treatise, De pascha computus (of ca. 243), placed Jesus' birth on March 21st since that was the supposed day on which God created the Sun (Gen. 1:14–19), thus typifying the "Sun of righteousness" as Malachi (4:2) called the expected Messiah.

A century before Polycarp, martyred in Smyrna in 155, gave the same date, the date around the Spring Equinox (March 21st) for the birth and baptism placing it on a Wednesday because of the creation of the Sun on that day.

The Incarnation of Jesus (bodily manifestation of a supernatural being in the flesh) was assigned to the 25th of March because this day, as early as Tertullian, was believed to be the date of His Passion.

Answer for yourself: Why is Polycarp's remarks concerning March 21st so important? Theologies come and go and the further you get away from a seminal idea or theology or religious belief the "story changes". This is human nature unfortunately. We can find easily what the early Church Fathers "believed" about the birth of Jesus in the 3rd, 4th, and 5th centuries but let us not forget that as time progressed the variety of "beliefs" increased accordingly. Therefore all the more important is Polycarp's admission to the birth of Jesus at the Spring Equinox. Polycarp's statement as to the Spring Equinox birth of Jesus is the earliest testament to the belief about the birth of "the Christ" that we have outside the New Testament and this time period, March 21st, approximates very closely the Spring Equinox. Polycarp is one generation removed from those alive in the first century and is the oldest attestation that we have today other than the Gospel accounts which are highly unreliable.

Answer for yourself: What should Polycarp's early comments on the birth of Jesus being at the Spring Equinox teach us? It should teach us that the further we can go back concerning the birth of this "Jesus" we find that it is reckoned from the Spring Equinox. In time as Christianity will spread to the masses and the leaders of this new religion will see that it will become fortuitous for this new emerging Christian Faith to adopt the Dec. 25th. birth of the Sungods, for the birth of the "Christian Jesus" in order to gain converts. So before us we have for a supposed historical person who supposedly lived in the first century fully grown men, religious pillars in this new religion of Christianity, professing that this Messiah-to-be had two physical births in the same year that just happen to align perfectly with Astronomical Phenomena; phenomena by the way which was already well known by the Ancients for thousands of years and reiterated previously over and over again in the lives of their Sungods as expressed through myths, allegories, similes, legends, etc.

So in examining the evidence we see that the Spring Equinox was first mentioned outside the Bible as the date for the birth of Jesus and that Christmas was not among the earliest festivals of the Church until much later. We also see that before the 5th century there was no general consensus of opinion as to when the birth of Jesus should come in the calendar, whether on Jan. 6, March 25 or Dec. 25.

Meanwhile, in the East, January 6 was chosen, a date the Greeks had celebrated as the birth of the god Dionysus and the Egyptians as the birth of the god Osiris. Jan. 6 was earlier fixed upon as the date of the baptism or spiritual birth of Christ, and the feast of Epiphany … was celebrated by the Basilidian Gnostics in the second century … and by catholic Christians by about the beginning of the fourth century. The Armenian church still celebrates January 6th as Christmas to this day (Freke & Gandy: The Jesus Mysteries: p41). It would appear to the "thinking believer" that this whole concept of "birth of the Christ" has to do totally with Astronomy one way or the other; either the Winter Solstice or the Spring Equinox and the path of the Sun through the Houses of the Zodiac reflective of these Solstices and Equinoxes reflective of the "Age" as determined by the Precession of the Equinoxes. Hidden in this celestial phenomena is the Spiritual Message from the Creator to mankind speaking of the necessity of "two births" for mankind; a natural and a spiritual birth.

Answer for yourself: Did you see it? Christ's example for mankind is "two births; a natural and a spiritual birth" (Spring Equinox, March 25th [natural birth] followed by the Winter Solstice, December 25th [spiritual birth]).

In truth this should not be shocking for we have heard it our whole lives:

1 Cor 15:46 46 Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. (KJV)

Amazingly God is showing man that he must "be born again" by the path of the Sun through the Houses of the Zodiac and we never knew; that is before now. Read that again. The real "good news" (Gospel) is in the Sky above our heads. God's Salvation Message" is written above our heads as is the whole "Jesus Story" from Matthew 1 through Matthew 28; no not the story of some Jewish "historical person" but "your story"; God's intended plan for the Soul's incarnation, maturation in this physical plane of existence, and return to Heaven once again and Egypt knew this and this Ancient Divine Concept is at the very heart of Egyptian Religion; the father of Judaism. Egypt lies destroyed today but no nation or evil invented by mankind has been able to destroy their children "the Jews" or the Egyptian Faith they inherited which goes under the name of Judaism today.

Gen 1:14-15 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: 15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. (KJV)

Brown-Drivers-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

The Hebrew word for "signs":

226 'owth-

- 1) a sign, a signal
 - a) a distinguishing mark
 - b) a banner
 - c) remembrance
 - d) a miraculous sign
 - e) an omen
 - f) a warning
- 2) a token, an ensign, a standard, a miracle, a proof

It makes all the more sense when we see that these seasons, Equinoxes and Solstices are "distinguishing marks" to bring mankind into "remembrance" while at the same time "warn all mankind" that they "must be born again"!

Answer for yourself: Do the early Church Fathers say that Jesus had two different births assigned to two different days on the Calendar and did they get this from the Constellations Virgo and Pisces? We saw that they did in the above linked articles. If you take the time to read them then you can see that they did beyond any doubt thus proving that "Jesus Christ" to these early Church Fathers was "astronomical" and not "historical". Now we find the very same teaching, that "Jesus Christ" is not "historical" but rather "allegorical" when other Church Fathers connect his conception, incarnation, and birth with the Winter Solstice and the Spring Equinox (allegorical again for the two births required of mankind; one natural and one spiritual).

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? It would appear to the insightful student that the Creator is speaking to mankind from His abode in Heaven the same message over and over again and this message concerns the Soul of mankind and man's necessity of "two births; one natural and one spiritual".

Answer for yourself: Does the fact that the early Church Fathers admitting to the two births for a supposed "historical Jesus" set the stage for us to reconsider if even they, these early Church Fathers whose works we read today, possibly knew that the "Jesus Story" was nothing more than a religious myth and that it was not a "literal" historical narrative? Have we today, as Christians, been totally misled to accept a "historical Jesus" when the truth of the matter is that "the Christ" of which these early Church Fathers spoke is a Metaphysical reality speaking to mankind about his Spiritual condition before God?

To the new reader don't be alarmed when I tell you that the birth of Jesus Christ in the New Testament is purely astronomical. You could have already guessed that if you put together the Winter Solstice with December 25th, the alleged birthday of the Son of God (the personified "Son of the Sun"). In order to make Christianity palatable to the pagan masses strenuous efforts were made to associate Christ with the Roman Sun-god, Helios. Pagan symbols were abstracted in order to teach the Christian Gospel, and Christ was readily associated with SOL INVICTUS -- the Invincible Sun. It was thus inevitable that the chief pagan Sun-worshipping day, 25 December, the Birthday of the Sun, became associated with the Birth of Christ. Indeed, the adoption of 25 December for the celebration of Christmas is perhaps the most explicit example of Sun-worship's influence on the orthodox Christian liturgical calendar. Many of the Christmas traditions known and beloved by the West are, as we know, direct adoptions of idolatrous pagan customs.

Unknown to most Christians is the fact that Augustine, whom some believe to be the greatest Father of Christianity, and Clement of Alexandria held to the tradition that the birth of "Jesus" was at the Winter Solstice and his incarnation was at the Spring Equinox. They understood that the birthday of Jesus is determined by the full moon of Easter (the Spring Equinox). Easter is observed on a Sunday between March 22 and April 25 (around the time of the Spring Equinox). The commonly stated rule, that Easter Day is the first Sunday after the full moon that occurs next after the Vernal Equinox. So we need to think and connect the ideas of "Easter" with the "Vernal Equinox" although the actual date might be off a couple of days.

There are 4 things we need to recognize:

- Easter must be on a Sunday;
- This Sunday must follow the 14th day of the paschal moon;
- The paschal moon is that of which the 14th day (full moon) falls on or next follows the day of the Vernal Equinox; and
- The equinox is fixed in the calendar as March 21.

Having adopted 25 December as the Birthday of Christ the Roman Catholic fathers were anxious to distance themselves from the responsibility of having borrowed a pagan festival and to avoid being accused of being betrayers of the Faith. Augustine and Leo the Great, for instance, strongly reprimanded those Christians who at Christmas worshipped the Sun rather than the birth of Christ [both were on the same day] (Augustine, Sermo in Nativitate Domine 7, PL 38, 1007 & 1032). It was the opinion of some of the fathers that both the conception and passion of Christ occurred at the time of the Vernal Equinox on 25 March (Polycarp and others...remember?).

Answer for yourself: How is the Spring Equinox and incarnation of Jesus connected to the Winter Solstice? Reckoning from that date the nine months of pregnancy of Mary (conceived, incarnated at the Spring Equinox, the date of the birth of Christ was be computed by necessity to be the 25 December (the Winter Solstice).

Not all agreed. More recently, some Christians have assumed that Jesus was conceived on 6 April and born nine months later, on 6 January, thus supporting the Eastern Orthodox position and the earlier position of the fathers before the festival was transferred from January 6th to 25 December in order to accommodate the masses and increase converts. Which ever date is defended -- 25 December or 6 January -- the computations used to defend them represent an a posteriori rationale advanced to justify an already existing date and practice that goes back as far as Ancient Egypt (Osiris). As far as 25 December is concerned, J.A.Jungmann has written: "It has become progressively clear that the real reason for the choice of 25 December was the pagan feast of the DIES NATALIS SOLIS INVICTI which was celebrated in those days with great splendour." (Joseph A. Jungmann, The Early Liturgy to the Time of Gregory the Great, 1962, p.147).

Answer for yourself: What was behind the transfer of the birth of Jesus from January 6th to December 25th by the Western Church?

In the Orient (East) the birth and baptism of Jesus were celebrated by the Eastern Church on the 5 & 6 January, respectively. All the available evidence strongly indicates that the 5/6 January date for Christ's birth was an assimilation of another pagan festival, namely the "Epiphany", which commemorated the birth and growth of light (B. Botte, "Les Denominations du dimanche dans la tradition chretienne," LE DIMANCHE, Lex Orandi 39, 1965, pp.14f). Epiphany therefore, is a Day of celebration of how mankind has not been left in darkness. It is a festival of light following the rebirth of the Sun at the Winter Solstice. Lest we forget the Sun is rising daily higher in the Sky and light is increasing every day as "Old Man Winter" is being defeated by the Sun. Salvation is coming to mankind once again to be realized in the Harvests of Spring and Summer. The term "Epiphany", which still remains in the orthodox liturgical calendar in the Catholic and Protestant world, literally means the "manifestation of a superhuman being". As O. Cullmann has explicitly stated: "The choice of the dates themselves, both January 6th and December 25th, was determined by the fact that both these dates were pagan festivals whose meaning provided a starting point for the specifically Christian conception of Christmas" (O. Cullmann, The Early Church, 1956, p.35).

Behind it all we find Egypt once again. Philip H. Pfatteicher, Festivals and Commemorations, p. 34, writes the following about Epiphany. Both Christmas and Epiphany are related to pagan solstice festivals. In Egypt in 1996 B.C., the Winter Solstice occurred on January 6, and there was a night festival on January 5-6 celebrating the birth of the god Osiris from the virgin. The waters of the Nile, it was thought, acquired miraculous powers and turned to wine that night.

Answer for yourself: Whose birth in Egypt was reckoned to occur at the Winter Solstice?

The birth of Osiris in Egyptian pagan worship also correlated with the Winter Solstice. An Egyptian Winter Solstice celebration of the birth of Osiris, the divine representation of masculine fertility, on January 6th became the Christian Epiphany. The Church declared that it signified the manifestation of Jesus' divinity. Yet, the spirit of both Christmas and the Christian Epiphany embodied timeless celebrations of the Winter Solstice. The difference between them was due more to a difference in calendars than a difference in meaning; the Egyptian calendar was twelve days behind the Julian calendar. (Ellerbe, Helen, The Dark Side of Christian History, Morning Star Books, 1995. p.146).

The Greeks identified Dionysus with Osiris and so on 6 January the sacred waters were blessed in both the religions of Osiris and Dionysus! Epiphany is a continuation of these Pagan rites. The Egyptian Gnostics known as Basilidians, seeing the immersion ceremonies as a symbol of the baptism of Jesus, celebrated it on 6 January and gradually Christians elsewhere adopted this date as the anniversary of the Jesus' baptism. By 386 AD the two great Christian festivals were Easter, the festival of the crucifixion, and Epiphany when rivers and springs were blessed and water was drawn and saved for baptisms throughout the year. Aristides Rhetor in about 160 AD tells us that water drawn from the Nile at the "Festival of the Immersion" is at its purest. Stored in wine jars, he says, it improves with time just like wine. And so does the myth! Two centuries later Epiphanius writes that the stored water actually changes into wine! In Dionysus worship, water turns to wine on 6 January. The miracle at Cana when Jesus turned water into wine is celebrated in the Christian calendar on 6 January!

Again all of these dates, March 25th, December 25th, January 6th find their original importance in Ancient Egyptian Religion in the myths of Osiris, Horus, and Isis. A few more comments on Epiphany (January 6th). A cycle of 40 days after the Egyptian Last Supper (November 27th) and the death of Osiris takes us to the Epiphany on January 6th. This date as you can see was adopted by the Christian faith and introduced into its religious calendar.

Like the Ancient Egyptian traditions, the original intent of Epiphany in the Eastern Church is for one to be baptized (the sacrament of Baptism). Baptism represents in the Egyptian Religion the figurative death and rebirth.

Answer for yourself: What are we to learn here? Again we see Egypt teaching the necessity for "two births" for mankind. A "born again" cycle typically takes 40 days (from November 27th and the death of Osiris) to January 6th). At the end of the cycle, January 6th, the people bathe in the Nile (baptism) and the fast is broken and they are "born again".

The results of such a study teach beyond all doubt that all the scholarly evidence therefore clearly points to the Ancient origins of the traditional birthdays celebrated by the Western and Eastern Churches and their utilization to merely justify syncretizing of Ancient Egyptian Religion with a "literalized and historicized" Christianity. Nowhere in any of these studies will we find unforged or uncontested evidence that promotes a historical Jesus that was born on either 25 December or 6 January.

We seem to consistently be mentioning the Winter Solstice and the Spring Equinox. That these celestial events as tied to the births of Ancient Sungods and "Karests/Christs" should give us pause to think that possibly behind what we assume to be a supposed historical person is nothing but spiritual allegories of the path of the Sun through the seasons and Zodiac. The evidence mounts and in so doing proves the astronomical and non-human nature of the birth itself, which is identical with that of the full moon of Easter in Egypt (3 months after the "natural birth" of the Christ child at the Winter Solstice we experience the "spiritual birth" of the "the Karest/Christ" child in mankind at Spring Equinox. The Divine Allegory is complete.

Gerald Massey, in his The Historical Jesus And The Mythical Christ, teaches us that Casini, the French Astronomer, demonstrated the fact that the date assigned for the birth of "the Christ" is an Astronomical epoch in which the middle conjunction of the moon with the Sun happened on the 24th March, at half-past one o'clock in the morning, at the meridian of Jerusalem, the very day of the Vernal (Spring) equinox.

The following day (the 25th of March) was the day of the Incarnation, according to Augustine, (354-430 C.E.) but the date of the Birth, according to Clement Alexander (150-211 C,E,)

Answer for yourself: What did we just see? Again we see that Clement Alexander agreed with Polycarp's date of the Spring Equinox for the birth of Jesus. Augustine will assume the Jesus' incarnation occurred on the Spring Equinox. That early Christianity was divided over the Astronomical significance of Jesus' birth and incarnation is easy to see. What I believe we need focus upon is that two of the earliest Church Fathers, Polycarp and Clement of Alexander agreed with the Spiring Equinox for the birth of Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Could this mean the whole "Jesus Story" is not historical or literal but nothing more than Astronomical parody and allegory and we not know it?

So We Have Seen That Two different birth days are assigned to Jesus and his birth by the Christian Fathers:

- The Vernal Equinox (Mar. 24-25th) (symbolic of a natural birth)
- The Winter Solstice (Dec. 25th) (symbolic of a spiritual birth)

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us?

First of all, these dates, Dec. 25th (Winter Solstice) and March 24th/25th (Vernal Equinox) cannot both be historical. Study will reveal to you that these traditions for the "birth of 'the Karest/Christ" arise from Ancient Egypt thousands and thousands of years ago. These two dates, Dec. 25th (Winter Solstice) and March 24th/25th (Vernal Equinox), refer to the two birthdays of the double Horus in Egypt.

Answer for yourself: What is meant by the saying "double Horus"? Does it refer to mankind's dual nature? Yes it does.

It was a saying of Philo's that "the logos is double". This it is as the double Horus, or as Jesus and the Christ, who was dual natured; as manifestor for the Virgin Mother and afterwards for God the Father:

- double by nature, human and divine;
- double in matter and in spirit;
- double as child and as adult,
- double as the soul of both sexes.

The reader is again prompted to understand this "dual nature" of Horus who is a prototype for mankind who has both a "natural" and "spiritual" nature. Horus, "the Egyptian Karest/Christ" is "the pattern" for mankind (mankind is a mixture of human/divine; matter/spirit; childhood/adulthood; male/female). These two expressions of duality in mankind, blended in one person (the Karest/Christ example), constituted the double Horus who was that double logos spoken of by Philo, the figure of which was founded, as Egyptian, on the two halves of the soul, or pair of gods in the mystery of Tattu (Rit., ch. 17). Horus in these two characters was Horus, the child and Horus who becomes bird-headed at the transformation in his baptism (born again nature).

Answer for yourself: Why "bird headed"? Such symbolism depicted the fantastic eyesight of the hawk; it is believed a hawk has an eyesight 8 times greater than the normal human. Behind such a symbolic depiction of mankind is the spiritual idea of increased Spiritual Enlightenment possible to the human species. Thus the "anointed" of Egypt, the Egyptian "Karest/Christ", Horus, is to bring Spiritual Enlightenment to mankind where he can see beyond the natural realm into the depths of the Spiritual realm.

Horus' personal epithet was "Iusa" the "ever-becoming son" of "Ptah," (God) the "Father."

Answer for yourself: Could this "ever coming one" or "every coming one" refer to the anticipated coming of mankind's "Spiritual Birth" as "sons and daughters of God" that is laid out it the Equinoxes and Solstices? THINK!

Answer for yourself: What is the meaning of "Iusa"?

According to Gerald Massey, Alvin Kuhn, Godfrey Higgins, and others the later name of Jesus was derived from the Egyptian "Iusa," which means "the coming divine Son who heals or saves".

Answer for yourself: Can we trace the etymology of the names Jesus from Ancient Egypt? Yes we can.

The "S" in Jesus's name curiously matches an Egyptian suffix written either SA, SE, SI, SU, or SAF, SEF, SIF or SUF—alternatively SAPH, SEPH, SIPH or SUPH. The "F" is an Egyptian ending for the masculine singular so the meaning of it is the son, heir, prince or masculine successor to the father. When the original symbol of divinity, IO or IE, JO or JE, was combined with the Egyptian suffix for the succeeding heir, SU or SA, the resultant was the name IUSA, IUSE, IUSU, or IOSE; or IESU, JESU, IUSEF, IOSEF, JOSEF. One of the many forms was JESU and another was JOSEF. The final F, in JOSEF, became sibilant at times and gave us the eventual form of JESUS. The name then meant the "divine son," and combined in the Egyptian IU the idea of the coming one. Hence JESUS was the Egyptian Messiah, the coming son of the divine life.

Jesus therefore means the divine son, and combined in the Egyptian IU the idea of the coming one. Hence JESUS was the Messiah, the coming son of the divine life. Indeed messiah is a combination of the Egyptian word "MS" and the Egyptian word for god, "IAH." MS means son so the meaning of Messiah is precisely son of God. It is the same word as Rameses where Ra, the name of the sun god replaces Iah and the words are reversed in order. Scholars, Christian and Jewish alike, say Messiah means the anointed one, deriving Messiah from the word for anointing with oil. They have, of course, got the derivations back to front. The word for making someone a son of God by anointing them with oil was derived from the purpose of the ritual, not the other way round.

Answer for yourself: What did we just see? There in Egypt, some ten thousand years B.C., we find the character of this functionary under the name of IUSA, JESU, or JESUS. Later he was the Iu-em-hetep, which means "the divine son who comes with peace (hetep). But most interestingly, this last word also means seven. Hence Jesus is he who comes as the seventh principle to complete the six elementary powers of natural evolution with the gift of divine intelligence, which supplants the elementary chaos with the rulership of love and intelligence and thus brings peace into a warring situation (flesh vs spirit). . Hence finally, Jesus is the seventh cosmic principle, announced in all religious lore as he who comes to bring peace and good will to men. And as such he was announced in the Christian Gospels. But there was more than one Jesus or IUSA or IU before the coming of the alleged historical Jesus. All nations had this Divine Concept but called it by different names. Even more startling is the revelation that there are over thirty Sun-god figures in the cults of the various nations of old, but there are immediately in the Bible itself, in the Old Testament, some twenty more Sun-god characters under the very name of Jesus! We just don't recognize them by other names.

As you can see Etymology, the study of the sources and development of words, can be a very good friend for the truth seeker. Follow with me if you would please:

Zeus, aka "Zeus Pateras," who we now automatically believe to be a myth and not a historical figure, takes his name from the Indian version, "Dyaus Pitar." Dyaus Pitar in turn is related to the Egyptian "Ptah," and from both Pitar and Ptah comes the word "pater," or "father." "Zeus" equals "Dyaus," which became "Deos," "Deus" and "Dios" - "God." "Zeus Pateras," like Dyaus Pitar, means,"God the Father," a very ancient concept that in no way originated with "Jesus" and Christianity. There is no question of Zeus being a historical character. Only simpletons would maintain such a belief. Dyaus Pitar becomes "Jupiter" in Roman mythology, and likewise is not representative of an actual, historical character either. None of the Sungods were "literal" or "historical figures". In Egyptian mythology, Ptah, the Father, is the unseen god-force, and the Sun was viewed as Ptah's visible proxy (symbol) who brings everlasting life to the earth; hence, the "son of God" is really the "Sun of God." Indeed, according to Hotema, the very name "Christ" comes from the Hindi word "Kris" (as in Krishna), which is a name for the Sun (The Egyptian Book of the Dead by Massey, pp. 1-2, Morals and Dogma of Freemasonry, p. 78. Taylor: "'. . . Chrishna in Irish means the Sun.'"

Furthermore, since Horus was called "Iusa/Iao/Iesu" the "KRST," and Krishna/Christna was called "Jezeus," centuries before any Jewish character similarly named, it would be safe to assume that Jesus Christ is just a repeat of Horus and Krishna, among the rest. According to Rev. Taylor, the title "Christ" in its Hebraic form meaning "Anointed" ("Masiah") was held by all kings of Israel, as well as being "so commonly assumed by all sorts of impostors, conjurers, and pretenders to supernatural communications, that the very claim to it is in the gospel itself considered as an indication of imposture . . " (Taylor, The Diegesis, p. 7). Hotema states that the name "Jesus Christ" was not formally adopted in its present form until after the first Council of Nicea, i.e., in 325 C.E. (Introduction to The Egyptian Book of the Dead by Massey, p. 9).

We are half-way home. We have now to track the ever-coming child Iusa, Iusu or Jesus in the sphere of time as the son of Iusãas and of Atum (the Invisible God), who was Ra in his first sovereignty; not merely in the round of the lesser year, but in the movement of precession as determined by the changing equinox or by the shifting position of the pole (axis of the earth in relationship to the pole star [today Polaris]). As we have shown, the Zodiacal signs were set in heaven according to the seasons of the Egyptian year and in the annual circuit of the Sun. The birthplace of the Inundation of the Nile and the Grapes was figured in or near the sign of Virgo or the Virgin, the mother of the child who brought the new life to the land in water as Ichthus the fish and in food as Horus on his papyrus (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, published 1907 AD, p 728). In the earlier articles we death with "Jesus' two births and two mothers"; one Virgo and one Pisces. If you are unfamiliar with this symbolism I strongly suggest that you read the articles.

Alvin Kuhn relates: "Egypt knelt at the shrine of the Madonna and child, Isis and Horus and Egypt had long known Jesus, Iusa - born of immaculate parenthood, circumcised, baptized, tempted, glorified on the mount, persecuted, resurrected, and elevated to heaven. Egypt had listened to the Sermon on the Mount, and the Sayings of Iusa for ages. But Egypt's Christ was not a living person and neither was it historicized in Judean times - but God's Karest/Christ has existed at all times. In other words the Gospels "life" of Jesus turns out to be out to be nothing but the garbled and fragmentary copy of the Egyptian and other prototypes, never lived. But the light of Egypt Occidental religion can now find its way from medieval darkness to Sunlit truth. The Dark Ages can now be brought to their dismal end means there is more to the later-day allegories than former - a way for the construction by the individual of that long sought divinity requires a much greater comprehension of the allegorical methodology" (Alvin Kuhn, Who is this King of Glory).

Horus's personal epithet was "Iusa," the "ever-becoming son" of "Ptah," the "Father" (Churchward, The Origin and Evolution of Religion, p. 365). He was called the "Holy Child." Horus was called "the KRST," or "Anointed One," long before the Christians duplicated the story (Churchward, ibid., p. 397. see also The Egyptian Book of the Dead by Massey, pp. 13 and 64; MC). Iusa, the Jesus of On, like Horus in the Osirian cult, was born bi-mater. His two mothers were Iusãas (Isis) and Neb-hetep (Nephthys), the two consorts of Atum-Ra. These two mothers were at first two sisters in the mythos. One of them was the mother in the western mountain, or later in the Winter Solstice (the Mother of the Winter Solstice); the other gave birth to Horus on the horizon in the Eastern Equinox (the Mother of the Spring Equinox). Here again is the two births by the two mothers in Heaven that speaks of the metaphysical reality of the necessity of two births for mankind and two natures of mankind; one physical and one spiritual.

Answer for yourself: Again what are we to learn here? Here is the "Divine Pattern" for mankind's path through life once again: "First the Natural birth (what we see in Heaven in the Spring Equinox) and then the Spiritual birth (what we see taught in Heaven/Sky paralleled in the Winter Solstice).

John 3:7 7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. (KJV)

We have been speaking of the "two births" and "two mothers" of mankind; one natural and one Spiritual. In so doing the early Church fathers, not longer possessing the Ancient "keys" to interpret the religious myths and "gnosis" fought over two supposed historical births for one supposed human being. When all along the whole "Jesus Story" is an Ancient Egyptian Astronomical Allegory expressing Divine Metaphysical Truths to which Rome was oblivious.

Over the centuries the Winter Solstice and the Spring Equinox had gotten "blurred" in the thinking of Rome and lost to both was the Spiritual Dynamic and the "two births" of mankind behind them both. Long lost was Polycarp's and Clement's understanding of the Spring Equinox as the birth of "the Christ Jesus" and how it integrates with the Winter Solstice that occurs in the whole of flesh of mankind.

The Winter Solstice is the most mysterious, magical and wonderful turning point in the yearly cycle of the Sun. At the time of greatest darkness in the Sun's cycle, where we experience the shortest day of the year and the longest night, the Sun enters the sign of Capricorn (thus the birth of Isua or Jesus at the Winter Solstice). At this time of the year the Sun has reached its southernmost point in the journey of its orbital path. Then, for about three days it appears to standstill, hence the name Solstice which means "Standstill of the Sun". During this three day period, the Sun appears to rise and set at almost exactly the same point, then it slowly makes its journey North again. We experience this powerful event as the return of the light. Now the days are growing longer and the nights shorter. At first it is barely noticeable but a shift has definitely taken place that holds the promise of the Spring and Summer to come.

In the ancient world this awesome time was commemorated by rites and magical workings to ensure the return of the light. For at this time spirit and consciousness have made their deepest descent into matter and have experienced the greatest darkness. Because of this, the theme of death and rebirth was played out in story, myth and ritual across the ancient world. A sacrifice for the good of humanity required that a God die, enter the underworld and overcome death to be reborn as the Child of Promise. This is how the birth of the Sun became the birth of the Son.

Plutarch tells us that Isis was delivered of Horus, the child, about the time of the Winter Solstice (Dec. 25th like Jesus),and that the festival of the second or adult Horus followed the Vernal/Spring Equinox. Hence, the Winter Solstice and Spring Equinox were both assigned to the one birth of both Horus and later to Jesus by the Christologists; and again, that which is impossible as human history and natural law and fact is possible in religious myth only as found in two Horuses (Spring Equinox/Winter Solstice), the dual form of the Solar God in Egypt (the Double Horus) (Gerald Massey, Ancient Egypt, the Light of the World, published 1907 AD, p 786).

Now we can better understand how it could be that the following day (the 25th of March), after the Spring Equinox, was the day of the Incarnation, according to Augustine, but the date of the birth, of Jesus according to Clement Alexander.

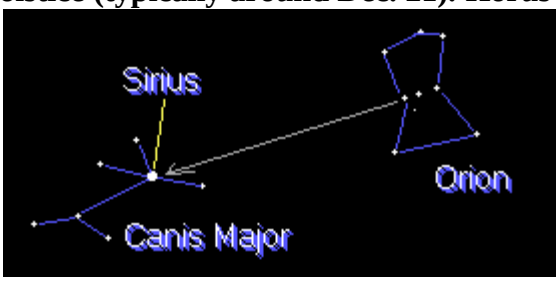
Answer for yourself: Again, why is this a problem for today's Christian? Unlike ages ago when the truth of the mythos was understood today's Christians possess almost no knowledge of this whatsoever; thereby they are easily misled into false worship and idolatry by the worship of this "man-made" Jesus as a God by Rome. Such is the unforgivable sin according to Judaism and the New Testament.

The bottom line in closing is that we are confronted with a major problem for two birthdays are assigned to Jesus by the Christian Fathers, one at the Winter Solstice (December 25th) and the other one at the Vernal Equinox.

Answer for yourself: How can Jesus have "two births" and "two mothers"? You might be surprised to find out how but to do so we have to look to the Heavens and the stars and not at a supposed human being or a historical personage that supposedly lived in the first century.

Obviously, these two conflicting dates for the supposed birth of Jesus cannot both be historical; either one or the other is or maybe neither. What we find upon study in Egyptian religion that such an idea of the two dates for the birth of "the Christ" are based on the two birthdays of the double Horus in Egypt.

Plutarch above tells us that Isis was delivered of Horus, the child, about the time of the Winter Solstice, and that the festival of the second or adult Horus followed the Vernal Equinox. The Vernal/Spring Equinox follows the Winter Solstice by 3 months. Even so we must take note that the Winter Solstice and Spring Equinox were both assigned to the one birth of Horus and later these same dates were applied to the one birth of Jesus by the Early Church Fathers. Again, that which is physically impossible as human history is the natural fact in relation to the two Horuses, the dual form of the Solar God in Egypt; but not impossible at all if this whole thing, the "Jesus Story", is a "myth" based upon Astronomy.



Answer for yourself: Now we want to think ahead for a while. Counting from the Vernal Equinox, from March 24th, then let me ask you what happens 9 months (the time for a baby's gestation in the womb) after this conjunction of the Sun and Moon (personified Sungod and Moon goddess) which occurred on the 24th of March?

Answer for yourself: What is an astronomical conjunction? The position of two celestial bodies on the celestial sphere when they have the same celestial longitude. They occupy the same "longitude" as if they overlapped or became one. Using sexual symbology it is as if they mated and produced an offspring.

Answer for yourself: What is this Astronomical Offspring? It is a "child". Follow closely what I say next.

Nine months after this conjunction of the solar father (Sun-Osiris...husband of Isis) and the lunar mother (Moon-Isis...wife of Osiris), which occurred on March 24th, the Spring Equinox, the divine child was born 9 months later at the Winter solstice, December 25th.

It fits perfectly. The Winter Solstice just happens to be the birth of the young Sun-god Mithras as well as one of the birth dates for Horus in Egypt. It also is Jesus' as well. Unknown to most Christians we know that the Ancient Egyptians paraded a manger and child resting in it (Sun in Capricorn) thus representing Horus, the "Karest Child" through the streets of Egypt at the time of the Winter Solstice (typically around Dec. 21). Horus was born of the virgin Isis-Meri (Mary) on December 25th in a cave/manger with his birth being announced by a star in the East (Sirius) and attended by three wise men (the 3 stars in the belt of Orion that just happens to point to the Christmas star Sirius). It sure does not appear too hard to see the "Star" as one might think.

Answer for yourself: And why a manger? Simply because the Sun is in the House of Capricorn at the time of the Winter Solstice, the time for the birth of the Karest Child/Christ Child and the Constellation of Capricorn contains the "manger" configuration of stars. Matthew says Jesus was born in a house; Luke says he was born in a manger. They do not contradict as much as it appears. A House defines one of the twelve sectors of the Zodiac. The manger is more specific in pointing to the house of Capricorn. There are reasons for the choice of manger. Matthew says Jesus was born in a house; Luke says he was born in a manger. They do not contradict as much as it appears when one thinks that this "house" refers to the House of the Zodiac; in particular the House of Capricorn. There are reasons for the choice of manger. The zodiac constellation preceding Capricorn is Sagittarius, half man half horse. As the Sun descends, the horse is seen to be riding down towards its stable, or manger, into Capricorn. Also, it is a dark time of the year and mangers are dark places. In the legend of the Twelve Labors of Hercules, when Hercules was in Capricorn, he was to clean out the stables of King Augeas.

Plutarch tells us that the virgin mother Isis was "delivered of Harpocrates (ie. Horus considered as a child of the mother alone) about the Winter tropic (Winter solstice..Dec. 25th), he being in the first shootings and sprouts very imperfect and tender. Which is the reason, as the Egyptians say, that when the lentils begin to spring up (Spring Equinox) they offer him their tops for firstfruits" (Gerald Massey, The Historical Jesus And The Mythical Christ, p. 40).

They also observe the festival of Isis' afterbirth (the Hebrew Shiloh), or Horus, the son of the father, after the Vernal equinox.

Answer for yourself: Not possessing this "gnosis" and "knowledge" from Ancient Egypt concerning this Astronomical theology then could this be why the early Church Fathers debated and argued among themselves concerning the time for the birth of a supposed historical Jesus? Is it because they lost the "gnosis" and did not understand the Astronomical and Spiritual import behind the stories they inherited and in so doing mistakenly cast them and taught them as if supposed historical narratives when in fact they were not? It sure is.

These two astronomical dates were continued by Equinoctial Christianity, who could not account for them in the absence of the gnosis or ancient knowledge of them which they no longer possessed since lacking the "keys" to understand the Ancient Egyptian wisdom and Religion. Lacking this gnosis or knowledge from Egypt concerning the astronomy behind the Osiris myth, the Winter solstice and Vernal/Spring Equinox then both these calendar dates reflecting Astronomical realities were both "assigned as the time for the one birth" of Jesus as you saw above which is impossible as human history, but is true to the mythos and the two Horuses. The birthday of Mithra, the invincible one, was celebrated as an ancient festival, on the 25th of December, the day of the Winter solstice, our Christmas day. Mithra, like Jesus, was born in a cave, and wherever Mithra was worshipped, the cave was consecrated to him; as the "highly-mysterious cavern" was sacred to the Sun-god in Egypt. "The Pattern" can be traced from nation to nation until we get to Rome and then we lose it.

Answer for yourself: Was Jesus born in a cave?

- In the gospel of James, the child Jesus was born in a cave.
- The gospel of pseudo-Matthew says Mary entered the "cave below a cavern in which there was never any light" to bring forth the light of the world, and on the third day she "went out of the cave and entering a stable, put her child in a manger".
- In the History of Joseph the Carpenter the Christ affirms that his mother gave birth to him in a cave.
- According to the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy the birth occurred in a cave.
- The cave of Mithras was that of the Sun born in the Winter solstice when this occurred in the sign of the Sea-goat (Capricorn).
- Abba Udda, the Akkadian name of the tenth month, answering roughly to December, the month of Capricorn, denotes the Cave of Light.

The above testimonies should make us realize that the idea of a cave is connected to "darkness", the "Winter Solstice", and the "manger" were similar Astronomical ideas that were connected with the birth of the "Christ child".

The cave (darkness), or Winter Solstice (darkness) in Capricorn, December 22-25th, was the birthplace of the Mithraic Messiah from 2410 to 255 B.C.E. until the dawn of the Age of Pisces, and this was continued as the cave or birthplace of the Christian Messiah/Christ after it ceased to be applicable to the solar god. Justin Martyr, Christianity's first great apologist, says that Christ was born on the same day that the Sun was reborn in "Stabula Augiae", and the stable of Augias, cleansed by Herakles in his sixth labor, corresponds to the cave of the Sea-goat (Capricorn). "The Pattern" continues but is not recognized and the "literalization" of the Christ continues even though it might appear that some knew but taught not the truth of the matter thus serving a higher agenda.This is no higher agenda than truth!

Answer for yourself: So what have we seen? Both the cave and the stable are two types of the birthplace of the Sun at the Winter Solstice (time of great darkness). Justin Martyr, determined to include both, ignorantly asserts that Christ was "born in the stable and afterwards took refuge in the cave". He has to include the mythos in his relating of the "Jesus Story".

No Christ or Messiah, however, whether called Mithras, Horus, or Jesus Christ could have been born in the stable of Augias or the Cave of Abba Udda on the 25th of December after the date of 255 B.C.E., because the Solstice had passed out of that Zodiac sign into the asterism of the Archer.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? Namely, that Justin Martyr had nothing but the Mithraic tradition and myth of the by-gone birthday to prove the birth of the assumed Historical Christ 255 years later! In other words he lied about the birth of an assumed historical Messiah! Justin Martyr taught "religious myth" as if was literal truth. He taught "Astrological Myth" as literal history and everyone fell for it and does so today as well.

Answer for yourself: What conclusion should we bring?

The supposed historical Christ had no other birthday than that of the solar god, the birthday of the year, whether reckoned from the Solstice or the Equinox. Rather revealing is the quote of Chrysostom, who wrote on the nativity of Christ, in Antioch, about 380 A.D. Now this is almost 400 years since the time for the supposed historical Jesus. Now pay attention to what he says. He states: "It is not yet ten years since this day was made known to us". What? The date for Jesus' birth was determined ten years before 380 A.D.? What is going on?

He says further: "Among these inhabiting the west, it (this Winter Solstice date) was known before from ancient and primitive times, and to the dwellers from Thrace to Cadis (Gadeira), it was previously familiar and well known."

But this birthday of the Lord was not well known in the East, at Antioch, where the name of Christians was said to have been first adopted, on the verge of the Holy Land itself. We also learn that as late as the fifth century Leo the Great was compelled to rebuke the "pestiferous persusion" of those Christians who were found to be celebrating Christmas day "not for the birth of Christ, but for the resurrection of the Sun". The actual origins of Equinoctial Christianity were not then superseded.

This date of 255 B.C. (the Age of Pisces) was the true day of birth, or rather of re-birth for the celestial Christ, and there was no valid reason for changing the time of the world. The Gospels contain a confused and confusing record of early Christian belief: things most truly believed (Luke) concerning certain mythical matters, which were ignorantly mistaken for human and historical. The Jesus of our Gospels is but little of a human reality, in spite of all attempts to naturalize the Mythical Christ, and make the story look rational. The Christian religion and the "Jesus Story" was not founded on a man, but on a divinity; that is, a mythical character. So far from being derived from the model man, the typical Christ was made up from the features of various Gods (neteru) and fused in a portrait of a dozen different persons. In such a literary design the many merged into one that is not anybody. And as fast as the composite Christ falls to pieces as we study, each feature is claimed by various Ancient religious myths and each scene in the "Jesus Story" is gathered up by the original owner.

If you understand that the "Jesus Story" is the personification of the Divine Soul as it descended into matter, or should I say the flesh of mankind then it bears upon our minds to recognize the Divinity of the "Jesus Christ" which resided in each child of God. Jesus Christ, as seen in his two births that even Church Fathers acknowledge, knew that their "Jesus Christ" never could be any other than a divinity; that is, a character who was not "literal" or "human". They understood this Divine Concept, at least the earliest of them did like Polycarp and Clement of Alexandria, and this Divine Idea and Concept was entirely mythical and could be traced back into the history of mankind as the Ancient Divinity that was the core of many pagan myths thousands of years before our era; as far back as Ancient Egypt.

The hard realities are inescapable since Christianity ties mankind's salvation to the historical Jesus and his physical death and resurrection for mankind and the necessity of such a belief for one's personal salvation.

Nothing is more certain, according to honest evidence, than that the Christian scheme of redemption is founded on a fable misinterpreted; that the prophecy of fulfillment was solely astronomical, and the Coming One as the Christ who came every time anew with every Sunrise, with every new House of the Zodiac in which the Sun rose and at the beginning of each new Age (mistranslated as 'world', was but a metaphorical figure, a type of Divine Allegory, which never could take form in historic personality. The conclusion is inescapable. The history in our Gospels is from beginning to end the identifiable story of the Sun-God, and the Gnostic Christ who never could be made flesh.

It is rather simple really. When we did not know the one it was possible to believe the other; but when once we truly know, read the evidences and gather the facts, see the parallels between the Ancient Sungods, come to possess the "keys" for the Astronomical interpretation of the Sun "personified" as it moves through the Zodiac and at the same time notice the unbelievable parallels to the "Jesus Story" in the Gospels, from beginning to end, and become knowledgeable about the "Gnostic Christ", then the false belief is no longer possible. But the good news is that behind all our misunderstanding and deception lies God's instruction to you and me for the Spiritual Maturation of our Souls in this earthly existence. The "Jesus Story" is to be yours and my experience for "the Christ" lives within us and is not limited to but one person long ago in Palestine as Rome would have you believe. The Stars and the Sun teach us so. Thank you God that we can know the truth before we die and prepare to meet You and love You while we live in this flesh the way you so commanded, desire, and deserve.

THE BIBLE AS A URANOGRAPH OF COSMIC ILLUMINATION ON THE SOUL #2

I ended the earlier article in this series by stating that the spiritually minded sages and seers of ancient antiquity distributed the various powers, forces, energies, phenomena and localities observed and witnessed in the Heavens and Sky above mankind over the national maps of their nations in accordance with the heavenly chart! I mentioned that this "Pattern in the Mount" was reproduced geographically, architecturally, and "theologically" not only in Ancient Egypt but in many other nations as well and became the very core of their Sacred lore and books. I also made mention that Ancient Egypt as well as the Jewish nation will be leaders in such religious pursuits. All nations tried to frame their own history, geography, architecture, and religious beliefs after the "Pattern of things in the Heavenly Mount".

Answer for yourself: Who were some of these nations that are important for our understanding of the Bible?

Mainly the Egyptians, Mesopotamia, Persia and after them the Jews made this transfer almost completely from "Heaven to Earth". According to this chart in the Heavens, called the Uranograph, each nation was given an upper and lower section, had a river flowing from the upper down to the lower, had a lake or sea, a central city representing the Holy City, and a score of parallel features found in every case. There was first a division into seven nomes or districts, later the division was enlarged into twelve.

Answer for yourself: Why was this? There are 12 Houses or "Mansions" in the Zodiac, the "image of the Spiritual Man" in the Heavens.

Each nation thus strove to have its history interpreted as a fulfillment of the Sacred Allegory; and its national history, thus diverted into the form of the celestial myth, was made into the national epic. This was done by nation after nation to various degrees. Ancient Egypt is the "model" for all others. And finally came the claim on the part of several, notably the Jews, that since their history fulfilled the outlines of the sacred story, they were proven to be the "chosen people" of God. In spite of this there is not a scrap of evidence anywhere to identify the Israelites as the historical Hebrews or Jews. The latter simply appropriated the distinction to themselves and fitted their history into the sacred scheme.

Answer for yourself: How can I say this? Is there evidence that proves what I just said? Yes.

Now we must pay attention as the proofs of such a statement is presented to the reader. If you were to travel to Egypt today and have the capability to read the hieroglyphs you would see with your own eyes that there exists in Egypt an ancient monument that contains hundreds of Palestinian place names that were long after taken from the Sky and Heaven and Egyptian Religion localized in the Holy Land of Judea, and all of this existed, mind you, long before the time given for the "historical" Exodus from Egypt.

Answer for yourself: What should this say to us since these "names" are found in Ancient Egypt long before there were ever a "Jewish nation" to begin with? That means that these names existed in Egypt as taken from the uranograph of the Heavens long before they existed in the land of Israel thousands of year later. This explains why we find towns in Palestine today which bear the same name of a place long recognized in Egypt before there were ever the first Jew on this planet. Just because they were later taken from the Ancient Egyptian Religion and incorporated as names for cities in Israel at later dates does not automatically make the Bible in these regards a "literal history". It only proves that the religious formulators of the national epic of Israel had given to a certain place a name already found on the uranograph or spiritual chart of the Heavens.

Let us look at one example of this. Virgo is a Constellation that was called by the Ancient Egyptians the "house of bread," that divine Bread that Jesus says in the New Testament came down from heaven and was made man, as Christ, the God in man. Pisces was the house of the Great Fish, or the dual fishes. Bread and fish were therefore made the symbolic dual food for man: the one physical and the other spiritual nourishment.

Answer for yourself: What should this teach us? We learn from this namely that man has two natures requiring two different types of nourishment for required normal growth and maturation; first a natural nature requiring natural food and a second Spiritual nature requiring Spiritual food. As you can see the genius of the Spiritual minds of Egypt as they developed their semantic science; not only the Constellations but the very cities of the nation were often named from some function of the Deific life. A city in which it was symbolically said that Horus, as the Egyptian Christ, was born and died, was "Anu", which becomes "Any" when transferred to English (the Greek "u" always turning to English "y"). In the Egyptian Ritual, the Egyptian Book of the Dead, it is mentioned as "the place of multiplying the divine bread." The birth of the "Krst/Karest/Christ Soul" in all men surely multiplies that heavenly Bread, broken for all Souls at the Eucharist. So, through association with Virgo and its symbolic name, the house of bread, the opposite house of Pisces (adjacent across the Zodiac by 6 months), house of the fish, merged its emblemism with its polar opposite, and the two symbols, bread and fish, became the twin forms of man's divine food and all later "miracle" stories whereby mankind is "fed the food of Heaven".

Now you know why the New Testament Christ feeds mankind with both bread and fish. He does the exact same thing that the "original Krst (Christ)" does in Ancient Egypt. We should not be surprised then when we find that our New Testament Gospels themselves contain the allegory of the Christ character feeding a multitude of hungry people by miraculously multiplying bread and its companion symbol, fish. It is the "Pattern in the Mount" which is contained in the "Map of Heaven"; the Uranograph.

Answer for yourself: Where did this multiplication of the divine food take place in the Gospels? Can you guess? We already said that "Anu" can become "Any". Thus at the Hebrew city of "Any" the Hebrews had at some date prefixed their word for "house" (beth...in Hebrew) simply to give its astrological reference as the zodiacal "house of bread," and thus it became -- Beth-"Any", or Bethany! Now we see where this comes from; the Uranograph in Heaven. It comes from the Stars and the Constellations of Heaven; God's blackboard in the Sky where He writes for all mankind this "Soul Science" which Ancient Egypt came to see, recognize, cherish, and teach.

Answer for yourself: So what does this say to us? Both in ancient Egypt and in the Hebrew-Christian Scriptures the Christ figure dramatized the miracle of feeding the multitude of mortals in this symbolic city of Anu by multiplying the divine bread and fish.

Answer for yourself: How does one says "house of bread" in ordinary Hebrew? You say it like this: "Beth" (house), "lehem" (bread) --Bethlehem! Bethlehem is Bethany, house of the combined "bread" and "fish". For mankind, as the Jewish Christ says positively, is the product of two births:

- One Natural, of water
- One Spiritual, of Spirit (Fire).

Let us look at this another way:

- One birth of bread (Virgo...flesh/natural/matter)
- One birth of fish (Pisces...Spirit-Soul)

We have heard it our whole lives: "Ye must be born again," the famous saying uttered by the Jewish Christ; one must be born of water and the spirit-fire. But Ancient Egypt taught it first thousands of years before there ever was a Jewish nation!

One must have two mothers as our example since Jesus has two mothers.

Answer for yourself: Did Jesus have "two mothers"? Yes. He even had "two births" as the Early Church Fathers attest. This is problematic for any supposed "literal" or "historical" Jesus Christ as a human being; but not a problem for a Spiritual Allegory that adheres to the established Ancient Mythos taken from the Uranograph in the Sky and Heaven.

Virgo is the first great Mother of life as the formless unformed matter, the Virgin Motherhood; and her name was almost everywhere a form of the name for "sea" or "water". Pisces is another house in the Zodiac which represents the second Mother of life, organic matter that has been impregnated by the rays of the divine Sun of life, or Divine Spirit. Virgo can give birth only to the natural man; Pisces gives birth to the Spirit-Soul, which inorganic matter could not do. Pisces is the Fish, the symbol of organic life born out of the sea, so that its Christly offspring, the Christs in all of mankind who are brought from gestation to birth in the flesh of mankind (the Virgos), are all fished up out of the sea (Pisces is again symbolized by "two" fish).

Answer for yourself: Why did God put in the hearts of man the idea that the Constellation Pisces had to be "two fish" instead of "one"? Ancient Spiritual man knew that it was symbolic of the finalization of two births required for the Adam Kadmon or the perfect cosmic man as the goal of our Soul's maturation while tabernacling in these bodies of death and matter (one natural, one Spiritual). Ancient Egypt taught the necessity of being "Born Again" right here; the two births of the "Krst" along with his "two mothers" and they came to understand this Deific Mind of God as witnessed in the Heavens. The religious truth for all mankind; that he must be "born again" is written in the Stars. Ancient Egypt taught this first! Not only did Ancient Egypt but Judaism as well teaches the Spiritual Doctrine of the necessity to be "Born Again". Roman Christianity will come later in all the glory of its "anti-Judaism" and steal this "buzz word" from the Jews, who learned it from Ancient Egypt, and sadly reinterpret the whole religious dogma and in so doing destroy its Heavenly import beyond recognition and today 2.5 billion Christians the world over parrot continually the words "born again" having not a clue they they know not what it originally meant as taught by God in His Sky and Heaven. They go around professing being "born again" and if they knew the truth their mouths would be silent and their hearts broken. Read the link and you will know "the truth" about what I say.

Answer for yourself: So have we seen that in both Egypt and Israel the Spiritual concepts associated with two Constellations, both Virgo and Pisces, have been woven into the life of both Horus and Jesus as the "Krst/Karest/Christ"? Yes we have. Definitely the "the Above is to be incarnated in the Below". This is the "Pattern in the Mount" which is to come to Earth and incarnated into the lives of all humankind.

But even more we find that Spiritual concepts of the cites of On (the Egyptian Heliopolis), Anu, and Bethany, and Bethlehem as well have been transferred from Heaven above to the Earth below and these same theological concepts have been given geographical representations in both nations. Heaven has come down to Earth according to the sacred "Pattern given in Heaven above". Anu, or Heliopolis, was an Egyptian city where the rites of the death, burial and resurrection of Horus were enacted annually; the origin of which was depicted in the birth, life, death, and rebirth of the Sun in its path through the Zodiac once a year (the path of the Sun through the Equinoxes and Solstices). Thus Anu or Heliopolis was called "city of the sun" in Greek. The original name for Heliopolis is "Anu". "Egypt's greatest Masters, Osiris, Hermes, Isis, and Horus all belonged to 'the old race', the black Anu" (Chandler,Of Gods and Men: Egypt's Old Kingdom, 1999, p. 117). The oldest seat of the cult of the Sun-god was the famous city of Anu, the On of the Bible, and the Heliopolis of Greek and Latin writers. Hebrews added their prefix for house ("beth") to "Anu" to produce "Beth-Anu" or the "House of Anu" as we mentioned above. Since "u" and "y" were interchangeable in antiquity, "Bethanu" became "Bethany," the location mentioned in John 11. If you followed all of this then you see how the Uranograph, the map of the Heavens, came to earth in the form of "theology" as well as geographical landmarks. The "Pattern in the Mount" became translated from "Above" to "Below"; not only geographically but "theologically" as well.

But such fruit of Uranography was not limited to just one city Anu; it involves a host of others some of the more important are Jerusalem, Sodom and others are therefore only Spiritual names transferred to the later geographical map from the celestial chart. The Uranography was also extended to nations like Egypt and Israel later.

Before we move on another example is warranted to give the reader the ability to grasp this concept that goes unnoticed on almost every page of our Bibles.

In one facet of ancient symbolism all life was said to have emanated from the Fish's mouth. In the uranograph, or chart of the heavens, the stream of life was pictured as flowing forth from the constellation in the southern sky called the Southern Fish, to correspond to that of Cetus, the Whale, in the northern sky. The Southern Fish is a separate constellation to Pisces, lying much further to the South, though in ancient legend it is often referred to as the parent of the zodiacal pair. The area in which it lies has an heavy emphasis upon Constellations with watery imagery, the goat-fish (Capricorn), the whale (Cetus), the water-pourer (Aquarius), the fishes (Pisces), and the dolphin (Delphinus) are all located nearby, obviously earmarking this region as one that related to the rainy season of the ancient year, by which many of its Stars are associated with floods or troubles at sea. The Southern Fish is usually depicted on star maps under the feet of Aquarius, where it swallows up the water poured from his urn. In the heavens the fish can be seen drinking water flowing from the jar of Aquarius and old pictorial sky maps depict the Southern Fish drinking the water flowing from the jug of Aquarius (the water bearer). Other stories credit the stellar fish swallowing the waters of the great deluge, thus saving the world. Thence it flowed north and emptied its stream just under the foot of the constellation of Orion.

Answer for yourself: What is this connection between Orion and "water" all about? Why is Orion standing in the water of Heaven? Does it relate to the Soul and mankind's two births and two mothers? Since Orion is believed to be symbolic for the Soul of the deceased Osiris then does Orion standing in the water of heaven speak to man that in order for his Soul to ascend to Heaven at his death then man must experience these "two births" and "two mothers" otherwise known as being "born again"? Yes but we will have to wait to get there when we shall see this religious doctrine in the actual Sky and Heaven itself. But understand now that this is the Uranograph at is most glorious.

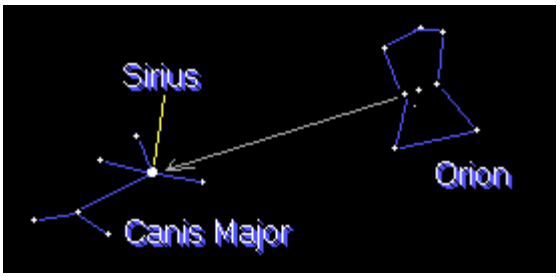
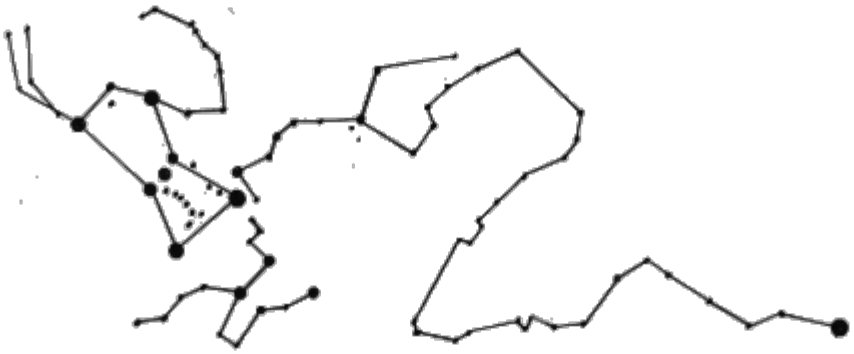
Answer for yourself: What is so strange about the river flowing "north"? What is in the "North" of Heaven"? Does it relate to the Soul in some way?



Understand that few rivers flow north. Unless land is totally flat, rivers of water run downhill. The vast percentage of rivers on the planet flow in a southerly direction because the source (usually in the mountains) is to the north of the mouth. If the source of a river is at a higher elevation than the mouth, that river will run from the source to the mouth. However, if that (higher) source is to the south of the mouth, that river will then flow to the north (downhill).

Answer for yourself: What other rivers of religious importance flows "north"? Are you aware that both the Jordan river in Israel and the Nile river in Egypt flows north like the celestial river of life depicted as the Southern Fish (Pisces Austrinus)? Coincidence? For rivers to flow "north" is extraordinary for most of the world's rivers. The Southern Fish, the constellation in the Sky, was sacred to the Egyptians, who imagined the infamous Nile fish had swallowed the phallus of the dismembered Osiris after his body had been cut up into 14 pieces. In Egyptian mythology, the constellation Orion is the abode of Osiris, the pharaoh-god who was slain by his jackal-headed brother, Set. Osiris conquered death and, once resurrected, Osiris' Soul came to reside in Orion. In Ancient Egypt Orion was known as The Soul of Osiris. The symbol of Isis in the heavens was the star Sept (Sirius), which was greatly beloved because its appearance marked not only the beginning of a new year, but also announced the advance of the Inundation of the Nile, the flooding of the Nile, which betokened renewed wealth and prosperity of the country and the physical salvation of mankind in Egypt. Isis, thus associated with the star Sirius, was regarded as the companion of Osiris, whose Soul dwelt in the star Sah - Orion.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that two shafts, called "Soul Shafts" in the Great Pyramid on the Giza Plateau, were projected to these Stars implying their great religious significance? We will deal with this in greater detail later.



In Ancient Egypt the Milky Way was considered to be the Celestial Nile. The River Nile was the earthly Water of Life to the Ancient Egyptians; without the Nile there would have been no great Ancient Egyptian civilization. In like manner, according to the "Pattern in the Mount", the Milky Way, was their Spiritual Water of Life. We easily see the importance for the river Nile to the Egyptians for it was the very "life of God" to the people and the nation. It was their "salvation" physically. Thus the River Nile corresponds on Earth to the Milky Way in the Sky and Heaven. Again this is Uranography at its best. Likewise the the pyramids and their very positions and alignments on Earth correspond to the Stars above in the Sky and Heaven and their positions above. The uranograph is complete as it should be if one was to "follow the Pattern on the Mount" and build it on Earth. Ancient Egypt did. There exists an undeniable correspondence between the plan of Giza, its pyramids, and Stars in the Sky. The three pyramids of Giza are aligned to the Stars in the constellation Orion's belt, and Orion would have been the celestial representation of Osiris, with the Milky Way aligning with the Nile as it passed the pyramids. Let us not forget the coming of Osiris was announced by Three Wise Men: the three Stars Mintaka, Anilam, and Alnitak in the belt of Orion, which point directly to Osiris' star in the east, Sirius, significator of his birth. The uranograph is again complete as it should be if one was consciously attempting to build upon earth the representative "Pattern On The Mount" that exits in Heaven upon Earth. Let us not forget that these ideas, Spiritual concepts, characters, and names were "celestial" before they were "terrestrial".

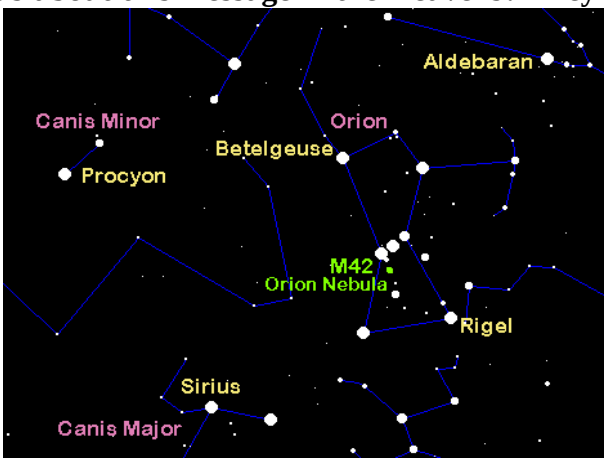
We need to take note that when Osiris died that his Soul was believed to ascend into the Heavens and his new existence was in the Stars with God which was symbolized as Orion, the god-man in the Sky and to get there Osiris had to cross over the river of life which was the "Jordan" in the Sky. It was called by Egypt first the River Eridanus which lies to the right of the feet of Orion as you see below. And often we think of crossing the River Jordan as crossing through the river of death at our body's demise and arriving in the eternal realms of God which is exampled for us by Osiris - Orion who is the "celestial pattern"; the "Pattern in the Mount". Orion-Osiris is at the top left of the image and and his right foot is touching the River Eridanus (the Nile-Jordan in Heaven). He is teaching mankind that in order to ascend and return to Heaven man must be "born again" and complete the evolution of his "natural man" into the "spirit man" which both Ancient Egypt and Judaism both attest.

The Eridanus is known as the Celestial River. It most often related to the Nile or Euphrates Rivers because they were so important to ancient civilizations. Eridanus is the second longest constellation in the night sky which agrees in like with the Nile which flows over 4000 miles. The Eridanus is a very long, winding river that starts at the left foot of Orion in the north, sweeps south of Taurus, west to the edge of Cetus, then doubles back east to Caelum, and eventually ends far to the south, at the border with Hydrus. The name given by the Hebrews to the same stream of evolving life of God was of course the Jordan River, for they had named their one great river with that designation of the stream of evolution, taken from the sky charts of the earlier religious systems.



Answer for yourself: You mean the Ancients mapped the River Jordan in the Sky long ago and it was known "celestially" long before it was given that name "terrestrially" on Earth? Yes. So the River Eridanus is likened to the Nile and to the Jordan and again our "uranograph" is complete as it adheres to the "Pattern in the Mount".

It is simple when you get on the scent of truth and study hard and read for yourself the "clues" and "keys" to this puzzle we call the Bible. What a "detective story" we have here. The spelling of this name Jordan was derived from the name which the Greeks had given to it, the River Eridanus. And that, going back a step, was derived from the original name it bore in the Egyptian system, namely, the "Iaru-Tana". Iaru is the Egyptian source of the Greek "hieros", and of the Hebrew "Jeru" as in "Jeru"-salem, both meaning "sacred," "divine." This is Heaven's "Divine River". But "Tana" was actually the name of the geographical lake out of which the great Nile River had its source, the celestial lake or sea of source. It was localized in each country reformulating the archaic religious tradition to suit its geography as the main river or lake available on their map; in Egypt, the Nile, in Palestine the Jordan, in Babylonia and Persia the Tigris-Euphrates, in India the Indus or Ganges.

Answer for yourself: So did Egypt translate the north-flowing river in Heaven mentioned above and apply it to the Nile in Egypt? Did the Jewish Rabbis and later sages translate the Celestial River in the Sky and Heavens and apply it to the Jordan? It would appear so.

This great cluster of bright Stars in Orion, to which the water flows North from the mouth of the Southern Fish, can be seen in our winter sky and it was in ancient astrological portrayal, the representative of the Krst/Karest/Christ. Orion was the Krst/Karest/Christ; the mighty hunter, who was followed by his dog -- the great Dog Star Sirius.

Answer for yourself: What can the Ancient Spiritual Masters teach us about this message in the Heavens? They teach us that Sirius, as the "dog-star", the "animal nature", trails Orion)the ascended Soul within mankind) and in so doing instructs mankind that that the power of the Divine Mind Of God in humankind, seeking to stamp the shape of its creative ideas upon all of fleshly matter, led the way of evolution of mankind as a species, while behind it trailed the animal (the dog star; symbolic of the animal nature in mankind in subjection to the Spirit-man..the Krst/Karest/Christ within). Again we find the "two natures of mankind" in the Sky and Heavens; one in ascendancy and one, the natural man in decrease. Heaven teaches us that the animal nature in mankind must be mastered by the "Spirit Man"; the indwelling Osiris - Hours as the Krst/Karest/Christ. It is all in the Stars before it was in mankind's "theologies". Sirius, the faithful dog on the bottom left, represents the fleshy body and nature within mankind which is to be led by the Spirit-Soul after awaking in mankind (the Christ).

Eph 5:14 14 Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. (KJV)

Gal 4:19 19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ (Krst/Karest/Horus) be formed in you, (KJV)

The "Christ" awakened life is to be the shepherd of our Souls and in so doing harnesses, leads, and tames the animal nature of mankind throughout this life. At least this is the intent as modeled for all mankind in the "Pattern in the Mount".

Since we have mentioned Heavenly water we need mention that the fish as a symbol must then be thought of as the system of organic material evolution that carries the nucleus of Divine Mind forward to its goal of the consummation of natural life in its final blossoming out into Spiritual Godhead within these bodies of matter in this present existence. Whether discerned in its full Spiritual significance or not, enough of this significance adheres to the symbol in the primary motivations of Christianity to have been embodied in a feature of priestly attire, the Bishop's mitre, which is shaped in the form of the fish's mouth. The evidence for this is found in the Latin name of "os tincae", or the tench's mouth, the tench being a fresh-water European fish, which, the dictionary says, was noted for its tenacity of life. The door of life was figured in the shape of a fish-mouth at the western, or feminine end of a church. The Zodiac House of Pisces is the house of the birth of Saviors; Jesus, Horus, Ioannes and other divine Avatars which came to mankind with Heaven's message as Ichthys, "fish" in Greek. This, if you recall, is the "Second Birth" or the birth of the "Spirit-Man". We all know that a fish's bladder contains air submerged under water and we see this air rising from the fish's mouth most easily if you have an aquarium. This should speak to us Spiritually since it speaks of substantial Spiritual genius. We should see in this the power of the natural world to generate and bring to the surface of physical existence the power and function of the Deific Mind of God as symbolized as "breath" or "air" (Spirit-Soul) in the material conditions of all physical life which are symboled by water. Vividly, then, the fish as a symbol, holds before our minds the idea that just as bubbles arise from the bottom of an aquarium so then the very Fire of God, the Divine Spirit, after incarnating into the clay of mankind, is subjected under the influence of the watery elements in man's lower psychic nature; like his animal nature, his senses and emotion. According to the "Pattern in the Mount" it is the will of the Creator God that the power of this Deific Mind or Divine Spirit rises to the surface of mankind's consciousness exactly like the bubbles arising from the fish's mouth. Man is to experience the "resurrection from the deadness of his animal nature" and "ascend" while he yet lives in these carnal bodies. Nature furnishes no end of these images of the forms of divine truth, but it seems we are too dull and spiritually blind to discern them. The fish symbol thus gives us the image of Spirit-Mind in the submerged animal nature of flesh, or the God-Krst/Karest/Christ power buried in matter. In spite of its burial, however, it does not die, because it still can breathe under the water. Several chapter-titles of the Ancient Egyptian Book of the Dead speak of "giving air to the Soul of Nu in the underworld." Therefore ancient constructions of enlightened revelation, finding counterparts universally in nature, pictured the Divine Soul in incarnation by the symbolism of the great fish transporting the Divine unit of Spirit through, across or under the sea of life and landing it safely on that "farther shore" of heavenly bliss and glory.

Answer for yourself: What should this remind us of?

Here is the core of all the meaning that is attached to the Jonah-whale allegory. For, and do not doubt it, "Jonah," along with Joshua, Joash, Josiah, Jesse, Jehoash, Joram and others, is the same name etymologically as the name for "Jesus". We have here conclusively an allegory that is mistaken daily as if "literal" or "historical". It is this same "Jonah" or "Jesus" who in the New Testament was also tossed on a ship in the tempest, and, till aroused by the distressed sailors, was lying fast asleep in the lower part, or "belly" of the ship as Jonah laid in the "belly" of the great fish awaiting his "second birth". If you recall after this "second birth" of Jonah in the fish's belly, a birth in the the stellar House of Pisces, this "birth from Above" (Heaven), his whole nature changed toward the Ninevites whom before he despised. This "Krst/Karest/Christ Nature" or this "Jesus Nature" likewise has laid asleep way too long in the depths of our human ship, our animal nature and carnal body. It lies in need of awakening and remains still until in the perils of the storms of life of our emotional and sensual life awaken it and in so doing the "Krst/Karest/Christ Nature" is aroused to take rightful helm of our lives as the "Bishop and Shepherd" of our Souls.

"Soul Science", as we are seeing taught by the Ancient Egyptians, otherwise known as mythology, taught that God had set Orion in the Sky to teach us about our Soul. Orion was pressing on in pursuit of the Pleiades, that cluster of six Stars some little distance ahead of him, called the Seven Sisters, but with one star missing. If you look closely on the picture on the right you can see the Pleiades to the upper right of Orion to which he gives chase in the Sky and Heavens.

Answer for yourself: What did the Spiritual Masters teach us about Orion's pursuit of the Pleiades according to the "Pattern in the Mount"?

The Pleiades is an open star cluster, also known as the Seven Sisters and is a conspicuous object in the night sky with a prominent place in ancient mythology. However, with the naked eye only 6 of these 7 sister Stars can be seen.

To understand this then we must not forget that Orion again is the Soul whose purpose is to "ascend" to God and the Heavens as it evolves and obtains its intended Spiritual maturation within each of mankind. That being so then the subtle intimations here can be only that Spirit-Soul must seek to express itself through the agency of the natural world, nature being feminine always (Mother Nature;

Virgo...the first natural birth), and also eternally structuralized upon the basis of the creational number seven. That one "sister" or "star", symbolic for one plane of existence, cannot be seen by mankind as is as yet missing. This intimates that, since all the cycles of evolving life manifest six formations of physical substance, or planes of existence for the expression of their creative forces, the Spiritual mind-power which this structuralization of cosmic energy is destined to express, not being physical, but Spiritual, is not manifest in visible form with its six-fold basis.

Answer for yourself: What is this 7 planes of existence?

The seven planes of existence, from the highest to the lowest, are:

- Adi Plane
- Anupadaka Plane
- Atma Plane
- Buddhic Plane
- Mental Plane
- Astral Plane
- Physical Plane

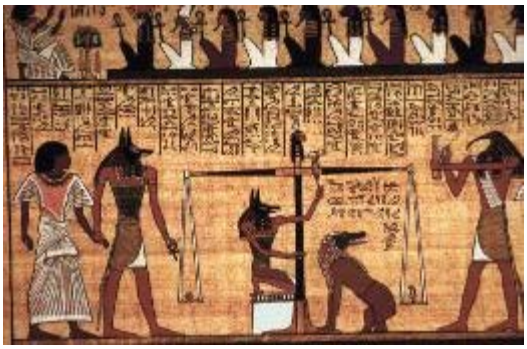
It is not my intention to get into this now but let us remember that creation covers six days, and not seven, God resting on that cosmic Sabbath from his labors. The physical universe is always the visible side; the Cosmic Deific Mind Power or Energy that each cycle demonstrates by the work it produces at six levels, is invisible. If imagery of this sort seems overly subtle and a bit thin in spots, it must be realized that the religious mind of the ancient day behaved itself, so to say, in excursions of fancy of this kind; and if one will follow them closely, they will be found to foreshadow and prefigure the soundest and most unassailable truth than one can ever hope to know this side of the grave. So we see that our Spirit-Soul must seek to express itself in this physical world in which we life and as a prelude to this is must experience its "second birth" and its "two mothers" in order to compete its Spiritual evolution in this plane of existence. That we see again according to this "Pattern in the Mount" is impossible without the ture "Born Again" experience as symbolized in the Uranography and the Sky and Heavens with the Constellation Orion-Osiris as the "ascended Soul"; a great picture for all mankind to both know, recognize, and follow.

We have seen that the Eridanus River of life, emanating from the mouth of the Southern Fish, flowed right up to the foot of Orion. As the stellar type of the Krst/Karest/Christ in man, the star, or constellation of Orion is thus represented as standing in incarnation at the point where the upsurging stream of evolution of matter and form pours at his feet the forces and energies of the physical world, and it is for him to gather them up and utilize them. In this exertion and service Orion-the Soul fulfills the purpose for which his heavenly Father sent him out to stand on the border between spirit and matter. So poetic imagery and mythology gave this creature of philosophical though various manifestations and symbolisms in order to typify man as the dual creature he is, combining the body of a natural animal with the Soul of an embryonic god, in sea imagery a human with the feet or tail of the fish as seen in the mermaid. It simply testifies with a charming figure that the base of man's life is immersed in the sea. The very throne of the great God Osiris, the ascended Soul in the Heavens, was set over a River of water in Heaven.

Ps 29:10 10 The LORD sitteth upon the flood; yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever. (KJV)

Ps 24:2 2 For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. (KJV)



Answer for yourself: What kind of truths is God putting in the Sky for you and me? The truths thus intimated are always deeply related to man's inner life and experience, are in fact the deepest Spiritual truths regarding the constitution and goal of mankind that the human mind can grasp.

Answer for yourself: What is the big picture to all of this so far? What is the message God is sending mankind long before there were any Bibles?

Well we are having our eyes and minds opened in ways we never imagined. We see that the fish (Pisces) is the symbol of organic life, or the second birth which is generated out of the inorganic life (Virgo) which is the first birth. We see that the ancient starry religious drama represents to all who have "eyes to see and ears to hear" that the stream of organic life (a conscious mankind possessing a Deific Soul) emanates from the substrate matter of the physical universe, from the very womb of matter (Virgo again is symbolic of the first birth that intends a second birth in Pisces). Thus we hear: "ye must be born again"; mankind must have two birth and thus two mothers [a water mother (natural birth), a fish mother (Spiritual birth)]). As the sages like to phrase it often, when evolution of life has developed to its supreme organic unity of function, and thence it proceeds up the path of growth and Spiritual development until it reaches the state of Godhood then and only then can it be symbolized truly by Orion (symbol for the second birth that ascends to the Heavenly regions). In brief they teach that the stream of organic evolution, arising out of the sea, the primordial waters of Nun, reaches its high goal of Godhood in the Spiritual Orion....the second birth. It is important to take notice that the astrological depiction does not give it as arising out of the water directly, but out of the Southern Fish (symbolic for the second existence or birth), itself the product of a long evolution of organic structure arising out of the inorganic virgin matter. It is important to clarify this double-stage procedure of the drama of creation, for inorganic matter could not generate the self-conscious mind in creatures starting at the bottom of the scale of manifest being. Inorganic matter was the "Old First Mother," and could give birth only to organic matter, considered as her daughter. The daughter, then, in turn, since she through the instrumentality of her highly developed specialized functionism such as brain and nerves could give birth to mind, reason, will and love in her creatures, would thus be the second mother and her child the Christ. In Zodiacal terms the Virgo -- Mother energy of matter, could not herself birth the Christ, but could produce her own daughter, Pisces, who representing the organic universe, could bear the Christ consciousness in the brains and hearts of her offspring. Virgo had first to bear Pisces, and Pisces in turn bore the Krst/Karest/Christ. This explains why all ancient Sun-Gods and Saviors were "born" in the house of Pisces, the house of fish and of bread, ie., Bethlehem.

I have taken considerable time to elaborated at length for the reader that this necessity of two births and two mothers as taught by Ancient Egypt in the beginning of time, which was by the way understood by the archetype and "Pattern in the Sky and Heavens" and the "Pattern in the Mount". This same "Pattern" can be found in its totality in the Gospel narrative in the New Testament. All the ancient Christs were said to have two mothers, the First Old Mother, and the Second or Spiritual Mother. In the Egyptian system they were the goddess sisters and twins, Isis and Nephthys. The myth said that Isis conceived the divine Son Horus and Nephthys gave him birth. Changing the figure, again it stands that Isis bore him and Nephthys suckled him. In the Gospels the two appear in the persons of Anna and her daughter Mary. Anna gives birth to Mary; Mary gives birth to the Christ. Some scholars assert that Anna, the name, means simply "year," from Latin "annum", thus a "year." If by "year" is meant the annual round of nature's cycles, the origin may be credible. Mary in this case would be, not the Virgin Mother (that would be Anna, as the first or inorganic matter is the virgin form), but the Fish, or Spirit-Mother, and her son, born in Pisces, would testify to this character. However, it is only necessary to realize when ignorance followed intelligence, there was confusion in the precise handling of the symbols, and, as we have seen, both bread and fish symbols, as well as Virgo and Pisces features, have been combined and inter-blended. But it was not so in the beginning when Ancient Egypt brought down from Heaven this "Soul Science".

This is not only intriguing but important for us at the same time in order not to lose sight of the fact that the representative religious doctrines of the "necessity of being born again" have their roots not only in Ancient Egypt but in Judaism long before Christianity will adopt the same religious teaching and butcher it and destroy it from its original intent. And to think that this "Born Again" teaching comes from the Stars and the Constellations where the true Spiritual Message of God and this "Soul Science" has always been written since the beginning of time. Mankind only confuse these truths the longer time passes and the further from their original inception that mankind finds itself the more "keys" to the proper interpretation of this "Soul Science" are lost or misplaced. To insure that we have the ultimate truth we must restore these ancient Spiritual teachings to their first true understanding if we ever hope to have the real truth behind the religious doctrines we are taught today and in so doing truly equip ourselves for meeting God "face to face" when we stand before Him at the weighting of our hearts.

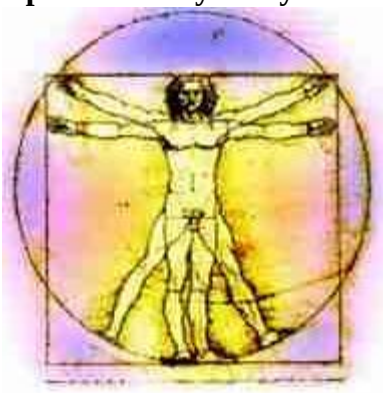
As stated briefly above the Uranograph is the chart of the heavens with the Constellations demonstrated thereon which were depicted in various symbolical representations. From the most remote times the ancients dealt with a celestial chart or map, on which their earliest teachers had attempted to depict the features of the Soul's experience in the scenes which their enlightened imaginations had traced about the star clusters.



Answer for yourself: Did the ancient Spiritual masters of Egypt and Mesopotamia see in the path of the Sun (the focused representative Energy of our Solar System which is but a symbol for the ONE Cosmic Intelligent Energy of All) as it moved through the 12 hours of the Zodiac to be but the symbolical representation of the birth, life, maturation, death, and revivification of the God's Soul/Christ of God? Yes they did! And this "Horus Story" or the "Dionysus Story" or the "Mithra Story" or the "Jesus Story" is but variations of the ultimate Spiritual allegories of the Descent of the Soul into matter and it birth, life, intended maturation and release and return to the Father at the demise of the earthly body. That is why all the lives of the sungods read as if taken from the same story. That is why our "Jesus Story" is the retelling of the earlier Divine Allegories of Osiris, Horus, Dionysus, Attis, Mithra, Chrishna, etc.

The stellar Zodiacs below at Denderah, Pylae and elsewhere are impressive reminders of the influence of this heavenly uranograph. The Great Pyramid, even now untouched by time is, according to the Denderah Zodiac, more than 78,000 years old. This planisphere on the ceiling of one of the oldest Egyptian temples, with its mysterious three Virgins between Leo and Libra, is understood today to have confirmed the truthfulness of the Egyptian priests who affirmed that even since their first Zodiacal records were commenced, the Poles had been three times changed within the plane of the ecliptic. This means that three sidereal cycles of 25,868 years each have passed and elapsed (H.P. Blavatsky, The Secret Doctrine, Vol. II, 368; 432-433). The civilization of Egypt is therefore untold ages old. Never was there a time when it appears to have been in its infancy, but all her arts and sciences were ever in full flower from the very moment of it bursting upon the stage of history. The discovery in quite recent years of the giant Zodiac, the Somerset Zodiac in England, is calculated to have existed since 2,700 B.C. It can be seen today in all its natural features in the countryside covering one hundred square miles, with the figure of Leo, the Lion, four miles from nose to tail-tip. This is but another most authentic attestation to the basic significance which symbolical astrology has held in ancient religious formulations. Present students have as yet little conception of how generally this graph was employed in Spiritual ideography and how pervasively it colored the composition of the scriptural writings. It is next to impossible to grasp subtle references in the Bible and other archaic literature without a knowledge of the features of this planisphere and Uranograph. Bibles are in fact, in a broad general sense, just the literary extension and amplification of the symbology of the zodiac! To those not possessing these "keys" of proper interpretation of the Divine Message in our Bibles this might sound mighty strange for such a statement until you have mastered the studies required to see the genius in such Spiritual Depiction which the ancient sages witnessed in God's Heaven above them. The Ancient Egyptian sages, priests, and mystics with elevated Spiritual insight that few seem to possess today were the first to write the history of the human Soul from what they witnessed in God's starry skies.

If we hold the ancient Spiritual Master of Egypt, for example, guilty of having thus perpetrated what seems to us today to be but pure fantasy then I assure you we are men and women whose ignorance knows no bounds. Upon scholarly study the reader can see for himself that these Spiritually inclined peoples were depicting history in that sphere where it had first occurred, before it continued later when it descended from Heaven above and found its reflection with mankind on earth. The undeniable fact revealed by such serious study into these issues finds that that Spiritual history had been established on a cosmic scale in the Heavens, in higher ranges of cosmic life, before it was ever to be repeated and copied according to "the Pattern in the Mount" in the human drama on this planet Earth. The heavenly man, in whose image and likeness earthly man is made, and in whose body the suns and planets are but cells and organs, was the prototype of man himself. And so it comes that humanity was in primordial times instructed to build its life "after the pattern of things in the heavens." Now we better understand the famous Egyptian axiom: "So Above, So Below". The planisphere, the Uranograph, was the historical and anatomical graph of the Divine Cosmical Man, and it became at once a secret glyph for the benefit of worldly humanity.

In the spirit of this understanding the religious teachers of antiquity diligently sought to write into human, racial, national and individual history the reflection or "pattern of the Uranograph" that God put in the Heavens for all mankind to witness. This effort was the secret motif back of all national epics and the allegorical Scriptures that we mistake for "literal history" today. The epic was an attempt to fashion national history in the similitude of the structural unity of the divine plan for macrocosmic, and by reflection, microcosmic, man. This is in general the theme of such an esoteric work as the Jewish Kabbalah for instance which is echoed not only in the Pyramid Texts, the Coffin, Texts, but in the Egyptian Book of the Dead as well as many other Spiritual works that exist in the world today including the Christian Bible.

Well it is time for a break. We will continue this article in the next article in this series.

THE HISTORICAL MEANING OF "BEING BORN AGAIN" AS CONTRASTED WITH WHAT CHRISTIANITY TEACHES TODAY: WHAT ARE WE TO BELIEVE? #1

- Answer for yourself: Are you "born again" according to what Jesus taught or according to what your Gentile Pastor teaches?
- Answer for yourself: Is there the remotest possibility that you might not be "born again" according to the Hebrew Scriptures and what it meant to Jesus, but "born" again according to Gentile theology?

Before you say "no way" you better get seated and read the whole of these two article for I promise you an eye opening experience if you do.

- Answer for yourself: Do you know the difference alluded to in the above two questions when the concept of "born again" is viewed in its Jewish context and later in its Gentile context?
- Answer for yourself: If we today in the Christian Church attach a different meaning to the Hebrew concept of "being born again" which is all together foreign and different from what it meant to Jesus when he spoke about it to Nicodemus, then what does Jesus think about our misinterpretation of such an important concept, or even more, what is the result of such a misunderstanding when we are judged in the world to come (Heaven)?

2 Cor 5:17 17 Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. (KJV)

- Answer for yourself: Are you a "new creation" as taught by Paul, or are you just "another creature"?
- Answer for yourself: If you call yourself a "new creation" and your Pastor or those on TV call you a "new creature," does calling yourself a "new creature" make you one, and do you know what being "one" actually entails?
- Answer for yourself: Have you fulfilled the requirements in the Bible to actually be a "new creature" according to Paul in II Cor. 5:17, and do you know what they are?

- Answer for yourself: What are you to do when most of you find out that you have not been taught correctly about what is required to be a "new creation in Messiah?"

Those are thought-provoking questions to say the least. I know most of you who are reading this article are tempted to put it down and consider what I have asked you to consider as absolute folly. I can only plead with you to read these two articles in full, and understand for yourself what I discovered over fifteen years of in-depth Bible study which was never taught to me by the Christian Church or even Seminary.

In order to peak you curiosity to read this article in full, I will expose at this time the real meaning Paul intended his Gentile hearers to have when he taught them about being a "new creation in Christ." Let us examine the passage in II Cor. in detail from resources like a Christian Greek Lexicon.

2 Cor 5:17

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. (KJV)

First of all it is mandatory we understand correctly what the word "creature" means in the original language in which Paul spoke and later was recorded in Greek.

The Thayer's Greek Lexicon [a Christian book no less] defines "creature" in II Cor. 5:17 as follows: 2937 Strong's Numbers: ktisis- the act of founding, establishing, building, etc.

- a) the act of creating, creation
- b) creation, that is, a thing created; used of individual things, beings, a creature, a creation
 - 1) anything created
 - 2) after a rabbinical usage (by which a man converted from idolatry to Judaism was called)
 - 3) the sum or aggregate of things created
 - 4) an institution, an ordinance
- Answer for yourself: Don't you find it almost startling that the concept accompanying the idea of being " new creature" carries with the intended meaning of turning from idols and idolatry to Judaism and not a religion like Christianity which is full of idolatry and considers itself a replacement for Judaism?
- Answer for yourself: Don't you find it almost startling that the concept accompanying the idea of being " new creature" carries with the intended meaning of turning from idols and idolatry to Judaism where Biblical Feasts and Festivals are observed instead on pagan holidays to which the early Catholic Church attached the name of Jesus centuries ago?
- Answer for yourself: Don't you find it almost startling that the concept accompanying the idea of being " new creature" carries with the intended meaning of turning from idols and idolatry to Judaism where the Sabbath is both observed and remembered instead of replacing it with the day already set aside by the pagans for sun worship?
- Answer for yourself: If your church does not teach and model for you the correct interpretation of the Bible by promoting the interpretation of these Hebrew Scriptures from a Jewish perspective since it is a Hebrew document, then how comfortable should you feel considering your faith and the practice of your faith since it probably contains very little that is Jewish; especially in light that you most likely have been taught to reject the Sabbath and the Seven Biblical Festivals?
- Answer for yourself: If your church does not teach and model for you the correct interpretation of the Bible by promoting the correct interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures from a Jewish perspective [especially since it is a Jewish book] then how comfortable should you feel considering your Gentile Christian faith and the practice of your faith when it finally dawns upon you that you have been following a religious belief system that deviates drastically from what Jesus believed?

WHERE WE MUST BEGIN TO UNDERSTAND CORRECTLY "BEING BORN AGAIN"

I guess I could just dive right in and tell you that we as Christians and followers of Jesus has completely misunderstood the Jewish concept of being "born again" but it would serve us well to first understand the historical context of such passages in order to fully appreciate the Jewish concept of being "born again" and the discourse between Nicodemus and Jesus as found in John chapter 3.

The Noahide Commandments are the Commandments given by the Torah (the Old Testament) to the Gentiles of the world (first given to Adam and later given to Noah), which according to Rabbinic tradition and the First Church Council in Acts 15:17-19 and Acts 15:28-29 (which was headed up by James, the Lord's brother and head of the Jerusalem church) were given by God to Gentiles like Adam and Noah. It is these commandments which if obeyed by the non-Jews of the world will be rewarded with eternal life! According to Rabbinic teaching & Acts 15 (which Jesus believed and taught himself along with his followers), those Gentiles who observe these precepts are assured their share in the World to Come, regardless of what fanciful interpretations were later to be invented by both the Catholic & Protestant churches and most probably heard in your modern churches today. Jesus was and is a Jew. He never ascribed to Baptist, Methodist, Catholic, Assembly of God, Church of Christ, or Mormon church doctrine. He believed and taught the truth as received from his Father in Heaven. The Christian must come to an understanding that the religion of Jesus (Biblical Judaism and not Rabbinic Judaism) has always recognized two different religious codes:

- 1) the 613 Laws and precepts given to the Jews following their liberation from Egypt [the Laws of Moses were added upon the existing Noahide revelation and commandments]
- 2) the earlier Noahide system of legislation for all mankind predated the Laws of Moses

DID JESUS INTEND TO REPLACE OR ABOLISH HIS RELIGION?

The eighteenth century Talmudist Rabbi Jacob Emden wrote a letter that has been discovered by archeologists which states: "Jesus (Yeshua) never intended to abolish Judaism, but only to establish a new religion for the Gentiles based upon the ancient Noahide Commandments transmitted by Moses on Mount Sinai." Let me say that Emden more correctly should have said "RE-ESTABLISH" for the Gentiles the religious foundations that had previously been given by God to the Gentiles since the Garden of Eden and later renewed at Sinai. Emden stressed in his letter that Jesus brought about a "double blessing" to the world, by strengthening the Torah of Moses and at the same time removing idolatry from the midst of the Gentiles. Unfortunately, Emden's thesis in the letter never gained a substantial following by fellow Jews. The most obvious reason would seem to be the frequent harsh statements made by Jesus against the rabbis and Jews of his time (Matt. 23). This chapter has seldom been correctly interpreted by the Christian Church because the church, for the most part, lacks the facts & information concerning the historical, religious, and political background surrounding Yeshua's statements which are necessary to correctly understand such a chastisement of a particular "sect" within the Pharisees, and not the Pharisees as a whole!Yeshua was not condemning the Pharisee movement, for he was proud to be one, especially a Pharisee belonging to the School of Hillel. Yeshua was not replacing Judaism with Christianity!

Emden helps us understand the original intentions of Yeshua and Paul as he analyzes the beginnings of Christianity. According to the Jewish rabbi, Yeshua and his Apostles, which were later sent by Yeshua to the Gentiles of the world, acted entirely within the Halakhah (correct and accepted Jewish law) in re-creating and re-establishing the religion God had previously given to the Gentiles which was based on the Noahide Commandments (the basic seven Noahide Laws consist of prohibitions against idolatry, blasphemy, killing, stealing, sexual sins, eating the limb of a living animal (cruelty to animals), and the imperative to establish courts of justice). According to the Jewish Talmud and Tosefta, those Gentiles who observe these statutes are considered to be of the Hasidim (pious ones) of the Nations and merit a share in the World to Come. Even within the Alenu prayer which is prayed by Jews and "God-Fearers" every Sabbath, it states "May all inhabitants of the earth recognize and know....". This means the Gentiles. This prayer for Gentiles is another proof that the will of God is for Gentiles not to perish but have everlasting life. In the Mishnah (the Oral Law), in Pirke Avot 4.1 it states: "Every assembly that is for the sake of Heaven will in the end be established." Christian assemblies are for the sake of Heaven, yet I must sadly inform you that they have accepted "IN PART" the Noahide Commandments, but not totally! God had given them all to the Gentiles and we are not told today about them in our Christian Churches!

THE FIRST GREAT COMMISSION…20 BC? YOU HAVE GOT TO BE KIDDING? NO; I AM NOT!

Yeshua and Paul were acquainted with the Essene authors and their Scrolls. Many passages in the New Testament bear striking similarity to the Scrolls (see my previous newsletter about Yeshua and the Secret of the Dead Sea Scrolls). A comprehensive overview of the writings and materials available to us today reveal the Essenes to have been extremely pious Jews who scrupulously followed the Torah (the instruction and teaching of God, more commonly called the "Law"), whereas Yeshua and Paul are by many portrayed incorrectly as having forsaken their Jewish origins and replaced the Torah with a new religion-Christianity. Such a study also reveals many problems with Essene theology but this is a study done elsewhere and is too extensive for this article. This portrayal of Yeshua forsaking his Jewish faith never happened; sadly I cannot say that for Paul [see Acts 21 where Paul was known to forsake Moses {commandments} and teach Jews to quit circumcising their children]! At lease this is the general picture one is presented with in the majority of churches today; and one will not be able to see through it without diligent study. But this premise goes against Emden's letter. A Christian should know that the Talmud records for us that Moses commanded the Jews to spread the knowledge of the Noahide commandments to all mankind!

Answer for yourself: Did you hear that?

God commanded Moses to spread the knowledge of the Covenant with Noah and its requirements to all Gentiles in the world. Judaism acknowledges this "Gentile Covenant for Salvation" as from God since the time of Mount at Sinai. The questions we have to ask ourselves is this:

- Answer for yourself: Does history record for us such an ambitious attempt to bring the Noahide Laws to Gentiles, and if so, who was behind it and when did it occur?"
- Answer for yourself: Were the pious Essenes the ones who attempted such a mission to the Gentiles in the generation preceding Yeshua's birth?
- Answer for yourself: Did Yeshua and Paul, through their ministries, follow in the Essene's footsteps and try to bring to fruition what the Essenes began in the generation before their birth?
- Answer for yourself: Where do the Gentiles correctly fit into the teachings of Jesus and Paul?

As Christians and followers of Yeshua, we must constantly search for the correct interpretations of such an event if we are to correctly understand the Bible and it's message to the Gentile and his salvation.

LET US LEARN FROM HISTORY

A passage in the Jerusalem Talmud records for us: "Menahem the Essene and 160 Essene disciples left the Jewish community" (remember not all Essenes lived in & around the Dead Sea) "about 20 B.C. on a mission to the Gentiles to take the "world" the Noahide Covenant, thus assuring obedient and observant Gentiles a place in the World to Come." This Menahem served as a vice-president of the Sanhedrin under the sage Hillel who was the Nassi (President of the Sanhedrin) some thirty years before Jesus' birth. The Mishnah makes quite clear that Menahem subjected himself totally to Hillel's authority (who loved the Gentiles), thus establishing a link between the Essenes and Hillel (who was a conservative Pharisee). Also of importance is the link between the two camps (Essenes & Pharisees) in that they were both known as "Hasidim." Menahem the Essene left Hillel's Sanhedrin for his mission to the world and was then replaced by the sage Shammai (who did not like the Gentiles). Shammai succeeded him as vice-president, probably about 20 B.C., and the influences of Hillel began to be replaced with those of Shammai [who was strongly anti-Gentile and deemed no Gentile worthy that the message of God's salvation be taken to them].

QUESTIONS NEEDING ANSWERS

- Answer for yourself: Was Menahem forced out by Shammai and his followers? Yes.
- Answer for yourself: Did Hillel's disciples join Menahem in his mission to the Gentiles? Yes.
- Answer for yourself: Did later rabbis approve of Menahem's mission to the Gentiles? Yes and No, depending on the particular school of Pharisees to which we refer.
- Answer for yourself: Did Shammai lend his support to the Gentile mission or did he discourage the Jews from being a light to Gentiles? He strongly discouraged it.
- Answer for yourself: In the time of Yeshua did the teachings of Hillel or Shammai have influence over the people of Israel and direct the course of the nation? Shammai was in ascendancy.
- Answer for yourself: Which of these two Pharisee schools supported Yeshua and which did Yeshua rebuke in Matt. 23? The School of Hillel supported Yeshua and the School of Shammai was rebuked by Yeshua.
- Answer for yourself: Was Yeshua against all the Pharisees? No, not at all, for he would say only two days before his death that the Pharisees (no longer the Sadducees) are the religious leaders of Israel, for from now on they sit in Moses' seat!

THE STORMY RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN HILLEL AND SHAMMAI

The first disputes regarding the Oral law (that was passed down for some 1700 years from Moses at Sinai) took place at this time between the sages and students of Hillel and Shammai (beginning about 20 years prior to Yeshua's birth). Their respective schools (Bet Hillel and Bet Shammai) were to clash over 350 times on issues of the Oral Law during the next hundred years. Nor were these always minor disputes for even once the Zealots connected with Shammai massacred and killed many of the Pharisees. The issues between Bet Hillel and Bet Shammai went to the very core of what Judaism stood for (and what Jesus stood for). One of the major areas of contention was Judaism's attitude toward salvation of the Gentiles.

Answer for yourself: What side would Yeshua agree with?

The Schools of Shammai and Hillel both accepted all of the commandments contained in the five "written" books of the Torah (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy). But the written law of Moses is too brief to be applied to practical issues of everyday life, and it was accepted that God also gave an oral and more detailed tradition was originally given to Adam, then to Noah, and finally handed down to Moses at Sinai. The debates of Bet Hillel and Bet Shammai centered on this oral tradition.

This oral tradition was passed down by Moses and it was forbidden to be set to writing. It was this Oral Law that later caused controversy among the rabbis; especially Bet Shammai and Bet Hillel. Finally, out of fear it would be forgotten due to all the persecution of Judaism and the deaths of its leaders at the hands of Gentiles, the sages permitted it to be committed to writing. The first major works were the Mishnah (200 A.D.) and the Tosefta (4th century), followed by two Talmuds; the Babylonian Talmud and the Jerusalem Talmud (5th century). The Babylonian version is more popular than the Jerusalem Talmud. Also at this time, books of homilies known as Midrash began to appear. The two major commentaries to the Babylonian Talmud are those of Rashi and the Tosefta. Why did I mention these works? The Mishnah, Talmud and Tosefta are the works of primary interest and authority when researching the Jewish law and tradition that surrounded Jesus and his teachings in the first century.

GOD CHOSE HILLEL'S INTERPRETATION FOR ALL TIME..IT CAME THROUGH A VOICE FROM HEAVEN

The School of Shammai [anti-Gentiles] came upon the Jewish scene 20 years before Jesus' birth, and flourished for around 100 years. After the destruction of the Temple in 70 A.D., the seat of the Sanhedrin was relocated to Yavneh, where the Halakhah (accepted interpretation of Jewish Law) of the School of Bet Hillel became once again the established Halakhah (accepted interpretation for all issues of Jewish law). Also at this time, God spoke from Heaven and a Heavenly Voice was heard declaring the Law was to be from that time forward decided in favor of the interpretations of the School of Bet Hillel. Since that time all Jewry has accepted the teachings of Bet Hillel. But this was too late to save Israel from the judgment of God for violating the commandments of the Second Tablet of the Law....the Commandments affecting relationships between man and men [Jew/Jew; Jew/Gentile].

HOW COULD YESHUA REPLACE WHAT HIS FATHER APPROVED?

Now listen closely. Jesus' debates with the Pharisees recorded in the New Testament were actually disputes with the Pharisees representing the School of Shammai and NOT the School of Hillel. Every Christian needs to set down and thing hard upon what I just said; especially in light of the teaching of anti-Semitic Gentile Christianity that all Pharisees opposed Jesus. Such a teaching is simply not true and a tragic misrepresentation of history. Jesus adopts the views of Hillel and the School of Hillel on "all" matters of Halakhah (interpretation) except on the matter of divorce, where he sides with the School of Shammai (which held a more strict interpretation). At the time of Jesus the interpretations and teachings Bet Shammai were influencing Jewish life and institutions more than Hillel's, and it was this way for almost 100 years. Through Shammai's teachings Israel was "loosing her way." It would be primarily the influence of Shammai and his hatred of the non-Jew by which Israel will fail to "merit" the Kingdom of Heaven and her King and the day of her visitation. The prophecies would not be fulfilled and the Messiah would not be revealed to a nation of Priests which hated those to whom she was called to go. Hillel had died when Jesus was 13-14 years old, and Hillel's influence in Israel was rapidly being replaced with the contemporary teachings of Shammai. Jesus (who accepted and agreed with Hillel) and Shammai (and Shammai's many students) were to clash continually! The Shammai Pharisees (and not the Hillel Pharisees) were responsible for handing over Jesus to the Chief Priest, and Sadducees and Romans for crucifixion, and this was a violation of Jewish Law. Couple this with the relationship the Shammaites had with the Sadducean Zealots in the priesthood, little wonder that the Chief Priests (Sadducees) capture Jesus and hand him over to the Romans to be crucified. Notice that the Hillel Pharisees (whom the majority of the people supported and followed) had nothing to do with Yeshua's crucifixion (it was they who warned Jesus to flee for his life in Luke 13:31). When you read Matt. 23 you cannot help but see Yeshua chastising the Pharisees; but what we fail to notice is that there were many sects under the umbrella of the Pharisees and Jesus says "Pharisees who"....indicating that many were not to be included in his rebuke of the insincere Pharisees. Yeshua took odds with the Shammaite Pharisees, not the Hillel Pharisees!

The Christian Church's failure to understand this has led them to erroneously believe that Jesus was rejecting his own religion by chastising the pharisees rather than calling for repentance within it by whose "who" had departed from God's will!

WE MUST UNDERSTAND THE TIMES AND THE TEXTS

Now let us learn something that Christianity has neve taught you.

The Jewish people knew from ancient prophecy that their Temple in Jerusalem would be destroyed by the Gentiles (Dan. 9 describes 490 years that are allotted to the Jewish people to either usher in the Messianic Kingdom or else suffer destruction). Bet Hillel believed that reaching out to the Gentiles (since historically Israel had failed to be "a light unto the Gentiles") was the correct approach to possibly avoiding the coming destruction. I cannot stress the importance of the above consideration in the minds of the Jews like Hillel in the times of Jesus. Hillel and his students [School of Hillel Pharisees] maintained that righteous Gentiles merit salvation just as Jews do (Hillel, like Yeshua, accepted the teachings connected with the Laws of Noah), and it was their hope that a mission to the Gentiles could avert the destruction of their land and win God's approval, thus influencing God to repent of the destruction prophesied. Bet Shammai however looked down upon the Gentile world, holding that NOT even the most righteous Gentile could merit a share in the World to Come. Shammai believed the Gentiles deserved "hell" and no attempts should be made to alter their destiny. The Jewish people and their teachers have since declared Bet Shammai's views to be null and void, as did the Heavenly Voice toward the close of the first century (just the way God spoke at Jesus' immersion). Shammai and the Bet Shammai were indeed the Pharisees and priests that Jesus of Nazareth and Paul of Tarsus had to contend with within the pages of our Bibles, and not the Hillel Pharisees. Paul the Apostle's insistence that Gentiles be admitted into the early Messianic Jewish Church was based on Bet Hillel's position that righteous Gentiles merit salvation. Let us not forget that Paul had studied under Rabban Gamaliel the Elder, a grandson of Hillel where he received such instruction! Now you can better understand that the anti-Jewish passages contained in the New Testament were directed against the Shammaites, and not the Judaism which followed Bet Hillel, or even today which follows the instruction and interpretations of Hillel.

UNDERSTANDING YESHUA'S MESSAGE

Yeshua and his disciples warned all men everywhere not to "destroy" the Torah of Israel. Understand that is Paul's theology early in his life; sadly we have letters later in his life that teach the opposite. It is not my wish to get into the "Paul Problem" in this article but let it suffice that the truth about Paul has not often found the light day; especially in light of Gentile tradition that as overtaken historical truth.

Answer for yourself: Did Paul change his religious beliefs during his life or did the Gentile church create theology and put it in Paul's mouth? You might be surprised at the answer to that question.

A Jew is not permitted to leave his Torah, for Paul wrote in his letter to the Galatians Chapter 5 (remember Galatians was written to Gentiles) "I, Paul, say to you that if you (writing to Gentiles) receive circumcision (along with immersion that makes you a Jew...ie., conversion), the Messiah will do you no good at all."

Answer for yourself: What did Paul mean by the above comment?

I will deal with the meaning of that last phrase in a future newsletter but the core of truth related to this statement by Paul is that the death of Yeshua caused a movement within a Gentile hating Judaism taking God and the Gentile's Covenant to the nations to the world; no longer was forced circumcision of the Gentile and full conversion the only option for the non-Jew to be taken the salvation of the Jews and fellowship with other Jews. Enforced circumcision was the tactic of the Shammai Pharisees to keep Gentiles apart from them. This is not love but rather hatred of the Gentiles. Acts 15 is the turning point on this. Paul goes on to say "You can take it from me that every man (Gentile) who receives circumcision [prior to Acts 15 circumcision was understood as necessary for the Gentile coming to God thereby converting to Judaism]. It was the belief of the early church that Yeshua was the Messiah and because of this belief and his death and expected return that James and the Jerusalem church repented of their bigotry toward the non-Jew and no longer could enforce circumcision upon the non-Jew as had been done previously. This major step by Jews occurs in Acts 15 and letters were written to strengthen the Gentile churches thereby enforcing this decision for all Gentiles (Acts 15 and 16). A Jew by birth of course was circumcised and is obligated to keep the "entire Torah" but a converted Gentile was also expected to be circumcised and immersed and likewise under obligation to keep the 'entire' Torah " (613). But this was to change with Acts 15 and the repentance of James and the Jerusalem Church in regards to enforced circumcision of the non-Jew. A "converted" Gentile was considered "Jewish" and obligated to keep the 613 mitzvoth as were other natural born Jews. Paul is teaching us that a Gentile (like you and me) who is immersed [traditional way of receiving non-Jews into faith with God] and who is circumcised [again part of the conversion process] is obligated to keep the entire Torah as if we were born a Jew! But since Yeshua's death lead to a movement within Judaism that repented of their stance toward non-Jews and no longer required circumcision of the non-Jew then to not take advantage of this nullifies the benefit of Yeshua's death and the movement that it produced. If one did not recognize this blessings [no longer required of a non-Jew to be converted to be accepted by God] that comes from the death of Yeshua then we better understand Paul's statement that Yeshua [believed to be the Messiah] profited them not at all.

- Answer for yourself: Did you hear that?
- Answer for yourself: What about Paul and his teaching that the Law is passed away?

It must now be obvious that Paul never intended for that to be your understanding; he never said that! Our problem is that we misinterpret the teachings of Paul not having a proper background necessary to understand correctly what he is saying. Let us begin with what happens when we are "Born-Again". Understand that Judaism was becoming divided in how to handle the non-Jew. The Jewish hatred for the Jews had enforced full conversion and circumcision on the male in hopes of it being a deterrent from having to deal with them since the Jews looked down on the non-Jew. But not all Jews did; as we just saw in Yeshua and the Pharisee School of Hillel. Judaism was torn within on what to do with the non-Jew. Previously being circumcised and then immersed meant full conversion. This was called "Being Born Again" in a Jewish context. This is not a Christian term; only stolen by them and given a new definition much later. But being "Born Again" has been wrenched from its Jewish context and given a meaning completely different from what it meant to Jesus/Yeshua. Now the question of enforcing circumcision as part of this process was being rethought by Jews who were repenting of their bigotry toward the Gentiles. Acts 15 again will be the pivotal point in this theological diversity and the Messianic branch of Hillel Phariseeism will change their ways. Yet at the same time the Shammai School will continue their repressive measures toward the non-Jew and sadly this will be the dominant stance for Israel and will ultimately lead to its destruction in 70 C.E.

More to follow in the concluding article where we will tackle the intricate meanings of being "Born Again." Shalom.

THE HISTORICAL MEANING OF "BEING BORN AGAIN" AS CONTRASTED WITH WHAT CHRISTIANITY TEACHES TODAY: WHAT ARE WE TO BELIEVE? #2

In the previous article we examined the condition of the no-Jew in relationship with Israel and it's responsibility to be a Priest to the nations. We saw historically that Israel had failed in such a mission. Yet at the same time we saw a small section of Judaism which understood Israel's failure to bring the non-Jew to God and had repented of such bigotry toward the non-Jew and had mobilized several movements and attempts to reach the non-Jewish world with the Laws of Noah and the Covenant of Noah that provided Eternal Life for the non-Jewish believer. We also saw how the doctrine of circumcision which had never been required of the non-Jew as used by the Jews as a deterrent to keep the non-Jew from interaction and fellowship with the Jews.

Answer for yourself: What was Judaism to do with the non-Jew and how would they be led to God? Would full conversion to Judaism which required circumcision and immersion be required or only immersion and what was the Jewish understanding of the SPIRITUAL DYNAMICS that accompanied such immersion?

You might now be aware of it at present but the answers to above questions have the potential to change you life.

Now let us continue where we left off in the first article.

WHAT DID THE CONCEPT OF "BEING BORN AGAIN" MEAN TO JESUS? SHOULD IT MEAN THE SAME TO ME?

Before going on we must provide the reader some background information about immersion and its connection to being "Born Again." We must at first understand that "Born Again" is a Jewish concept and not a Gentile concept, not a Baptist concept, not a Catholic concept, and not even a Christian concept. If you want to know what being "Born Again" means the way Jesus and Nicodemus used it in John 3 then you have to ask a Jew or a Jewish scholar. To do otherwise and seek the meaning from the Vatican or any Evangelistic ministry that is on our televisions guarantees you receive an anti-Semitic replacement religious doctrine devoid of Divine truth. I apologize for other Christian ministers who have failed to such sufficiently in order to learn what these very important concepts meant to Jesus before they begin to teach them; sadly doing it wrong.We can change the meaning of "Born Again" and its intricate involvement with immersion as applied to both Jews and non-Jews but in so doing we only deceive ourselves from what God intended it mean. We can alter religious doctrines all day long and believe me this has been done but down deep in your heart I would hope you would want to know what being "Born Again" meant to Jesus and understanding it as such. For the very life of me I cannot understand how anyone can call himself a Christian or a follower of Jesus/Yeshua and not want to believe like Jesus and accept what he believed about being "Born Again." Startling as it might sound the vast, vast majority of Christendom will tell you that they are "Born Again" never knowing what it really means. Even more tragically such a declaration by the vast majority of Christians make them out to be liars as the fruit of being "Born Again" in the context used by Jesus in John 3 is absolutely lacking in their lives. I will make this very plain in the forthcoming article. So this article will be one of the biggest challenges possibly in your religious life.

Answer for yourself: What did being "Born Again" mean to Jesus/Yeshua? What happens when one was "Born Again" according to its Biblical definition and not the later Gentile reinterpretation of it?

In answering this we must deal with a very important issue concerning how a man comes to God and what is involved in it. This spiritual dynamic is often over looked by Gentile advocates of the current teaching of "Born Again" adopted by Gentile Christianity which finds its origins in the false atonement connected with a "literalized" sunworship. There is a "true Biblical Atonement" but due to our forged Christian Bibles which are not truthful to the Hebrew Scriptures we never learn of this; that is until we die and meet God face to face. Roman Christianity changed not only this atonement but many other "major doctrines" as well in their unbelieveable hatred of the Jews. If you think I am kidding then I challenge you with all that I can muster to read the following websites over the next months and see if the evidence and facts unknown to presently are not overwhelming and totally convincing.

What you will find is the above studies is that the Spiritual concept of the "dying/rising" godman refers not to some supposed historical person named Jesus but to the God in you, your Soul who is to awaken in your fleshly body and coupled with your awareness of your Divine status and responsibilities before God you hopefully will elevate your existence in this physical plane of existence by feeding your Soul/Spirit on the true bread that comes down from Heaven, the Torah, and in so doing allow your Soul to grow, mature, and accomplish its intended purpose in its incarnation. In such studies you will see how the "pattern" of the dying/rising "godman" was tragically literalized by Rome in earliest centuries of the Christian era and in so doing see as well the altered the "Gospel" of God and His message as to how the Soul is to achieve Eternal Life in this incarnation in "you". Rome, changing this "Gospel" and Message of God for all mankind as robbed us of the truth concerning the Soul and its mission in this world when emphasis is laid on "belief" instead of "deeds in obedience to the Laws of God". Literalizing the "godman" and the "dying/rising godman", which was always understood "allegorically" for the Soul within by these Ancients, termed "pagans" by Rome, we today have been given a false "Christ" let alone "Messiah" by Rome. We tragically live out our existence as Christians never understanding what is required or desired in "being Born Again" and tragically die unprepared for our reunion with the Father. Boy, that is a lot to take in but if can and will this then you will see how important the concept of "being Born again, which I just described to you above, is for you and your Soul

Now it is time for the truth concerning being "Born Again." Biblically speaking when a person, either a Jew or Gentile turns from idols, from sin, and repents, and prays and asks forgiveness, and makes restitution, or bring alms following his repentance, confession, and prayer then he has received forgiveness of his sin. This is known Biblically as atonement. This is what the historical Jesus understood concerning both his Jewish Scriptures and his faith of Biblical Judaism. Of course Gentile Christianity and its New Testament accepts an alternate atonement. Without study into the origin of this replacement atonement no one will ever know that it is reproduced sun worship applied to a Jew by Rome. Now it is given that such a one who repents, prays, confesses his sin and brings restitution and alms is one already introduced to the God of Israel. Usually of course this is a Jew. Unknown to most Christians is that a Jew was born into Covenant with God unlike Gentiles and was circumcised the 8th day of his life which was the "sign" of that Covenant. When a Jew became a son or daughter of the Covenant then they were immersed according to the teachings of the Tanakh. This was not a simple water dip as we are taught by Gentile Christianity. Something SPIRITUAL happened to the one immersed that was noticed by God but not by man. These immersions were called "BEING BORN AGAIN" each and every time they were done; it was NOT a one time event! The Rabbis understood that not all the Commandments from God were the same and one special group of Commandments were called "Hukkim" which was understood by the Rabbis as "commands from God that did not make human sense yet accomplished spiritual realities in the Heavens." Immersion is one such "Hukkim." This gets somewhat technical so I would like to paraphrase if I might. The Rabbis understood such an "Hukkim" concerning immersion as a "spiritual step toward the Throne of God in the Heavens." They understood to the rational mind such immersion would would seem to not have any affect on our "spiritual standing before God" but yet understood that it did. This was so important to the Rabbis that we understand the great number of immersion baths located outside the Temple for the worshippers would be immersed become attending "church" if you get my drift. They understood what we as Christians don't; namely that through immersions one was accomplishing something spiritual in their walk before God. Now understand that immersions such as these "Hukkim" were not done indiscriminately; but rather they were commanded at specific times.

- One was instructed to immerse following repentance from a sin where he was again "moving closer to God in the spirit realm."
- But more than that the Rabbis saw that the Tanakh commanded "being Born Again" through these immersions (mikveh) before one observes or celebrates the Sabbath and each of the Seven Biblical Festivals. These "mo'ed" are "appointed times" and "rehearsals" with God and special times with God. One prepares his heart and then "immerses" before sanctifying such "appointed times" with God because at these special times commanded by God one again is "moving closer to God in the spirit realm."
- A woman following her menses and her uncleanness since being tainted with blood was commanded to be "Born Again" through immersion before she could take her place again in the community and her husbands's bed.

As you can see the Rabbis understood such "immersions" and "mikvehs" as Commands by God that did not make rational sense yet God is God and God understands the need for these "immersions" be done by man whereby man was drawing closer to God in the Spirit realm. We find that only one "immersion" by Yeshua is recorded in the New Testament and that is the one right before Yom Kippur. Little wonder that a myriad of Jews had repented of their sins and had grouped themselves to be "immersed" like Yeshua before Yom Kippur. This was mandatory before one could observe or partake of Yom Kippur which was beginning at the dusk of the very day.

This explains the Jewish concept of being "Born Again" but does not explain it as applied to the non-Jew. This we will do now.

THE GENTILE AND BEING "BORN AGAIN"

The New Testament describes quite adequately the standing of the non-Jew with God:

Paul in writing to Gentiles states:

Eph 2:12 12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: (KJV)

That is pretty bleak if you ask me. This is the Gentile's standing with God before he learns how to approach and be accepted with God. Israel we saw in the first article was hesitant in taking the non-Jew his Noahide Covenant and the ways by which he could be accepted with God. In fact we saw that Israel made it very difficult upon the non-Jew by enforcing circumcision upon a fully adult male in hopes that it served as a deterrent to keep them away from the Jewish people. We also mentioned that if a non-Jew desired to identify with the Jewish people and become a son of the Covenant as a Jew than he would be required to convert to Biblical Judaism through circumcision and immersion just like the Jew. This means that the non-Jew was being "Born Again" just like the Jew in his drawing closer to God following his repentance, prayer, confession, restitution, and alms which he was taught to bring according to the Tanakh.

This sticking issue if you remember was over "circumcision" or the "lack of circumcision" and the acceptance of such a one into the Israel of God by the Jewish people. We find a perfect example of a non-circumcised Godfearer in Cornelius in Acts 10.

When a Gentile was taught of God through the Jewish people and accepts the faith of the One God of the Universe, he identifies with God. As Gentile Christians and followers of Yeshua we likewise identify with God through the one He sent to reveal Himself; namely Yeshua (Jesus). It is through the name of Jesus we as non-Jews were instructed about the God of Jesus in the first place. The Gentile (in the act of repentance and faith) literally stands at his own Sinai, as did his Gentile forefathers (the Egyptians are a type and shadow of Ephraim, the other house of Israel) and says, like the Jews of old did, "All that the Lord has spoken we will do" (Ex. 19:8). Notice that the Bible say "all" the people said it at Sinai (this included the mixed-multitude of Gentiles and Jews together)! Included in that group were a mixed multitude of Gentiles along with Jews and this fact teaches us a very important lesson for our lives. At Sinai both Gentiles and Jews confessed adherence to the Covenant offered by God. God had previously instructed that they "wash their clothes."

Answer for yourself: Is there any special significance to this mixed multitude "washing their clothes?"

The Rabbis teach that "washing their clothes" is an idiom for immersion in water of their bodies. Here we see the example of both Jew and non-Jew experiencing the concept of "immersion" and being "Born Again" as taught by the Rabbis.

This again is the Hebrew "mikveh" where both Jew and Gentile were "drawing closer to God in the spirit realm."

Having turned from the false gods of Egypt and turning to the true God and Creator Moses was instructed to have both Jew and Gentile (Mixed Multitude) draw closer to God [be Born Again} in the Spirit through immersion. This was not forgiveness of sins since that was already accomplished through their repentance. Let us be clear on that and this was not their salvation as that was already accomplished by faith and their resultant actions based on their faith in the true God. This was more of a SANCTIFICATION of setting themselves apart unto God whereby they drew closer to God. Something that they did not understand was being accomplished through their immersion. The Rabbis call this "Hukkim."

The Rabbis teach that this is an illusion to both the Jews and non-Jews being Born-Again to the God of Israel. But again understand this was NOT a one time event but an experience to be repeated throughout their lives in their worship of God.

JOHN 3 AND BEING BORN AGAIN....WAS THIS NEWS TO ISRAEL?

This might be startling to you but the concept in the Gospel of John, chapter three, concerning being "Born-Again" is not the invention of Jesus. Being You have seen if you have read these two articles that "Born-Again" is a Jewish concept that has existed since the Garden of Eden and Adam. Now hear this...being "Born Again" is to be repeated throughout one's life....even your life as a Christian! A typical Jew was "Born Again" with each new encounter with God throughout his life. A Gentile convert had his "hello" experience with the God of Israel through immersion required in conversion [that was his first Born Again experience] but yet this experience of drawing near to God was expected to be repeated throughout his live by continually being "immersed" and "Born Again" after every repentance, before each observance of the Sabbath, before each observance of a Biblical Festival, and for the woman after her menses monthly.

Answer for yourself: Can we find in Scripture examples where righteous Jews were continually "Born Again?"

Examples in scripture where the children of Israel were "Born-Again" repeatedly (immersed and attained a new-heightened status before they met with God) are before each Sabbath, before each Feast and Festival, following repentance of sin, and for a lady, after her menses on a monthly basis before she could return to her husband's bed. This will be news to most but Yeshua was immersed repeatedly in his life. Yeshua, being a Torah observant Jew, was immersed before each Sabbath service and before each Biblical Festival each year. If you added it up you would find that Yeshua was immersed a minimum of 59 times a year. That being true we are misled in understanding this concept because recorded for us is just only one immersion of Yeshua in the New Testament and that one is the immersion the day before he observed the Yom Kippur. Yom Kippur is the Festival called the Day of Atonement and as I shared earlier every Torah observant Jew had to be immersed before he could participate in observance of Biblical Feasts and Festivals. Thus we would expect Yeshua to be immersed prior to Yom Kippur and we do in New Testament.

Sadly Christian scholars debate down through history with large volumes the reason for Yeshua's immersion; never stopping once to try to understand it from a Jewish perspective. I find their lack of insight and scholarship amazing and as an ordained Pastor and Seminary graduate I am ashamed of my fellow colleagues who know so little but profess so much.

Being "Born-Again" is not a concept originated by the Gentile church. It is a Jewish concept!

Amazing! As the repentant person entered into the immersion bath (a picture of a "watery womb" and "watery tomb") only to emerge as if "Born-Again" from a watery grave and a watery womb (with a renewed spiritual status before God). It was a new start for the believer. If he had sinned and repented God granted him a new status; a new start with God was his. This was perfectly symbolized through the rising from a figurative grave to life anew with God. This was again perfectly symbolized through the emergence from a watery womb to life anew with God. The pictures and symbols and metaphors which help explain this Spiritual advance with God are perfect once you understand that something supernatural happens between the believer and God in time of drawing closer with God. God knows it; He commanded it be done. We look at it without our Hebrew Roots and interpret it incorrectly and try to relegate it to a once in a life-time experience and attach a completely foreign meaning to it that God never intended. We not only have lost truth but the opportunities to draw closer to the God we say we love.

The Rabbis call this a "Hukkim" commandment; it does not make human sense but yet God requires it. The immersed one is then considered a new creation (2 Cor. 5:17) as he emerges from the water! Remember that this was also required of a Gentile convert coming to God for the first time. He was drawing close to God for the first time in his life through this Hukkim immersion. But immersion and being "Born Again" was not only to accompany repentance after one sinned or turned to God for the first time in one's life since being a non-Jew but was commanded all the time before one observes and celebrates a Biblical Holy Day or the Sabbath. Being "Born Again" was not a once in a life-time SALVATION EXPERIENCE because one believes some theology about Jesus as Paul would make it out to be in Romans 6; rather it dealt with sanctification and dedication to God which is to be repeated throughout one's life. At least that is what it meant to a Jew like Jesus. It many not have meant that to Paul, himself a Gentile convert that often departed from Jewish faith but that is whole other problem that bears your study. Also of note was that immersion and being "Born Again" applied to the non-Jew as he was immersed as part of his conversion to Judaism once he already had faith in God and had repented of his sin. This was in all the above cases a step toward God by the repentant Gentile. After his initial immersion it was then expected of him to be repeatedly immersed just like the Jew when he observed the Biblical Festivals and the Sabbath. In such a way we find the Gentile just like the Jew experiencing this drawing near to God.

Rom 10:12 12 For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. (KJV)

I wish everyone really believed the above verse. If you were Jewish you would have been instructed correctly concerning the mechanics of Biblical Immersion (being Born-Again) since you were a child, and would not be like many Christian Gentiles who have not had the truth taught them concerning such an important doctrine. It is startling that such a Jewish concept is considered the backbone of the Christian faith and the Christian fails to have the correct understanding regarding immersion and being Born-Again as Jesus understood it. As believers we should have understood it correctly from the beginning, which we have not. A Gentile entered into the watery tomb and watery womb and emerged, no longer considered a Gentile, the old things have passed away (his condition of being a Gentile estranged from God is over), behold God made all things new (he now is a part of the Israel of God just like the Jew)! He was now considered a citizen of the Israel of God!

Eph 2:12-13 12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: 13 But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh ...(KJV)

Understand the non-Jews were brought nigh to God not only by the death (blood) of Jesus which began a movement out of a Gentile hating Judaism to them in the world whereby they were instructed in the Covenant of Noah [Acts 15.16] but were brought nigh unto God by faith and immersion whereby they "drew near to God in the Spirit realm" through this Hukkim Commandment called a mikveh!

Upon emerging from the watery tomb in which he was "Born-Again" he had the status of a Spiritual Jew...a child of God. He became Israel! He was considered as if he had always been Israel, for it was said by the Rabbis following conversion that it was if the non-Jew had no past and it was forbidden to bring up his past for it was as if he had always been Israel.

ARE YOU GRAFTED INTO ISRAEL OR NOT? OR DO YOU WANT TO REMAIN OUTSIDE THE ISRAEL OF GOD AS AN ANTISEMITIC CHRISTIAN?

The Gentile, after turning from idols and repentance (as a sign of his faith in the One God of Israel), and after following immersion in the Mikveh (baptism), was grafted into Israel as Paul would later tell us. The repentant Gentile believer chose God and His Torah. He chose to become "chosen". Since he is Israel, then the commandments given to "Israel" now apply to the Gentile "Christian" who looks to Yeshua, his teachings, and His God.

Answer for yourself: Is that your understanding? It should be!
